The performance of this contract, or the completion of the marriage, must be accomplished within a reasonable time. Either party may, therefore, call upon the other to fulfil the engagement, and, in case of refusal or neglect to do so within a reasonable time after request made, may treat the betrothment as at an end, and bring action for the breach of the contract; 2 C. & P. 631. For a breach of the betrothment without a just cause, an action on the case may be maintained for the recovery of damages. It may be maintained by either party; 1 Salk. 24.

In Anglo-Saxon times the betrothal was between the bridegroom and the woman's father or other protector; 2 Poll. & Maitl. H. E. L. 365.

In Germany and Holland a party could be compelled to complete his contract. See PROMISE OF MARRIAGE. As to the Roman Law, see Bryce, Studies in History.

BETTER EQUITY. The right which, in a court of equity, a second incumbrancer has who has taken securities against subsequent dealings to his prejudice, which a prior incumbrancer neglected to take although he had an opportunity. 1 Chanc. Prec. 470, n.; Oliver v. Oliver, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 144, 26 Am. Dec. 123.

BETTERMENTS. Improvements made to an estate. It signifies such improvements as render it better than mere repairs. Madocks v. Jellison, 11 Me. 482; Davis' Lessee v. Powell, 13 Ohio, 308; M'Kinly v. Holliday, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 477; Thompson v. Gilman, 17 Vt. 109. The term is also applied to denote the additional value which an estate acquires in consequence of some public improvement, as laying out or widening a street, etc.

The measure of the value of betterments is not their actual cost, but the enhanced value they impart to the land, without reference to the fact that they were not desired by the true owner or could not profitably be used by him; Carolina Cent. R. Co. v. McCaskill, 98 N. C. 526, 4 S. E. 468.

BETTING. The act of making a wager; a species of gambling.

A bet or wager is ordinarily an agreement between two or more that a sum of money or some valuable thing, in contributing which those agreeing take part, shall become the property of one or some of them, on the happening in the future of an event at the present uncertain; Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 539. See GAMING.

BETWEEN. In the intermediate space of, without regard to distance; from one to another; belonging to two as a mutual relation.

The words "between A. & B." in a deed excludes the termini mentioned therein; Revere v. Leonard, 1 Mass. 93, but see Morris & E. R. Co. v. R. Co., 31 N. J. L. 212. Between two places is held to exclude both; 8 C. & P. 612.

"Between" when properly predicable of time is intermediate. "Between two days" was held exclusive of both; Bunce v. Reed, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 352. See Robinson v. Foster, 12 Ia. 186. A testamentary gift to two or more between or amongst them creates a tenancy in common; 2 Mer. 70. It is often synonymous with among; Myres v. Myres, 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 415. When between and among follow the verb divide, the general signification is very similar and in popular use they are synonymous; Senger v. Senger's Ex'r, 81 Va. 698.

BEYOND SEAS. Out of the kingdom of England; out of the state; out of the United States. "Beyond seas" means, generally, without the jurisdiction of the state or government in which the question arises; 32 E. L. & Eq. 84; Forbes' Adm'r v. Foot's Adm'r, 2 McCord (S. C.) 331, 13 Am. Dec. 732; Galusha v. Cobleigh, 13 N. H. 79; Hatch v. Spofford, 24 Conn. 432.

It means "out of the United States;" Thurston v. Fisher, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 288; Earle v. McDowell, 12 N. C. 16; Davie v. Briggs, 97 U. S. 638, 24 L. Ed. 1086; Keeton's Heirs v. Keeton's Adm'r, 20 Mo. 530; Darling v. Meachum, 2 G. Greene (Ia.) 602. Other cases hold that it means out of the state; Byrne v. Crowninshield, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 263; Pancoast's Lessee v. Addison, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 350, 2 Am. Dec. 520; Forbes' Adm'r v. Foote's Adm'r, 2 McCord (S. C.) 331, 13 Am. Dec. 732; Mansell's Adm'r v. Israel, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 510; Houston v. Moore, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 433, 4 L. Ed. 428; Galusha v. Cobleigh, 13 N. H. 86; Stephenson v. Doe, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 515, 46 Am. Dec. 489; Richardson's Adm'r v. Richardson's Adm'r, 6 Ohio, 126, 25 Am. Dec. 745; Thomason v. Odum, 23 Ala. 486; Wakefield v. Smart, 8 Ark. 489. See also Sleght v. Kane, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 76; and to this effect is the very uniform current of authorities.

In the various statutes of limitation the term "out of the state" is now generally used. And the United States courts adopt and follow the decisions of the respective states upon the interpretation of their respective laws; Shelby v. Guy, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 361, 6 L. Ed. 495. What constitutes absence out of the state within the meaning of the statute is wholly undeterminable by any rule to be drawn from the decisions. It seems to be agreed that temporary absence is not enough; but what is a temporary absence is by no means agreed; Aug. Lim. § 200, n. Any place in Ireland was held to be "beyond the sea," under 21 Jac. I. c. 16; Show. 91; but this is changed by stat. 3 & 4 William IV. c. 27, which enacted that no part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, nor of the Channel Islands, should be deemed to be beyond seas within the meaning of the acts of limitation.

BIAS. A particular influential power which sways the judgment; the inclination or propensity of the mind towards a particular object; adopted in Willis v. State, 12 Ga. 449.

Justice requires that the judge should have no bias for or against any individual, and that his mind should be perfectly free to act as the law requires.

There is, however, one kind of bias which the courts suffer to influence them in their judgments: it is a bias favorable to a class of cases, or persons, as distinguished from an individual case or person. A few examples will explain this. A bias is felt on account of convenience; 1 Ves. Sen. 13; 3 Atk. 524. It is also felt in favor of the heir at law, as when there is an heir on one side and a mere volunteer on the other; 1 W. Bla. 256; 1 Ball & B. 309; 1 Wils. 310. On the other hand, the court leans against double portions for children; 13 Price 599; against double provisions, and double satisfactions; 3 Atk. 421; and against forfeitures; 3 Term 172.

BIBLE. See SCHOOLS; FAMILY BIBLE.

BICAMERAL SYSTEM. A term applied by Jeremy Bentham to the division of a legislative body into two chambers, as in the United States government.

BICYCLE. A two-wheeled vehicle propelled by the rider.

To ride a bicycle in the ordinary manner on a public highway for convenience, pleasure, or business is lawful. A person driving a horse thereon has no rights superior to a person riding a bicycle; Thompson v. Dodge, 58 Minn. 555, 60 N. W. 545, 28 L. R. A. 608, 49 Am. St. Rep. 503.

It has been held that an ordinance which attempts to forbid bicyclists to use that part of the street which is devoted to the use of vehicles is void as against common right; Swift v. City of Topeka, 43 Kan. 671, 23 Pac. 1075, 8 L. R. A. 772; City of Emporia v. Wagoner, 6 Kan. App. 659, 49 Pac. 701; but see Twilley v. Perkins, 77 Md. 252, 26 Atl. 286, 19 L. R. A. 632, 39 Am. St. Rep. 408.

Their proper place is the roadway rather than the sidewalk; State v. Collins, 16 R. I. 371, 17 Atl. 131, 3 L. R. A. 394; and statutes and ordinances in some states declare their use upon sidewalks unlawful; Com. v. Forrest, 170 Pa. 40, 32 Atl. 652, 29 L. R. A. 365; Mercer v. Corbin, 117 Ind. 450, 20 N. E. 132, 3 L. R. A. 221, 10 Am. St. Rep. 76. It has been held that, even in the absence of an ordinance prohibiting it, one riding a bicycle upon a sidewalk takes the risk of any injury he may thereby cause to pedestrians; Felder v. Tipton, 149 Ala. 608, 42 South. 985, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1268, 123 Am. St. Rep. 69, 13 Ann. Cas. 1012; and that permission under municipal ordinance is not justification for violating a statute prohibiting riding a bicycle on a sidewalk; Millett v. City of Princeton, 167 Ind. 582, 79 N. E. 909, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 785. A municipal corporation, however, is not liable for injury to a person struck by a bicycle ridden by another, on a sidewalk because of failure to enact or enforce an ordinance prohibiting the riding of bicycles on sidewalks; Jones v. City of Williamsburg, 97 Va. 722, 34 S. E. 883, 47 L. R. A. 294. Where a rider was injured by a defective sidewalk, it was held that the use of a bicycle thereon was not unlawful and that he could recover; Lee v. City of Port Huron, 128 Mich. 533, 87 N. W. 637, 55 L. R. A. 308.

Bicycles may be left standing in the street while the owner is calling at a residence or place of business, as any other vehicle may; Lacey v. Winn, 3 D. R. (Pa.) 811; Lacy v. Winn, 4 id. 409. Whether a bicyclist who leaves his wheel standing against the curbstone in front of a horse and wagon is negligent in failing to ascertain whether the horse was unattended and unfastened is a question of fact for the jury; Wagner v. Milk Co., 21 Misc. 62, 46 N. Y. Supp. 939.

An innkeeper is liable for damages where a bicycle belonging to a guest is stolen from the yard of the inn; 28 Ir. L. T. & S. J. 297. A municipality has power to require bicyclists to carry lights when using the streets after dark; City of Des Moines v. Keller, 116 Ia. 648, 88 N. W. 827, 57 L. R. A. 243, 93 Am. St. Rep. 268. A person who rides a bicycle without a light or signal of warning in a public thoroughfare at a time when objects can be discerned readily at a distance of but a few feet is, as a matter of law, guilty of negligence; Cook v. Fogarty, 103 Ia. 500, 72 N. W. 677, 39 L. R. A. 488.

Where a statute declares that bicycles are entitled to the same rights and subject to the same restrictions as are prescribed in the case of persons using carriages, the rider of a bicycle must turn out for a heavy vehicle; Taylor v. Traction Co., 184 Pa. 465, 40 Atl. 159, 47 L. R. A. 289, following the rule of the road established in earlier decisions; Beach v. Parmeter, 23 Pa. 196; Grier v. Sampson, 27 Pa. 183; but see contra,

Foot v. Produce Co., 195 Pa. 190, 45 Atl. 934, 49 L. R. A. 764, 78 Am. St. Rep. 806.

A bicyclist has a right to insist that the highway shall be maintained in a reasonably safe condition of repair; if not so maintained the corporation is answerable for injury to him or his vehicle; Geiger v. Turnpike Road, 167 Pa. 582, 31 Atl. 918, 28 L. R. A. 458. Though, on an ordinary country road, he is exposed to greater danger than a person in a vehicle drawn by horses, the commissioners of highways are not bound to any higher obligation to him, but only to maintain such road in reasonably safe condition; Sutphen v. Town of North Hempstead, 80 Hun 409, 30 N. Y. Supp. 128; Fox v. Clarke, 25 R. I. 515, 57 Atl. 305, 65 L. R. A. 234, 1 Ann. Cas. 548.

Bicycles are carriages under the tariff act; Adams, Tariff 99; so for the purpose of collecting tolls; Geiger v. Turnpike Road, 167 Pa. 582, 31 Atl. 918, 28 L. R. A. 458; and under an act forbidding furiously driving a carriage; L. R. 4 Q. B. Div. 228; and an act requiring carriages to turn to the right; State v. Collins, 16 R. I. 371, 17 Atl. 131, 3 L. R. A. 394. But in Gloucester & Salem Turnpike Co. v. Leppe, 62 N. J. L. 92, 40 Atl. 681, 41 L. R. A. 457, they were held not liable to tolls as "carriages of burthen or pleasure." They were held not to be within an act of 1786, requiring highways to be kept reasonably safe for carriages; Richardson v. Danvers, 176 Mass. 413, 57 N. E. 688, 50 L. R. A. 127, 79 Am. St. Rep. 320; to the same effect under an early act in Fox v. Clarke, 25 R. I. 515, 57 Atl. 305, 65 L. R. A. 234, 1 Ann. Cas. 548.

As to bicycles as baggage, see BAGGAGE.

BID. An offer to pay a specified price for an article about to be sold at auction.

An offer to perform a contract for work and labor or supplying materials at a specified price.

BIDDER. One who offers to pay a specified price for an article offered for sale at a public auction. Webster v. French, 11 Ill. 254; one who offers to enter into a contract for work and labor, or supplying materials at a specified price.

The bidder at an auction has a right to withdraw his bid expressly at any time before it is accepted, which acceptance is generally manifested by the fall of the hammer; Benj. Sales 50, 73; 3 Term 148; Doolin v. Ward, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 194; Bab. Auct. 30, 42; Blossom v. R. Co., 3 Wall. (U. S.) 196, 18 L. Ed. 43; Coker v. Dawkins, 20 Fla. 153; Nebraska Loan & Trust Co. v. Hamer, 40 Neb. 293, 58 N. W. 695; or the bid may be withdrawn by implication, as by an adjournment of the sale before the article under the hammer is knocked down; Faunce v. Sedgwick, 8 Pa. 408.

The bidder is required to act in good faith, and any combination between him and others, to prevent a fair competition, would avoid the sale made to himself; 3 B. & B. 116; Martin v. Ranlett, 5 Rich. (S. C.) 541, 57 Am. Dec. 770; Barnes v. Mays, 88 Ga. 696, 16 S. E. 67; Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195; Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 134, 12 L. Ed. 1018. But there is nothing illegal in two or more persons agreeing together to purchase a property at sheriff's sale, fixing a certain price which they are willing to give, and appointing one of their number to be the bidder; Smull v. Jones, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 122; National Fire Ins. Co. v. Loomis, 11 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 431; Kearney v. Taylor, 15 How. (U. S.) 494, 14 L. Ed. 787; Veazie v. Williams, 3 Sto. 623, Fed. Cas. No. 16,907. See AUCTION; AUCTIONEER.

The writ of mandamus will not lie to compel city authorities to award a contract to the lowest bidder, where, in the exercise of their discretion, they have decided that the faithful performance of the contract requires judgment and skill which he does not possess, notwithstanding his ability to furnish good security; Com. v. Mitchell, 82 Pa. 343.

BIENNIALY. In a statute this term signifies not duration of time, but a period for the happening of an event; People v. Tremain, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 573. In most of the states legislative sessions occur biennially; that is, once in two years.

BIENS (Fr. goods). Property of every description, except estates of freehold and inheritance. Sugd. Vend. 495; Co. Litt. 119 b; Dane, Abr.

In the French law, this term includes all kinds of property, real and personal. Biens are divided into biens meubles, movable property; and biens immeubles, immovable property. The distinction between movable and immovable property is recognized by them, and gives rise, in the civil as well as in the common law, to many important distinctions as to rights and remedies. Story, Conf. Laws, § 13, note 1.

Tous les biens means in French law "all the property, and must therefore be accepted as including both real and personal estate"; Lindsay v. Wilson, 103 Md. 252, 63 Atl. 566, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 408.

In Eddy v. Davis, 35 Vt. 247, it was held that biens, goods, includes both animate and inanimate movable property, citing Co. Litt. 118 b, to the effect that "biens, bona," are words which include all chattels, as well real as personal, and adding: "In this sense the word goods is used in the ancient and well known form of the solemnization of matrimony contained in the Book of Common Prayer: * * * 'With all my worldly goods I thee endow.'"

In biens, real estate is included "in the sense of the civilians and continental jurists"; Adams v. Akerlund, 168 Ill. 632, 48 N. E. 454; Sto. Conf. L. §§ 13, 146.

BIGAMUS. In Civil Law. One who had been twice married, whether both wives were alive at the same time or not. One who had married a widow.

Used in ecclesiastical matters as a reason for denying benefit of the clergy. Termes de la Ley.

BIGAMY. The state of a man who has two wives, or of a woman who has two husbands, living at the same time.

When the man has more than two wives, or the woman more than two husbands, living at the same time, then the party is said to have committed polygamy; but the name of bigamy is more frequently given to this offence in legal proceedings. 1 Russell, Cr. 187.

According to the canonists, bigamy is threefold, viz.: (vera, interpretativa et similitudinaria) real, interpretative, and similitudinaria. The first consisted in marrying two wives successively (virgins they may be), or in once marrying a widow; the second consisted, not in a repeated marriage, but in marrying e. g. meretricem vel ad alio corruptam, a harlot; the third arose from two marriages, indeed, but the one metaphorical or spiritual, the other carnal. This last was confined to persons initiated in sacred orders, or under the vow of continence. Deferriere's Tract. Juris Canon. tit. xxi. See also Bacon, Abr. Marriage.

In England this crime was punishable by the stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, § 57, which made the offence felony; but it exempted from punishment the party whose husband or wife should continue to remain absent for seven years before the second marriage without being heard from, and persons who had been legally divorced. The statutory provisions in the United States against bigamy or polygamy are in general similar to, and copied from, the statute of 1 Jac. I. c. 11, which was supplied by the act of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, excepting as to the punishment. The several exceptions to this statute are also nearly the same in the American statutes; but the punishment of the offence is different in many of the states; 2 Kent 69.

Bigamy and polygamy are crimes by the laws of all civilized and Christian countries, and the First Amendment to the constitution declaring that congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion or forbidding the free exercise thereof, was never intended to be a protection against legislation for the punishment of such crimes; Davis v. Beason, 133 U. S. 333, 10 Sup. Ct. 299, 33 L. Ed. 637. It is no defence that polygamy is a religious belief; U. S. v. Reynolds, 1 Utah 226; Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. Ed. 244.

The act of March 22, 1882, creates a new and distinct offence from bigamy or polygamy, one which is declared to be a misdemeanor (there having been and being no such declaration as to bigamy and polygamy), and the punishment is much less than for bigamy and polygamy. It is the offence of cohabiting with more than one woman; Snow v. U. S., 118 U. S. 346, 6 Sup. Ct. 1059, 30 L. Ed. 207.

It is no defence that the accused believed his former marriage was annulled, when the statute merely defines the offence as marrying again where a former spouse is living;

State v. Zichfeld, 23 Nev. 304, 46 Pac. 802, 34 L. R. A. 784, 62 Am. St. Rep. 800.

If a woman, who has a husband living, marries another person, she is punishable, though her husband has voluntarily withdrawn from her and remained absent and unheard of for any term of time less than seven years, and though she honestly believes, at the time of her second marriage, that he is dead; Com. v. Mash, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 472. See a discussion of this case by Mr. Bishop, in which he dissents from its ruling, in 4 So. L. J. (N. S.) 153; Clark, Cr. L. 311. Also, 12 Am. L. Rev. 471. The same rule applies also to the marriage of the husband, where he believes the wife to be dead; Dotson v. State, 62 Ala. 141, 34 Am. Rep. 2; Davis v. Com., 13 Bush (Ky.) 318. The same rule now obtains in England, after some conflict of opinion; 14 Cox C. C. 45; but quære, if her belief were founded on positive evidence; Steph. Dig. Cr. Law, art. 34, n. 9. On the trial of a woman for bigamy whose first husband had been absent from her for more than seven years, the jury found that they had no evidence that at the time of her second marriage she knew that he was alive, but that she had the means of acquiring knowledge of that fact had she chosen to make use of them. It was held that upon this finding the conviction could not be supported; 1 Dears. & B. Cr. Cas. 98. If a man is prosecuted for bigamy, his first wife cannot be called to prove her marriage with the defendant; T. Raym. 1; Williams v. State, 44 Ala. 24; 15 Low. Can. J. 21; nor it seems even to prove that the first marriage was invalid; 4 Up. Can. Q. B. 588; but see as to this last point, 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1709.

In a prosecution for bigamy it devolves on the state to prove a valid first marriage and that the lawful spouse of the defendant was living at the time of the second marriage; Sokel v. People, 212 Ill. 238, 72 N. E. 382; State v. Kniffen, 44 Wash. 485, 87 Pac. 837, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1009, 12 Ann. Cas. 113; McCombs v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 490, 99 S. W. 1017, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1036, 123 Am. St. Rep. 855, 14 Ann. Cas. 72. Belief of the death of the former wife is no defence to a prosecution for bigamy; Cornett v. Com., 134 Ky. 613, 121 S. W. 424, 21 Ann. Cas. 399. The first marriage may be proved by the admissions of the prisoner; Miles v. U. S., 103 U. S. 304, 26 L. Ed. 481. When the first marriage is proved to the satisfaction of the court, the second husband is admissible as a witness for or against the defendant; Whart. Cr. Ev. § 397; State v. Johnson, 12 Minn. 476 (Gil. 378), 93 Am. Dec. 241; 4 Up. Can. (Q. B.) 588; Miles v. U. S., 103 U. S. 304, 26 L. Ed. 481.

A conviction for bigamy has been supported although the person who solemnized the marriage had not the required authority;

Carmichael v. State, 12 Ohio St. 553, but see Bates v. State, 29 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 189; 20 Harv. L. Rev. 576. Admissions of a prior marriage in a foreign country are sufficient without proof of cohabitation or other corroborating circumstances to establish the marriage; State v. Wyld, 110 N. C. 500, 15 S. E. 5.

Where the first marriage was made abroad, it must be shown to have been valid where made; People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349, 72 Am. Dec. 49. When the celebration of the marriage is once shown, every fact necessary to its validity will be presumed until the contrary is shown; People v. Calder, 30 Mich. 85, Fleming v. People, 27 N. Y. 329; Com. v. Kenney, 120 Mass. 387, where the marriage was performed in a foreign country; but see Weinberg v. State, 25 Wis. 370.

Reputation and cohabitation are not sufficient to establish the fact of the first marriage; Gahagan v. People, 1 Park Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 378. If the second marriage be in a foreign state, it is not bigamy; People v. Mosher, 2 Park Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 195; except by statute; 36 E. L. & Eq. 614. Where the first marriage was not performed according to the statute and there is no evidence of subsequent cohabitation of the parties the second marriage is not bigamy; People v. McQuaid, 85 Mich. 123, 48 N. W. 161.

See MARRIAGE.

BILAN. A book in which bankers, merchants, and traders write a statement of all they owe and all that is due to them. A balance sheet. The term is used in Louisiana, and is derived from the French.

BILATERAL CONTRACT. A contract in which both the contracting parties are bound to fulfill obligations reciprocally towards each other. Leç. Elém. § 781. See CONTRACT; UNILATERAL CONTRACT; ACCEPTANCE.

BILGED. The state of a ship in which water is freely admitted through holes and breaches made in the planks of the bottom, occasioned by injuries, whether the ship's timbers are broken or not. Peele v. Ins. Co., 3 Mas. 39, Fed. Cas. No. 10,905.

BILINE. Collateral.

BILINGUIS. Using two languages.

A term formerly applied to juries half of one nation and half of another. Flowd. 2.

BILL (Lat. billā). A complaint in writing addressed to the chancellor, or judges of a court exercising chancery jurisdiction.

Its office in a chancery suit is the same as a declaration in an action at law, a libel in a court of admiralty, or an allegation in the spiritual courts.

A bill formerly consisted of nine parts, which contained the address, to the chancellor, court, or judge acting as such; the names of the plaintiffs and their descriptions, but the statement of the parties in this part of the bill merely is not sufficient; 2 Ves. & B. 327; the statement of the plaintiff's case, called the stating part, which should contain a distinct though general statement of every material fact to which the plaintiff means to offer evidence; 1 Brown, Ch. 94; 3 P. Wms. 276; 2 Atk. 96; 1 Vern. 483; 11 Ves. Ch. 240; 2 Hare 264; James v. McKernon, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 565; Nesmith v. Calvert, 1 Woodb. & M. 34, Fed. Cas. No. 10,123; Story, Eq. Pl. § 265 a; a general charge of confederacy; the allegations of the defendant's pretences, and charges in evidence of them; the clause of jurisdiction and an averment that the acts complained of are contrary to equity; a prayer that the defendant may answer the interrogatories, usually called the interrogating part; the prayer for relief; the prayer for process; 2 Madd. 166; Wright v. Wright, 8 N. J. Eq. 143; 1 Mitf. Eq. Pl. 41.

In England and in most, if not all, of the states, including those having a separate court of chancery, the formal style of the old English bill has fallen entirely into disuse. The form used and generally provided for by rule of court, is a concise and consecutive statement of the plaintiff's case in numbered paragraphs, stripped of technical phrases and verbiage, concluding with prayers, consecutively numbered, for answer, for account, if incidental or appropriate to the relief sought, for the special relief sought, as payment of sums found due, specific performance, etc., for injunction, if required, for other relief, and for process.

By Equity Rule 25 of the United States Supreme Court, in effect February 1, 1913 (33 Sup. Ct. xxv), a bill must contain the names, citizenship and residence of the parties (with their disabilities, if any); a short and plain statement of the grounds of jurisdiction; a short and simple statement of the ultimate facts upon which the plaintiff asks relief, omitting any mere statement of evidence; reasons for the omission of any proper parties, if any be omitted; and a prayer for any special relief pending the suit or on final hearing, which may be stated in alternative forms.

The bill must be signed by counsel; Davis v. Davis, 19 N. J. Eq. 180; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. *312. It need not ordinarily be sworn to; but if special relief pending suit be asked, it must be verified by plaintiff, or some one having knowledge of the facts. Equity Rule 25 of S. C. of U. S. So, it is said, where some preliminary relief is required or in bills praying for the production of documents, incident to relief at law, or for relief in equity on a lost instrument; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. *393, and cases cited in notes; so, bills to perpetuate testimony must have an affidavit of the circumstances under which the testimony is likely to be lost; id. *394, n. 3; and bills of interpleader must have an affidavit of no collusion; id. *394, n. 4. A bill filed by a corporation need not be under seal; Georges Creek Coal & Iron Co. v. Detmold, 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 371; City of Moundsville v. R. Co., 37 W. Va. 92, 16 S. E. 514, 20 L. R. A. 161; so also of a bill brought by a municipal corporation; City of Moundsville v. R. Co., 37 W. Va. 92, 16 S. E. 514, 20 L. R. A. 161.

A bill filed by a woman need not show whether she is married or single; Paige v. Broadfoot, 100 Ala. 610, 13 South. 426.

A bill in the United States district court must, in the prayer for a subpoena, contain the names of the defendants; otherwise it may be dismissed by the court of its own motion; City of Carlsbad v. Tibbetts, 51 Fed. 852. It is a fatal defect; Goebel v. Supply Co., 55 Fed. 825. But the new equity rules omit that provision.

"A bill is not to be construed strictly as an indictment would have been 100 years ago, but is to be taken to mean what it fairly conveys to a dispassionate reader by a fairly exact use of English speech. The demurrer is to be read with the same liberality." Swift & Co. v. U. S., 196 U. S. 395, 25 Sup. Ct. 279, 49 L. Ed. 518, per Holmes, J.

Bills are said to be original, not original, or in the nature of original bills.

Original bills are those which do, and which do not, pray for relief. Story, Eq. Pl. § 17.

Those which pray for relief are either bills praying the decree or order touching some right claimed by the party exhibiting the bill, in opposition to some right, real or supposed, claimed by the party against whom the bill is exhibited, or touching some wrong done in violation of the plaintiff's right, which is the most common kind of bill; Mitf. Eq. Pl. § 34; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 305.

Those which do not pray for relief are either to perpetuate testimony; to examine witnesses de bene esse; or for discovery.

Bills not original are either supplemental; of revivor; or of revivor and supplement.

Also a cross bill; a bill of review; a bill to impeach a decree; to suspend the operation, or avoid the decree for subsequent matter; to carry a decree into effect; or partaking of the qualities of some one or all of them. See Mitf. Eq. Pl. § 35; Story, Eq. Pl. § 18. Van Heythuysen (Equity Draftsman 444) designates these as bills in the nature of original bills, and adds to them: A bill in the nature of a bill of revivor, to obtain the benefit of a suit after abatement in certain cases which do not admit of a continuance of the original bill; and a bill in the nature of a supplement bill to obtain the benefit of a suit either after abatement in other cases which do not admit of a continuance of the original bill, or after the suit is become defective, without abatement in cases which do not admit of a supplemental bill to supply that defect.

For an account of these bills, consult the various titles.

As a Contract. An obligation; a deed, whereby the obligor acknowledges himself to owe the obligee a certain sum of money or some other thing, in which, besides the names of the parties, are to be considered the sum or thing due, the time, place, and manner of payment or delivery thereof. It may be indented or poll, and with or without a penalty. West, Symb. § 100.

This signification came to include all contracts evidenced by writing, whether specialties or parol, but is no longer in use except in phrases, such as bill payable, bill of lading.

In Legislation. A special act passed by a legislature in the exercise of a quasi judicial power. Thus, bills of attainder, bills of pains and penalties, are spoken of. See ACT; BILL OF ATTAINDER; BILL OF PAINS AND PENALTIES.

The draft of a law submitted to the consideration of a legislative body for its adoption. Southwark Bank v. Com., 26 Pa. 450. By the constitution of the United States, all bills for raising revenue must originate in the house of representatives; but the senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills. See MONEY BILLS.

As to money bills in Parliament, see PARLIAMENTARY ACT.

Every bill, before it becomes a law, must be approved by the president of the United States, or within ten days returned, with his objections, to the house in which it originated. Two-thirds of each house may then enact it into a law. Similar provisions are copied in the constitutions of most of the states; U. S. Const. art. 1, § 7.

In Mercantile Law. The creditor's written statement of his claim, specifying the items.

It differs from an account stated in this, that a bill is the creditor's statement; an account stated is a statement which has been assented to by both parties. See ACCOUNT STATED.

In England it has been held that a bill thus rendered is conclusive against the party making it out against an increase of charge on any of the items contained in it; and strong evidence as to items; 1 B. & P. 49. But in New York it has been held that merely presenting a bill, no payment or agreement as to the amount being shown, does not conclude the party from suing for a larger sum; Williams v. Glenny, 18 N. Y. 389.

BILL FOR A NEW TRIAL. One filed in a court of equity praying for an injunction after a judgment at law when there is any fact which renders it against conscience to execute such judgment, and of which the injured party could not avail himself in a court of law, or, if he could, was prevented by fraud or accident, unmixed with any fault or negligence of himself or his agents. Mitford, Eq. Pl. § 131; 2 Story Eq. Pl. § 887.

Bills of this description are not now generally countenanced; Woodworth v. Van Buskerk, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 432; Floyd v. Jayne, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 479.

BILL FOR FORECLOSURE. One which is filed by a mortgagee against the mortgagor, for the purpose of having the property sold, thereby to obtain the sum secured on the premises, with interest and costs. 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 528. See FORECLOSURE.

BILL IMPEACHING A DECREE FOR FRAUD. This must be an original bill, which may be filed without leave of court; 1 Sch. & L. 355; 1 Ves. Ch. 120; 3 Bro. C. C. 74. It must state the decree, the proceedings which led to it, and the ground on which it is impeached; Story, Eq. Pl. § 428.

The effect of the bill, if the prayer be granted, is to restore the parties to their former situation, whatever their rights. See Story, Eq. Pl. § 426; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 84.

BILL IN AID OF EXECUTION. A bill which assumes as its basis the principle of a decree and seeks merely to carry it into effect. Story, Eq. Pl. § 249. For instance, where all the facts do not distinctly appear on the record; 1 Ph. 181; or where, since the decree, the rights of the parties have become embarrassed by subsequent events, and a new decree is necessary; Adams, Eq. 415.

BILL IN NATURE OF A BILL OF REVIEW. One which is brought by a person not bound by a decree, praying that the same may be examined and reversed; as where a decree is made against a person who has no interest at all in the matter in dispute, or had not an interest sufficient to render the decree against him binding upon some person claiming after him.

Relief may be obtained against error in the decree by a bill in the nature of a bill of review. This bill in its frame resembles a bill of review except that, instead of praying that the former decree may be reviewed and reversed, it prays that the cause may be heard with respect to the new matter made the subject of the supplemental bill, at the same time that it is reheard upon the original bill, and that the plaintiff may have such relief as the nature of the case made by the supplemental bill may require; 1 Harrison, Ch. Pr. 145.

BILL IN NATURE OF A BILL OF REVIVOR. One which is filed when the death of a party, whose interest is not determined by his death, is attended with such a transmission of his interest that the title to it, as well as the person entitled, may be litigated in the court of chancery. In the case of a devise of real estate, the suit is not permitted to be continued by bill of revivor; 1 Chanc. Cas. 123, 174; 3 Chanc. Rep. 39; Mosel 44.

In such cases, an original bill, upon which the title may be litigated, must be filed, and this bill will have so far the effect of a bill of revivor that if the title of the representative by the act of the deceased party is established, the same benefit may be had of the proceedings upon the former bill as if the suit had been continued by bill of revivor; 1 Vern. 427; 2 id. 548, 672; 2 Brown, P. C. 529; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 83; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 71.

BILL IN NATURE OF A SUPPLEMENTAL BILL. One which is filed when the interest of the plaintiff or defendant, suing or defending, wholly determines, and the same property becomes vested in another person not claiming under him. Hinde, Ch. Pr. 71.

The principal difference between this and a supplemental bill seems to be that a supplemental bill is applicable to such cases only where the same parties or the same interests remain before the court; whereas an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill is properly applicable where new parties, with new interests arising from events occurring since the institution of the suit, are brought before the court; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 75; Story, Eq. Pl. § 345. For the exact distinction between a bill of review and a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review, see 2 Phill. Ch. 705; 1 Macn. & G. 397.

BILL OBLIGATORY. A bond absolute for the payment of money. It is called also a single bill, and differs from a promissory note only in having a seal; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Greiner, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 115. See Read, Pl. 236; West, Symb.

BILL OF ADVENTURE. A writing signed by a merchant, ship-owner, or master to testify that goods shipped on board a certain vessel are at the venture of another person, he himself being answerable only for the produce.

BILL OF CERTIORARI. In Equity Practice. One praying for a writ of certiorari to remove a cause from an inferior court of equity. Cooper, Eq. 44. Such a bill must state the proceedings in the inferior court, and the incompetency of such court by suggestion of the reason why justice is not likely to be done—as distances of witnesses, lack of jurisdiction etc.,—and must pray a writ of certiorari to remove the record to the superior court. Harrison, Ch. Pr. 49; Story, Eq. Pl. § 298.

Where an equitable right is sued for in an inferior court of equity, and by means of its limited jurisdiction the defendant cannot have complete justice, the defendant may file a bill in chancery, praying a special writ, called a bill of certiorari, to remove the cause into the Court of Chancery; Mitf. & Tyler, Eq. Pl. 148.

BILL OF CONFORMITY. In Equity Practice. One filed by an executor or administrator, who finds the affairs of the deceased so much involved that he cannot safely administer the estate except under the direction of a court of chancery. This bill is filed against the creditors, generally, for the purpose of having all their claims adjusted, and procuring a final decree settling the order of payment of the assets. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 440.

BILL OF COSTS. A statement of the items which form the total amount of the costs of a suit or action. It must be taxed by the proper officer of the court, and is demandable as a matter of right before the payment of the costs. See COSTS; TAXING COSTS.

BILL OF CREDIT. Paper issued by the authority of a state on the faith of the state, and designed to circulate as money. Briscoe v. Bank, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 257, 9 L. Ed. 709.

Promissory notes or bills issued by a state government, exclusively, on the credit of the state, and intended to circulate through the community for its ordinary purposes as money, redeemable at a future day, and for the payment of which the faith of the state is pledged. 4 Kent 408.

The constitution of the United States provides that no state shall emit bills of credit, or make anything but gold and silver coin a legal tender in payment of debts. U. S. Const. art. 1, § 10. This prohibition, it seems, does not apply to bills issued by a bank owned by the state but having a specific capital set apart; Cooley, Const. Lim. 84; State v. Billis, 2 McCord (S. C.) 12; McFarland v. Bank, 4 Ark. 44, 37 Am. Dec. 761; Briscoe v. Bank, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 257, 7 L. Ed. 709; Darrington v. Bank, 13 How. (U. S.) 12, 14 L. Ed. 30; but see Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 410, 7 L. Ed. 903; Linn v. Bank, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 87, 25 Am. Dec. 71; nor does it apply to notes issued by corporations or individuals which are not made legal tender; 4 Kent 408; nor to coupons on state bonds, receivable for taxes and negotiable, but not intended to circulate as money; Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 270, 5 Sup. Ct. 903, 962, 29 L. Ed. 185. But it does apply to a state warrant containing a direct promise to pay the bearer the amount stated on its face, and which is intended to circulate as money; Bragg v. Tuffts, 49 Ark. 554, 6 S. W. 158.

In Mercantile Law. A letter sent by an agent or other person to a merchant, desiring him to give credit to the bearer for goods or money. Comyns, Dig. Merchant, F, 3; 3 Burr. 1667; Pagaud v. State, 5 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 491; McFarland v. Bank, 4 Ark. 44; State v. Calvin, R. M. Charl. (Ga.) 151.

BILL OF DEBT. An ancient term including promissory notes and bonds for the payment of money. Comyns, Dig. Merchant, F, 2.

BILL OF DISCOVERY. In Equity Practice. One which prays for the discovery of facts resting within the knowledge of the person against whom the bill is exhibited, or of deeds, writings, or other things in his custody or power. Hinde, Ch. Pr. 20; Blake, Chanc. Pract. 37.

It does not seek relief in consequence of the discovery (and this constitutes its characteristic feature), though it may ask for a stay of proceedings till discovery is made; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1483; Bisph. Eq. § 557; and such relief as does not require a hearing before the court may be part, it is said, of the prayer; Eden, Inj. 78; 19 Ves. Ch. 376; 4 Madd. 247; 5 Id. 218; 1 Sch. & L. 316; 1 Sim. & S. 83.

It is commonly used in aid of the jurisdiction of a court of law, to enable the party who prosecutes or defends a suit at law to obtain a discovery of the facts which are material to such prosecution or defence; Hare, Discov. 119; Marsh v. Davison, 9 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 580; Lane v. Stebbins, 9 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 622; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 1556; Langd. Eq. Pl. § 167. A defendant in equity may obtain the same relief by a cross bill; Langd. Eq. Pl. § 128.

The plaintiff must be entitled to the discovery he seeks, and can only have a discovery of what is necessary for his own title, as of deeds he claims under, and not to pry into that of the defendant; 2 Ves. Ch. 445. See Mittf. Eq. Pl. 52; 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 196; Hare; Wigram, Disc. It will not lie to compel a judgment debtor to disclose assets on which execution may be levied; Cargill v. Kountze, 86 Tex. 386, 22 S. W. 1015, 25 S. W. 13, 24 L. R. A. 183, 40 Am. St. Rep. 853.

There has been much controversy as to whether the defendant is entitled to discovery to aid him in preparing his answer; Langd. Eq. Pl. § 129.

The bill must show a present and vested title and interest in the plaintiff, and what that title and interest are; Pease v. Pease, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 395; 1 Vern. 105; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1490; Baxter v. Farmer, 42 N. C. 239; with reasonable certainty; 3 Ves. 343; must state a case which will constitute a just ground for a suit or a defence at law; McIntyre v. Mancius, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 47; 1 Bro. C. C. 96; must describe the deeds and acts with reasonable certainty; 3 Ves. Ch. 343; Horton v. Moseley, 17 Ala. 794; must state that a suit is brought, or about to be, and the nature thereof must be given with reasonable certainty; 5 Madd. 18; must show that the defendant has some interest; 1 Ves. & B. 550; Wakeman v. Bailey, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 484; and, where the right arises from privity of estate, what that privity is; Mittf. Eq. Pl.; it must show that the matter is material, and how; Many v. Iron Co., 9 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 188; Marsh v. Davison, 9 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 580; Lane v. Stebbins, 9 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 622; Stacy v. Pearson, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 148; and must set forth the particulars of the discovery sought; Laight v. Morgan, 2 Caines Cas. (N. Y.) 344; 1 Y. & J. 577. Adverse examination before trial of a defendant will not be permitted for the purpose of discovering a cause of action; Britton v. MacDonald, 3 Misc. 514, 23 N. Y. Supp. 350.

A bill for discovery but waiving answer under oath is not demurrable for want of an affidavit and cannot be treated as a bill for discovery; Harrington v. Harrington, 15 R. I. 341, 5 Atl. 502; if the oath has been waived, the defendant is not excused from answering, but he loses the benefit of his own declarations, while his admissions are evidence against him; Uhlmann v. Brewing Co., 41 Fed. 369.

It will not lie in aid of a criminal prosecution, a mandamus, or suit for a penalty; 2 Ves. Ch. 398; Colton v. Ross, 2 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 399, 22 Am. Dec. 648; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1494; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 197.

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS. A written statement of objections to the decision of a court upon a point of law, made by a party to the cause, and properly certified by the judge or court who made the decision.

The object of a bill of exceptions is to put the decision objected to upon record for the information of the court having cognizance of the cause in error. They were authorized by statute Westm. 2d (13 Edw. I.), c. 31, the principles of which have been adopted in all the states, though the statute has been held to be superseded in some, by their own statutes. It provides for compelling the judges to sign such bills, and for securing the insertion of the exceptions upon the record. They may be brought by either plaintiff or defendant. Abolished in England by the Judicature Act, 1873.

"The statute gives a bill of exceptions only in a trial according to the course of the common law; and there is no other means of putting evidence on a record;" Union Canal Co. v. Keiser, 19 Pa. 137, per Gibson, J.

In what cases. In the trial of civil causes, wherever the court, in making a decision, is supposed by the counsel against whom the decision is made to have mistaken the law, such counsel may tender exceptions to the ruling, and require the judge to authenticate the bill; 3 Bla. Com. 372; Sowerwein v. Jones, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 335; Ray v. Lipscomb, 48 N. C. 185; including the receiving improper, and the rejecting proper, evidence; Samuel v. Withers, 9 Mo. 166; Com. v. Bosworth, 6 Gray (Mass.) 479; King v. Gray, 17 Tex. 62; and a failure to call the attention of the jury to material matter of evidence, after request; Ex parte Baily, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 479; and including a refusal to charge the jury in a case proper for a charge; Fletcher v. Howard, 2 Alk. (Vt.) 115, 16 Am. Dec. 686; Emerson v. Hogg, 2 Blatchf. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 4,440; Com. v. Packard, 5 Gray (Mass.) 101; but not including a failure to charge the jury on points of law when not requested; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Volk, 151 U. S. 73, 14 Sup. Ct. 239, 38 L. Ed. 78; Law v. Merrills, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 274; Brigham v. Wentworth, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 123; Rogers v. R. Co., 38 Me. 227; and including a refusal to order a special verdict in some cases; Syme v. Butler, 1 Call (Va.) 105. It can be taken to the action or want of proper action of the trial court, upon any proceeding in the progress of the trial from the commencement of the same to its conclusion and when properly presented can be considered by the court on writ of error; Wilson v. United States, 149 U. S. 67, 13 Sup. Ct. 765, 37 L. Ed. 650.

An exception cannot be taken to the decision of the court upon matters resting in its discretion; Cummings v. Fullam, 13 Vt. 459; Law v. Merrills, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 277;

DeLoach v. Walker, 7 How. (Miss.) 164; Mosseaux v. Brigham, 19 Vt. 457; nor upon any theory announced by the court, unless such be expressed in particular language; Bogk v. Gassert, 149 U. S. 17, 13 Sup. Ct. 738, 37 L. Ed. 631; nor for the refusal of a non-suit; Ballentine v. White, 77 Pa. 20; nor where the record shows a fatal error, as want of jurisdiction; Fields v. Maloney, 78 Mo. 172; nor, generally, in cases where there is a right of appeal; Wheelock v. Moulton, 13 Vt. 430; though the practice in some states is otherwise.

In criminal cases, at common law, judges are not required to authenticate exceptions; 1 Chitty, C. L. 622; People v. Holbrook, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 90; Wynhamer v. People, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 567; Case v. Com., 1 Va. Cas. 264; Middleton v. Com., 2 Watts (Pa.) 285; U. S. v. Gibert, 2 Sumn. 19, Fed. Cas. No. 15,204; but statutory provisions have been made in several states authorizing the taking of exceptions in criminal cases; Com. v. Jones, 1 Leigh (Va.) 598; Wynhamer v. People, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 567; Osburn v. State, 7 Ohio, 214, pt. 1; Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 463; Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 36; Fife v. Com., 29 Pa. 429.

When to be taken. The bill must be tendered at the time the decision is made; Midberry v. Collins, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 345; State v. Lord, 5 N. H. 336; Coburn v. Murray, 2 Greenl. (Me.) 336; Bratton v. Mitchell, 5 Watts (Pa.) 69; Hawkins' Heirs v. Lowry, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 247; Agnew v. Campbell's Adm'rs, 17 N. J. L. 291; Lenox v. Pike, 2 Ark. 14; Bompert v. Boyer, 8 Mo. 234; Randolph v. Alsey, 8 Mo. 656; Croft v. Ferrell, 21 Ala. 351; Patterson v. Phillips, 1 How. (Miss.) 572; McKell v. Wright, 4 Ia. 504; Houston v. Jones, 4 Tex. 170; and it must, in general, be taken before the jury have delivered their verdict; Morris v. Buckley, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 211; Lanuse v. Barker, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 312; Kilgore v. Bonic, 9 Mo. 291; Fugate v. Muir, 9 Mo. 355; Jones v. Van Patten, 3 Ind. 107; Armstrong v. Mock, 17 Ill. 166; Martin v. State, 25 Tex. App. 557, 8 S. W. 682; State v. Brown, 100 N. C. 519, 6 S. E. 568.

In the circuit court of appeals no exceptions to rulings at a trial will be considered, unless taken at the trial, embodied in a bill of exceptions, presented to the judge at the same term or at a time allowed by rule of court made at the term, or by a standing rule of court, or by consent of the parties, and except under extraordinary circumstances must be allowed and filed with the clerk during the same term; New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Hyde, 56 Fed. 188, 5 C. C. A. 461. See Morse v. Anderson, 150 U. S. 156, 14 Sup. Ct. 43, 37 L. Ed. 1037; U. S. v. Jones, 149 U. S. 262, 13 Sup. Ct. 840, 37 L. Ed. 726.

In practice, however, the point is merely noted at the time, and the bill is afterwards settled; Bull. N. P. 315; Stewart v. Hunt-Ingdon Bank, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 270, 14 Am. Dec. 628; State v. Lord, 5 N. H. 336; Shipherd v. White, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 32; Ferrell v. Alder, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 77; but in general before the close of the term of court; Staggs v. State, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 372; Pomeroy v. Selmes, 8 Mo. 727; Sheppard v. Wilson, 6 How. (U. S.) 200, 12 L. Ed. 430; and then must appear on its face to have been signed at the trial; Walton v. U. S., 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 651, 6 L. Ed. 182; Law v. Merrills, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 268; Byrd v. Tucker, 3 Ark. 451. A bill may be sealed by the judge after the record has been removed, and even after the expiration of his term; Bennett v. Davis, Morris (Ia.) 364. See Whitcomb v. Williams, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 228; Consaul v. Lidell, 7 Mo. 250. If presented to and signed by a judge after the close of term, and the record does not show any order or consent so to do, the supreme court will affirm the judgment; U. S. v. Jones, 149 U. S. 262, 13 Sup. Ct. 840, 37 L. Ed. 726.

Formal proceedings. The bill must be signed by the judge or a majority of the judges who tried the cause; Law v. Jackson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 746; Gordon v. Brownes' Ex'r, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 219; Kennedy v. Trustees of Covington, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 543; Darling v. Gill, Wright (Ohio) 73; Small v. Haskins, 29 Vt. 187; Cameron v. Ward, 22 Ga. 168; upon notice of time and place when and where it is to be done; Bull. N. P. 316; Law v. Jackson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 746; Harris v. State, 2 Ga. 211; Smith v. Burn, id. 262.

Allowing and signing a bill of exceptions is a judicial act, which can only be done by the judge who sat at the trial, or by the presiding judge if more than one sat; consent of counsel will not give validity; Malony v. Adsit, 175 U. S. 281, 20 Sup. Ct. 115, 44 L. Ed. 163. If the proper judge die before signing it, the court will grant a new trial; id., citing 16 C. B. 29; 3 id. 796; State v. Weiskittle, 61 Md. 51. It was held in Penn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Ashe, 145 Fed. 593, 76 C. C. A. 283, 7 Ann. Cas. 491, that if a circuit judge dies, pending a motion for a new trial, and there is no record from which his successor could fairly pass upon the motion and sign a bill of exceptions, his only authority under the statute is to grant a new trial. In case a judge resigns, his successor has jurisdiction, in his discretion, to sign a bill of exceptions; McIntyre v. Modern Woodmen of America, 200 Fed. 1.

Where the bill is presented for signature within the prescribed time, one will not be prejudiced by the refusal or neglect of the judge to sign it within the prescribed time; Hawes v. Pulver, 129 Ill. 123, 21 N. E. 777; Wright v. Judge of Superior Court, 41 Mich. 726, 49 N. W. 925. The bill need not be sealed; U. S. R. S. § 953; but must be signed by the judge, and the initials "A. B." are not the signature of the judge and do not constitute a sufficient authentication; Origet

v. U. S., 125 U. S. 240, 8 Sup. Ct. 846, 31 L. Ed. 743; Malony v. Adsit, 175 U. S. 287, 20 Sup. Ct. 115, 44 L. Ed. 163.

Facts not appearing on the bill are not presumed; Beavers v. Smith, 11 Ala. 29; Cravins v. Gant, 4 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 126; Courtney v. Com., 5 Rand. (Va.) 666; Snowden v. Warder, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 101; Berry v. Hale, 1 How. (Miss.) 315; Pons v. Hart, 5 Fla. 457; Dunlop v. Munroe, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 270, 3 L. Ed. 329.

Effect of. The bill when sealed is conclusive evidence as to the facts therein stated as between the parties; 3 Burr. 1765; Bingham v. Cabbot, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 38, 1 L. Ed. 491; Law v. Merrills, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 276; in the suit to which it relates, but no further; Shotwell v. Hamblin, 23 Miss. 156, 55 Am. Dec. 83; see Baylor v. Smithers, 1 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 6; and all objections not appearing by the bill are excluded; 8 East 280; Baring v. Shippen, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 168; Allen v. Smith, 12 N. J. L. 160; Com. v. Stephens, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 370; Deam v. Gridley, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 254; Newsum v. Newsum, 1 Leigh (Va.) 86, 19 Am. Dec. 739; Picket v. Allen, 10 Conn. 146; Drexel v. Man, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 343; Bone v. McGinley, 7 How. (Miss.) 671; Brown v. Brown, 7 Mo. 288; Stimpson v. R. Co., 3 How. (U. S.) 553, 11 L. Ed. 722; Lewis v. Lewis, 75 Ia. 669, 37 N. W. 166. But see Murdock v. Herndon's Ex'rs, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 200. In the absence of a bill of exceptions pointing out the alleged errors the appellate court will not review the instructions unless fundamentally erroneous; Howard v. State, 25 Tex. App. 602, 8 S. W. 806. An exception to conclusions of law admits the findings of fact; Neisler v. Harris, 115 Ind. 560, 18 N. E. 39.

It draws in question only the points to which the exception is taken; Van Gordon v. Jackson, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 467; Cox v. Field, 13 N. J. L. 216; Watson v. Watson, 10 Conn. 75; Picket v. Allen, id. 146; and an exception to an instruction will not be considered when the bill of exceptions does not show what the evidence tended to prove; Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 183, 7 Sup. Ct. 500, 30 L. Ed. 644. It does not of itself operate as a stay of proceedings; Seymour v. Slocum, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 509; Holcombe v. Roberts, 19 Ga. 588. The practice of making the entire charge to the jury a part of the bill of exceptions is strongly disapproved; Phoenix Life Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 183, 7 Sup. Ct. 500, 30 L. Ed. 644.

A stipulation, if it can be understood, may answer in place of a bill of exceptions; Houlahan v. Rassler, 73 Wis. 557, 41 N. W. 720.

If the judge's rulings and the grounds of objection thereto appear of record, the right of the party excepting is fully preserved without the retention of a bill; State v. Judge Twenty-Third District Court, 40 La. Ann. 809, 5 South. 407. If the judge has certified and filed the record containing the evidence, exceptions, and charge, he is not compelled to sign a second or separate bill for the party excepting; Com. v. Arnold, 161 Pa. 320, 29 Atl. 270. Where the error is apparent upon the record it need not be presented by a bill of particulars; Moline Plow Co. v. Webb, 141 U. S. 616, 12 Sup. Ct. 100, 35 L. Ed. 879.

They have been abolished in English practice.

A curious case in McDonald v. Faulkner, 2 Ark. 472, shows what is probably the only instance of the kind,—a bill of exceptions certified by bystanders. The verdict and judgment was entered for the plaintiff September 10, 1893; September 12 the defendant moved for a new trial, and on the 16th the motion was overruled and the defendant accepted and obtained leave to prepare a bill of exceptions. Under date of the 21st, the record states: "The defendant filed his bill of exceptions, whereupon the plaintiff filed his bill of exceptions certified by the bystanders." To the latter the judge appended a statement that he declined signing it, "not that it does not contain the facts of the case, but because it purports to be an exception to the opinion of the court in signing a bill of exceptions taken to a former decision of the court in signing a bill of exceptions in the progress of the cause." Thereupon the plaintiff's bill of exceptions was signed and certified to be true by five bystanders. The judgment was reversed and a new trial ordered, but no mention is made of plaintiff's bill of exceptions on petition for rehearing. In an opinion denying it, the judge refers to the "plaintiff's bill of exceptions taken and signed by bystanders on the 25th of September," and holds him estopped by the statements in it from denying the accuracy of defendant's bill of exceptions.

BILL OF EXCHANGE.

A written order from one person to another, directing the person to whom it is addressed to pay to a third person a certain sum of money therein named. Byles, Bills 1.

By the Negotiable Instrument Act, a bill of exchange is an unconditional order in writing addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it requiring the addressee to pay on demand, or at a fixed or determinable future time, a sum certain in money to order or to bearer. It may be either an inland bill or a foreign bill, and may be drawn in sets. The act defines a check as a bill of exchange drawn on a bank and payable on demand. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS, for the states, etc., in which it has been enacted.

A bill of exchange may be negotiable or non-negotiable. If negotiable, it may be transferred either before or after acceptance.

The person making the bill, called the drawer, is said to draw upon the person to whom it is directed, and undertakes impliedly to pay the amount with certain costs if he refuse to comply with the command. The drawee is not liable on the bill till after acceptance, and then becomes liable as principal to the extent of the terms of the acceptance; while the drawer becomes liable to the payee and indorsees conditionally upon the failure of the acceptor to pay. The liabilities between indorsers and indorsees are subject to the same rules as those of indorsers and indorsees on promissory notes. Regularly, the drawee is the person to become acceptor; but other parties may accept, under special circumstances.

A foreign bill of exchange is one of which the drawer and drawee are residents of countries foreign to each other. In this respect the states of the United States are held foreign as to each other; Phoenix Bank v. Hussey, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 483; Wells v. Whitehead, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 527; Hopkins v. Clay, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 488; Bank of Cape Fear v. Stinemetz, 1 Hill (S. C.) 44; Brown v. Ferguson, 4 Leigh (Va.) 37, 24 Am. Dec. 707; Green v. Jackson, 15 Me. 136; Donegan v. Wood, 49 Ala. 242, 20 Am. Rep. 275; Todd v. Neal's Adm'r, 49 Ala. 266; Rice v. Hagan, 8 Dana (Ky.) 133; Carter v. Burley, 9 N. H. 558; Armstrong v. Bank, 133 U. S. 433, 10 Sup. Ct. 450, 33 L. Ed. 747; Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Pendleton, 112 U. S. 696, 5 Sup. Ct. 314, 28 L. Ed. 866; Ticonic Bank v. Stackpole, 41 Me. 302; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 9. But see contra, Miller v. Hackley, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 384, 4 Am. Dec. 372, and see Grimshaw v. Bender, 6 Mass. 162.

An inland bill is one of which the drawer and drawee are residents of the same state or country; Ragsdale v. Franklin, 25 Miss. 143. As to whether a bill is considered as foreign or inland when made partly in one place and partly in another, see 5 Taunt. 529; 8 id. 679; 1 Maule & S. 87. Defined by statute 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, § 7.

The distinction between inland and foreign bills becomes important with reference to the question whether protest and notice are to be given in case of non-acceptance. See 3 Kent 95; PROTEST.

The parties to a bill of exchange are the drawer, the drawee, the acceptor, and the payee. Other persons connected with a bill in case of a transfer as parties to the transfer are the indorser, indorsee, and holder. See those titles. It sometimes happens that one or more of the apparent parties to a bill are fictitious persons. The rights of a bona fide holder are not thereby prejudiced where the payee and indorser are fictitious; 2 H. Bla. 78; 1 Campb. 130; Blodgett v. Jackson, 40 N. H. 26; Benj. Chal. Dig. § 85; or even where the drawer and payee are both fictitious; 10 B. & C. 468; and all the various parties need not be different persons; Wildes v. Savage, 1 Sto. 22, Fed. Cas. No. 17,653. The qualifications of parties who are to be made liable by the making or transfer of bills are the same as in case of other contracts. See PARTIES; FICTITIOUS PAYEE.

The bill must be written; 1 Pardessus, 344; 2 Stra. 955. See Goldman v. Blum, 58 Tex. 636.

It should be properly dated, both as to place and time of making; Beawes, Lex Merc. pl. 3; 2 Pardessus, n. 333; 1 B. & C. 398. But it is not essential to the validity of a bill; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 82; Drake v. Rogers, 32 Me. 524; Coon v. Swan, 30 Vt. 11. If not dated, it will be considered as dated at the time it was made; Seldonridge v. Connable, 32 Ind. 375; Cowing v. Altman, 71 N. Y. 441, 27 Am. Rep. 70; First Nat.

Bank of St. Charles v. Hunt, 25 Mo. App. 174. Bills are sometimes ante or post-dated for convenience; Union Bethel African M. E. Church v. Sheriff, 33 La. Ann. 1461; Frazier v. Printing & Bookbinding Co., 24 Hun (N. Y.) 281.

The superscription of the sum for which the bill is payable will aid an omission in the bill, but is not indispensable; Smith v. Smith, 1 R. I. 398, 53 Am. Dec. 652; 10 Q. B. Div. 30.

The time of payment should be expressed; but if no time is mentioned it is considered as payable on demand; 2 B. & C. 157; Porter v. Porter, 51 Me. 376; First Nat. Bank of St. Charles v. Hunt, 25 Mo. App. 174; Converse v. Johnson, 146 Mass. 22, 14 N. E. 925; Hall v. Toby, 110 Pa. 318, 1 Atl. 369; Roswell Mfg. Co. v. Hudson, Watson & Co., 72 Ga. 25; L. R. 3 Q. B. 573. In Massachusetts it must be payable at a definite time or at such a time as can be made definite upon election of the holder; Stults v. Silva, 119 Mass. 137; Mahoney v. Fitzpatrick, 133 Mass. 151, 43 Am. Rep. 502.

The place of payment may be prescribed by the drawer; 8 C. B. 433; or by the acceptor on his acceptance; 3 Jur. 34; Green v. Goings, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 652; but is not as a general practice, in which last case the bill is considered as payable and to be presented at the usual place of business of the drawee, King v. Holmes, 11 Pa. 456, at his residence, where it was made, or to him personally anywhere; 10 B. & C. 4; M. & M. 381; 4 C. & P. 35; Scott v. Perlee, 39 Ohio St. 67, 48 Am. Rep. 421.

Such an order or request to pay must be made as demands a right, and not asks a favor; M. & M. 171; and it must be absolute, and not contingent; 2 B. & Ald. 417; Woolley v. Sergeant, 8 N. J. L. 262, 14 Am. Dec. 419; Smurr v. Forman, 1 Ohio, 272; Van Vacter v. Flack, 1 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 393, 40 Am. Dec. 100; Henry v. Hazen, 5 Ark. 401; Kinney v. Lee, 10 Tex. 155. Mere civility in the terms does not alter the legal effect of the instrument.

The word pay is not necessary; deliver is equally operative; 8 Mod. 364; as well as other words; 9 C. B. 570; but they must be words requiring payment; 10 Ad. & E. 98; "il vous plaira de payer" is, in France, the proper language of a bill; Pailliet, Man. 841.

Each of the duplicate or triplicate (as the case may be) bills of a set of foreign exchange contains a provision that the particular bill is to be paid only if the others remain at the time unpaid; see 2 Pardessus, n. 342; and all the parts of the set constitute but one bill; Ingraham v. Gibbs, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 134, 1 L. Ed. 320.

A bill should designate the payee; 26 E. L. & Eq. 404; Lyon v. Marshall, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 241; Moody v. Threlkeld, 13 Ga. 55; Tittle v. Thomas, 30 Miss. 122, 64 Am. Dec. 154; Adams v. King, 16 Ill. 169, 61 Am. Dec. 64; and see Wheeler v. Webster, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 1; Moore v. Anderson, 8 Ind. 18; but when no payee is designated, the holder by indorsement may fill the blank with his own name; 2 Maule & S. 90; and if payable to the bearer it is sufficient; 3 Burr. 1526.

To make it negotiable, it must be payable to the order of the payee or to the bearer, or must contain other equivalent and operative words of transfer; 9 B. & C. 409; Gerard v. La Coste, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 194, 1 L. Ed. 96; Downing v. Backenstoos, 3 Caines (N. Y.) 137; Fernon v. Farmer's Adm'r, 1 Harr. (Del.) 32; Hackney v. Jones, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 612; Reed v. Murphy, 1 Ga. 236; Smurr v. Forman, 1 Ohio, 272; Raymond v. Middleton, 29 Pa. 530; otherwise in some states of the United States by statute, and in Scotland; Maxwell v. Goodrum, 10 B. Monr. (Ky.) 286. But in England and the United States negotiability is not essential to the validity of a bill; 3 Kent 78; Big. Bills & N. 12; 6 Term 123; President, etc., of Goshen & Minisink Turnpike Road v. Hurin, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 217, 6 Am. Dec. 273; Duncan v. Sav. Inst., 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 299; Coursin v. Ledlie's Adm'r, 31 Pa. 506; Michigan Bank v. Eldred, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 544, 19 L. Ed. 763; though it is otherwise in France; Code de Comm. art. 110, 188; 2 Pardessus, n. 339. The fact that the bill provides that it shall bear interest from date in case of failure to pay at maturity, will not affect its negotiability as the rule that it must be for a sum certain applies to the principal and not interest; Christian County Bank v. Goode, 44 Mo. App. 129; nor a provision that a higher rate of interest shall be paid after default; Merrill v. Hurley, 6 S. D. 592, 62 N. W. 958, 55 Am. St. Rep. 859; nor will its negotiability be affected by a stipulation in it to pay a reasonable attorney's fee; Bank of Commerce of Owensboro v. Fuqua, 11 Mont. 285, 28 Pac. 291, 14 L. R. A. 588, 28 Am. St. Rep. 461; Wolff v. Dorsey, 38 Ill. App. 305; Stark v. Olsen, 44 Neb. 646, 63 N. W. 37; Benn v. Kutzschan, 24 Or. 28, 32 Pac. 763; contra, Clark v. Barnes, 58 Mo. App. 667; First Nat. Bank of Decorah v. Laughlin, 4 N. D. 391, 61 N. W. 473; Woods v. North, 84 Pa. 407, 24 Am. Rep. 201.

The sum for which the bill is drawn should be written in full in the body of the instrument, as the words in the body govern in case of doubt; 5 Bingh. N. C. 425; Mears v. Graham, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 144; Smith v. Smith, 1 R. I. 398, 53 Am. Dec. 652; the marginal figures are not a part of the contract, but a mere memorandum; Smith v. Smith, 1 R. I. 398, 53 Am. Dec. 652; Com. v. Bank, 98 Mass. 12, 93 Am. Dec. 126.

The amount must be fixed and certain, and not contingent; 2 Salk. 375; Philadelphia Bank v. Newkirk, 2 Miles (Pa.) 442; Story v. Lamb, 52 Mich. 525, 18 N. W. 248. It must be payable in money, and not in merchandise; Jerome v. Whitney, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 321; Thomas v. Roosa, id. 461; Peay v. Pickett, 1 N. & Mc. (S. C.) 254; Gwinn v. Roberts, 3 Ark. 72; Strader v. Batchelor, 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 168; Hosstatter v. Wilson, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 307; and is not negotiable if payable in bank bills or in currency or other substitutes for legal money of similar denominations; Hasbrook v. Palmer, 2 McLean, 10, Fed. Cas. No. 6,188; Collins v. Lincoln, 11 Vt. 268; Kirkpatrick v. McCullough, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 171, 39 Am. Dec. 158; Hawkins v. Watkins, 5 Ark. 481; McCormick v. Trotter, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 94; Irvine v. Lowry, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 293, 10 L. Ed. 462; Bank of Mobile v. Brown, 42 Ala. 108; held otherwise in Swetland v. Creigh, 15 Ohio, 118; Besancon v. Shirley, 9 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 457; Cockrill v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Mo. 697; Wilburn v. Greer, 6 Ark. 255; Ogden v. Slade, 1 Tex. 13; Fleming v. Nall, id. 246; Chevallier v. Buford, id. 503; Lacy v. Holbrook, 4 Ala. 88; Carter v. Penn, id. 140; Bull v. Bank, 123 U. S. 112, 8 Sup. Ct. 62, 31 L. Ed. 97; Laird v. State, 61 Md. 309.

It is not necessary, however, that the money should be current in the place of payment, or where the bill is drawn; it may be in the money of any country whatever; Black v. Ward, 27 Mich. 193, 15 Am. Rep. 162; Thompson v. Sloan, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 71, 35 Am. Dec. 546; King v. Hamilton, 12 Fed. 478; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 58. But it is necessary that the instrument should express the specific denomination of money when payable in the money of a foreign country, in order that the courts may be able to ascertain its equivalent value; otherwise it is not negotiable; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 58. As to bills payable in Confederate money, see Thorington v. Smith, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 12, 19 L. Ed. 361; The Confederate Note Case, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 548, 22 L. Ed. 196; Stewart v. Salamon, 94 U. S. 434, 24 L. Ed. 275; and that title.

"Value received" is often inserted, but is not of any use in a negotiable bill; Hubble v. Fogartie, 3 Rich. (S. C.) 413, 45 Am. Dec. 775; Mandeville v. Welch, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 277, 5 L. Ed. 87; Lines v. Smith, 4 Fla. 47; Coursin v. Ledlie's Adm'rs, 31 Pa. 506; 3 M. & S. 351.

A direction to place to the account of some one, drawer, drawee, or third person, is often added, but is unnecessary; Comyns, Dig. Merchant, F, 5; 1 B. & C. 398.

As per advice, inserted in a bill, deprives the drawee of authority to pay the bill until advised; Chitty, Bills 162.

It should be subscribed by the drawer, though it is sufficient if his name appear in the body of the instrument; 2 Ld. Raym. 1376; Claussen v. La Franz, 1 Ia. 231; May v. Miller, 27 Ala. 515; and should be addressed to the drawee by the Christian name and surname, or by the full style of the firm; 2

Pardessus, n. 335; Beawes, Lex Merc. pl. 3; Chitty, Bills 186.

Provision may be made by the drawer, and inserted as a part of the bill, for applying to another person, for a return without protest, or for limiting the damages for re-exchange, expense, etc., in case of the failure or refusal of the drawee to accept or to pay; Chitty, Bills 188.

A bona fide holder of a bill negotiated before maturity merely as a security for an antecedent debt is not affected, without notice, by equities or defences between the original parties; Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. v. Bank, 102 U. S. 14, 26 L. Ed. 61.

A certificate, made and payable in a state out of a particular fund, and purporting to be the obligation of a municipal corporation, is not governed by the law merchant, and is open in the hands of subsequent holders to the same defences as existed against the original payee; Indiana v. Glover, 155 U. S. 513, 15 Sup. Ct. 186, 39 L. Ed. 243.

See INDORSEMENT; INDORSER; INDORSEE; ACCEPTANCE; PROTEST; DAMAGES; PROMISSORY NOTE; NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT; FOREIGN BILL OF EXCHANGE.

BILL OF GROSS ADVENTURE. In French Maritime Law. Any written instrument which contains a contract of bottomry, respondentia, or any other kind of maritime loan. There is no corresponding English term. Hall, Marit. Loans 182. See BOTTOMRY; RESPONDENTIA.

BILL OF HEALTH. A certificate, properly authenticated, that a certain ship or vessel therein named comes from a place where no contagious distempers prevail, and that none of the crew at the time of her departure were infected with any such distemper.

It is generally found on board ships coming from the Levant, or from the coasts of Barbary where the plague prevails; 1 Marsh. Ins. 408; and is necessary whenever a ship sails from a suspected port, or where it is required at the port of destination; Holt 167; 1 Bell, Comm. 5th ed. 553.

BILL OF INDICTMENT. A written accusation of one or more persons of a crime or misdemeanor, lawfully presented to a grand jury. If twelve or more members of the jury are satisfied that the accused ought to be tried, the return is made, A true bill; but when no sufficient ground is shown for putting the accused on trial, a return is made, Not a true bill, or, Not found; formerly, Ignoramus, and this phrase is still sometimes used. See INDICTMENT; TRUE BILL.

BILL OF INFORMATION. One which is instituted by the attorney-general or other proper officer in behalf of the state or of those whose rights are the objects of its care and protection. It is usually termed simply an information, or information in equity.

If the suit immediately concerns the right of the state, the information is generally exhibited without a relator. If it does not immediately concern those rights, it is conducted at the instance and under the immediate direction of some person whose name is inserted in the information and is termed the relator. In case a relator is concerned, the officers of the state are not further concerned than as they are instructed and advised by those whose rights the state is called upon to protect and establish. In such case the attorney-general simply determines in limine whether the suit is one proper to be instituted in his name, and the subsequent proceedings are usually conducted by the solicitor of the relator at the cost of the latter. See Harrison, Ch. Pr. 151; Mitf. Eq. Pl. (by Tyler) 196; INFORMATION.

BILL OF INTERPLEADER. One in which the person exhibiting it claims no right in opposition to the rights claimed by the persons against whom the bill is exhibited, but prays the decree of the court touching the rights of those persons, for the safety of the person exhibiting the bill. Cooper, Eq. Plead. 43; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 32; Winfield v. Bacon, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 154; Adams v. Dixon, 19 Ga. 513, 65 Am. Dec. 608.

An interpleader is a proceeding in equity for the relief of a party against whom there are, at law, separate and conflicting claims, whether in suit or not, for the same debt, duty, or thing, and where a recovery by one of the claimants will not, at law, protect the party against a recovery for the same debt or duty by the other claimant. It is out of this latter circumstance that the equity to relief arises; per Bates, Ch., Hastings v. Cropper, 3 Del. Ch. 165; Badeau v. Rogers, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 209; and where the facts present a proper case for an interpleader, equity will not entertain a bill simply to restrain one of the parties claiming the fund in controversy from prosecuting his claims until the other party has failed to establish his claim; Hastings v. Cropper, 3 Del. Ch. 165; but leave will be granted to amend by making it a bill of interpleader by adding proper parties, bringing the fund into court, and filing the affidavit denying collusion; id.

A bill exhibited by a third person, who, not knowing to whom he ought of right to render a debt or duty or pay his rent, fears he may be hurt by some of the claimants, and therefore prays that they may interplead, so that the court may judge to whom the thing belongs, and he be thereby safe on the payment; Pract. Reg. 78; Bedell v. Hoffman, 2 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 199; City Bank v. Bangs, id. 570; Cameron v. The Marcellus, 48 N. C. 83; Hall v. Craig, 125 Ind. 523, 25 N. E. 533; Glaser v. Priest, 29 Mo. App. 1.

A bill of the former character may, in general, be brought by one who has in his possession property to which two or more lay claim; Strange v. Bell, 11 Ga. 103; Associated Presbyterian Soc. of Green's Farm v. Staples, 23 Conn. 544; Herndon v. Higgs, 15 Ark. 389; Freeland v. Wilson, 18 Mo. 380; Heusner v. Ins. Co., 47 Mo. App. 336.

Such a bill must contain the plaintiff's statement of his rights, negating any interest in the thing in controversy; 3 Story, Eq. Jur. § 821; but showing a clear title to maintain the bill; 3 Madd. 277; and also the claims of the opposing parties; Mohawk & H. R. Co. v. Clute, 4 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 384; 7 Hare 57; Robards v. Clayton, 49 Mo. App. 608; that the adverse title of the claimants is derived from a common source is sufficient; Crane v. McDonald, 118 N. Y. 648, 23 N. E. 991; must have annexed to it the affidavit of the plaintiff that there is no collusion between him and either of the parties; Farley v. Blood, 30 N. H. 354; must contain an offer to bring money into court if any is due, the bill being demurrable, if there is failure, unless it is offered or else actually produced; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 49; Barton, Suit in Eq. 47, n. 1; must show that there are persons in being capable of interpleading and setting up opposing claims; 18 Ves. Ch. 377; it is also demurrable if upon its face it shows that one of the defendants has no claim to the debt due from the complainant; Pusey & Jones Co. v. Miller, 61 Fed. 401.

These proceedings should not be brought except when there is no other way for one to protect himself, and in order to maintain the action, it is necessary to show that the plaintiff has not acted in a partisan manner as between the claimants; Hinckley v. Pfister, 83 Wis. 64, 53 N. W. 21.

It should pray that the defendants set forth their several titles, and interplead, settle, and adjust their demands between themselves. It also generally prays an injunction to restrain the proceedings of the claimants, or either of them, at law; and in this case the bill should offer to bring the money into court; and the court will not, in general, act upon this part of the prayer unless the money be actually brought into court; Mohawk & H. R. Co. v. Clute, 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 384; Richards v. Salter, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 445.

In the absence of statutes, such a bill does not ordinarily lie, except where there is privity of some sort between all the parties, and where the claim by all is of the same nature and character; 3 Beav. 579; Story, Eq. Jur. § 807; Lincoln v. R. Co., 24 Vt. 639; White Water Valley Canal Co. v. Comegys, 2 Ind. 469. The granting of an order of interpleader is within the judicial discretion; Taylor v. Satterthwaite, 2 Misc. 441, 22 N. Y. Supp. 187.

The decree for interpleader may be obtained after a hearing in the usual manner; 4 Bro. Ch. 297; City Bank v. Bangs, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 570; or without a hearing, if the defendants do not deny the statements of the bill; 16 Ves. Ch. 203; Story, Eq. Pl. § 297 a.

A bill in the nature of a bill of interpleader will lie in many cases by a party in interest to ascertain and establish his own rights, where there are other conflicting rights between third persons; Story, Eq. Pl. § 297 b; Bedell v. Hoffman, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 199; Cameron v. The Marcellus, 48 N. C. 83.

In a bill of interpleader the complainant being indifferent between the parties, the duty of his solicitor is ended as such, when the bill is filed, and he has no interest in the decree except that the bill shall be adjudged to be properly filed. The solicitor may then appear for one of the parties, but only by leave of the court, which will be granted only upon consideration of the special circumstances of the facts of the case and the conclusion that the case is a proper one for granting the leave; Morrow v. Robinson, 4 Del. Ch. 534, note; Webster v. McDaniel, 2 id. 297; and see Houghton v. Kendall, 7 Allen (Mass.) 72. See INTERPLEADER.

A bill of interpleader is said in 22 Harv. L. R. 294, to lie on behalf of one who is in the position of an innocent stakeholder who is ready to do his duty, in order to free him from subjection to two suits and the possibility of a double liability. The requisites of the suit are, roughly speaking, ten in number: 1. The adverse claims must be mutually exclusive; National Ins. Co. v. Pingrey, 141 Mass. 411, 6 N. E. 93; Bassett v. Leslie, 123 N. Y. 396, 25 N. E. 386. It would be manifestly unjust to make the claimants fight each other when the validity of one claim is not dependent upon the invalidity of the other; there can then be no dispute between the claimants. For this reason, if one of the claimants gets a verdict or judgment the bill no longer lies; see Maxwell v. Leichtman, 72 N. J. Eq. 780, 65 Atl. 1007. 2. The complainant must be willing to bring into court or surrender all that is claimed by either defendant; M. & H. R. Co. v. Clute, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 384. If he has a counterclaim against either claimant he cannot have it determined in such a proceeding. 3. The position of the stakeholder must be such a precarious one that he really needs the aid of equity to prevent injustice. Thus, one who is in possession of land claiming no title need only move out. So also the bill does not lie if all the claims would be settled in one suit at law; Fitts v. Shaw, 22 R. I. 17, 46 Atl. 42; or if one of the claims is clearly invalid; M. & H. R. Co. v. Clute, supra; or both are illegal; Applegarth v. Colley, 2 Dowl. N. S. 223. 4. There must be no collusion between the complainant and either claimant; Murietta v. So. Amer. Co., 62 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 396. The bill lies to help only a disinterested stakeholder. 5. The stakeholder must not have been placed in his precarious position through his own fault;

Horner v. Willcocks, 1 Ir. Jur. O. S. 136; and he must not be guilty of laches in pursuing his remedy. 6. If equity is unable to enjoin the prosecution of one of the claims at law, it can give no relief. Thus a state court declined to entertain a bill because it could not enjoin a federal court from enforcing its judgment; Smith v. Reed, 74 N. J. Eq. 776, 70 Atl. 961. These six requisites are based on sound principles of justice. The following, although supported by authority, are extremely technical and will be found upon examination to have a doubtful equitable basis. 7. It is often required that all the claims be derived from a common source; First Nat. Bank v. Bininger, 26 N. J. Eq. 345. This is a survival of the narrow view of interpleader held by the common law. The requisite of privity is foreign to the purpose of the bill; for the position of a stakeholder is equally precarious irrespective of the sources from which the defendants derive their claims. The refusal to allow an interpleader therefore seems unsound; see Crane v. McDonald, 118 N. Y. 648, 23 N. E. 991; 17 Harv. L. Rev. 489. 8. It is sometimes required that the stakeholder have no claim or interest in the stake; see 4 Pomeroy, Eq. Jurisp. § 1325; MacLennan, Interpleader 64. If the amount of the stakeholder's charge is disputed, the bill will not lie; Lawson v. Warehouse Co., 70 Hun 281, 24 N. Y. Supp. 281; but it is otherwise if the claim is available against, and admitted by, both defendants; Gibson v. Goldthwaite, 7 Ala. 281, 42 Am. Dec. 592. The result should be the same where the lien is available against only one of the defendants, if he does not dispute it. Hence this requirement is really covered by the second class above. 9. The stakeholder must have incurred no collateral or independent liability to either claimant; Bartlett v. His Imperial Majesty, 23 Fed. 257; Crawshaw v. Thornton, 2 My. & C. 1; contra, Attenborough v. London, etc., Co., 3 C. P. D. 450 (statutory); since, it is argued, one of the claimants may be subjected to two suits to enforce his rights. On the contrary (and this seems to be the better and more modern view) the bill will settle once and for all the ownership of the res; and it may settle the whole controversy; see In re Mersey Docks, [1890] 1 Q. B. 546. The fact of the collateral liability is immaterial and relief should therefore be granted. 10. Lastly, it is insisted that the same thing, debt, or duty, must be claimed by all the defendants; Slaney v. Sidney, 14 M. & W. 800. See 4 Pomeroy, Eq. Jurisp. § 1323. This however seems unnecessarily refined in its technicality. So long as the claims are mutually exclusive, and the stakeholder is willing to bring into court the full amount claimed by either, it would seem that he should be entitled to maintain his bill. And in a few cases it has so been held; Thomson v. Ebbets, Hopk. Ch. (N. Y.) 272.

In Hayward & Clark v. McDonald, 192 Fed. 890, 113 C. C. A. 368. It was said that the true limits of equity jurisdiction in bills of interpleader is not precisely settled; but that a strict bill is one in which the complainant claims no relief against either defendant. There are, however, innumerable cases of bills in the nature of bills of interpleader in which the complainant may be entitled to relief by such bill; among these is a case where the complainant has property in which others have conflicting claims, but in which the complainant may have equitable rights himself, citing Van Winkle v. Owen, 54 N. J. Eq. 253, 34 Atl. 400; Stephenson & Coon v. Burdett, 56 W. Va. 109, 48 S. E. 846, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 748; Groves v. Sentell, 153 U. S. 465, 14 Sup. Ct. 898, 38 L. Ed. 785.

BILL OF LADING. The written evidence of a contract for the carriage and delivery of goods sent by sea for a certain freight.

A written acknowledgment of the receipt of certain goods and an agreement for a consideration to transport and to deliver the same at a specified place to a person therein named or his order. See Porter, Bills of Lading. See also The Delaware, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 596, 20 L. Ed. 779.

It is at once a receipt and a contract; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Knight, 122 U. S. 79, 7 Sup. Ct. 1132, 30 L. Ed. 1077; Schouler, Pers. Prop. 408; but it has been said that rather than to consider it as a mere receipt, it seems better to regard it as analogous to a negotiable instrument; 19 Harv. L. Rev. 391. A bill of lading ordinarily represents title to the goods covered by it; Peters v. Elliott, 78 Ill. 321; and this is said to be the prevalent American view; 12 Harv. L. Rev. 436.

A memorandum or acknowledgment in writing, signed by the captain or master of a ship or other vessel, that he has received in good order on board of his ship or vessel, therein named, at the place therein mentioned, certain goods therein specified, which he promises to deliver in like good order (the dangers of the sea excepted) at the place therein appointed for the delivery of the same, to the consignee therein named, or to his assigns, he or they paying freight for the same; 1 Term 745; Abb. Sh. 216; Code de Comm. art. 281.

A similar acknowledgment made by a carrier by land.

A through bill of lading is one where a railroad contracts to transport over its own line for a certain distance carloads of merchandise or stock, there to deliver the same to its connecting lines to be transported to the place of destination at a fixed rate per car-load for the whole distance; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Vaughn, 4 Willson, Ct. App. Tex. § 182, 16 S. W. 775.

It should contain the name of the shipper or consignor; the name of the consignee;

the names of the vessel and her master; the places of shipment and destination; the price of the freight, and, in the margin, the marks and numbers of the things shipped. Jacobson, Sea Laws.

The general rule that contracts are governed as to nature, validity, and interpretation by the lex loci contractus, unless it clearly appears that the parties had some other law in view, is applicable to a bill of lading; Brockway v. Exp. Co., 171 Mass. 158, 50 N. E. 626; Frasier v. R., 73 S. C. 140, 52 S. E. 964; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Beebe, 174 Ill. 13, 50 N. E. 1019, 42 L. R. A. 210, 66 Am. St. Rep. 253; Herf & Frerichs Chemical Co. v. Lackawanna Line, 100 Mo. App. 164, 73 S. W. 346; but where one provides for the delivery of goods in a state it has been held to be a contract of that state although made in another state; Pennsylvania Co. v. Yoder, 25 Ohio Cir. Ct. 32; C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Simon, 15 id. 123. Any reasonable doubt as to the construction of the printed portion should be resolved against the carrier; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Doyle, 142 Fed. 669, 74 C. C. A. 245.

Writing is unnecessary and an oral contract satisfactorily proved, if there is no fraud or imposition, is equally obligatory; Missouri K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Patrick, 144 Fed. 632, 75 C. C. A. 434. A promise to carry on the faith of which the shipper buys goods is a contract of carriage; Bigelow v. Ry. Co., 104 Wis. 109, 80 N. W. 95; Meloche v. Ry. Co., 116 Mich. 69, 74 N. W. 301; and so is the receipt of goods and undertaking to deliver; Indiana, I. & I. R. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 118 Ill. App. 652; but a mere promise to ship is not sufficient; Southern Ry. Co. v. Wilcox, 99 Va. 394, 39 S. E. 144. It was held in effect that the legal liability of a common carrier is part of the contract as if written in it; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. McKinney, 34 Ind. App. 402, 73 N. E. 148; and so is the obligation to ship within a reasonable time; Pennsylvania Co. v. Clark, 2 Ind. App. 146, 27 N. E. 586, 28 N. E. 208.

Ordinarily parol evidence is not admissible in the absence of fraud or mistake to vary a bill of lading; Inman & Co. v. R. Co., 159 Fed. 960; De Sola v. Pomares, 119 Fed. 373; Tallassee Falls Mfg. Co. v. R. R., 117 Ala. 520, 23 South. 139, 67 Am. St. Rep. 179; Chouteaux v. Leech & Co., 18 Pa. 224, 57 Am. Dec. 602; Keller v. R. Co., 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 240; Gibbons v. Robinson, 63 Mich. 146, 29 N. W. 533; but it has been held competent to contradict a statement that the goods were received in apparent good order; Foley v. R. Co., 96 N. Y. Supp. 182; and, of course, in case of error or fraud; Sonia Cotton-Oil Co. v. The Red River, 106 La. 42, 30 South. 303, 87 Am. St. Rep. 293; and it is said to make a prima facie case only and to be open to explanation; Planters' Fertilizer Mfg. Co. v. Elder, 101 Fed. 1001, 42 C. C. A. 130; or to correct an omission or ambiguity; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Duncan, 137 Ala. 446, 34 South. 988; either as to the route; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Duncan, 137 Ala. 446, 34 South. 988; or the time of arrival; Sloop v. R. Co., 117 Mo. App. 204, 84 S. W. 111.

Where the conditions are on the face and in the body of the bill of lading, and the consignor receives it and ships the goods without complaint, he is presumed to have assented to these conditions, and they become, if not inimical to law, a valid contract. The shipper's signature is not essential; Inman & Co. v. R. Co., 159 Fed. 960; Smith v. Express Co., 108 Mich. 572, 66 N. W. 479; Grace v. Adams, 100 Mass. 505, 97 Am. Dec. 117, 1 Am. Rep. 131; Com. v. R. Co., 194 U. S. 427, 24 Sup. Ct. 663, 48 L. Ed. 1053.

An exception in a bill of lading, limits the liability, not the duty; hence it is the duty of the owner by himself and his servants to do all he can to avoid the excepted perils; Bowen, L. J., in [1891] 1 Q. B. 619 (C. A.).

An exception of losses caused by (inter alia) "pirates, robbers, or thieves of whatever kind, whether on board or not, by land or sea," did not apply to thefts committed by persons in the service of the ship; [1891] 1 Q. B. 619 (C. A.).

Exceptions in a bill of lading are to be construed most strongly against the shipowner. As between the shipowner and the shipper, the bill of lading only can be considered as the contract; The Caledonia, 157 U. S. 124, 15 Sup. Ct. 537, 39 L. Ed. 644.

Under the Harter Act (q. v.) there is provided in section 2 a prohibition of the insertion "in any bill of lading or shipping document" of any covenant or agreement relieving the owner from the exercise of due diligence in equipping, etc., vessels. The Southwark, 191 U. S. 1, 24 Sup. Ct. 1, 48 L. Ed. 65. Under this act a stipulation limiting the liability of a vessel owner to $100 was held invalid, not only under the Harter Act but under the decisions upon the subject generally; Calderon v. S. S. Co., 170 U. S. 272, 18 Sup. Ct. 588, 42 L. Ed. 1033. As to the construction of the Harter Act generally, see SHIP.

Though it is not necessary that the shipper should sign the bill of lading, yet if its terms restrict the carrier's common-law liability, his assent thereto must be shown. This assent need not be express, it is sufficiently indicated by an acceptance of the bill of lading containing the restrictions; Port. B. of L. 157; Lawrence v. R. Co., 36 Conn. 63; Wertheimer v. R. Co., 1 Fed. 232; McMillan v. R. Co., 16 Mich. 79, 93 Am. Dec. 208; Boorman v. Exp. Co., 21 Wis. 152; Robinson v. Transp. Co., 45 Ia. 476. Where the bill contains a limitation of the carrier's common law liability and is accepted by the shipper, there is a limitation of the liability which binds all the parties, although the shipper could not read, and did not know of the limitation in the bill; Jones v. R. Co., 89 Ala. 376, 8 South. 61; Grace v. Adams, 100 Mass. 505, 97 Am. Dec. 117, 1 Am. Rep. 131; Nines v. R. Co., 107 Mo. 475, 18 S. W. 26; Dimmitt v. R. Co., 103 Mo. 433, 15 S. W. 761. See Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Meyer, 78 Ala. 597.

A bill of lading is usually made in three or more original parts, one of which is sent to the consignee with the goods, one or more others are sent to him by different conveyances, one is retained by the merchant or shipper, and one should be retained by the master. Abbott, Shipp. 217; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1735. Where one is marked "original" and the other "duplicate," the latter is in effect an original; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Heidenheimer, 82 Tex. 195, 17 S. W. 608, 27 Am. St. Rep. 861.

It is regarded as so much merchandise of the kind covered by it; Shaw v. R. Co., 101 U. S. 557, 25 L. Ed. 892. It is not negotiable, but rather a symbol or representative of the goods themselves; id.; Raleigh & Gaston R. Co. v. Lowe, 101 Ga. 320, 28 S. E. 867; Brown v. Babcock, 3 Mass. 29; Stollenwerck v. Thacher, 115 Mass. 224. At common law it is quasi negotiable; 1 T. R. 63; Lickbarrow v. Mason, 1 Sm. L. C. 1148; National Bank of Bristol v. R. Co., 99 Md. 661, 59 Atl. 134, 105 Am. St. Rep. 321; and in many of the states is made so by statute. A statute making bills of lading negotiable by endorsement does not impart to them all the characteristics of bills and notes; Shaw v. R. Co., 101 U. S. 557, 25 L. Ed. 892. The mere sending of a bill of lading without endorsement or actual delivery of the goods to the consignee does not, of itself, pass title; Delta Bag Co. v. Kearns, 112 Ill. App. 269; it is prima facie evidence, but not conclusive; Harrison v. Hixson, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 226; but delivery without endorsement as security for advances, or for a valuable consideration, transfers title; Lewis v. Bank, 166 Ill. 311, 46 N. E. 743; Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Irvin, 46 Ind. 180; American Zinc Lead & Smelting Co. v. Lead Works, 102 Mo. App. 158, 76 S. W. 668; National Newark Banking Co. v. R. Co., 70 N. J. L. 774, 58 Atl. 311, 66 L. R. A. 595, 103 Am. St. Rep. 825; Neill v. Produce Co., 41 W. Va. 37, 23 S. E. 702. There may also be constructive delivery; White Live Stock Commission Co. v. R. Co., 87 Mo. App. 330; Storey v. Hershey, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 485; or by way of estoppel against the carrier and also against the shipper and endorser; Rowley v. Bigelow, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 307, 23 Am. Dec. 607.

It is also assignable by endorsement, whereby the assignee becomes entitled to the goods subject to the shipper's right of stoppage in transitu, in some cases, and to various

Hens; Port. B. of L. 438; Pollard v. Rear-don, 65 Fed. 848, 13 C. C. A. 171. See LIENS; STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

By endorsement to a vendee, the vendor transfers the possession to him; People v. Midkiff, 71 Ill. App. 141; and the property; Law v. Hatcher, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 364. As against the carrier, when the bill of lading is attached to sight drafts, the transferee is entitled to receive the goods; Walters v. R. Co., 66 Fed. 862, 14 C. C. A. 267; or to sue for wrongful delivery; Tishomingo Sav. Inst. v. Johnson (Ala.) 40 South. 503; to the pledge or without surrender of the bills; Chesapeake S. S. Co. v. Bank, 102 Md. 589, 63 Atl. 113; even when the bill of lading did not contain the words "or order"; Chicago & S. R. Co. v. Bank, 26 Ind. App. 600, 59 N. E. 43. One in possession under a bill of lading can sue for conversion against one with no better title; Adams v. O'Connor, 100 Mass. 515, 1 Am. Rep. 137. Placing a car on a side track and notifying the transferee is a sufficient delivery; Anchor Mill Co. v. Ry. Co., 102 Ia. 262, 71 N. W. 255. The assignee of a bill of lading as collateral security for drafts upon the consignee is in a general sense the absolute owner of the goods; 2 Term 63; at least to the extent and until payment of the drafts; Dows v. Bank, 91 U. S. 618, 23 L. Ed. 214; Willman Mercantile Co. v. Fussy, 15 Mont. 514, 39 Pac. 738, 48 Am. St. Rep. 698; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Law, 57 Neb. 560, 78 N. W. 291; and the consignee takes the goods subject to the rights of the holder of the bill of lading and cannot set off the price against a debt due from the consignor; Emery v. Bank, 25 Ohio St. 360, 18 Am. Rep. 299. But in Mason v. Cotton Co., 148 N. C. 492, 62 S. E. 625, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1221, 128 Am. St. Rep. 635, it was held that the right of such assignee does not extend so far as to make him liable for a breach of warranty by the consignor in the sale of the property, and the case in Finch v. Gregg, 126 N. C. 176, 35 S. E. 251, 49 L. R. A. 679, which was contra (and which the Supreme Court of Alabama followed in Haas v. Bank, 144 Ala. 562, 39 South. 129, 1 L. R. A. [N. S.] 242, 113 Am. St. Rep. 61, and the Supreme Court of Tennessee refused to follow in Leonhardt & Co. v. Small & Co., 117 Tenn. 153, 96 S. W. 1051, 6 L. R. A. [N. S.] 887, 119 Am. St. Rep. 994), was expressly overruled after having been subjected to much criticism. See the above cited cases, the opinions in which and the annotations collect the cases.

But the assignee obtains by such assignment only the title of his assignor, and the negotiability is mostly the quality of transferability by endorsement and delivery which enables the rightful assignee to sue in his own name; Shaw v. R. Co., 101 U. S. 557, 25 L. Ed. 892; Stollenwerck v. Thacher, 115 Mass. 224; Dickson v. Elevator Co., 44 Mo.

App. 498. It is only negotiable so far that the owner may transfer it by endorsement or assignment so as to vest the legal title in the assignee; Douglas v. Bank, 86 Ky. 176, 5 S. W. 420, 9 Am. St. Rep. 276.

Delivery of a bill of lading is delivery of the property; Forbes v. R. Co., 133 Mass. 154; but the transfer from one who wrongfully attains it, having no title to the property shipped, passes no title as against the true owner; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Bales, 148 Ala. 279, 41 South. 516; and the transfer by endorsement of a bill of lading, drawn to the shipper's order, vests the title to the goods in the transferee, as purchaser or pledgee, as the case may be; Scheuermann v. Fruit Co., 123 La. 55, 48 South. 647.

It is considered to partake of the character of a written contract, and also of that of a receipt; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Knight, 122 U. S. 79, 7 Sup. Ct. 1132, 30 L. Ed. 1077; Schoul. Pers. Prop. 408. The Missouri v. Webb, 9 Mo. 193; Mears v. R. Co., 75 Conn. 171, 52 Atl. 610, 56 L. R. A. 884, 96 Am. St. Rep. 192; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Simon, 160 Ill. 648, 43 N. E. 596. In so far as it admits the character, quality, or condition of the goods at the time they were received by the carrier, it is a mere receipt, and the carrier may explain or contradict it by parol; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. McFadden, 154 U. S. 155, 14 Sup. Ct. 990, 38 L. Ed. 944; Fasy v. Nav. Co., 77 App. Div. 469, 79 N. Y. Supp. 1103, affirmed without opinion Fasy v. Nav. Co., 177 N. Y. 591, 70 N. E. 1098; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Wilkens, 44 Md. 11, 22 Am. Rep. 26; but as respects the agreement to carry and deliver, it is a contract, and must be construed according to its terms; Ellis v. Willard, 9 N. Y. 529; White v. Van Kirk, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 16; 1 Abb. Adm. 209, 397; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Fulgham, 91 Ala. 555, 8 South. 803; Snow v. R. Co., 109 Ind. 422, 9 N. E. 702; Portland Flouring Mills Co. v. Ins. Co., 130 Fed. 860, 65 C. C. A. 344, affirming British & Foreign Marine Ins. Co. v. Mills Co., 124 Fed. 855. And see Rhodes v. Newhall, 126 N. Y. 574, 27 N. E. 947, 22 Am. St. Rep. 859.

One who receives it without objection is presumed to have assented to its terms; Cox v. R. Co., 170 Mass. 129, 49 N. E. 97; mere ignorance from failure to read or ascertain them is not sufficient in the absence of fraud or concealment; Schaller v. Ry. Co., 97 Wis. 31, 71 N. W. 1042. Reasonable doubt as to the construction of its printed terms is resolved against the carrier; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Doyle, 142 Fed. 669, 74 C. C. A. 245, affirming Doyle v. R. Co., 126 Fed. 841. Where a bill of lading is given, and accepted without objection, it is the real contract by which the mutual obligations of the parties is to be governed and not any prior agreement; The Caledonia, 43 Fed. 681.

Stipulations stamped on it before delivery are part of the contract; The Henry B. Hyde, 82 Fed. 681. And one in a bill of lading that all claims for damages must be presented within 30 days from its date is reasonable; The Queen of the Pacific, 180 U. S. 49, 21 Sup. Ct. 278, 45 L. Ed. 419; as is also an exemption of loss by fire though the regular freight rates were charged; Arthur v. R. Co., 204 U. S. 506, 27 Sup. Ct. 338, 51 L. Ed. 590. In an action against a carrier for damages to property transported the shipper cannot set up a special contract and recover on an implied one, nor can he rely on a parol agreement and recover on proof of a written contract; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. McKinney, 34 Ind. App. 402, 73 N. E. 148.

A clean bill of lading is one which contains nothing in the margin qualifying the words in the bill of lading itself; 61 Law T. 330. Under a "clean" bill of lading in the usual form (viz., one having no stipulation that the goods shipped are to be carried on deck), there is a contract implied that the goods shall be carried under the deck; and parol evidence to the contrary will not be received; Creery v. Holly, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 26; Sayward v. Stevens, 3 Gray (Mass.) 97; The Governor Carey, 2 Hask. 487, Fed. Cas. No. 5,645a; but evidence of a well-known and long-established usage is admissible, and will justify the carriage of goods on deck, though, under a general rule, the party relying on a local custom must prove it by clear and conclusive evidence; The Paragon, 1 Ware 322, Fed. Cas. No. 10,708.

See CARRIERS; FREIGHT; SHIPPING; HARTER ACT.

It was decided in England that the master of a ship who signed a bill of lading for goods which had never been received was not to be regarded as the agent of the owner so as to make the latter responsible; 10 C. B. 665. This decision was immediately followed by an act of Parliament, which makes clear the right of a holder for valuable consideration of such a bill of lading as against the master or other person signing the bill, unless the holder of the bill had notice that the goods had not been taken on board; 18 & 19 Vict. The statute makes the bill conclusive against the person who signed the document; 18 Q. B. D. 147. As far as the shipowner or other principal of the agent issuing the document is concerned, the law of the first decision has been constantly followed in England; [1902] A. C. 117; Scotland; 25 Sc. L. Rep. 112; and Canada; 5 Duval 179. In the United States the question has given rise to great difference of opinion. Most of the cases relate to bills of lading issued by station agents of railroads. The English rule has been followed in Missouri P. R. Co. v. McFadden, 154 U. S. 155, 14 Sup. Ct. 990, 38 L. Ed. 944; Friedlander v. R. Co., 130 U. S. 416, 9 Sup. Ct. 570, 32 L. Ed. 991; Pollard v. Vinton, 105 U. S. 7, 26 L. Ed.

998; Clark v. S. S. Co., 148 Fed. 243; The Isola Di Procida, 124 Fed. 942; The Asphodel, 53 Fed. 835; Martin v. Ry. Co., 55 Ark. 510, 19 S. W. 314; National Bank of Commerce v. R. Co., 44 Minn. 224, 46 N. W. 342, 560, 9 L. R. A. 263, 20 Am. St. Rep. 566; Hazard v. R. Co., 67 Miss. 32, 7 South. 280; Louisiana Nat. Bank v. Laveille, 52 Mo. 380; Williams v. R. Co., 93 N. C. 42, 53 Am. Rep. 450; Anderson v. Mills Co., 37 Or. 483, 60 Pac. 839, 50 L. R. A. 235, 82 Am. St. Rep. 771; Roy & Roy v. R. Co., 42 Wash. 572, 85 Pac. 53, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 302, 7 Ann. Cas. 728. Other cases hold that as against a bona fide purchaser the principal is estopped; Jasper Trust Co. v. R. Co., 99 Ala. 416, 14 South. 546, 42 Am. St. Rep. 75; Relyea v. Mill Co., 42 Conn. 579; Wichita Sav. Bank v. R. Co., 20 Kan. 519; Sioux City & Pac. R. Co. v. Bank, 10 Neb. 556, 7 N. W. 311, 35 Am. Rep. 488; Armour v. R. Co., 65 N. Y. 111, 22 Am. Rep. 603; Brooke v. R. Co., 108 Pa. 529, 1 Atl. 206, 56 Am. Rep. 235; Watson v. R. Co., 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 255. In countries where the civil law prevails, the carrier would generally be held liable; 25 Sc. L. Rep. 112; French Commercial Code, art. 283; and the same is copied in Belgium, Holland, Italy, Spain, Mexico and many Central and South American countries; 34 Reichsgericht 79.

As against the consignee, the bill of lading is not conclusive as to the quantity of goods received, though of great weight; the ship may show that she delivered all the cargo she received; James v. Oil Co., 191 Fed. 827, 112 C. C. A. 341.

There are statutes in many states making it a criminal offence for any agent of a carrier to issue documents of title when the goods have not been received. Such provision is in the Uniform act. An act to make uniform the law of bills of lading has been passed in Illinois, Iowa, Massachusetts, Maryland, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, New Jersey, Louisiana and Alaska.

Its chief provisions make bills of lading non-negotiable or straight bills, and negotiable or order bills. Negotiable bills must not be issued in sets. Duplicate as well as non-negotiable bills must be so marked. The insertion of the name of the person to be notified does not affect the negotiability of the bill. Upon receipt of the bill, if consignor makes no objection, he and those after him are bound by its terms. Negotiable bills must be cancelled when goods are delivered, and if not the carrier is liable to a bona fide purchaser of the bill without notice of the delivery. Such bills must be so marked when a part is delivered. Any alteration of a bill without consent is void and the bill is enforceable according to its original tenor. In the cases of lost or destroyed bills the court may order delivery upon sufficient proof and the giving of a bond. The carrier has reasonable time to ascertain the validity of claims, but an adverse title is no defence to the consignee of a non-negotiable bill or to the holder of a negotiable bill unless enforced by legal process. The issuance of a bill, where no goods have been received by an agent whose actual or apparent authority includes the issuing of bills of lading, makes the carrier liable to one who has given value in good faith relying upon the description therein of the goods. The carrier may, by inserting the words "shipper's load and count" or such like words, indicate that the goods were loaded by the shipper and the description made by him; and if such is the case the carrier shall not be liable for damages caused by improper loading, non-receipt or mis-description of the goods. If goods are under negotiable bills then one cannot attach or levy; the remedies are to reach the bills. The carrier has a lien for his charges, but this must be stated on the bill. Negotiation may be by delivery or endorsement and the rights of the holder are substantially the same as the holder of a negotiable note or bill of exchange. The endorser is not a guarantor but is held to give the usual warranties. One who holds a bill as security, and, receiving payment of the debt, transfers the bill, shall not be deemed a guarantor. The manner in which the bill is drawn may indicate the rights of the buyer and seller. If the seller sends a bill with a sight draft attached, the buyer is bound to honor the draft in order to secure any rights under the bill, but if the buyer transfers it to a bona fide holder in due course, the latter is protected. Negotiation defeats the vendor's lien in the case of an order bill. Issuing a bill, where goods have not been received, is a criminal offence. It is likewise a criminal offence for a person to ship goods to which he has no title or upon which there exists any lien, and where one takes an order bill which he negotiates with intent to deceive. Inducing a carrier to issue bill, when the person knows the carrier has not received the goods, is criminal. Any person who with intent to defraud issues or aids in issuing a non-negotiable bill, without the words "not negotiable" placed plainly upon the face, shall be guilty of a crime. England has a similar act.

BILL OF MIDDLESEX. A fiction by which the King's Bench acquired jurisdiction in ordinary civil suits. The court could proceed by bill against certain officials of the court, or against any persons accused of contempts, deceits or trespasses. But this process did not apply in actions of debt, detinue, account or covenant. A method was found in the fact or fiction of the custody of the marshal. It was held that a mere record on the rolls of the court that the defendant had given bail would be sufficient evidence of actual custody. To get this evidence on record a bill of Middlesex was filed stating that the defendant was guilty of trespass vi et armis—an offence falling properly within the jurisdiction of the court. The plaintiff gave pledges for the prosecution which, even in Coke's day, were John Doe and Richard Roe. The sheriff of Middlesex was then directed to produce the defendant to answer the plaintiff of a plea of trespass. If the sheriff made return to the bill of "non est inventus," a writ of latitat was issued to the sheriff of an adjoining county. This recited the bill of Middlesex and the proceedings thereon and stated that the defendant "latitat et discurrit" in the county and directed the sheriff to catch him. If the defendant did not live in Middlesex, the latitat was the first step taken. If the defendant appeared, the court obtained jurisdiction; if not, the plaintiff could enter an appearance for him and give as sureties John Doe and Richard Roe. This was called "common bail." In certain cases substantial bail was required; this was called "special bail."

The above process did not set forth the true cause of action. That was added by the so-called "ac etiam" clause stating the true cause of action. The supposed trespass gave jurisdiction; the real cause of action in the "ac etiam" clause authorized the arrest in default of "special bail." These fictions were abolished by 2 Will. IV. c. 39. See 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 87. The "nec non" clause was used as a like fiction to give jurisdiction in certain cases to the Common Pleas.

BILL OF MORTALITY. A written statement or account of the number of deaths which have occurred in a certain district within a given time.

See VITAL STATISTICS.

BILL OF PAINS AND PENALTIES. A special act of the legislature which inflicts a punishment less than death upon persons supposed to be guilty of high offences, such as treason and felony, without any conviction in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings. 2 Woodd. Lect. 625. It differs from a bill of attainder in this, that the punishment inflicted by the latter is death. The clause in the constitution prohibiting bills of attainder includes bills of pains and penalties; Story, Const. § 1338; Hare, Am. Const. L. 549; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 323, 18 L. Ed. 356; Ex parte Law, 35 Ga. 285, 300, Fed. Cas. No. 8,126. See Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 138, 3 L. Ed. 162.

BILL OF PARCELS. An account containing in detail the names of the items which compose a parcel or package of goods. It is usually transmitted with the goods to the purchaser, in order that if any mistake has been made it may be corrected.

BILL OF PARTICULARS. A detailed informal statement of a plaintiff's cause of action, or of the defendant's set-off. It is an account of the items of the claim, and shows the manner in which they arose.

The plaintiff is required, sometimes under statutory provisions, which vary widely in the different states, to file a bill of particulars, either in connection with his declaration; Com. v. Giles, 1 Gray (Mass.) 466; Moore v. Mauro, 4 Rand. (Va.) 488; Landon v. Sage, 11 Conn. 302; Soria v. Bank, 3 How. (Miss.) 46; Cregier v. Smyth, 1 Speers (S. C.) 298; or subsequently to it, upon request of the other party; Davis v. Hunt, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 416; Brown v. Calvert, 4 Dana (Ky.) 219; Watkins v. Brown, 5 Ark. 197; McCreary v. Hood, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 316; Williams v. Sinclair, 3 McLean 289, Fed. Cas. No. 17,737; Dennison v. Smith, 1 Cal. 437; upon an order of the court, in some cases; Constable v. Hardenbergh, 76 Hun 434, 27 N. Y. Supp. 1022; in others, without such order.

He need not give particulars of matters which he does not seek to recover; 4 Exch. 486; nor of payments admitted; Williams v. Shaw, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 209. See 6 Dowl. & L. 656.

The plaintiff is concluded by the bill when filed; Hall v. Sewell, 9 Gill (Md.) 146; and where he gives notice at the trial that he intends to rely only upon the count for an account stated, the notice operates as an amendment of the pleadings and an abandonment of the bill of particulars; Waidner v. Pauly, 141 Ill. 442, 30 N. E. 1025.

The defendant, in giving notice or pleading set-off, must give a bill of particulars; failing to do which, he will be precluded from giving any evidence in support of it at the trial; Starkweather v. Kittle, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 20; Harding v. Griffin, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 462; Rice's Ex'r v. Annatt's Adm'r, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 557.

The court may order the defendant to file a bill of particulars where he alleges matter by way of counterclaim; Peabody v. Cortada, 64 Hun 632, 18 N. Y. Supp. 622; where the defence is payment it will not be required; Moody v. Belden, 60 Hun 582, 15 N. Y. Supp. 119.

The bill must be as full and specific as the nature of the case admits in respect to all matters as to which the adverse party ought to have information; 16 M. & W. 773; but need not be as special as a count on a special contract. The object is to prevent surprise; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Knapp, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 541, 9 L. Ed. 222; Smith v. Hicks, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 51; Watkins v. Brown, 5 Ark. 197. If the bill is not sufficiently explicit, application should be made to the court for a more specific one, as the objection cannot be made on the trial; Buckeye Tp. v. Clark, 90 Mich. 432, 51 N. W. 528; Minneapolis Envelope Co. v. Vanstrom, 51 Minn. 512, 53 N. W. 768.

It is not error to refuse to strike out part of a bill of particulars; Lewis v. Godman, 129 Ind. 359, 27 N. E. 563.

According to ancient practice, a defect in a pleading in a divorce suit may in some states, and in England, be cured by filing a bill of particulars; but this will not supply the want of a more definite allegation; 12 P. D. 19; Realf v. Realf, 77 Pa. 31; Harrington v. Harrington, 107 Mass. 329; Sanders v. Sanders, 25 Vt. 713. This is not proper under the Code system, however; and has been abandoned in the Code states, except New York; Freeman v. Freeman, 39 Minn. 370, 40 N. W. 167. See Mitchell v. Mitchell, 61 N. Y. 398; Carpenter v. Carpenter, 17 N. Y. Supp. 195.

BILL OF PEACE. In Equity Practice. One which is filed when a person has a right which may be controverted by various persons, at different times, and by different actions. It is necessary to allege that the complainant is in possession or that both parties are out of possession; Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Mining Co. v. Ore Co., 188 U. S. 632, 23 Sup. Ct. 434, 47 L. Ed. 626.

In such a case, the court will prevent a multiplicity of suits by directing an issue to determine the right and ultimately grant an injunction; 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 166; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 852; Eldridge v. Hill, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 281; The Thomas Gibbons, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 426, 3 L. Ed. 610; L. R. 2 Ch. 8; Bisph. Eq. 415. Such a bill cannot usually be maintained until the right of the complainant has been established at law; Bisph. Eq. § 417; and it must be filed on behalf of all who are interested in establishing the right; id.

Another species of bill of peace may be brought when the plaintiff, after repeated and satisfactory trials, has established his right at law, and is still in danger of new attempts to controvert it. In order to quiet the possession of the plaintiff, and to suppress future litigation, equity will grant a perpetual injunction; Eldridge v. Hill, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 281; Alexander v. Pendleton, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 462, 3 L. Ed. 624; Mitf. Eq. 143; Primm v. Raboteau, 56 Mo. 407; Douglass v. McCoy, 5 Ohio 522. A bill will lie to enjoin a defendant from interfering with plaintiff's tenants; Polk v. Rose, 25 Md. 153, 89 Am. Dec. 773. A bill to quiet title can be filed only by a party in possession, against a defendant who has been ineffectually seeking to establish a legal title by repeated actions of ejectment; and as a prerequisite to such bill it is necessary that the plaintiff's title should have been established by at least one successful trial at law; Wehrman v. Conklin, 155 U. S. 314, 15 Sup. Ct. 129, 39 L. Ed. 167. See BILL QUIA TIMET; BILL TO QUIET POSSESSION.

A community of interest in the law and fact involved is enough on which to found a bill of peace; Crawford v. R. Co., 83 Miss.

708, 36 South. 82, 102 Am. St. Rep. 476; contra Ducktown Sulphur, Copper & Iron Co. v. Fain, 109 Tenn. 56, 70 S. W. 813.

For violation of a city ordinance requiring street railroads under penalty, to furnish sufficient cars to prevent overcrowding, etc., the appellant had begun in the justice's court sixty suits against one appellee, and a hundred against the other, and was threatening more. The two appellees, for themselves and others similarly situated, filed a bill of peace to have the suits enjoined on the ground that the ordinance was unconstitutional. It was held a bill of peace would not lie; Chicago v. Ry. Co., 222 Ill. 560, 78 N. E. 890.

BILL OF PRIVILEGE. In English Law.

The form of proceeding against an attorney of the court, who is not liable to arrest. Brooke, Abr. Bille; 12 Mod. 163.

It is considered a privilege for the benefit of clients; 4 Burr. 2113; Dougl. 381; and is said to be confined to such as practise; 2 Maule & S. 605. But see 1 Bos. & P. 4; 2 Lutw. 1667. See 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 289.

BILL OF PROOF. The claim made by a third person to the subject-matter in dispute between the parties to a suit in the court of the mayor of London. 2 Chitty, Pr. 492; 1 Marsh. 233.

BILL OF REVIEW. One which is brought to have a decree of the court reviewed, altered, or reversed.

It is only brought after enrollment; 1 Ch. Cas. 54; 3 P. Will. 371; Simpson v. Downs, 5 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 421; 1 Story, Eq. Pl. § 403; and is thus distinguished from a bill in the nature of a bill in review, or a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill in review; Dexter v. Arnold, 5 Mas. 303, Fed. Cas. No. 3356; Greenwich Bank v. Loomis, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 70; Gilbert, For. Rom. c. 10, p. 182.

It must be brought either for error in point of law; Wiser v. Blachly, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 488; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 89; or for some new matter of fact, relevant to the case, discovered since publication passed in the cause, and which could not, with reasonable diligence, have been discovered before; Irwin v. Meyrose, 7 Fed. 533; Putnam v. Day, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 60, 22 L. Ed. 764; Buffington v. Harvey, 95 U. S. 99, 24 L. Ed. 381; Wiser v. Blachly, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 488; see U. S. v. Samperyac, 1 Hempt. 118, Fed. Cas. No. 16,216 a; Stevens v. Dewey, 27 Vt. 638; Foy v. Foy, 25 Miss. 207; Cocke v. Copenhagen, 126 Fed. 145, 61 C. C. A. 211; Hill v. Phelps, 101 Fed. 650, 41 C. C. A. 569; or to correct an error apparent on the face of a decree in the original suit; Osborne v. Land & Town Co., 178 U. S. 22, 20 Sup. Ct. 860, 44 L. Ed. 961; where there are no disputed questions of fact; Smyth v. Fitzsimmons, 97 Ala. 451, 12 South. 48.

If based on newly discovered evidence it requires leave of court; Buckingham v. Corning, 29 N. J. Eq. 238; Barton v. Barbour, 104 U. S. 128, 28 L. Ed. 672; Reynolds

v. R. Co., 42 Fla. 387, 28 South. 861; Florida Cent. & P. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 183 U. S. 471, 22 Sup. Ct. 176, 46 L. Ed. 283; the evidence must be new or else such as the party could not by diligence have known, and failure to produce it sooner must be explained; it must be controlling, not cumulative; Acord v. Corporation, 156 Fed. 989; Kern v. Wyatt & Co., 89 Va. 885, 17 S. E. 549. Granting it is discretionary with the court, and is subject to review; Reynolds v. R. Co., 42 Fla. 387, 28 South. 861; Florida Cent. & P. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 183 U. S. 471, 22 Sup. Ct. 176, 46 L. Ed. 283; it will be refused for laches; Taylor v. Easton, 180 Fed. 363, 103 C. C. A. 509; or if granting it would work hardship to innocent parties; Acord v. Corporation, 156 Fed. 989; Ricker v. Powell, 100 U. S. 104, 25 L. Ed. 527; if it is based upon fraud it is a matter of right; Cox v. Bank (Tenn.) 63 S. W. 237; so if filed for error of law appearing on the face of the record; Wood v. Wood, 59 Ark. 441, 27 S. W. 641, 28 L. R. A. 157, 43 Am. St. Rep. 42; Denson v. Denson, 33 Miss. 560; a bill may join both error in law and newly discovered evidence; Acord v. Corporation, 156 Fed. 989. It is held that if for error of law, it must be filed within the time of appeal; Jorgenson v. Young, 136 Fed. 378, 69 C. C. A. 222; Taylor v. Easton, 180 Fed. 363, 103 C. C. A. 509; and for newly discovered evidence, within a reasonable time; Camp Mfg. Co. v. Parker, 121 Fed. 195; within two months after decree was held in time; Bruschke v. Verein, 145 Ill. 433, 34 N. E. 417. The practice is to petition for leave if leave be necessary; Masie v. Graham, Fed. Cas. No. 9,263. Granting leave does not prejudge the case at final hearing; Hopkins v. Hebard, 194 Fed. 301, 114 C. C. A. 261.

A rehearing upon the ground that the court had overlooked a controlling fact (not brought to its attention by counsel) was refused in Moneyweight Scale Co. v. Scale Co., 199 Fed. 905, 118 C. C. A. 235.

Application after judgment in the appellate court must be made in that court; Kingsbury v. Buckner, 134 U. S. 650, 10 Sup. Ct. 638, 33 L. Ed. 1047; Camp Mfg. Co. v. Parker, 121 Fed. 195; Keith v. Alger, 124 Fed. 32, 59 C. C. A. 552.

Where one proceeds to a decree after discovering facts on which a new claim is founded, he cannot afterwards file a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review on such new facts; Hood v. Green, 42 Ill. App. 664.

BILL OF REVIVOR. One which is brought to continue a suit which has abated before its final consummation, as, for example, by death, or marriage of a female plaintiff. It is not the commencement of a new suit, but a continuation of the old one; Clarke v. Mathewson, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 164, 9 L. Ed. 1041.

Under the new Supreme Court equity rule 35 (33 Sup. Ct. xxviii) it is not necessary to set forth any of the statements in the original suit unless the special circumstances of the case may require it.

It must be brought by the proper representatives of the person deceased, with reference to the property which is the subject-matter; 4 Sim. 318; Douglass v. Sherman, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 358; Story, Eq. Pl. § 354.

BILL OF REVIVOR AND SUPPLEMENT.

One which is a compound of a supplemental bill and bill of revivor, and not only continues the suit, which has abated by the death of the plaintiff, or the like, but supplies any defects in the original bill arising from subsequent events, so as to entitle the party to relief on the whole merits of his case. Westcott v. Cady, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 334, 9 Am. Dec. 306; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 32, 74; 13 Ves. 161; Eastman v. Batchelder, 36 N. H. 141, 72 Am. Dec. 295; Pendleton v. Fay, 3 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 204.

BILL OF RIGHTS. A formal and public declaration of popular rights and liberties.

The document pre-eminently known by that name was the English statute, 1 W. and M., Sess. 2, c. 2 (1689).

What was known as the Declaration of Right was delivered to the Prince and Princess of Orange (afterwards William III. and Mary) by the English lords and commons, and in December, 1689 (at the second session of the Convention Parliament, which had reassembled October 25, 1689), it was, with some amendments, few but important, enacted into a statute known as the Bill of Rights. The Declaration was presented to the new monarchs as embodying the conditions of their election, and only after their acceptance of its terms was proclamation of their accession made, on February 13, 1689; 2 Gneist, Hist. Eng. Const. 316, note.

The Bill of Rights contained 13 clauses or guaranties, suggested by the illegal and arbitrary acts previously committed by the Crown. These were a declaration of the illegality of (1) the pretended power of the suspension of laws or their execution, by regal authority, without consent of Parliament; (2) the recent assumption and exercise of the same power; (3) the commission for erecting the late Court of Commissioners for ecclesiastical causes and other similar commissions and courts; (4) levying money for the use of the Crown by pretense of prerogative without grant of Parliament; (6) raising or keeping a standing army in time of peace, without consent of Parliament. There were also declarations in favor of (5) the right of petition; (7) the right of Protestants to bear arms; (8) free elections of members of Parliament; (9) freedom of speech and debates in Parliament, which should not be questioned elsewhere; (10) that excessive bail should not be required, nor excessive finer imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted; (11) the due impanelling and return of jurors, and that those in treason trials should be freeholders; (12) that grants and promises of fines and forfeitures before conviction are illegal and void; (13) that Parliament ought to be held frequently.

The absence of what was popularly known as a Bill of Rights in the Federal Constitution, as originally adopted, was the cause of some opposition to the work of the Convention which framed it, and an effort was made to secure its insertion by Congress. This failed and it was believed by Madison, and those who joined him in opposing the movement to amend, that its success would, by creating confusion as to what instrument was to be ratified, have endangered the final adoption of the Constitution. 2 Curtis, Hist. Const. U. S. 498.

Subsequently and very soon after the original instrument went into effect the first ten amendments, adopted together, embodied, as limitations upon the powers of the Federal government, substantially all the guaranties, considered applicable to our conditions, of the English Bill of Rights. Since all of those provisions are also embodied in most, if not all, of the American Constitutions, their assertion of fundamental, political and personal liberty are referred to collectively as a "bill of rights." Indeed some of the State Constitutions preserve the name as well as the substance.

The text of the English Bill of Rights will be found in 2 Hist. for Ready Ref. 937.

See CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

BILL OF SALE. A writing evidencing the transfer of personal property from one person to another. Putnam v. McDonald, 72 Vt. 4, 5, 47 Atl. 159.

It is in frequent use in the transfer of personal property, especially that of which immediate possession is not or cannot be given.

In England a bill of sale of a ship at sea or out of the country is called a grand bill of sale; but no distinction is recognized in this country between grand and ordinary bills of sale; Portland Bank v. Stacey, 4 Mass. 661, 3 Am. Dec. 233. The effect of a bill of sale is to transfer the property in the thing sold.

By the maritime law, the transfer of a ship must generally be evidenced by a bill of sale; Weston v. Penniman, 1 Mas. 306, Fed. Cas. No. 17,455; and by act of congress, every sale or transfer of a registered ship to a citizen of the United States must be accompanied by a bill of sale, setting forth, at length, the certificate of registry; R. S. U. S. § 4170. Where the bill is insufficient under the statute, the executor of the seller can be compelled to reform it; Sprague v. Thurber, 17 R. I. 454, 22 Atl. 1057. And this bill of sale is not valid except between the parties or those having actual notice, unless recorded; R. S. § 4192. A contract to sell, accompanied by delivery of possession, is, however, sufficient; Taggard v. Loring, 16 Mass. 336, 8 Am. Dec. 140; Elxby v. Ins. Co., 8 Pick. (Mass.) 86; Wendover v. Hogeboom, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 308.

See SALE.

BILL OF SIGHT. A written description of goods, supposed to be inaccurate, but made as nearly exact as possible, furnished by an importer or his agent to the proper officer of the customs, to procure a landing and inspection of the goods. It was allowed by an English statute where the merchant is ignorant of the real quantity and quality of goods consigned to him, so as to be unable to make a proper entry of them.

BILL OF SUFFERANCE. A license granted to a merchant, permitting him to trade from one English port to another without paying customs.

BILL PAYABLE. A bill of exchange accepted, or a promissory note made, by a merchant, whereby he has engaged to pay money. It is so called as being payable by him. An account is usually kept of such bills in a book with that title, and also in the ledger. See Parsons, Notes and Bills.

BILL PENAL. A written obligation by which a debtor acknowledges himself indebted in a certain sum, and binds himself for the payment thereof, in a larger sum.

Bonds with conditions have superseded such bills in modern practice; Steph. Pl. 265, n. They are sometimes called bills obligatory, and are properly so called; but every bill obligatory is not a bill penal; Comyns, Dig. Obligations, D.; Cro. Car. 515. See 2 Ventr. 106, 198.

BILL QUIA TIMET. A bill to guard against possible future injuries and to conserve present rights from possible destruction or serious impairment. The limits of the application of the remedy are not clearly defined, but it rests on the principle of relieving the party and his title from some claim or liability which may, if enforced, entail serious loss. Such a bill may be filed when a person is entitled to property of a personal nature after another's death, and has reason to apprehend it may be destroyed by the present possessor; or when he is apprehensive of being subjected to a future inconvenience, probable, or even possible, to happen or be occasioned by the neglect, inadvertence, or culpability of another; or when he seeks to be relieved against an invalid title, claim, or incumbrance which has been created by the act of another. See 3 Daniell, Ch. Pr. 1961, n. Another illustration of the application of the remedy is in case of a counterbond; although the surety is not troubled for the money, after it becomes payable, a decree for its payment may be had against the principal, or when a trustee has incurred liability as the holder of shares for another under a covenant of indemnity, against liability; L. R. 7 Ch. 395.

Upon a proper case being made out, the court will, in one case, secure the property for the use of the party (which is the object of the bill), by compelling the person in possession of it to give a proper security against any subsequent disposition or wilful destruction; and, in the other case, they will quiet the party's apprehension of future inconvenience, by removing the causes which may lead to it; 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 218; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 825, 851. See BILL TO QUIET POSSESSION AND TITLE; BILL OF PEACE.

BILL RECEIVABLE. A promissory note, bill of exchange, or other written instrument for the payment of money at a future day, which a merchant holds. So called because the amounts for which they are given are receivable by the merchant. They are entered in a book so called, and are charged to an account in the ledger under the same title, to which account the cash, when received, is credited. See Pars. N. & B.

BILL, SINGLE. A written unconditional promise by one or more persons to pay to another person or other persons therein named a sum of money at a time therein specified. It is usually under seal, and may then be called a bill obligatory; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Greiner, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 115. It has no condition attached, and is not given in a penal sum; Comyns, Dig. Obligation, C. See Jarvis v. McMain, 10 N. C. 10; Fields v. Mallett, 10 N. C. 465.

BILL, SUPPLEMENTAL. See SUPPLEMENTAL BILL.

BILL TO CARRY A DECREE INTO EXECUTION. One which is filed when, from the neglect of parties or some other cause, it may become impossible to carry a decree into execution without the further decree of the court. Hinde, Ch. Pr. 68; Story, Eq. Pl. § 429.

BILL TO MARSHAL ASSETS. See ASSETS.

BILL TO MARSHAL SECURITIES. See MARSHALLING SECURITIES.

BILL TO PERPETUATE TESTIMONY. One which is brought to secure the testimony of witnesses with reference to some matter which is not in litigation, but is liable to become so.

It differs from a bill to take testimony de bene esse (q. v.) inasmuch as the latter is sustainable only when there is a suit already pending.

A bill to perpetuate testimony "lies when the party is in actual, undisturbed possession; or where lands are devised by will from the heir at law; or when no action has been brought, but the party intends to commence a suit." Hickman v. Hickman, 1 Del. Ch. 133. It proceeds on the ground that, the party not being in a situation to bring his title to a trial, his evidence may be lost, through lapse of time, a risk affecting all evidence, irrespective of the condition of a witness; Hall v. Stout, 4 Del. Ch. 269.

It must show the subject-matter touching which the plaintiff is desirous of giving evidence; Rep. temp. Finch 391; 4 Madd. 8; that the plaintiff has a positive interest in the subject-matter which may be endangered if the testimony in support of it be lost, as a mere expectancy, however strong, is not sufficient; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 51; May v. Armstrong, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 260, 20 Am. Dec. 137. That the defendant has, or pretends to have, or that he claims, an interest to contest the title of the plaintiff in the subject-matter of the proposed testimony; Cooper, Pl. 56; Story, Eq. Pl. § 302; and some ground of necessity for perpetuating the evidence; Story, Eq. Pl. § 303; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 52, 148, n.

The bill should describe the right in which it is brought with reasonable certainty, so as to point the proper interrogations on both sides to the true merits of the controversy; 1 Vern. 312; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 56; and should pray leave to examine the witnesses touching the matter stated, to the end that their testimony may be preserved and perpetuated; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 52. The bill is filed and service made in the usual way; Green v. Compagnia Generale Italiana Di Navigation, 82 Fed. 490.

A bill is demurrable if it contains a prayer for relief; Hickman v. Hickman, 1 Del. Ch. 133; 2 Ves. 497.

It must appear that the relief is absolutely necessary to prevent a failure of justice; Crawford v. McAdams, 63 N. C. 67; if no reason exists for bringing the action in aid of which such a bill is filed, the bill will be dismissed; In re Ketchum, 60 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 154. Where a party sought to perpetuate testimony of his legitimacy, the bill was dismissed because the legitimacy act gave him a remedy; [1903] 2 Ch. 378. So as to a threatened slander suit where the answer released all claims against the plaintiff for slander; Hanford v. Ewen, 79 Ill. App. 327. The testimony of an injured man not expected to live may be taken for the benefit of his family; Ohio Copper Min. Co. v. Hutchings, 172 Fed. 201, 96 C. C. A. 653 (under a Utah statute).

Where one is threatened by patent suits which are not brought, he may file a bill under R. S. § 866, to perpetuate testimony that the patent is invalid; Westinghouse Mach. Co. v. Battery Co., 170 Fed. 430, 95 C. C. A. 600, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 673, with note; and it is held that he need not show that it is necessary to take the depositions to prevent a failure of justice; id.

BILL TO QUIET POSSESSION AND TITLE. Also called a bill to remove a cloud in title, and though sometimes classed with bills quia timet or for the cancellation of void instruments, they may be resorted to in other cases when the complainant's title is clear and there is a cloud to be removed; Mellen v. Iron Works, 131 U. S. 352, 9 Sup. Ct. 781, 33 L. Ed. 178; Town of Corinth v. Locke, 62 Vt. 411, 20 Atl. 809; Alsop v. Eckles, 81 Ill. 424; the latter may be said to exist whenever in ejectment by the holder of the adverse title any evidence would be required to defeat a recovery; Sloan v. Sloan, 25 Fla. 53, 5 South. 603.

Whenever an instrument exists which may be vexatiously or injuriously used against a party, after the evidence to impeach or invalidate it is lost, or which may throw a cloud or suspicion over his title or interest, and he cannot immediately protect his right by any proceedings at law, equity will afford relief by directing the instrument to be delivered up and cancelled, or by making any other decree which justice and the rights of the parties may require; Martin v. Graves, 5 Allen (Mass.) 602; Dull's Appeal, 113 Pa. 510, 6 Atl. 540; 2 Story, Eq. § 694.

Equity will entertain a bill to adjust the claims or to settle the priorities of conflicting claimants, where there is thereby created a cloud over the title, which would prevent the sale of the land at a fair market price; Bisph. Eq. 236; to restrain the collection of an illegal tax; ibid.; to set aside deeds, etc., which may operate as a cloud upon the legal title of the owner; whether they be void or voidable, and whether the character of the instrument appears on its face or not; Kerr v. Freeman, 33 Miss. 292; Peirsoll v. Elliott, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 95, 8 L. Ed. 332; but it has been held that equity will not interfere to remove an alleged cloud upon title to land, if the instrument or proceeding constituting such alleged cloud is absolutely void upon its face, so that no extrinsic evidence is necessary to show its invalidity; nor if the instrument or proceeding is not thus void on its face, but the party claiming, in order to enforce it, must necessarily offer evidence which will inevitably show its invalidity; Rich v. Braxton, 158 U. S. 375, 15 Sup. Ct. 1006, 39 L. Ed. 1022.

In a suit brought in the district court of the United States, to remove any incumbrance or lien or cloud upon the title to real or personal property within the district where such suit is brought, an order may be made upon a defendant not residing in the district or found therein, and not appearing gratis, to appear and answer, plead or demur by a certain day; 18 Stat. L. 472, c. 137, Sec. 8; Mellen v. Iron Works, 131 U. S. 352, 9 Sup. Ct. 781, 33 L. Ed. 178; but such suit will affect only the property concerned; id. See BILL OF PEACE; BILL QUIA TIMET.

BILL TO SUSPEND A DECREE. One brought to avoid or suspend a decree under special circumstances. See 1 Ch. Cas. 3, 61; 2 id. S. Milt. Eq. Pl. 85, 86.

BILL TO TAKE TESTIMONY DE BENE ESSE. One which is brought to take the testimony of witnesses to a fact material to the prosecution of a suit at law which is actually commenced, where there is good cause to fear that the testimony may otherwise be lost before the time of trial; Hall v. Stout, 4 Del. Ch. 269, where the distinction between this bill and one to perpetuate testimony is clearly stated. The right to a bill to take testimony de bene esse depends on the condition of the witness, while the other depends on the situation of the party with respect to his power to bring his rights to immediate investigation; id. See 1 S. & S. 83; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1813, n.: 13 Ves. 56.

It lies, in general, where witnesses are aged or infirm; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 57; Ambl. 65; 13 Ves. Ch. 56, 261; propose to leave the country; 2 Dick. 454; Story, Eq. Pl. § 308; or there is but a single witness to a fact; 1 P. Wms. 97; 2 Dick. 648.

The one at whose instance the deposition is taken has no control over it, and if he directs the commissioner to withhold it because he is surprised by the testimony, the court will order its return; First Nat. Bank of Grand Haven v. Forest, 44 Fed. 246.

BILLA CASSETUR (Lat. that the bill be quashed or made void). A plea in abatement concluded, when the pleadings were in Latin, quod billa cassetur (that the bill be quashed). 3 Bla. Com. 303.

BILLA EXCAMBII. A bill of exchange.

BILLA EXONERATIONIS. A bill of lading.

BILLA VERA (Lat.). A true bill. The form of words indorsed on a bill of indictment, when proceedings were conducted in Latin, to indicate the opinion of the grand jury that the person therein accused ought to be tried. See TRUE BILL.

BILLET DE CHANGE. A contract to furnish a bill of exchange. A contract to pay the value of a bill of exchange already furnished. Guyot, Répert. Univ.

Where a person intends to furnish a bill of exchange (lettre de change), and is not quite prepared to do so, he gives a billet de change, which is a contract to furnish a lettre de change at a future time. Guyot, Répert. Univ.; Story, Bills § 2.

BINDER. Used to designate a temporary insurance against fire. In effect, an agreement to insure, but taking effect immediately. It is usually unwritten. See AGREEMENT FOR INSURANCE.

BINDING OUT. A term applied to the contract of apprenticeship, which see.

The contract must be by deed, to which the infant, as well as the parent or guardian, must be a party, or the infant will not be bound; 3 B. & Ald. 584; In re McDowle, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 328; Stringfield v. Heiskell, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 546; Pierce v. Massenburg, 4 Leigh (Va.) 493, 26 Am. Dec. 333; Trimble v. State, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 437; Balch v. Smith, 12 N. H. 438.

BINDING OVER. The act by which a magistrate or court hold to bail a party accused of a crime or misdemeanor.

The binding over may be to appear at a court having jurisdiction of the offence charged, to answer, or to be of good behavior, or to keep the peace.

BIPARTITE. Of two parts. This term is used in conveyancing; as, this indenture bipartite, between A, of the one part, and B, of the other part.

BIRRETUM, BIRRETUS. A cap or coif used formerly in England by judges and sergeants at law. Spelman, Gloss.

BIRTH. The act of being wholly brought into the world.

The conditions of live birth are not satisfied when a part only of the body is born. The whole body must be brought into the world and detached from that of the mother, and after this event the child must be alive; 5 C. & P. 329; 7 id. 814. The circulating system must also be changed, and the child must have an independent circulation; 5 C. & P. 539; 9 id. 154; Tayl. Med. Jur. 591.

But it is not necessary that there should have been a separation of the umbilical cord. That may still connect the child with its mother, and yet the killing of it will constitute murder; 7 C. & P. 814. See 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 478; 1 Chit. Med. Jur. 438; GESTATION; LIFE; VITAL STATISTICS.

BISAILE. See BESAILE.

BISHOP. In England, an ecclesiastical officer, who is the chief of the clergy of his diocese, and is the next in rank to an archbishop. A bishop is a corporation sole; 1 Bla. Com. 469. In the United States it is the title of a high ecclesiastical officer of the Roman Catholic, Episcopal and Methodist Episcopal and some other churches. In the first two he is the head of a diocese. He is addressed in the Church of England and the Protestant Episcopal Church as Right Reverend.

In England the two archbishops and twenty-four bishops are entitled to sit in the House of Lords, and are known as spiritual peers. When there is a vacancy, the senior existing bishop is entitled to fill it and not the successor of the one who died. The bishop's powers are threefold: 1. Potestas ordinis, under which he confers orders, confirms, consecrates churches, etc.; 2. Potestas jurisdictionis, which he exercises as ecclesiastical judge of the diocese; 3. Administratio familiaris, by which he governs the revenue; 1 Bla. Com. 377, 155. As to his appointment, see CONGÉ D'ÉLIRE; CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

In the Roman Church he is the governing authority in his diocese and is said to be "the supreme pastor, the supreme teacher, the supreme governor." It is his duty, under the laws and discipline of his church, to administer the regulations provided by its laws, and to construe and interpret such regulations. The court will not review the judgments or acts of a religious organization with reference to its internal affairs for the purpose of ascertaining their regularity or accordance with the discipline and usage of such organization; Pounder v. Ashe, 44 Neb. 673, 63 N. W. 48; Bonacum v. Harrington, 65 Neb. 831, 91 N. W. 886. See RELIGIOUS SOCIETY.

BISHOP'S COURT. In English Law. An ecclesiastical court held in the cathedral of each diocese, the judge of which is the bishop's chancellor.

BISHOPRIC. In Ecclesiastical Law. The extent of country over which a bishop has jurisdiction; a see; a diocese.

BISSEXTILE. The day which is added every fourth year to the month of February, in order to make the year agree with the course of the sun.

By statute 21 Hen. III., the 28th and 29th of February count together as one day. This statute is in force in some of the United States. Porter v. Holloway, 43 Ind. 35; Harker v. Addis, 4 Pa. 515.

A writ in 1256 to the justices of the bench, relating to the manner in which Leap Year should be counted, had the force of a statute. Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 174.

It is called bissextile, because in the Roman calendar it was fixed on the sixth day before the calends of March (which answers to the twenty-fourth day of February), and this day was counted twice; the first was called bissextus prior, and the other bissextus posterior; but the latter was properly called bissextile or intercalary day. See CALENDAR.

BITCH. A female dog, wolf or fox. See 1 C. & K. 459. An approbrious name for a woman. State v. Harwell, 129 N. C. 550, 40 S. E. 48. Although it has been held that when applied to a woman, it does not, in its common acceptation, import whoredom in any of its forms, and therefore is not slanderous; Schurick v. Kollman, 50 Ind. 336.

BLACK ACRE. A term used by the old writers to distinguish one parcel of land from another, to avoid ambiguity, as well as the inconvenience of a fuller description. "White acre" is also so used. A and B are used in the same way to distinguish persons.

BLACK ACT. In English Law. The act of parliament, 9 Geo. II. c. 22. This act was passed for the punishment of certain marauders who committed great outrages disguised and with faces blackened. It was repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 11. See 4 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 245. It is held not to be a part of the common law in Georgia; State v. Campbell, T. U. P. Charlt. (Ga.) 167.

BLACK BOOK OF THE ADMIRALTY. An ancient book compiled in the reign of Edward III. It has always been deemed of the highest authority in matters concerning the admiralty. It contains the laws of Oleron, at large; a view of the crimes and offences cognizable in the admiralty; ordinances and commentaries on matters of prize and maritime torts, injuries, and contracts; De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. 404, Fed. Cas. No. 3,776. It is said by Selden to be not more ancient than the reign of Henry VI. Selden, de Laud. Leg. Ang. c. 32. By other writers it is said to have been composed earlier. It was republished (1871) by the British government, with an introduction by Sir Travers Twiss.

BLACK BOOK OF THE EXCHEQUER. The name of a book kept in the English exchequer, containing a collection of treaties, conventions, charters, etc.

BLACK CAP. A portion of the full dress of a judge. It is not known when the custom of putting on the black cap when passing sentence of death was introduced into England. Townsend, Man. of Dates.

BLACK MAIL. Rents reserved, payable in work, grain, and the like.

Such rents were called black mail (reditus nigri) in distinction from white rents (blanche firmes), which were rents paid in silver.

A yearly payment made for security and protection to those bands of marauders who infested the borders of England and Scotland about the middle of the sixteenth century and laid the inhabitants under contribution. Hume, Hist. Eng. vol. i. 473; vol. ii. App. No. 8; Cowell.

In common parlance, the term is equivalent to, and synonymous with, extortion—the exaction of money, either for the performance of a duty, the prevention of an injury, or the exercise of an influence. It supposes the service to be unlawful, and the payment involuntary. Not unfrequently it is extorted by threats, or by operating upon the fears or the credulity, or by promises to conceal, or offers to expose the weaknesses, the follies, or the crimes of the victim. Edsall v. Brooks, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 226.

Threats by defendant to accuse another of a crime, with intent, himself, to commit the crime of extortion, accompanied by success in obtaining money from that other.

That such other person was endeavoring to induce defendant to receive money, for the purpose of accusing him of extortion, and so could not have been moved by fear, will not prevent his conviction for an attempt at extortion; People v. Gardner, 144 N. Y. 119, 38 N. E. 1003, 28 L. R. A. 699, 43 Am. St. Rep. 741; under an act declaring it a crime to threaten a person with a criminal prosecution for the purpose of extorting money, it is immaterial that the person making the threats believed that the person threatened had committed the crime; People v. Eichler, 75 Hun 26, 26 N. Y. Supp. 998; where threats of prosecution for perjury were made maliciously and with intent to compel the one threatened to do an act against his will, the offence is complete; and it is immaterial whether the one threatened was guilty of perjury; People v. Whittemore, 102 Mich. 519, 61 N. W. 13. In a prosecution under an act providing for the punishment of one who, for the purposes of extortion, sends a letter expressing or implying, or adapted to imply, any threat, and the letter threatens to make a charge against the person to whom it is sent, the truth or falsity of the charge is immaterial; People v. Choyinski, 95 Cal. 640, 30 Pac. 791; an act making it an offence to accuse one of crime "with intent to extort money," etc., does not cover the case of an owner who demands compensation for property criminally destroyed, and accompanies his demand with a threat to accuse the defendant of the crime, and, where he is indicted for extortion, it is error to charge that it is immaterial whether the accusation made by him was true or false; Mann v. State, 47 Ohio St. 556, 26 N. E. 226, 11 L. R. A. 656. A charge of soliciting sexual intercourse with the wife of another is a charge of immoral conduct, which, if true, would tend to disgrace one and subject him to the contempt of society, and threatening to make such charge is black mail; Motsinger v. State, 123 Ind. 498, 24 N. E. 342.

On a trial for maliciously threatening to accuse another of burning a building with intent to extort money, evidence of the truth of the charge is inadmissible on the question of malice or of intent, or to impeach the prosecuting witness; Com. v. Buckley, 148 Mass. 27, 18 N. E. 577, 1 L. R. A. 624.

BLACK RENTS. Rents reserved in work, grain, or baser money than silver. Whishaw.

BLACK ROD, GENTLEMAN USHER OF THE. A chief officer of the king, deriving his name from his Black Rod of Office, on the top of which reposes a golden lion. During the session of Parliament he attends on the peers, summons the Commons to the House of Lords, and to his custody all peers impeached for any crime or contempt are first committed. Black Book 255; Wharton. His deputy is the Yeoman Usher. Similar officers are found in the Dominion of Canada and other colonies. Cent. Dict.

BLACKLEG. A professed gambler, a person who makes a business of betting—not necessarily dishonest, though disreputable; 3 H. & N. 376; 31 L. T. O. S. 217, per Pollock, C. B. In the same case Watson, B., thought the word had no precise significance; but Martin and Bramwell, B.B., thought it imputed the indictable offence of cheating at cards.

The publication of such a list is libellous per se unless justified or privileged; Hartnett v. Plumbers' Supply Ass'n, 169 Mass. 229, 47 N. E. 1002, 38 L. R. A. 194; Nettles v. Somervell, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 627, 25 S. W. 658; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Pritchett, 108 Ga. 411, 34 S. E. 216. To blacklist has been held not to impute the commission of a crime or other conduct exposing one to public hatred, punishment, disgrace or derision; Wabash R. Co. v. Young, 162 Ind. 103, 69 N. E. 1003, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1091. False statements manifestly hurtful to a man in his credit or business and intended to be so are not privileged; Weston v. Barnicoat, 175 Mass. 454, 56 N. E. 619, 49 L. R. A. 612; nor are communications sent to the members of an organization for the purpose of coercing the payment of the claims of the persons publishing such communication; Muetze v. Tuteur, 77 Wis. 236, 46 N. W. 123, 9 L. R. A. 86, 20 Am. St. Rep. 115. See COMMERCIAL AGENCY; LIBEL.

A more general understanding of the term is that it has reference to the practice of one employer presenting to another the names of employes for the purpose of furnishing information concerning their standing as employes; State v. Justus, 85 Minn. 279, 88 N. W. 759, 56 L. R. A. 757, 89 Am. St. Rep. 550.

In the report of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission, May, 1903, it is described as a combination among employers not to employ workmen discharged by any of the members of the coal combination, and in this sense it is recognized by the legislative enactments in many of the states which prohibit employers from blacklisting an employe with the intent of preventing his employment by others. But many of these acts also contain a provision that they shall not be construed as preventing an employer from furnishing a truthful statement of the cause of discharge. Such an act is held not to be in violation of the 14th amendment and not to be class legislation; State v. Justus, 85 Minn. 279, 88 N. W. 759, 56 L. R. A. 757, 89 Am. St. Rep. 550; Joyce v. R. Co., 100 Minn. 225, 110 N. W. 975, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 756.

In the absence of malice, it is not libellous to circulate a blacklist of workmen among officials whose duty it is to employ them; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Richmond, 73 Tex. 568, 11 S. W. 555, 4 L. R. A. 280, 15 Am. St. Rep. 794; and a record may be kept of the reasons for the discharge of a railway servant and communicated to persons interested; Hebner v. R. Co., 78 Minn. 289, 80 N. W. 1128, 79 Am. St. Rep. 387. Such a communication, when the employe was discharged for gross neglect of duty, was held privileged; [1891] 2 Q. B. 189; but blacklisting was held libellous in Hartnett v. Plumb-

An agreement among several railroad companies not to employ a person discharged for a good cause by any of them is not legally injurious, unless the statements are false and the person has sought and been refused employment elsewhere; Hundley v. R. Co., 105 Ky. 162, 48 S. W. 429, 63 L. R. A. 289, 88 Am. St. Rep. 298; nor is an agreement among employers not to employ those who leave without cause and refuse to conform to certain rules an unlawful combination or conspiracy; Willis v. Mfg. Co., 120 Ga. 597, 48 S. E. 177, 1 Ann. Cas. 472. It has been said that an agreement of employers not to employ a particular person, in order more effectively to compete with employes, is not distinguishable from an agreement of laborers not to work for a particular person; 17 Harv. L. R. 139; but see Mattison v. R. Co., 3 Oh. S. C. & C. P. 526, where such a combination of employers was declared illegal.

Striking employes, whose names were in a blacklist sent to other employers in the same city, may not unite in an action. If a right exists, it is in favor of each one separately; Worthington v. Waring, 157 Mass. 421, 32 N. E. 744, 20 L. R. A. 342, 34 Am. St. Rep. 294.

An injunction will not be granted to restrain a company from placing employes' names on a blacklist, or from maintaining such a list and permitting other employers to inspect it; Boyer v. Tel. Co., 124 Fed. 246; but see Casey v. Cincinnati Typographical Union No. 3, 45 Fed. 135, 12 L. R. A. 193, where the publication of posters, circulars, etc., by employes for the purpose of carrying out a conspiracy to boycott was restrained by injunction.

A blacklisting statute requiring a corporation to give to its employes service letters stating the true reason for their discharge does not deprive it of the equal protection of the laws under the 14th amendment; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Hixon (Tex.) 126 S. W. 338.

See BOYCOTT; COMBINATION; CONSPIRACY; INJUNCTION; LIBEL; LABOR UNION.

BLADA. Growing crops of grain. Spelman, Gloss. Any annual crop. Cowell. Used of crops, either growing or gathered. Reg. Orig. 94 b; Coke, 2d Inst. 81.

BLANC SEIGN. It is a paper signed at the bottom by him who intends to bind himself, give acquittance, or compromise at the discretion of the person whom he entrusts with such blanc seign, giving him power to fill it with what he may think proper, according to agreement. This power is personal and dies with the attorney. Musson v. Blank, U. S., 6 Mart. O. S. (La.) 718.

BLANCH HOLDING. In Scotch Law. A tenure by which land is held.

The duty is generally a trifling one, as a peppercorn. It may happen, however, that the duty is of greater value; and then the distinction received in practice is founded on the nature of the duty. Stair Inst. sec. III. lib. 3, § 33. See Paterson, Comp. 15; 2 Bla. Com. 42.

BLANCHE FIRME. A rent reserved, payable in silver.

BLANK. A space left in a writing, to be filled up with one or more words to complete the sense.

When a blank is left in a written agreement which need not have been reduced to writing, and would have been equally binding whether written or unwritten, it is presumed, in an action for the non-performance of the contract, parol evidence might be admitted to explain the blank. And where a written instrument which was made professedly to record a fact is produced as evidence of that fact which it purports to record, and a blank appears in a material part, the omission may be supplied by other proof; Wood v. Beach, 7 Vt. 522. Hence a blank left in an award for a name was allowed to be supplied by parol proof; Lynn v. Risberg, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 180, 1 L. Ed. 339. But where a creditor signs a deed of composition, leaving the amount of his debt in blank, he binds himself to all existing debts; 1 B. & Ald.

It is said that a blank may be filled by consent of the parties and the instrument remain valid; Cro. Eliz. 626; 11 M. & W. 468; Smith v. Crooker, 5 Mass. 538; Woodworth v. Bank, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 396, 10 Am. Dec. 239; Cribben v. Deal, 21 Or. 211, 27 Pac. 1046, 28 Am. St. Rep. 746; though not, it is said, where the blank is in a part material to the operation of the instrument as an instrument of the character which it purports to be; 6 M. & W. 200; McKee v. Hicks, 13 N. C. 379; Gilbert v. Anthony, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 69, 24 Am. Dec. 439; Boyd v. Boyd, 2 N. & McC. (S. C.) 125; Byers v. McClanahan, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 250; at least, without a new execution; 2 Pars. Cont. 8th ed. *724. But see Wiley v. Moor, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 438, 17 Am. Dec. 696; Commercial Bank of Buffalo v. Kortright, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 348, 34 Am. Dec. 317; Bank of Commonwealth v. Curry, 2 Dana (Ky.) 142; Duncan v. Hodges, 4 McCord (S. C.) 239, 17 Am. Dec. 734; 4 Bingh. 123. If a blank is left in a policy of insurance for the name of the place of destination of a ship, it will avoid the policy; Park. Ins. 22; Wesk. Ins. 42. See cases in note to 10 Am. Rep. 268.

A power of attorney to convey land is inoperative until the name of the attorney is inserted by some one having authority from the principal; U. S. v. Mfg. Co., 198 Fed. 881. As to filling in blanks after execution, see Lewis's Gr. Evid. § 568.

Leaving blanks in a note and chattel mortgage as to the amount, and the delivery of the instruments in that condition, create an agency in the receiver to fill them in the manner contemplated by the maker; Mackey v. Basil, 50 Mo. App. 190. As between the parties to a deed it is not void because it did not contain the grantee's name when acknowledged. If it was afterwards written in by the grantor; Vought's Ex'rs v. Vought, 50 N. J. Eq. 177, 27 Atl. 489.

Where the amount is left blank in the body of a note, its insertion in figures in the margin does not complete it; Hollen v. Davis, 59 Ia. 444, 13 N. W. 413, 44 Am. Rep. 688; Norwich Bank v. Hyde, 13 Conn. 279; contra, Witty v. Ins. Co., 123 Ind. 411, 24 N. E. 141, 8 L. R. A. 365, 18 Am. St. Rep. 327; nor if words as well as figures are in the margin; Chestnut v. Chestnut, 104 Va. 539, 52 S. E. 348, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 879, note, 7 Ann. Cas. 802. So where the name of the payee is left blank, although a bona fide holder may insert his own name; Tittle v. Thomas, 30 Miss. 122, 64 Am. Dec. 156; it must be done before suit; Thompson v. Rathbun, 18 Or. 202, 22 Pac. 837; Greenhow v. Boyle, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 56; Seay v. Bank, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 558, 67 Am. Dec. 579.

A transfer of shares by deed executed in blank as to the name of the purchaser or the number of the shares, is void in England, though sanctioned by the usage of the stock exchange; 4 D. & J. 559; 2 H. & C. 175. But the rule is otherwise in Kortright v. Bank, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 91; German Union Bldg. & Sav. Fund Ass'n v. Sendmeyer, 50 Pa. 67; (but see Denny v. Lyon, 38 Pa. 98, 80 Am. Dec. 463); Day v. Holmes, 103 Mass. 306; Bridgeport Bank v. R. Co., 30 Conn. 274. See the subject discussed in Lewis, Stocks 50. As to blanks in notes, see Knoxville Nat. Bank v. Clark, 51 Ia. 264, 1 N. W. 491, 33 Am. Rep. 130.

See ALTERATION.

BLANK BAR. See COMMON BAR.

BLANK INDORSEMENT. An indorsement which does not mention the name of the person in whose favor it is made.

Such an indorsement is generally effected by writing the indorser's name merely on the back of the bill; Chit. Bills 170. A note so indorsed is transferable by delivery merely, so long as the indorsement continues blank; and its negotiability cannot be restricted by subsequent special indorsements; 1 Esp. 180; Peake 225; Mitchell v. Fuller, 15 Pa. 268, 53 Am. Dec. 594. See 3 Campb. 339; INDORSEMENT.

BLANKET POLICY. A policy which contemplates that the risk is shifting, fluctuating, or varying, and is applied to a class of property, rather than to any particular thing. 1 Wood, Ins. § 40. See Home Ins. Co. v. Warehouse Co., 93 U. S. 541, 23 L. Ed. 868.

BLASPHEMY. To attribute to God that which is contrary to his nature, and does not belong to him, and to deny what does. A false reflection uttered with a malicious design of reviling God. Emlyn's Pref. to vol. 8, St. Tr.; Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 244.

An impious or profane speaking of God or of sacred things; reproachful, contemptuous, or irreverent words uttered impiously against God or religion. Blasphemy cognizable by common law is defined by Blackstone to be "denying the being or providence of God, contumelious reproaches of our Saviour Christ, profane scoffing at the Holy Scripture, or exposing it to contempt or ridicule;" by Kent as "maliciously reviling God or religion."

In general blasphemy may be described as consisting in speaking evil of the Deity with an impious purpose to derogate from the divine majesty, and to alienate the minds of others from the love and reverence of God. It is purposely using words concerning God calculated and designed to impair and destroy the reverence, respect, and confidence due to him as the intelligent creator, governor, and judge of the world. It embraces the idea of detraction, when used towards the Supreme Being; as "calumny" usually carries the same idea when applied to an individual. It is a wilful and malicious attempt to lessen men's reverence for God by denying his existence, or his attributes as an intelligent creator, governor, and judge of men, and to prevent their having confidence in him as such; Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 211, 212, per Shaw, C. J.

If a man, not for the sake of argument, makes a scurrilous attack on doctrines which the majority of persons hold to be true, in a public place where passersby may be offended and young people may come, he becomes liable for a blasphemous libel; see 72 J. P. 188.

The offense of publishing a blasphemous libel, and the crime of blasphemy, are in many respects technically distinct, and may be differently charged; yet the same act may, and often does, constitute both. The latter consists in blaspheming the name of God, by denying, cursing, or contumeliously reproaching God, his creation, government, or final judging of the world; and this may be done by language orally uttered. But it is not the less blasphemy if the same thing be done by language written, printed, and published; although when done in this form it also constitutes the offence of libel; Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 213, per Shaw, C. J.; Heard, Lib. & Sl. § 336.

In most of the United States, statutes have been enacted against this offence; but these statutes are not understood in all cases to have abrogated the common law; the rule being that where the statute does not vary the class and character of an offence, but only authorizes a particular mode of proceeding and of punishment, the sanction is cumulative and the common law is not taken away. And it has been decided that neither these statutes nor the common-law doctrine is repugnant to the constitutions of those states in which the question has arisen; Heard, Lib.

& Sl. § 343; Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 206; Updegraph v. Com., 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 394; People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 290, 5 Am. Dec. 335; Andrew v. New York Bible & Common Prayer Book Society, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 156; State v. Chandler, 2 Harr. (Del.) 553; Vidal v. Girard, 2 How. (U. S.) 127, 11 L. Ed. 205.

In England, to speak, write and publish any profane words vilifying or ridiculing God, Jesus Christ or the Holy Ghost, the Old or New Testament, or Christianity in general, with intent to shock and insult believers or to pervert or mislead the ignorant or unwary, is a misdemeanor. The intent is an essential element. Odgers, C. L. 206. See [1908] 72 J. P. 188.

In France, before the 25th of September, 1791, it was a blasphemy, also, to speak against the Holy Virgin and the saints, to deny the faith, to speak with impiety of holy things, and to swear by things sacred; Merlin, Répert. The law was repealed on that date.

The Civil Law forbade blasphemy; such, for example, as to swear by the hair of the head of God; and it punished its violation with death. Si enim contra homines factæ blasphemæ impunitæ non relinquuntur, multo magis qui ipsum Deum blasphemant digni sunt supplicia sustinere. (For if slander against men is not left unpunished, much more do those deserve punishment who blaspheme God.) No. 77. 1. § 1.

In Spain it is blasphemy not only to speak against God and his government, but to utter injuries against the Virgin Mary and the saints. Senen Vilanova y Manes, Materia Criminal, forense, Observ. 11, cap. 3, n. 1. See CHRISTIANITY.

BLASTING. A mode of rending rock and other solid substances by means of explosives.

Blasting rock in the city of New York is necessary and therefore legal; Gourdiere v. Cormack, 2 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 254; Wiener v. Hammell, 14 N. Y. Supp. 365. It is a useful and often a necessary means for the improvement of land, and where it does not amount to a nuisance, the person is answerable only if negligent; Klepsch v. Donald, 4 Wash. 436, 30 Pac. 991, 31 Am. St. Rep. 936. Absolute liability is imposed on the keeper of dangerous explosives only when by reason of the location and surrounding circumstances the magazine is a nuisance; Heeg v. Licht, 80 N. Y. 579, 36 Am. Rep. 654. Many cases hold that injuries to a house caused by pulsations of the earth, vibrations of the air, and jarring the house will not render the one blasting liable therefor; Simon v. Henry, 62 N. J. L. 486, 41 Atl. 692; Benner v. Dredging Co., 134 N. Y. 156, 31 N. E. 328, 17 L. R. A. 220, 30 Am. St. Rep. 649; Holland House Co. v. Baird, 169 N. Y. 136, 62 N. E. 149; Bessemer Coal, Iron & Land Co. v. Doak, 152 Ala. 166, 44 South. 627, 12 L. R.

A. (N. S.) 389; in the absence of negligence on his part; id.; contra, Fitz Simons & Connell Co. v. Braun, 199 Ill. 390, 65 N. E. 249, 59 L. R. A. 421; City of Chicago v. Murdock, 212 Ill. 9, 72 N. E. 46, 103 Am. St. Rep. 221; Longtin v. Persell, 30 Mont. 306, 76 Pac. 699, 65 L. R. A. 655, 104 Am. St. Rep. 723, 2 Ann. Cas. 198; but it has been held in other cases to be a nuisance where it causes loud noises and renders adjoining property untenable; Gossett v. R. Co., 115 Tenn. 376, 89 S. W. 737, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 97, 112 Am. St. Rep. 846; that the continuance of the concussions amount to a private nuisance; Morgan v. Bowes, 17 N. Y. Supp. 22; and that injury to buildings caused by blasting renders the user of the explosives liable in damages, whether he was or was not negligent; Farnandis v. R. Co., 41 Wash. 486, 84 Pac. 18, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1086, 111 Am. St. Rep. 1027; Colton v. Onderdonk, 69 Cal. 155, 10 Pac. 395, 58 Am. Rep. 556. One engaged in blasting was held liable for a fire communicated by the explosion of blasts; City of Tiffin v. McCormack, 34 Ohio St. 638, 32 Am. Rep. 408; and for the splitting of the underlying strata of rock; Gourdiere v. Cormack, 2 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 200. That one attempting to use dynamite in blasting cannot foresee the consequences of his act does not relieve him from liability for an injury to the occupant of a neighboring property, in a populous neighborhood; Kimberly v. Howland, 143 N. C. 398, 55 S. E. 778, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 545.

For injuries to land caused by debris cast thereon by blasts in an adjoining quarry, trespass is the proper remedy; Scott v. Bay, 3 Md. 431; right to blast for the purpose of making excavations on one's own land is subject to the limitation that the soil, stones, etc., must not be cast upon neighboring land; Hay v. Cohoes Co., 2 N. Y. 159, 51 Am. Dec. 279 (a leading case). An injunction will be granted; Sayen v. Johnson, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 360; Wilsey v. Callanan, 21 N. Y. Supp. 165; though negligence is not proved; Central Iron & Coal Co. v. Vanderheuk, 147 Ala. 546, 41 South. 145, 61 L. R. A. (N. S.) 570, 119 Am. St. Rep. 102, 11 Ann. Cas. 346; and notwithstanding the work was authorized by a city ordinance; Rogers v. Hanfield, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 339. So an injunction was granted to prevent the violent disturbance of a house, where the effect ultimately would be to shake it down; Hill v. Schneider, 13 App. Div. 299, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1; but it is held that blasting at night in a mine cannot be restrained by the owner of the surface, merely because the blasting disturbs sleep; Marvin v. Mining Co., 55 N. Y. 538, 14 Am. Rep. 322.

One who blasts on his own land is liable where death results, irrespective of negligence; Sullivan v. Dunham, 161 N. Y. 290, 55 N. E. 923, 47 L. R. A. 715, 76 Am. St. Rep. 274; though the blast is fired for a lawful purpose and by one skilled at the work; People's Gas Co. v. Tyner, 131 Ind. 277, 31

N. E. 59, 16 L. R. A. 443, 31 Am. St. Rep. 433. It is negligence not to cover the blast, where the work is done on land adjacent to a public road; Beauchamp v. Min. Co., 50 Mich. 163, 15 N. W. 65, 45 Am. Rep. 30. Where a city ordinance requires the blast to be covered and the orifice to be protected by planks and timber, a failure to comply with it is a sufficient neglect of duty to justify a finding of negligence; Brannock v. Elmore, 114 Mo. 53, 21 S. W. 451; Devlin v. Gallagher, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 494. If it is not practicable to cover the blast, it is incumbent on the person doing the work to see that there is notice of danger; Herrington v. Village of Lansingburgh, 110 N. Y. 145, 17 N. E. 728, 6 Am. St. Rep. 348; see City of Logansport v. Dick, 70 Ind. 65, 36 Am. Rep. 166. On the ground that the work is intrinsically dangerous, a city is held liable for damage caused by blasting in a street done by a contractor in constructing a sewer; City of Joliet v. Harwood, 86 Ill. 110, 29 Am. Rep. 17; City of Logansport v. Dick, 70 Ind. 78, 36 Am. Rep. 166; but see Pack v. City of New York, 8 N. Y. 222; Kelly v. City of New York, 11 N. Y. 432; Simon v. Henry, 62 N. J. L. 486, 41 Atl. 692. The negligence of a contractor in blasting in a street to make trenches for a water company, was held to be chargeable to the company; Ware v. St. Paul Water Co., 2 Abb. U. S. 261, Fed. Cas. No. 17,172.

BLIND. The condition of one who is deprived of the faculty of seeing.

Persons who are blind may enter into contracts and make wills like others; Carth. 53; Barnes, 19; Boyd v. Cook, 3 Leigh (Va.) 32. When an attesting witness becomes blind, his handwriting may be proved as if he were dead; 1 Starkie, Ev. 341. But before proving his handwriting the witness must be produced, if within the jurisdiction of the court; 1 Ld. Raym. 734; 1 Mood. & R. 258.

It is not negligence for a blind man to travel along a highway; Sleeper v. Town of Sandown, 52 N. H. 244.

BLOCKADE. In International Law. The actual investment of a port or place by a hostile force fully competent, under ordinary circumstances, to cut off all communication therewith, so arranged or disposed as to be able to apply its force to every point of practicable access or approach to the port or place so invested.

Nature and character. Blockades may be either military or commercial, or may partake of the nature of both. As military blockades they may partake of the nature of a land or land and sea investment of a besieged city or seaport, or they may consist of a masking of the enemy's fleet by another belligerent fleet in a port or anchorage where commerce does not exist. As commercial blockades, they may consist of operations against an enemy's trade or revenue, either localized at a single important seaport, or as a more comprehensive strategic operation, by which the entire sea frontier of an enemy is placed under blockade. A blockade, being an operation of war, any government, independent or de facto, whose rights as a belligerent are recognized, can institute a blockade as an exercise of those rights.

The justification of blockade lies in the international recognition of the necessity which the belligerent is under of imposing that restriction upon neutral commerce for the successful prosecution of hostilities.

It is not settled whether the mouth of an international river can be blockaded in case one or more of the upper riparian states remain neutral. But if a river constitutes the boundary line between a belligerent and a neutral, it may not be blockaded so as to prevent access to the neutral side of the river. The Peterhoff, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 49, 18 L. Ed. 564. In case of civil war, a government may blockade certain of its own ports, as was done by the United States during the American Civil War and by France during the Franco-Prussian War.

Effectiveness. In international jurisprudence it is a well-settled principle that the blockading force must be present and of sufficient force to be effective, and a mere notification of one belligerent that the port of the other is blockaded, sometimes termed a paper blockade, is not sufficient to establish a legal blockade. A blockade may be made effective by batteries on shore as well as by ships afloat, and, in case of inland ports, may be maintained by batteries commanding the river or inlet by which it may be approached, supported by a naval force sufficient to warn off innocent and capture offending vessels attempting to enter; The Circassian, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 135, 17 L. Ed. 796. In 1856 the Declaration of Paris prescribed that blockades to be obligatory must be effective, that is to say, maintained by a sufficient force really to prevent access of the enemy's ships and other vessels. The United States, although not a party to this declaration, has upheld the same doctrine since 1781, when, by ordinance of Congress, it was declared that there should be a number of vessels stationed near enough to the port to make the entry apparently dangerous; Journals of Congress, vol. vii. p. 186. By the convention of the Baltic Powers in 1780, and again in 1801, the same doctrine was promulgated; and in 1871, by treaty between Italy and the United States, a clearer and more satisfactory definition of an effective blockade was agreed upon, as follows: "It is expressly declared that such places only shall be considered blockaded as shall be actually invested by naval forces capable of preventing the entrance of neutrals, and so stationed as to create an evident danger on their part to attempt it."

The French doctrine of an effective blockade is that access must be barred by a line of ships forming a chain around the blockaded port, while the United States, Great Britain and Japan hold that it is sufficient to have men-of-war cruising in the vicinity of the port, provided the disposition of the cruisers constitutes an actual danger to a vessel seeking to run the blockade. A blockade does not cease to be effective because the blockading force is temporarily withdrawn owing to stress of weather. 1 C. Rob. 86, 154. If a single modern cruiser, blockading a port, renders it in fact dangerous for other craft to enter the port, the blockade is practically effective; the Olinde Rodrigues, 174 U. S. 510, 19 Sup. Ct. 851, 43 L. Ed. 1065.

Neutrals. To involve a neutral in the consequences of violating the blockade, it is indispensable that he should have due notice of it. This information may be communicated to him in two ways: either actually, by a formal notice from the blockading power, or constructively, by notice to his government, or by the notoriety of the fact; Prize Cases, 2 Black (U. S.) 635, 17 L. Ed. 459; 6 C. Rob. Adm. 367; 2 id. 110, 128; 1 Act. Prize Cas. 61. Formal notice is not required; any authentic information is sufficient; 1 C. Rob. Adm. 334; 5 id. 77, 286; Edw. Adm. 203; 3 Phill. Int. Law 397; The Revere, 24 Bost. L. Rep. 276, Fed. Cas. No. 11,716; Hall, Int. L. 648; it is a settled rule that a vessel in a blockaded port is presumed to have notice of a blockade as soon as it begins; 2 Black 630.

Breach. A violation may be either by going into the place blockaded, or by coming out of it with a cargo laden after the commencement of the blockade. Also placing himself so near a blockaded port as to be in a condition to slip in without observation, is a violation of the blockade, and raises the presumption of a criminal intent; 6 C. Rob. Adm. 30, 101, 182; Radcliff v. Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 47; 1 Edw. Adm. 202; Fitzsimmons v. Ins. Co., 4 Cra. (U. S.) 185, 2 L. Ed. 591; The Josephine, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 83, 18 L. Ed. 65. The sailing for a blockaded port, knowing it to be blockaded, is held by the English prize courts to be such an act as may charge the party with a breach of the blockade; British instructions to their fleet in the West India station, Jan. 5, 1804; and the same doctrine is recognized in the United States; Yeaton v. Fry, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 335, 3 L. Ed. 117; The Nereide, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 440, 3 L. Ed. 709; 1 Kent *150; The Bermuda, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 514, 18 L. Ed. 200; 3 Phill. Int. Law, 397; Hall, Int. L. 662; The Revere, 24 Bost. L. Rep. 276, Fed. Cas. No. 11,716. See Fitzsimmons v. Ins. Co., 4 Cra. (U. S.) 185, 2 L. Ed. 591; Maryland Ins. Co. v. Woods, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 29, 3 L. Ed. 143; Vos v. Ins. Co., 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 180; id.,

But in the case of long voyages, sailing for a blockaded port, contingently, might be permitted, if inquiry were afterwards made at convenient ports; Maryland Ins. Co. v. Woods, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 29, 3 L. Ed. 143; Sperry v. Delaware Ins. Co., 2 Wash. C. C. 243, Fed. Cas. No. 13,236; but the ordinance of 1781 authorized the condemnation of vessels "destined" to any blockaded port, without any qualification based upon proximity or notice. A neutral vessel in distress may enter a blockaded port; The Diana, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 354, 19 L. Ed. 165.

Penalty. When the ship has contracted guilt by a breach of the blockade she may be taken at any time before the end of her voyage; but the penalty travels no further than the end of her return voyage; 2 C. Rob. Adm. 128; 3 id. 147; The Wren, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 582, 18 L. Ed. 876. When taken, the ship is confiscated; and the cargo is always, prima facie, implicated in the guilt of the owner or master of the ship; and the burden of rebutting the presumption that the vessel was going in for the benefit of the cargo, and with the direction of the owners rests with them; 1 C. Rob. Adm. 67, 130; 3 id. 173; 4 id. 93; 1 Edw. Adm. 39. The Declaration of London (q. v.) Arts. 1-21, apart from re-stating existing practice, lays down the following rules upon controverted points: The question whether a blockade is effective is a question of fact, that is, each case must be decided upon its own merits; a "declaration" of the blockade must be made by the blockading government or by the naval authorities acting in its name. This declaration must be followed by a "notification," first, to the neutral powers themselves, and, secondly, to the local authorities, who must, in turn, notify the foreign consular officers at the place. The liability of a neutral vessel is dependent upon the knowledge of the blockade, and this knowledge is presumed if the vessel left port subsequently to the notification of the blockade to the neutral power. Neutral vessels may not be captured for breach of blockade except within the area of operations of the war-ships maintaining the blockade, nor, if they have broken blockade "outwards," are they liable to capture after pursuit has been abandoned by the blocking force. This overrules the British and American doctrine stated above.

BLOOD. Relationship; stock; family. 1 Roper, Leg. 103; 1 Belt, Suppl. Ves. 365. Kindred. Bacon, Max. Reg. 18.

Brothers and sisters are said to be of the whole blood if they have the same father and mother, and of the half-blood if they have only one parent in common. Baker v. Chalfant, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 477. See Oglesby Coal Co. v. Pasco, 79 Ill. 166; 15 Ves. 107.

BLOOD FEUD. Avenging the slaughter of kin on the person who slaughtered him, or on his belongings. Whether the Teutonic or the Anglo-Saxon law had a legal right of blood feud has been disputed, but in Alfred's day it was unlawful to begin a feud until an attempt had been made to exact the price of the life (wer-gild).

BLOOD STAINS. See STAINS, BLOOD.

BLOODHOUND. Evidence from the tracking of a prisoner by bloodhounds is not permissible until it is shown that they were reliable and accurate: State v. Adams, 85 Kan. 435, 116 Pac. 608, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 870; State v. Dickerson, 77 Ohio St. 34, 82 N. E. 969, 122 Am. St. Rep. 479, 11 Ann. Cas. 1181; other cases express in various ways the foundation that must be laid; Richardson v. State, 145 Ala. 46, 41 South. 82, 8 Ann. Cas. 108; Parker v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 461, 80 S. W. 1008, 108 Am. St. Rep. 1021, 3 Ann. Cas. 893; in Brott v. State, 70 Neb. 395, 97 N. W. 593, 63 L. R. A. 789, such evidence is held dangerous and incompetent.

Such dogs are remarkable for their sense of smell and ability to follow a scent or track a human being; to permit evidence that a hound has tracked an alleged criminal, it must be shown that it had been trained in that work; Pedigo v. Com., 103 Ky. 41, 44 S. W. 143, 42 L. R. A. 432, 82 Am. St. Rep. 566.

BLOODWIT. An amercement for bloodshed. Cowell. The privilege of taking such amercements. Skene.

A privilege or exemption from paying a fine or amercement assessed for bloodshed. Cowell; Termes de la Ley.

BLUE LAWS. A name often applied to severe laws for the regulation of religious and personal conduct in the colonies of Connecticut and New Haven; hence any rigid Sunday laws or religious regulations. The best account of the Blue Laws is by Trumbull, "The True Blue Laws of Connecticut and New Haven, and the False Blue Laws invented by the Rev. Sam'l Peters, etc." The latter reference is to a collection without credit. See also Hinman; Schmucker, Blue Laws; Barker, Hist. & Antiq. of New Haven; Peters, Hist. Conn.; Fiske, Beginnings of New England 238.

BLUE SKY LAW. A popular name for acts providing for the regulation and supervision of investment companies, for the protection of the community from investing in fraudulent companies. The first of these acts was passed in Kansas (1911). Some twenty states have passed them. Such act was held valid in a lower court in Kansas, and invalid in Alabama & N. O. Transp. Co. v. Doyle, 210 Fed. 173 (Michigan act).

BOARD OF HEALTH. See HEALTH; DELEGATION.

BOARD OF SPECIAL INQUIRY. An instrument of executive power, not a court, made up of the immigrant officials in the service, subordinates of the commissioner of immigration, whose duties are declared to be administrative. Its decisions are not binding upon the Secretary of Commerce. The act of congress making them final means final where they are most likely to be questioned, in the courts; Pearson v. Williams, 202 U. S. 281, 26 Sup. Ct. 608, 50 L. Ed. 1029.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS. A county board of representatives of towns or townships, under a system existing in some states, having charge of the fiscal affairs of the county.

This system originated in the state of New York, and has been adopted in Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Iowa. The board, when convened, forms a deliberative body, usually acting under parliamentary rules. It performs the same duties and exercises like authority as the COUNTY COMMISSIONERS or BOARD OF CIVIL AUTHORITY in other states. See, generally, Haines's Township Laws of Mich., and Haines's Town Laws of Ill. & Wis.

BOARD OF TRADE. See CHAMBER OF COMMERCE; GRAIN.

BOARDER. One who makes a special contract with another person for food with or without lodging. Berkshire Woollen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 424; Pollock v. Landis, 36 Ia. 651. To be distinguished from a guest of an innkeeper; Story, Bailm. § 477; McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 343, 62 Am. Dec. 574; Chamberlain v. Masterson, 26 Ala. 371; Berkshire Woollen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 417. See Edwards, Bailments § 456.

In a boarding-house, the guest is under an express contract, at a certain rate, for a certain time; but in an inn there is usually no express engagement; the guest, being on his way, is entertained from day to day according to his business, upon an implied contract; Willard v. Reinhardt, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 148; Stewart v. McCready, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 62; Cady v. McDowell, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 484.

There is a duty on the part of a boarding house keeper to take reasonable care for the safety of property brought by a guest into his house, and evidence of refusal to furnish a key of the bed room and also for a chest of drawers therein was sufficient to go to the jury as a breach of that duty; [1905] 2 K. B. 805, in the English Court of Appeal, where the prior cases are examined and criticized, and Danzy v. Richardson, 3 E. & B. 144, is approved, Holder v. Souley, 8 C. B. N. S. 254, not followed, and Calye's Case, 8 Co. 32 a, explained. See note in 31 Mag. L. Rev. 226; BAILMENT; INNKEEPER.

BOAT. A boat does not pass by the sale of a ship and appurtenances; Molloy, b. 2, c. 1, § 8; Beaves, Lex. Merc. 56; Starr v. Goodwin, 2 Root (Conn.) 71; Park, Ins. 8th ed. 126. But see Briggs v. Strange, 17 Mass. 405; 2 Marsh. 727. Insurance on a ship covers her boats; 1 Mann. & R. 392; 1 Pars. Marit. Law 72, n.

BOC (Sax.). A writing; a book. Used of the land-bocs, or evidences of title among the Saxons, corresponding to modern deeds. These bocs were destroyed by William the Conqueror. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 22; 1 Washb. R. P. *17, 21. See 1 Poll. & Maitl. 472, 571; 2 id. 12, 86.

BOC HORDE. A place where books, evidences, or writings are kept. Cowell. These were generally in monasteries. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 22.

BOC LAND. Alodial lands held by written evidence of title.

Such lands might be granted upon such terms as the owner should see fit, by greater or less estate, to take effect presently, or at a future time, or on the happening of any event. In this respect they differed essentially from feuds. 1 Washb. 5th ed. R. P. *17; 4 Kent 441. But see ALON.

BODY. A person. Used of a natural body, or of an artificial one created by law, as a corporation.

A collection of laws; that is, the embodiment of the laws in one connected statement or collection, called a body of laws.

In practice when the sheriff returns cepi corpus to a capias, the plaintiff may obtain a rule, before special bail has been entered, to bring in the body; and this must be done either by committing the defendant or entering special bail. See DEAD BODY.

BODY CORPORATE. A corporation. This is an early and undoubtedly correct term to apply to a corporation. Co. Litt. 250 a; Ay-liffe, Par. 196; Ang. Corp. § 6.

BODY POLITIC. See CORPORATION.

BONA (Lat. bonus). Goods; personal property; chattels, real or personal; real property.

Bona et catalla (goods and chattels) includes all kinds of property which a man may possess. In the Roman law it signified every kind of property, real, personal, and mixed; but chiefly it was applied to real estate, chattels being distinguished by the words effects, movables, etc. Bona were, however, divided into bona mobilia and bona immobilia. It is taken in the civil law in nearly the sense of biens in the French law. See NULLA BONA.

BONA CONFISCATA. Goods confiscated or forfeited to the imperial fisc or treasury. 1 Bla. Com. 299.

BONA FIDE HOLDER FOR VALUE. The Negotiable Instruments Act provides, § 52: A holder in due course is a holder who has taken the instrument under the following conditions: 1. That it is complete and regular upon its face; 2. That he became the holder of it before it was overdue, and without notice that it had been previously dishonored, if such was the fact; 3. That he took it in good faith and for value; 4. That at the time it was negotiated to him he had no notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it.

Where an instrument payable on demand is negotiated an unreasonable length of time after its issue, the holder is not deemed a holder in due course.

If he has had notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person he took it from before he had paid the full amount agreed to be paid, he is a holder in due course only to the amount theretofore paid by him. The title of a person who negotiates an instrument is defective when he obtained it, or any signature to it, by fraud, duress, or force and fear, or other unlawful means, or for an illegal consideration, or when he negotiates it in breach of faith, or under such circumstances as amount to a fraud. To constitute notice of an infirmity, etc., the person to whom it is negotiated must have had actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith.

In the hands of any holder other than a holder in due course, a negotiable instrument is subject to the same defenses as if it were non-negotiable; but a holder who derives his title through a holder in due course and is not himself party to any fraud or illegality affecting the instrument, has all the rights of such former holder in respect of all parties prior to the latter.

Every holder is deemed prima facie to be a holder in due course; but when it is shown that the title of any person who has negotiated the instrument is defective, the burden is on the holder to prove that he or some person under whom he claims acquired the title as holder in due course; but this does not apply in favor of a party who became bound on the instrument prior to the acquisition of such defective title. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS for the States, etc., in which it is enacted.

BONA FIDE PURCHASER FOR VALUE. See PURCHASER FOR VALUE WITHOUT NOTICE.

BONA FIDES. Good faith, honesty, as distinguished from mala fides (bad faith).

Bona fide. In good faith.

BONA FORISFACTA. Forfeited goods. 1 Bla. Com. 299.

BONA GESTURA. Good behavior.

BONA GRATIA. Voluntarily; by mutual consent. Used of a divorce obtained by the agreement of both parties.

BONA MOBILIA. In Civil Law. Movables. Those things which move themselves or can be transported from one place to another; which are not intended to make a permanent part of a farm, heritage, or building.

BONA NOTABILIA. Chattels or goods of sufficient value to be accounted for.

Where a decedent leaves goods of sufficient amount (bona notabilia) in different dioceses, administration is granted by the metropolitan, to prevent the confusion arising from the appointment of many different administrators; 2 Bla. Com. 509; Rolle, Abr. 908; Williams, Ex. 7th ed. The value necessary to constitute property bona notabilia has varied at different periods, but was finally established at £6, in 1603.

BONA PERITURA. Perishable goods. An executor, administrator, or trustee is bound to use due diligence in disposing of perishable goods, such as fattened cattle, grain, fruit, or any other article which may be worse for keeping; Bacon, Abr. Executors; 5 Co. 9; Cro. Eliz. 518; McCall v. Peachy's Adm'r, 3 Munf. (Va.) 288; 1 Beatt. Ch. 5. 14. A carrier is in general not liable for injuries to perishable goods occurring without his negligence; 7 L. R. Ch. 573; 1 C. P. D. 423. He may discriminate in favor of such goods, if pressed by a rush of business; Great Western Ry. Co. v. Burns, 60 Ill. 284; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Burrows, 33 Mich. 6; Peet v. R. Co., 20 Wis. 594, 91 Am. Dec. 446. See PERISHABLE GOODS.

BONA VACANTIA. Goods to which no one claims a property, as shipwrecks, treasure-trove, etc.; vacant goods.

Bona vacantia belonged, under the common law, to the finder, except in certain instances, when they were the property of the king. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 298, n.

BONA WAVIATA. Goods thrown away by a thief in his fright for fear of being apprehended. By common law such goods belonged to the crown. 1 Bla. Com. 296.

BOND. An obligation in writing and under seal. Taylor v. Glaser, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 502; Pinkard v. Ingersol, 11 Ala. 19; Cantey v. Duren, Harp. (S. C.) 434; Deming v. Bullitt, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 241; Denton v. Adams, 6 Vt. 40; Harman v. Harman, 1 Baldw. 129, Fed. Cas. No. 6,071; Biery v. Steckel, 194 Pa. 445, 45 Atl. 376.

It may be single—simplex obligatio—as where the obligor obliges himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay a certain sum of money to another at a day named, or it may be conditional (which is the kind more generally used), that if the obligor does some particular act, the obligation shall be void, or else shall remain in full force, as payment of rent, performance of covenants in a deed, or repayment of a principal sum of money, borrowed of the obligee, with interest, which principal sum is usually one-half of the penal sum specified in the bond.

There must be proper parties; and no person can take the benefit of a bond except the parties named therein; Fuller v. Fullerton, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 59; except, perhaps, in some cases of bonds given for the performance of their duties by certain classes of public officers; Fellows v. Gilman, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 414; Ing v. State, 8 Md. 287; Roll v. Raguet, 4 Ohio 418, 22 Am. Dec. 759; Baker v. Bartol, 7 Cal. 551; Hartz v. Com., 1 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 359; State v. Druly, 3 Ind. 431. A man cannot be bound to himself even in connection with others; Smith

v. Lusher, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 688. See McDowell v. Butler, 56 N. C. 311. But if a bond is given by the treasurer of a corporation to the directors as a class, of which he is one, it is not for that reason invalid; Durburow v. Niehoff, 37 Ill. App. 403. If the bond run to several persons jointly, all must join in suit for a breach, though it be conditioned for the performance of different things for the benefit of each; Pearce v. Hitchcock, 2 N. Y. 388.

The instrument must be in writing and sealed; Harman v. Harman, 1 Baldw. 129, Fed. Cas. No. 6,071; Denton & Smith v. Adams, 6 Vt. 40; but a sealing sufficient where the bond is made is held sufficient though it might be an insufficient sealing if it had been made where it is sued on; Meredith v. Hinsdale, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 362. The signature and seal may be in any part of the instrument; Reed v. Drake, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 345. See McLeod v. State, 69 Miss. 221, 13 South. 268. An instrument not under seal is not a bond and will not satisfy a statute requiring an appeal bond; Corbin v. Laswell, 48 Mo. App. 626; although in the body thereof it is recited that the parties thereto have set their hands and seals; Williams v. State, 25 Fla. 734, 6 South. 831, 6 L. R. A. 821.

It must be delivered by the party whose bond it is to the other; Carey v. Dennis, 13 Md. 1; Chase v. Breed, 5 Gray (Mass.) 440; Towns v. Kellett, 11 Ga. 286; Harris v. Register, 70 Md. 109, 16 Atl. 386. But the delivery and acceptance may be by attorney; Madison & I. Plank-Road Co. v. Stevens, 10 Ind. 1. The date is not considered of the substance of a deed; and therefore a bond which either has no date or an impossible one is still good, provided the real day of its being dated or given, that is, delivered, can be proved; 2 Bla. Com. 304; Com. Dig. Fait, B, 3; Ross v. Overton, 3 Call (Va.) 309, 2 Am. Dec. 552. There is a presumption that a deed was executed on the day of its date; Steph. Dig. Ev. Art. 87; Costigan v. Gould, 5 Denio (N. Y.) 290.

The condition is a vital part of a conditional bond, and generally limits and determines the amount to be paid in case of a breach; Strang v. Holmes, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 224; but interest and costs may be added; Van Wyck v. Montrose, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 350; Campbell v. Pope, 1 Hempst. 271, Fed. Cas. No. 2,365a. The recovery against a surety in a bond for the payment of money is not limited to the penalty, but may exceed it so far as necessary to include interest from the time of the breach. So far as interest is payable by the terms of the contract, and until default made, it is limited by the penalty; but after breach it is recoverable, not on the ground of contract, but as damages, which the law gives for its violation; Brainard v. Jones, 18 N. Y. 35.

See Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Knight, 124 Pa. 58, 16 Atl. 492. The omission from a statutory bond of a clause which does not affect the rights of the parties, and imposes no harder terms upon the obligors, does not invalidate it; Power v. Graydon, 53 Pa. 198.

Where a bond is for the performance of an illegal contract the parties are not bound thereon; State v. Pollard, 89 Ala. 179, 7 South. 765.

On the forfeiture of the bond, or its becoming single, the whole penalty was formerly recoverable at law; but here the courts of equity interfered, and would not permit a man to take more than in conscience he ought, viz.: his principal, interest, and expenses in case the forfeiture accrued by non-payment of money borrowed, the damages sustained upon non-performance of covenants, and the like. And the like practice having gained some footing in the courts of law, the statute 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, at length enacted, that, in case of a bond conditioned for the payment of money, the payment or tender of the principal sum due with interest and costs, even though the bond were forfeited and a suit commenced thereon, should be a full satisfaction and discharge; 2 Bla. Com. 340.

All of the obligors in a joint bond are presumed to be principals, except such as have opposite their names the word "security;" Harper's Adm'r v. McVeigh's Adm'r, 82 Va. 751, 1 S. E. 193; or unless it is otherwise expressed.

If in a bond the obligor binds himself, without adding his heirs, executors, and administrators, the executors and administrators are bound, but not the heir; Shepard, Touchst. 369; for the law will not imply the obligation upon the heir; Co. Litt. 209 a.

If a bond lie dormant for twenty years, it cannot afterwards be recovered; for the law raises a presumption of its having been paid, and the defendant may plead solvit ad diem to an action upon it; 1 Burr. 434; 4 id. 1963. And in some cases, under particular circumstances, even a less time may create a presumption; 1 Term 271; Cowp. 109. The presumption of payment after twenty years is in the nature of a statute of limitations. It is available as a bar to an action to recover on the instrument, but not where the party asks affirmative relief based upon the fact of payment; Lawrence v. Ball, 14 N. Y. 477.

Where a company bought in its own debentures and then reissued them, held that the new holder could not claim pari passu with the other holders; [1904] 2 Ch. 474; so where debentures were used as collateral and the loan was paid and a second loan made; [1907] 2 Ch. 540; [1906] 2 Ch. 216; [1905] 2 Ch. 587, A. C. But where receivers used the corporate funds to buy in its mortgage funds, it was held that if reissued, they could share in the mortgage security; In re Fifty-Four First Mortgage Bonds, 15 S. C. 304, Simpson, C. J., dissenting upon the ground that they had been extinguished. In Pruyne v. Mfg. Co., 92 Hun 214, 36 N. Y. Supp. 361, there seems to have been an agreement that there was no merger. Corporation mortgages usually provide that all bonds shall share equally in the mortgage security, no matter when issued, so that the English cases are not in point.

FORTHCOMING BOND. A bond conditioned that a certain article shall be forthcoming at a certain time or when called for.

GENERAL MORTGAGE BOND. A bond secured upon an entire corporate property, parts of which are subject to one or more prior mortgages.

HERITABLE BOND. In Scotch Law, a bond for a sum of money to which is joined a conveyance of land or of heritage, to be held by the creditor in security of the debt.

INCOME BONDS. Bonds of a corporation the interest of which is payable only when earned and after payment of interest upon prior mortgages.

LLOYD'S BOND. A bond issued for work done or goods delivered and bearing interest. This was a device of an English barrister named Lloyd, by which railway and other companies did, in fact, increase their indebtedness without technically violating their charter provisions prohibiting the increase of debt.

MUNICIPAL BOND, q. v.

RAILROAD AID BONDS are issued by municipal corporations to aid in the construction of railways. The power to subscribe to the stock of railways, and to issue bonds in pursuance thereof, does not belong to towns, cities, or counties, without special authority of the legislature, and the power of the latter to confer such authority, where the state constitution is silent, has been a much-contested question. The weight of the very numerous decisions is in favor of the power. In several of the states the constitutions prohibit or restrict the right of municipal corporations to invest in the stock of railroads or similar corporations; Citizens' Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Topeka, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 655, 22 L. Ed. 455; Pitzman v. Village of Freeburg, 92 Ill. 111; Lowell v. City of Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39; Ogden v. Daviess County, 102 U. S. 634, 26 L. Ed. 263; Harshman v. County Court, 122 U. S. 306, 7 Sup. Ct. 1171, 30 L. Ed. 1152; Knox County v. Bank, 147 U. S. 91, 13 Sup. Ct. 267, 37 L. Ed. 93; Barnum v. Okolona, 148 U. S. 393, 13 Sup. Ct. 638, 37 L. Ed. 495; Cairo v. Zane, 149 U. S. 122, 13 Sup. Ct. 803, 37 L. Ed. 673; McKittrick v. Ry. Co., 152 U. S. 473, 14 Sup. Ct. 661, 38 L. Ed. 518; Regers v. Keokuk, 154 U. S. 546, 14 Sup. Ct. 1162, 18 L. Ed. 74; Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Pleasant Tp., 62 Fed. 718.

10 C. C. A. 611; Deulson v. City of Columbus, 62 Fed. 775; Atlantic Trust Co. v. Town of Darlington, 63 Fed. 76; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 508.

The recital in bonds issued by a municipal corporation in payment of a subscription to railroad stock, that they were issued "in pursuance of an act of the legislature . . . and ordinances of the city council . . . passed in pursuance thereof," does not put a bona fide purchaser for value upon inquiry as to the terms of the ordinances under which the bonds were issued, nor does it put him on inquiry whether a proper petition of two-thirds of the residents had been presented to the common council before it subscribed for the stock; Evansville v. Dennett, 161 U. S. 434, 16 Sup. Ct. 613, 40 L. Ed. 760; and recitals in county bonds, that they are issued in pursuance of an order of the court, etc., as a subscription to the capital stock, estop the county issuing them as against an innocent purchaser from showing that the bonds are void because in fact issued as a donation to the railroad company, whereas the statute only authorized a subscription to its stock; Ashman v. Pulaski County, 73 Fed. 927, 20 C. C. A. 232; where a county, under authority from the state, issued its bonds in payment of a subscription to stock in a railway company, made upon a condition which was never complied with, and which was subsequently waived by the county, and received and held the certificates and paid interest on its bonds and refunded them under legislative authority, the bonds originally issued were held valid in the hands of a bona fide holder for value before maturity; Graves v. Saline County, 161 U. S. 359, 16 Sup. Ct. 526, 40 L. Ed. 732; where there is a total want of power to subscribe for such stock and to issue bonds in payment, a municipality cannot estop itself by admissions or by issuing securities in negotiable form, nor even by receiving and enjoying the proceeds of such bonds; id.

STRAW BOND. A bond upon which is used either the name of fictitious persons or those unable to pay the sum guaranteed; generally applied to insufficient bail bonds, improperly taken, and designated by the term "straw bail."

As to the overissue of bonds, see OVERISSUE.

BONDAGE. A term which has not obtained a juridical use distinct from the vernacular, in which it is either taken as a synonym with slavery, or as applicable to any kind of personal servitude which is involuntary in its continuance.

The propriety of making it a distinct juridical term depends upon the sense given to the word slavery. If slave be understood to mean, exclusively, a natural person who, in law, is known as an object in respect to which legal persons may have rights of possession or property, as in respect to domestic animals and inanimate things, it is evident that any one who is regarded as a legal person, capable of rights and obligations in other relations, while bound by law to render service to another, is not a slave in the same sense of the word. Such a one stands in a legal relation, being under an obligation correlative to the right of the person who is by law entitled to his service, and, though not an object of property, nor possessed or owned as a chattel or thing, he is a person bound to the other, and may be called a bondman, in distinction from a slave as above understood. A greater or less number of rights may be attributed to persons bound to render service. Bondage may subsist under many forms. Where the rights attributed are such as can be exhibited in very limited spheres of action only, or are very imperfectly protected, it may be difficult to see wherein the condition, though nominally that of a legal person, differs from chattel slavery. Still, the two conditions have been plainly distinguishable under many legal systems, and even as existing at the same time under one source of law. The Hebrews may have held persons of other nations as slaves of that chattel condition which anciently was recognized by the laws of all Asiatic and European nations; but they held persons of their own nation in bondage only as legal persons capable of rights, while under an obligation to serve. Cobb's Hist. Sketch, ch. 1. When the serfdom of feudal times was first established, the two conditions were coexistent in every part of Europe (ibid. ch. 7), though afterwards the bondage of serfdom was for a long period the only form known there until the revival of chattel slavery, by the introduction of negro slaves into European commerce, in the sixteenth century. Every villein under the English law was clearly a legal person capable of some legal rights, whatever might be the nature of his services. Co. Litt. 123 b; Coke, 2d Inst. 4, 45. But at the first recognition of negro slavery in the jurisprudence of England and her colonies, the slave was clearly a natural person, known to the law as an object of possession or property for others, having no legal personality, who therefore, in many legal respects, resembled a thing or chattel. It is true that the moral responsibility of the slave and the duty of others to treat him as an accountable human being and not as a domestic animal were always more or less clearly recognized in the criminal jurisprudence. There has always been in his condition a mingling of the qualities of person and of thing, which has led to many legal contradictions. But while no rights or obligations, in relations between him and other natural persons such as might be judicially enforced by or against him, were attributed to him, there was a propriety in distinguishing the condition as chattel slavery, even though the term itself implies that there is an essential distinction between such a person and natural things, of which it seems absurd to say that they are either free or not free. The phrases instar rerum, tanquam bona, are aptly used by older writers. The bondage of the villein could not be thus characterized; and there is no historical connection between the principles which determined the existence of the one and those which sanctioned the other. The law of English villenage furnished no rules applicable to negro slavery in America. Com. v. Turner, 6 Rand. (Va.) 680, 683; Fable v. Brown, 2 Hill, Ch. (S. C.) 390; Neal v. Farmer, 9 Ga. 561; 1 Hurd, Law of Freedom and Bondage, cc. 4, 5. Slavery in the colonies was entirely distinct from the condition of those white persons who were held to service for years, which was involuntary in its continuance, though founded in most instances on contract. These persons had legal rights, not only in respect to the community at large, but also in respect to the person to whom they owed service.

In the American slaveholding states before the Civil War, the moral personality of those held in the customary slavery was recognized by jurisprudence and statute to an extent which makes it difficult to say whether, there, slaves were by law regarded as things and not legal persons (though subject to the laws which regulate the title and transfer of property), or whether they were still things and property in the same sense and degree in which they were so formerly. Compare laws and authorities in Cobb's Law of Negro Slavery, ch. iv., v.

The Emancipation Proclamation (January 1, 1863), and the amendments to the constitution of the United States, have rendered the views entertained on the subject purely speculative, as slavery has ceased to exist.

The Emancipation Proclamation was issued by President Lincoln as commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the United States during the existence of armed rebellion, and by its terms purported to be nothing more than "a fit and necessary war measure for suppressing said rebellion." By virtue of this power, it was therein ordered and declared that all persons held as slaves within certain designated states, and parts of states, were and henceforward should be free, and that the executive government of the United States, including the military and naval authorities thereof, should recognize and maintain the freedom of said persons. The proclamation was not meant to apply to those states or parts of states not in rebellion.

The constitutionality of this measure has been a subject of some doubt, the prevailing opinion being that it could be supported as a war measure alone, and apply where the slaveholding territory was actually subdued by the military power of the United States; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 68, 21 L. Ed. 394; In South Carolina, it has been held that slavery was not abolished by the Emancipation Proclamation, and the same view was sustained in Texas; Pickett v. Wilkins, 13 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 366; Hall v. Keese, 31 Tex. 504. In Louisiana, Posey v. Driggs, 20 La. Ann. 199, and Alabama, Morgan v. Nelson, 43 Ala. 592, the opposite view is held. But see McElvain v. Mudd, 44 Ala. 70, 4 Am. Rep. 106. In Mississippi the question of the time when slavery was abolished is left open; Herrod v. Davis, 43 Miss. 102.

The 13th Amendment to the constitution, proclaimed Dec. 18, 1865, was the definite settlement of the question of slavery in the United States. It declares, "1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to its jurisdiction. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation." See SLAVE; MANUMISSION.

BONDED WAREHOUSE. A warehouse for the storage of goods, wares and merchandise, deposited pursuant to law, held under bond for the payment of duties or revenue taxes.

Under the act authorizing persons to keep a warehouse for the storage of dutiable goods, it was held that no person has any right to do so unless appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and such appointment can be revoked at pleasure; Corkle v. Maxwell, Fed. Cas. No. 3,231. Goods in a bonded warehouse under the revenue laws, are in possession of the sovereign and no lien can be obtained thereon by a creditor; In re Johnston, Fed. Cas. No. 7,424. The statutes regulating bonded warehouses, usually provide that goods deposited therein may be withdrawn for consumption within one year of the date of original importation, on payment of duties and charges; Allen v. Jones, 24 Fed. 13. The Tariff Act of 1909 makes the period of withdrawal three years; sec. 20. The goods cannot be transferred from the original packages for safety or preservation while in the warehouse, unless entered for exportation and legally removed from the warehouse into the possession of the importer; W. H. Thomas & Son Co. v. Barnett, 144 Fed. 338, 75 C. C. A. 300. The expense of storage of imported merchandise pending inspection and analysis under the Pure Food Law should be borne by the government and not by the importer; U. S. v. Acker, Merrill & Condit, 133 Fed. 842. The Tariff Act of 1913 re-enacts the former law, with an amendment permitting the manufacture of cigars in a bonded warehouse. Ore and metal smelting and refining works may be designated as bonded warehouses.

BONIS NON AMOVENDIS. A writ addressed to the sheriff, when a writ of error has been brought, commanding that the person against whom judgment has been obtained be not suffered to remove his goods till the error be tried and determined. Reg. Orig. 131.

BONITARIAN OWNERSHIP. DOMINIUM BONITARIUM. The term in bonis habere was used to express an ownership which was practically absolute, because it was protected by the authority of the prætor in cases where, wishing to give all the advantages of ownership, he was prevented by the civil law from giving the legal (Quiritarian) dominium.

BONO ET MALO. A special writ of jail delivery, which formerly issued of course for each particular prisoner. 4 Bla. Com. 270.

BONUS. A premium paid to a grantor or vendor.

A sum exacted by the state from a corporation as a consideration for granting a charter; in such case it is clearly distinguished from a tax; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Maryland, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 456, 22 L. Ed. 678; Com. v. Transp. Co., 107 Pa. 112.

A consideration given for what is received. Extraordinary profit accruing in the operation of a stock company or private corporation. 10 Ves. Ch. 185; 7 Sim. 634; 2 Spence, Eq. Jur. 569.

An additional premium paid for the use of money beyond the legal interest. Mechanics' & Working Men's Mut. Sav. Bank & Bldg. Ass'n of New Haven v. Wilcox, 24 Conn. 147. It is not a gift or gratuity, but is paid for some services or consideration and is in addition to what would ordinarily be given; Kenicott v. Wayne County, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 452, 21 L. Ed. 319.

In its original sense of good the word was formerly much used. Thus, a jury was to be composed of twelve good men (boni homines); 3 Bla. Com. 349; donus judex (a good judge). Co. Litt. 246.

BOOK. A general name given to every literary composition which is printed, but appropriately to a printed composition bound in a volume. See COPYRIGHT.

A manuscript may, under some circumstances, be regarded as a "book;" In re Beecher's Estate, 17 Pa. C. C. R. 161; 8 L. J. Ch. 105.

BOOK-LAND. In English Law. Land, also called charter-land, which was held by deed under certain rents and fee services, and differed in nothing from free socage land. 2 Bla. Com. 90. See 2 Spelman, English Works 233, tit. Of Ancient Deeds and Charters; Boc-LAND.

Land held by book, by a royal and ecclesiastical privilegium. Maitland, Domesday and Beyond 257. The church introduced the custom of conveying land by written documents. The "book" or written charter was ecclesiastical in its origin. It was used by the king, the church or very great men. The practice never became common. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 14, 60.

BOOK OF ACCOUNT. See ORIGINAL ENTRY, BOOKS OF.

BOOK OF ACTS. The records of a surrogate's court.

BOOK OF ADJOURNAL. In Scotch Law. The records of the court of justiciary.

BOOK OF RATES. An account or enumeration of the duties or tariffs authorized by parliament. 1 Bla. Com. 316.

BOOK OF RESPONSES. In Scotch Law. An account which the director of the Chancery keeps particularly to note a seizure when he gives an order to the sheriff in that part to give it to an heir whose service has been returned to him. Wharton, Lex.

BOOKS OF ORIGINAL ENTRIES. See ORIGINAL ENTRY, BOOKS OF.

BOOKS OF SCIENCE. Scientific books, even of received authority, are not admissible in evidence before a jury; 5 C. & P. 73; Com. v. Sturtivant, 117 Mass. 122, 19 Am. Rep. 401; Harris v. R. Co., 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 18; 2 Carl. 617; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 440, a; except to contradict an expert who bases his opinion upon them; City of Bloomington v. Shrock, 110 Ill. 219, 51 Am. Rep. 678; standard medical works with explanation of technicalities are admissible; Carter v. State, 2 Ind. 617; Stoudenmeir v. Williamson, 29 Ala. 558. Counsel may read such books to the jury in their argument; State v. Hoyt, 46 Conn. 330 (two judges dissenting); contra, Com. v. Wilson, 1 Gray (Mass.) 337; Ordway v. Haynes, 50 N. H. 159; People v. Anderson, 44 Cal. 65; Gale v. Rector, 5 Ill. App. 481. In Wade v. De Witt, 20 Tex. 398 and Luning v. State, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 178, it was held that the admission of such evidence was in the discretion of the court. See 26 Am. Law Rev. 390; Wade v. De Witt, 20 Tex. 398; Washburn v. Cuddihy, 8 Gray (Mass.) 430; Gallagher v. Ry. Co., 67 Cal. 13, 6 Pac. 869, 51 Am. Rep. 680, n.

The law of foreign countries may be proved by printed books of statutes, reports, and text writers, as well as by the sworn testimony of experts; so held, in a learned opinion by Lowell, J., in the U. S. C. C. The Pawashick, 2 Low. 142, Fed. Cas. No. 10,851.

See Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Telegraph Co., 44 Hun (N. Y.) 400; Bollinger v. Gallagher, 163 Pa. 245, 29 Atl. 751, 43 Am. St. Rep. 791; contra, but without authority, Dickerson v. Matheson, 50 Fed. 73. A scientific witness may testify to the written foreign law, with or without the text of the law before him; 11 Cl. & F. 85, 114; 8 Q. B. 208. It has been said that foreign law must always be proved by an expert; 1 Greenl. Ev. 486, 488; but see Westl. Pr. Int. Law (3d ed.) § 356; but the court may in its discretion require the printed book of law to be produced in order to corroborate the witness; Pierce v. Indseth, 106 U. S. 546, 1 Sup. Ct. 418, 27 L. Ed. 254.

See FOREIGN LAW; EXPERTS.

BOOKS, PRODUCTION OF. See PRODUCTION OF BOOKS AND DOCUMENTS.

BOOM. An enclosure formed upon the surface of a stream or other body of water, by means of spars, for the purpose of collecting or storing logs or timber. 10 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 399. See LOGS.

BOOM COMPANY. A company formed for the purpose of improving streams for the floating of logs, by means of booms and other contrivances, and for the purpose of running, driving, booming, and rafting logs. 10 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 399; A. & E. Encyc.

BOON-DAYS. Certain days in the year on which copyhold tenants were bound to perform certain services for the lord. Called, also, due-days. Whishaw.

BOOTY. The capture of personal property by a public enemy on land, in contradistinction to prize, which is a capture of such property by such an enemy on the sea.

After booty has been in complete possession of the enemy for twenty-four hours, it becomes absolutely his, without any right of postliminy in favor of the original owner, particularly when it has passed bona fide into the hands of a neutral; 1 Kent 110. The right to booty belongs to the sovereign; but sometimes the right of the sovereign, or of the public, is transferred to the soldiers, to encourage them; Pothier, Droit de Propriété, p. 1, c. 2, a. 1, § 2; 2 Burl. Nat. & Pol. Law, pt. 4, c. 7, n. 12.

BORDAGE. A species of base tenure by which bordlands were held. The tenants were called bordarii. These bordarii would seem to have been those tenants of a less servile condition, who had a cottage and land assigned to them on condition of supplying their lord with poultry, eggs, and such small matters for his table. Whishaw; Cowell.

BORDEREAU. In French law, a detailed statement of account; a summary of an instrument.

BORDLANDS. The demesnes which the lords keep in their hands for the maintenance of their board or table. Cowell.

BORDLODE. The rent or quantity of food which the bordarii paid for their lands. Cowell.

BORG (Sax.). Suretyship.

Borgbriche (violation of a pledge or suretyship) was a fine imposed on the borg for property stolen within its limits.

A tithing in which each one became a surety for the others for their good behavior. Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell; 1 Bla. Com. 115.

BORN. It is now settled according to the dictates of common sense and humanity, that a child en ventre sa mère for all purposes for his own benefit, is considered as absolutely born; Swift v. Duffield, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 40.

If an infant is born dead or at such an early stage of pregnancy as to be unable to live, it is to be considered as never born; Marsellis v. Thalhimier, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 35.

See BIRTH; EN VENTRE SA MÈRE.

BOROUGH. A town; a town of note or importance. Cowell. An ancient town. Littleton § 164. A town which sends burgesses to parliament, whether corporate or not. 1 Bla. Com. 115; Whishaw.

A corporate town that is not a city. 1 M. & G. 1; Cowell. In its more modern English acceptation, it denotes a town or city organized for purposes of government. 3 Steph. Com. (11th ed.) 33. See TOWN.

It is impossible to reconcile the meanings of this word given by the various authors cited, except upon the supposition of a change of requirements necessary to constitute a borough at different periods. The only essential circumstance which underlies all the meanings given would seem to be that of a number of citizens bound together for purposes of joint action, varying in the different boroughs, but being either for representation or for municipal government.

Many causes, in no two cases quite alike, went to make up the peculiar community which the 13th Century recognized as a borough. The borough community, though a different variety, is not a different genus from that of the other communities with which England of the early Middle Ages was peopled; 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 257. See BURH; Brit. Borough Charters 1042-1216, by Bolland; Bateson, Borough Customs.

In American Law. In Pennsylvania, the term denotes a political division, organized for municipal purposes; and the same is true of Connecticut and New Jersey. Sav. Bor. L. 4; Southport v. Ogden, 23 Conn. 128; see also Brown v. State, 18 Ohio St. 496; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 41, n.

In Scotch Law. A corporation erected by charter from the crown. Bell, Dict.

BOROUGH COURTS. In English Law. Courts of limited jurisdiction held in particular districts by prescription, charter, or act of parliament, for the prosecution of petty suits. 19 Geo. III. c. 70; 3 Will. IV. c. 74; 3 Bla. Com. 80. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

BOROUGH ENGLISH. A custom prevalent in some parts of England, by which the youngest son inherits the estate in preference to his older brothers. 1 Bla. Com. 75.

The custom is said by Blackstone to have been derived from the Saxons, and to have been so called in distinction from the Norman rule of descent; 2 Bla. Com. 83. A reason for the custom is found in the fact that the elder children were usually provided for during the life of the parent as they grew up, and removed, while the younger son usually remained. See, also, Bacon, Abr.; Comyns, Dig. Borough English; Termes de la Ley; Cowell. The custom applies to socage lands; 2 Bla. Com. 83. See BURGAGE.

BORROW. The word is often used in the sense of returning the thing borrowed in specie, as to borrow a book, or any other thing to be returned again. But it is evident where money is borrowed the identical money loaned is not to be returned, because if this is so, the borrower would derive no benefit from the loan. In a broad sense it means a contract for the use of money. State v. School Dist. No. 24, 13 Neb. 88, 12 N. W. 812; Kent v. Min. Co., 78 N. Y. 177.

BORROWER. He to whom a thing is lent at his request.

In general he has the right to use the thing borrowed, himself, during the time and for the purpose intended between the parties. He is bound to take extraordinary care of the thing borrowed; to use it according to the intention of the lender; to restore it in proper condition at the proper time; Story, Bailm. § 268; Edw. Bailm. 135; 2 Kent 446. See BAILMENT.

BOSCAGE. That food which wood and trees yield to cattle.

To be quit of boscage is to be discharged of paying any duty of wind-fall wood in forest; Whishaw; Manwood, For. Laws.

BOSCUS. Wood growing; wood; both high wood or trees, and underwood or coppice. The high wood is properly called saltus. Spelman, Gloss.; Co. Litt. 5 a.

BOTE, BOT. A recompense or compensation. The common word to boot comes from this word. Cowell. The term is applied as well to making repairs in houses, bridges, etc., as to making a recompense for slaying a man or stealing property. House bote, materials which may be taken to repair a house; hedge bote, to repair hedges; brig bote, to repair bridges; man bote, compensation to be paid by a murderer. It was this system of bot and wer, resting upon blood-feud and upon outlawry, which was the ground work of the Anglo-Saxon criminal law; 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 36.

Bote is known to the English law also under the name of Estover; 1 Washb. R. P. *99; 2 Bla. Com. 35. The tenant for life was entitled to take reasonable "botes" and "estovers," without committing waste. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 105.

BOTTOMRY. A contract in the nature of a mortgage, by which the owner of a ship, or the master, as his agent, borrows money for the use of the ship, and for a specified voyage, or for a definite period, pledges the ship (or the keel or bottom of the ship, pars pro toto) as a security for its repayment, with maritime or extraordinary interest on account of the marine risks to be borne by the lender; it being stipulated that if the ship be lost in the course of the specified voyage, or during the limited time by any of the perils enumerated in the contract, the lender shall also lose his money. 2 Hagg. Adm. 48; 2 Sumn. 157. See Davies & Co. v. Soelberg, 24 Wash. 308, 64 Pac. 540.

Bottomry differs materially from an ordinary loan. Upon a simple loan the money is wholly at the risk of the borrower, and must be repaid at all events. But in bottomry, the money, to the extent of the enumerated perils, is at the risk of the lender during the voyage on which it is loaned, or for the period specified. Upon an ordinary loan only the usual legal rate of interest can be reserved; but upon bottomry and respondentia loans any rate of interest, not grossly extortionate, which may be agreed upon, may be legally contracted for.

When the loan is not made upon the ship, but on the goods laden on board and which are to be sold or exchanged in the course of the voyage, the borrower's personal responsibility is deemed the principal security for the performance of the contract, which is therefore called respondentia, which see. And in a loan upon respondentia the lender must be paid his principal and interest though the ship perish, provided the goods are saved. In most other respects the contracts of bottomry and of respondentia stand substantially upon the same footing. See further, 10 Jur. 845; 4 Thornt. 285, 512; 2 W. Rob. Adm. 83-85; Thompson v. Perkins, 3 Mas. 225, Fed. Cas. No. 13,972.

Bottomry bonds may be given by a master appointed by the charterers of the ship, by masters necessarily substituted or appointed abroad, or by the mate who has become master, as hæres necessarius, on the death of the appointed master. 1 Dod. 278; 3 Hagg. Adm. 18; The Fortitude, 3 Sumn. 246, Fed. Cas. No. 4,953. But while in a port in which the owners, or one of them, or a recognized agent of the owners, reside, the master, as such, has no authority to make contracts affecting the ship, and a bottomry bond executed under such circumstances is void; Lavinia v. Barclay, 1 Wash. C. C. 49, Fed. Cas. No. 8,125; 22 Eng. L. & Eq. 623. Unless, it has been held in an English case, he has no means of communicating with the owners; 1 Dod. 273. See 7 Moore's P. C. C. 398. The master has authority to hypothecate the vessel only in a foreign port; but in the jurisprudence of the United States all maritime ports, other than those of the state where the vessel belongs, are foreign to the vessel; Burke v. Rich, 1 Cliff. 308, Fed. Cas. No. 2,161; The William & Emmeline, 1 Blatch. & H. 66, Fed. Cas. No. 17,687; The Hilarity, 1 Blatch. & H. 90, Fed. Cas. No. 6,480.

The owner of the vessel may borrow upon bottomry in the vessel's home port, and whether she is in port or at sea; and it is not necessary to the validity of a bond made by the owner that the money borrowed should be advanced for the necessities of the vessel or her voyage; The Draco, 2

Sumn. 157, Fed. Cas. No. 4,057; The Mary, 1 Paine, 671, Fed. Cas. No. 9,187; 2 Dods. Ad. R. 461. But it may well be doubted, whether when money is thus borrowed by the owner for purposes other than necessities or uses of the ship, and a bottomry bond in the usual form is given, a court of admiralty has jurisdiction to enforce the lien; Bee 348. As a contract made and to be performed on land, and having no necessary connection with the business of navigation, it is probable that it would not now be deemed a maritime contract, but would take effect and be enforced as a common-law mortgage. See Hurry v. John & Alice, 1 Wash. C. C. 293, Fed. Cas. No. 6,923; Shrewsbury v. Two Friends, Bee, 433, Fed. Cas. No. 12,819; 1 Swab. 269. But see The Mary, 1 Paine 671, Fed. Cas. No. 9,187; Rucher v. Conyngham, 2 Pet. Adm. 295, Fed. Cas. No. 12,106.

If the bond be executed by the master of the vessel, it will be upheld and enforced only upon proof that there was a necessity for the loan, and also for pledging the credit of the ship; as the authority of the master to borrow money on the credit of the vessel rests upon the necessity of the case, and only exists under such circumstances of necessity as would induce a prudent owner to hypothecate his ship to raise money for her use; 3 Hagg. Adm. 66, 74; The Fortitude, 3 Sumn. 228, Fed. Cas. No. 4,953; The Aurora, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 96, 4 L. Ed. 45; The Mary, 1 Paine, 671, Fed. Cas. No. 9,187; Tunno v. The Mary, Bee, 120, Fed. Cas. No. 14,237. His authority is not confined, however, to such repairs and supplies as are absolutely and indispensably necessary, but includes also all such as are reasonably fit and proper for the ship and the voyage; The Lulu, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 192, 19 L. Ed. 906; The Emily Souder, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 666, 21 L. Ed. 683.

If the master could have obtained the necessary supplies or funds on the personal credit of himself or of his owner, and this fact was known to the lender, the bond will be held invalid; The Fortitude, 3 Sumn. 257, Fed. Cas. No. 4,953. And if the master borrows on bottomry without apparent necessity, or when the owner is known to be accessible enough to be consulted upon the emergency, the bond is void, and the lender can look only to the personal responsibility of the master; 3 W. Rob. Adm. 243, 265. For the fact that the advances were necessary, and were made on the security of the vessel, is not, in any instance, to be presumed; Walden v. Chamberlain, 3 Wash. C. C. 290, Fed. Cas. No. 17,055. And moneys advanced to the master without inquiry as to the necessity of the advance, or seeing to the proper application, have been disallowed; 33 Eng. L. & Eq. 602. It may be given after the advances have been made, in pursuance of a prior agreement; The Virgin v. Vyfhuus, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 538, 8 L. Ed. 1,036. If given for a larger sum than the actual advances, in fraud of the owners or underwriters, it vitiates the bond and avoids the bottomry lien even for the sum actually advanced; Carrington v. The Ann C. Pratt, 18 How. (U. S.) 63, 15 L. Ed. 267; The Ann C. Pratt, 1 Curt. C. C. 341, Fed. Cas. No. 409.

The contract of bottomry is usually in form a bond (termed a bottomry bond) conditioned for the repayment of the money lent, with the interest agreed upon, if the ship safely accomplishes the specified voyage or completes in safety the period limited by the contract; The Draco, 2 Sumn. 157, Fed. Cas. No. 4,057. See The Lykus, 36 Fed. 919. Sometimes it is in that of a bill of sale, and sometimes in a different shape; but it should always specify the principal lent and the rate of maritime interest agreed upon; the names of the lender and borrower; the names of the vessel and of her master; the subject on which the loan is effected, whether of the ship alone, or of the ship and freight; whether the loan is for an entire or specific voyage or for a limited period, and for what voyage or for what space of time; the risks the lender is contented to bear; and the period of repayment. Where the master of a ship in a foreign port gives a draft on the owners for money advanced for wages and supplies, it was held to be an abbreviated form of bottomry; Hanschell v. Swan, 23 Misc. 304, 51 N. Y. Supp. 42. It is negotiable; 5 C. Rob. Adm. 102. Where the bond covers "the vessel, her tackle, apparel, furniture, and freight as per charter-party," demurrage previously earned is not freight; Brett v. Van Praag, 157 Mass. 132, 31 N. E. 761. It cannot be given in connection with personal security by the owner of the vessel to pay the debt regardless of the return of the vessel to port; Theo. H. Davies & Co. v. Soelberg, 24 Wash. 308, 64 Pac. 540.

In case a highly extortionate or wholly unjustifiable rate of interest be stipulated for in a bottomry bond, courts of admiralty will enforce the bond for only the amount fairly due, and will not allow the lender to recover an unconscionable rate of interest. But in mitigating an exorbitant rate of interest they will proceed with great caution. For the course pursued where the amount of interest was accidentally omitted, see 1 Swab. 240. Fraud will induce a court of equity to set aside a bottomry bond, in England; 8 Sim. 358; 3 M. & C. 451, 453, n.

Where the express contract of bottomry is void for fraud, no recovery can be had, on the ground of an implied contract and lien of advances actually made; The Ann C. Pratt, 1 Curt. C. C. 340, Fed. Cas. No. 409; Carrington v. The Ann C. Pratt, 18 How. (U. S.) 63, 15 L. Ed. 267. But a bottomry bond may be good in part and bad in part; The Packet, 3 Mas. 255, Fed. Cas. No. 10,654; Furniss v. The Magoun, Olc. 55, Fed. Cas. No. 5,163. And it has been held in England that fraud of the owner or mortgagor of a vessel, which might render the voyage illegal, does not invalidate a bottomry bond to a bona fide lender; L. R. 1 Adm. & Ec. 13.

Not only the ship, her tackle, apparel, and furniture (and the freight, if specifically pledged), are liable for the debt in case the voyage or period is completed in safety, but the borrower is also, in that event, personally responsible. See 2 Bla. Com. 457; Brett v. Van Praag, 157 Mass. 132, 31 N. E. 761. It binds not only the ship but her entire earnings, as against prior bottomries, mortgages and other loans to the owner or master; The Anastasia, Fed. Cas. No. 347. But only, it would seem, in cases in which such responsibility has been especially made a condition of the bond; Kelly v. Cushing, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 269.

The borrower on bottomry is affected by the doctrines of seaworthiness and deviation; 3 Kent 360; and if, before or after the risk on the bottomry bond has commenced, the voyage or adventure is voluntarily broken up by the borrower, in any manner whatsoever, whether by a voluntary abandonment of the voyage or adventure, or by a deviation or otherwise, the maritime risks terminate, and the bond becomes presently payable; The Draco, 2 Sumn. 157, Fed. Cas. No. 4,057; 3 Kent 360. But maritime interest is not recoverable if the risk has not commenced.

But in England and America the established doctrine is that the owners are not personally liable, except to the extent of the fund pledged which has come into their hands; The Virgin v. Vyfhius, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 538, 554, 8 L. Ed. 1036; 1 Hagg. Adm. 1, 13. If the ship or cargo be lost, not by the enumerated perils of the sea, but by the fraud or fault of the borrower or master, the hypothecation bond is forfeited and must be paid.

The risks assumed by the lender are usually such as are enumerated in the ordinary policies of marine insurance. If the ship be wholly lost in consequence of these risks, the lender, as before stated, loses his money; but the doctrine of constructive total loss does not apply to bottomry contracts; 1 Maule & S. 30; Pope v. Nickerson, 3 Sto. 465, Fed. Cas. No. 11,274. See 13 C. B. 442.

It is usual in bottomry bonds to provide that, in case of damage to the ship (not amounting to a total loss) by any of the enumerated perils, the lender shall bear his proportion of the loss, viz.: an amount which will bear the same proportion to the whole damage that the amount lent bears to the whole value of the vessel prior to the damage. Unless the bond contains an express stipulation to that effect, the lender is not entitled to take possession of the ship pledged, even when the debt becomes due; but he may enforce payment of the debt by a proceeding in rem, in the admiralty, against the ship; under which she may be arrested, and, in pursuance of a decree of the court, ultimately sold for the payment of the amount due. And this is the ordinary and appropriate remedy of the lender upon bottomry; though he has also, as a general rule, his remedy by action of covenant or debt at common law upon the bond; Tyl. Mar. Loans 782. It was held in Mississippi that state legislatures have no authority to create maritime liens, or confer jurisdiction on state courts to enforce such liens by proceedings in rem. Such jurisdiction is exclusively in the courts of admiralty of the United States; Murphey v. Trade Co., 49 Ala. 436; The Belfast, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 624, 19 L. Ed. 266.

In entering a decree in admiralty upon a bottomry bond, the true rule is to consider the sum lent and the maritime interest as the principal, and to allow common interest on that sum from the time such principal became due; The Packet, 3 Mas. 255, Fed. Cas. No. 10,654. Where money is necessarily taken up on bottomry to defray the expenses of repairing a partial loss, against which the vessel is insured, the underwriter (although he has nothing to do with bottomry bond) is liable to pay his share of the extra expense of obtaining the money, in that mode, for the payment of such expenses; Braalle v. Insurance Co., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 378, 9 L. Ed. 1123.

The lien or privilege of a bottomry bond holder, like all other maritime liens, has, ordinarily, preference of all prior and subsequent common-law and statutory liens, and binds all prior interests centering in the ship; Blaine v. The Charles Carter, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 328, 2 L. Ed. 636. It holds good (if reasonable diligence be exercised in enforcing it) as against subsequent purchasers and common-law incumbrancers; but the lien of a bottomry bond is not indelible, and, like other admiralty liens, may be lost by unreasonable delay in asserting it, if the rights of purchasers or incumbrancers have intervened; The St. Jago De Cuba, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 409, 6 L. Ed. 122; 2 W. & M. 48; 1 Swab. 269; 1 Cliff. 308; 5 Rob. Adm. 94. The lien extends to the fund recoverable for the ship's tortious destruction; Miller v. O'Brien, 59 Fed. 621. The rules under which courts of admiralty marshal assets claimed to be applicable to the payment of bottomry and other maritime liens and of common-law and statutory liens, will be more properly and fully considered in the article Maritime Liens, which see. But it is proper here to state that, as between the holders of two bottomry bonds upon the same vessel in respect to different voyages, the later one, as a general rule, is entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of the vessel; 1 Dod. 201; Furniss v. The Magoun, Olc. 55, Fed. Cas. No. 5,163.

Seamen have a lien, prior to that of the holder of the bottomry bond, for their wages for the voyage upon which the bottomry is founded, or any subsequent voyage; but the owners are also personally liable for such wages, and if the bottomry-bond holder is compelled to discharge the seamen's lien, he has a resulting right to compensation over against the owners, and has been held to have a lien upon the proceeds of the ship for his reimbursement; The Virgin v. Vyfhuis, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 538, 8 L. Ed. 1036; 1 Hagg. Adm. 62. And see 1 Swab. 261; 1 Dod. 40; Blaine v. The Charles Carter, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 328, 2 L. Ed. 636.

Under the laws of the United States, bottomry bonds are only quasi negotiable, and except in cases subject to the principle of equitable estoppel, the indorsee takes only the payee's right; The Serapis, 37 Fed. 436.

The act of congress of July 29, 1850, declaring bills of sale, mortgages, hypothecations, and conveyances of vessels invalid against persons other than the grantor or mortgagor, his heirs and devisees, not having actual notice thereof, unless recorded in the office of the collector of the customs where such vessel is registered or enrolled, expressly provided that the lien by bottomry on any vessel, created during her voyage by a loan of money or materials necessary to repair or enable such vessel to prosecute a voyage, shall not lose its priority or be in any way affected by the provisions of that act.

Contracts of bottomry and respondentia are so different in different countries that when disputes arise they are to be decided by the words used in the contract rather than by principles of general commercial law; O'Brien v. Miller, 168 U. S. 287, 18 Sup. Ct. 140, 42 L. Ed. 469.

Where a bottomry bond of an English vessel was executed in New Orleans and the charter provided she should be governed by American law, the liability was according to law of United States; The Wyandotte, 136 Fed. 470; affirmed in The Wyandotte, 145 Fed. 321, 75 C. C. A. 117.

BOUGHT NOTE. A written memorandum of a sale, delivered, by the broker who effects the sale, to the vendee. Story, Ag. § 28; 11 Ad. & E. 589; 8 M. & W. 834.

Bought and sold notes are made out usually at the same time, the former being delivered to the vendee, the latter to the vendor. When the broker has not exceeded his authority, both parties are bound thereby; 1 C. & P. 388; 5 B. & C. 436; 1 Bell, Com. (4th ed.) 347, 477. Where the same broker acts for both parties, the notes must correspond; 5 B. & C. 436; 17 Q. B. 103; Suydam v. Clark, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 133. The broker, as to this part of the transaction, is agent for both parties; 2 H. & N. 210; Coddington v. Goddard, 16 Gray (Mass.) 442. Whether a memorandum in the broker's books will cure a disagreement, see 17 Q. B. 115; 1 H. & N. 484; but it is said to be the better opinion that the signed entry in the broker's book constitutes the real contract between the parties; 1 C. P. D. 777; 9 M. & W. 802; but it may be shown that the entry was in excess of the broker's authority; 4 L. R. Ir. 94; that the bought and sold notes do not constitute the contract, see 17 Q. B. 115. Where there is a variance between the bought and sold notes, and no entry of the transaction, there is no contract; 17 Q. B. 115. A bought note will take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, if there is no variance; 16 C. B. N. S. 11. See a full discussion in Benj. Sales § 276; Tiedman, Sales § 79.

BOUND BAILIFF. A sheriff's officer, who serves writs and makes arrests. He is so called because bound to the sheriff for the due execution of his office. 1 Bla. Com. 345.

BOUNDARY. Any separation, natural or artificial, which marks the confines or line of two contiguous estates. 3 Toullier, n. 171.

The term is applied to include the objects placed or existing at the angles of the bounding lines, as well as those which extend along the lines of separation.

A natural boundary is a natural object remaining where it was placed by nature.

A river or stream is a natural boundary, and the centre line of the stream is the line; Jackson v. Louw, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 252; People v. Seymour, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 579; Haye's Ex'r v. Bowman, 1 Rand. (Va.) 417; Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. L. 1, 10 Am. Dec. 356; Dunlap v. Stetson, 4 Mas. 349, Fed. Cas. No. 4,164; State v. Town of Gilmanton, 9 N. H. 461; 1 Tayl. 136; Morgan v. Reading, 3 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 366; Browne v. Kennedy, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 195, 9 Am. Dec. 503; Hammond v. Ridgely's Lessee, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 245, 9 Am. Dec. 522; MacDonald v. Morrill, 154 Mass. 270, 28 N. E. 259. Where a natural pond is the boundary, the line is the natural shore; but where an artificial pond, the thread of the stream; Waterman v. Johnson, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 261; State v. Town of Gilmanton, 9 N. H. 461; Mansur v. Blake, 62 Me. 38; Kirkpatrick v. Ice Co., 45 Mo. App. 335; Gouverneur v. Ice Co., 134 N. Y. 355, 31 N. E. 865, 18 L. R. A. 695, 30 Am. St. Rep. 669; Noyes v. Collins, 92 Ia. 566, 61 N. W. 250, 26 L. R. A. 609, 54 Am. St. Rep. 571; where a meandered lake, the middle thereof; Olson v. Huntamer, 6 S. D. 364, 61 N. W. 479; where the seashore, the line is at low water mark; Doane v. Willcutt, 5 Gray (Mass.) 335, 66 Am. Dec. 369; U. S. v. Pacheco, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 587, 17 L. Ed. 865; Oakes v. De Lancey, 133 N. Y. 227, 30 N. E. 974, 28 Am. St. Rep. 628. So where one of the great lakes is the boundary; Sloan v. Biemiller, 34 Ohio St. 492; or a navigable lake; see Village of Wayzata v. Ry. Co., 50 Minn. 438, 52 N. W. 913. A grant of land bounded by navigable tide-water, carries no title to land below high water mark; De Lancey v. Piepgras, 63 Hun 169, 17 N. Y. Supp. 681.

Where land is bounded by the sea, and the latter suddenly recedes, leaving considerable space uncovered, this new land, under the royal prerogative, becomes the property of the king. But if the dereliction be gradual, and by imperceptible degrees, then the land gained belongs to the adjacent owner, for de minimis non curat lex; 3 Barn. & C. 91, and cases cited. Similarly, where a stream forming the boundary between two owners gradually changes its course, it continues to mark the line; but if the change be sudden and immediate, the boundary remains in the old channel; 2 Bla. Com. 262; Collins v. State, 3 Tex. App. 323, 30 Am. Rep. 142; Niehaus v. Shepherd, 26 Ohio St. 40; Holbrook v. Moore, 4 Neb. 437; Missouri v. Kentucky, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 395, 20 L. Ed. 116.

An artificial boundary is one erected by man.

The ownership, in case of such boundaries, must, of course, turn mainly upon circumstances peculiar to each case; 5 Taunt. 20; 8 B. & C. 259; generally extending to the centre; Child v. Starr, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 369; Warner v. Southworth, 6 Conn. 471. A tree standing directly on the line is the joint property of both proprietors; Griffin v. Bixby, 12 N. H. 454, 37 Am. Dec. 225; otherwise, where it only stands so near that the roots penetrate; 1 M. & M. 112; 2 Rolle 141. Land bounded on a highway extends to the centre-line, though a private street; Newhall v. Ireson, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 595, 54 Am. Dec. 790; Paul v. Carver, 26 Pa. 223, 67 Am. Dec. 413; Railroad v. Bingham, 87 Tenn. 522, 11 S. W. 705; Schneider v. Jacob, 86 Ky. 101, 5 S. W. 350; Halloway v. Southmayd, 64 Hun 632, 18 N. Y. Supp. 707; unless the description excludes the highway; Jackson v. Hathaway, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 454, 8 Am. Dec. 263; Town of Chatham v. Brainerd, 11 Conn. 60; Codman v. Evans, 1 Allen (Mass.) 443; 3 Washb. R. P. *635.

Boundaries are frequently denoted by monuments fixed at the angles. In such case the connecting lines are always presumed to be straight, unless described to be otherwise; Allen v. Kingsbury, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 235; Baker v. Talbott, 6 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 179; Burrows v. Vandevier, 3 Ohio, 382; Nelson v. Hall, 1 McLean 519, Fed. Cas. No. 10,107; 2 Washb. R. P. *632. A practical surveyor may testify whether, in his opinion, certain marks on trees, piles of stones, or other marks on the ground were intended as monuments of boundaries; Northumberland Coal Co. v. Clement, 10 W. N. C. (Pa.) 321.

The following is the order of importance in boundaries: first, the highest regard is had to natural boundaries; Redmond v. Stepp, 100 N. C. 212, 6 S. E. 727; Walrod v. Flanigan, 75 Ia. 365, 39 N. W. 645; Morse

r. Rollins, 121 Pa. 537, 15 Atl. 645; Hughes v. Cawthorn, 35 Fed. 248; Wood v. Ramsey, 71 Md. 9, 17 Atl. 563; McAninch v. Freeman, 69 Tex. 445, 4 S. W. 369; second, to lines actually run and corners marked at the time of the grant; third, if the lines and courses of an adjoining tract are called for, the lines will be extended, if they are sufficiently established, and no other departure from the deed is required, preference being given to marked lines; fourth, to courses and distances; Yanish v. Tarbox, 49 Minn. 268, 51 N. W. 1051.

Courses and distances give way to monuments, but they must be of a permanent character, and the place where they are at the time of the conveyance must be satisfactorily located; Brown v. Morrill, 91 Mich. 29, 51 N. W. 700; Whitehead v. Ragan, 106 Mo. 231, 17 S. W. 307. But this is a mere rule of construction; Green v. Horn, 207 N. Y. 489, 101 N. E. 430. When a description in a deed by metes and bounds conflicts with a description by reference to plats, the former governs; Waldin v. Smith, 76 Ia. 652, 39 N. W. 82.

Parol evidence is often admissible to identify and ascertain the locality of monuments called for by a description; Waterman v. Johnson, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 267; Frost v. Spaulding, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 445, 31 Am. Dec. 150; and where the description is ambiguous, the practical construction given by the parties may be shown; Choate v. Burnham, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 274. Common reputation may be admitted to identify monuments, especially if of a public or quasi-public nature; Griffin v. Graham, 8 N. C. 116, 9 Am. Dec. 619; Harmer v. Morris, 1 McLean, 45, Fed. Cas. No. 6,076; Nelson v. Hall, 1 McLean, 518, Fed. Cas. No. 10,107; Whitney v. Smith, 10 N. H. 43; Cravenson v. Meriwether, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 158; Beaty v. Hudson, 9 Dana (Ky.) 322; Smith v. Shackleford, 9 Dana (Ky.) 465; Boardman v. Reed, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 341, 8 L. Ed. 415; Harriman v. Brown, 8 Leigh (Va.) 697; McCoy's Lessee v. Galloway, 3 Ohio, 282, 17 Am. Dec. 591. On a conflict of boundaries between deeds from the same person, the one that was first executed controls; Flynn v. Sparks, 11 S. W. 206, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 960. Where there are two conflicting monuments, and one corresponds with the courses and distances, that one should be taken and the other rejected as surplusage; Zelbold v. Foster, 118 Mo. 349, 24 S. W. 155.

The determination of the boundaries of the states is placed by the constitution in the supreme court of the United States; Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 657, 9 L. Ed. 1233; id., 4 How. (U. S.) 591, 11 L. Ed. 1116; Virginia v. West Virginia, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 39, 20 L. Ed. 67. This position was taken by that court against the opinion of Chief Justice Taney, who held that a controversy between states, or between individuals, in relation to the boundaries of a state, falls within the province of the court where the suit is brought to try a right of property in the soil, or any other right which is properly the subject of judicial cognizance and decision; but not a contest for rights of sovereignty and jurisdiction between states over any particular territory. This he held to be a political question; Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 752, 9 L. Ed. 1233. All the cases of boundary disputes between states which arose prior to the constitution and were tried under the articles of confederation, by courts specially constituted by Congress, are collected in 131 U. S. App. II.

Long acquiescence in the assertion of a particular boundary between states and the exercise of sovereignty within it, should be accepted as conclusive; Louisiana v. Mississippi, 202 U. S. 1, 26 Sup. Ct. 571, 50 L. Ed. 934.

See LINE.

As to state boundaries, when they are rivers, see AVULSION; RIVER.

BOUNDING OR ABUTTING. See ABUT.

BOUNTY. An additional benefit conferred upon, or a compensation paid to, a class of persons.

It differs from a reward, which is usually applied to a sum paid for the performance of some specific act to some person or persons. It may or may not be part of a contract. Thus, the bounty offered a soldier would seem to be part of the consideration for his services. The bounty paid to fishermen is not a consideration for any contract, however. See Fowler v. Danvers, 8 Allen (Mass.) 80; Eichelberger v. Sifford, 27 Md. 320; Abbe v. Allen, 39 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 481.

A premium offered or given to induce men to enlist into the public service. Abbe v. Allen, 39 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 481.

BOURSE. An exchange. Bourses owe their origin to the Jews. The word originated at Bruges, where merchants gathered at the house of Van der Bruse; or the word is from the three purses (bourses) carved on the gable of the house where the meetings were held. Stock Exchange by Van Antwerp.

BOUWERIE. A farm.

BOUWMAS. A farmer.

BOVATA TERRÆ. As much land as one ox can cultivate. Said by some to be thirteen, by others eighteen, acres in extent. Skene; Spelman, Gloss.; Co. Litt. 5 a.

Bovate is used in expressing a quantity of land and meaning one-eighth of a carucate, i. e. the amount of land which can be ploughed by one ox; generally about fifteen acres. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 57. See CARUCATE. Both terms seem to be French, and not part of the official Latin. Maitl. Domesday and Beyond 395.

BOYCOTT. An organized effort to exclude a person from business relations with others by persuasion, intimidation and other acts which tend to violence, and thereby to coerce him, through fear of resulting injury, to submit to dictation in the management of his affairs. Casey v. Typographical Union, 45 Fed. 135, 12 L. R. A. 193, citing State v. Glidden, 55 Conn. 46, 8 Atl. 890, 3 Am. St. Rep. 23.

In State v. Glidden, 55 Conn. 46, 8 Atl. 890, 3 Am. St. Rep. 23, it was held that to threaten or intimidate a person to compel him against his will to do or abstain from doing any act which he has a legal right to do, is an unlawful conspiracy. See also 15 Q. B. D. 476; 23 id. 598; [1892] A. C. 25; [1893] 1 Q. B. 715; Toledo Ry. Co. v. Penn. Co., 54 Fed. 730, 19 L. R. A. 387; Carew v. Rutherford, 106 Mass. 1, 8 Am. Typographical Union*, 45 Fed. 135, 12 L. R. A. 193, to be a threat. Intimidation and coercion are its essential elements; Gray v. Council, 91 Minn. 171, 97 N. W. 663, 63 L. R. A. 753, 103 Am. St. Rep. 477, 1 Ann. Cas. 172.

On the other hand it is held that a boycott is not unlawful, unless attended by some act in itself illegal; Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis, 54 Minn. 223, 55 N. W. 1119, 21 L. R. A. 337, 40 Am. St. Rep. 319; Longshore Printing & Pub. Co. v. Howell, 26 Or. 527, 38 Pac. 547, 28 L. R. A. 464, 46 Am. St. Rep. 640; that an act lawful in itself is not converted by a bad motive into an unlawful or tortious act; Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1.

A product may be the subject of a boycott; Purvis v. Local No. 500, United Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners, 214 Pa. 348, 63 Atl. 585, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 642, 112 Am. St. Rep. 757, 6 Ann. Cas. 815; and combinations for this purpose both on the part of dealers to compel one in the same business to join their association and of labor unions to force an employer to submit to their terms are usually in the United States held illegal; Purington v. Hinchliff, 219 Ill. 159, 76 N. E. 47, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 824, 109 Am. St. Rep. 322; Purvis v. Local No. 500, United Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners, 214 Pa. 348, 63 Atl. 585, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 642, 112 Am. St. Rep. 757, 6 Ann. Cas. 275, where it was held "a man's business is his property, and to put one in actual fear of its loss or of injury to his business is often no less potent in coercing than fear of violence to his person," citing Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass. 492, 57 N.

In Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, it is said that workmen have an equal right of property in their labor, to dispose of it as they please, limited only by the equal right of the employer to do the same; that as each workman and all of them had a right to refuse to work if his demands were not acceded to, it could be in no sense coercion to put the employer to an election; and because the incidents of the situation made it to his interests to accede to the demand made so that (unless he was willing to assume the resulting loss) he had no real option in the matter, his yielding was no proof of intimidation. It was further said: "In every such case the controlling inquiry is one of means, and these can never be unlawful, if what was in fact done marks an exercise of a right, or a declaration of a purpose to do that which is not of itself unlawful."

In Quinn v. Leatham, [1901] A. C. 495, Allen v. Flood is distinguished, and it is held that a conspiracy to injure, if there be damage, gives rise to civil liability; that an oppressive combination differs widely from an invasion of civil rights by a single person; that if wrongful interference with a man's liberty of action is intended to injure, and in fact damages a third person, such third person has a remedy by an action; and that annoyance and coercion by many may be actionable, where like conduct on the part of one person would not be so. This case approves Temperton v. Russell, [1893] 1 Q. B. 715. In Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S. 274, 28 Sup. Ct. 301, 52 L. Ed. 488, 13 Ann. Cas. 815, a combination to boycott a manufactured product was held to fall within the class of restraints of trade prohibited by the federal anti-trust act.

In Gompers v. Stove & Range Co., 221 U. S. 437, 31 Sup. Ct. 492, 55 L. Ed. 797, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 874, it is said: "Courts differ as to what constitutes a boycott that may be enjoined. All hold that there must be a conspiracy causing irreparable damage to the business or property of the complainant. Some hold that a boycott against the complainant by a combination of persons not immediately connected with him in business may be restrained. Others hold that the secondary boycott can be enjoined where the conspiracy extends not only to injuring the complainant, but secondarily coerces or attempts to coerce his customers to refrain from dealing with him, by threats that unless they do, they themselves will be boycotted. Others hold that no boycott can be enjoined, unless there are acts of physical violence, or intimidation caused by threats of physical violence."

The publication of letters, circulars and printed matter may constitute a means whereby a boycott is unlawfully continued, and their use for such purpose may amount to a violation of the injunction; Reynolds v. Davis, 198 Mass. 300, 84 N. E. 457, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162; Sherry v. Perkins, 147 Mass. 212, 17 N. E. 307, 9 Am. St. Rep. 689; *Brown v. Ed. 171; Scully v. Bird, 209 U. S. 489, 28 Sup. Ct. 597, 52 L. Ed. 899. (These cases are cited in the opinion. Gompers v. Stove & Range Co., 221 U. S. 438, 31 Sup. Ct. 492, 55 L. Ed. 797, 34 L. R. A. [N. S.] 874.)

One who is under no contract relation to another may without question withdraw from business relations with that other. This includes the right to cease to deal not only with the individual who may be pursuing a course deemed by him detrimental, but with all who, by their patronage, aid in the maintenance of the objectionable policies; J. F. Parkinson Co. v. Building Trades Council, 154 Cal. 581, 98 Pac. 1027, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 550, 18 Ann. Cas. 1165, where it was held that if the workmen violated no right of the company by refusing to work for it, they violated none by refusing to work for contractors who used material bought of it. On the other hand, it is held that it is unlawful, in an effort to compel A to yield a legitimate benefit to B, for B to demand that C withdraw his patronage from A under penalty of losing B's services or patronage to which he has no contract right; *Thomas v. The term seems to have been derived from an incident that occurred in Ireland. Captain Boycott, an Englishman, who was agent of Lord Earne and a farmer of Lough Mask, served notices upon the lord's tenants, and they in turn, with the surrounding population, resolved to have nothing to do with him, and, as far as they could prevent it, not to allow any one else to have. His life appeared to be in danger, and he had to claim police protection. His servants fled from him, and the awful sentence of excommunication could hardly have rendered him more helplessly alone for a time. No one would work for him, and no one would supply him with food. He and his wife were compelled to work in their own fields with the shadows of armed constabulary ever at their heels; Justin MacCarthy's "England under Gladstone." See State v. Glidden, 55 Conn. 46, 8 Atl. 890, 3 Am. St. Rep. 23; 18 L. R. Ir. 430.

Combinations, in the nature of boycotts, which have been held to be unlawful conspiracies are: To compel a member of a labor union to pay a fine assessed against him for working in a mill with steam machinery by preventing his obtaining employment; 5 Cox, C. C. 162; to obstruct an employer in the conduct of his business; People v. Petheram, 64 Mich. 252, 31 N. W. 188; 10 Cox, C. C. 592; to coerce an employer to conduct his business with reference to apprentices and delinquent members according to the demand of the union, by injuring his business through notices to customers and material men that dealings with him would be followed by similar measures against them; Moore & Co. v. Bricklayers' Union, 23 Wkly. L. B. (Ohio) 48; to prevent the employment of a granite cutter declared by a labor union to be a "scab"; State v. Stewart, 59 Vt. 273, 9 Atl. 559, 59 Am. Boycotts may be restrained by injunction; Friedman v. Israel, 26 Fed. 803; Casey v. Typographical Union, 45 Fed. 135, 12 L. R. A. 193; a violation of which is punishable as a contempt; U. S. v. Debs, 64 Fed. 724; In re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 15 Sup. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092; when they are found to be unlawful conspiracies; Gray v. Building Trades Council, 91 Minn. 171, 97 N. W. 663, 63 L. R. A. 753, 103 Am. St. Rep. 477, 1 Ann. Cas. 172; Barr v. Trades Council, 53 N. J. Eq. 101, 30 Atl. 881; and the fact that they are such will not prevent such remedy where they threaten irreparable injury to persons or property; Cranford v. Tyrrell, 128 N. Y. 341, 28 N. E. 514. That the ultimate purpose of the combination is to secure benefits to its members rather than to inflict damage on a boycotted business is held to be no justification; Erdman v. Mitchell, 207 Pa. 79, 56 Atl. 327, 63 L. R. A. 534, 99 Am. St. Rep. 783. The court cannot look beyond the immediate injury to the remote result; Purvis v. United Brotherhood, 214 Pa. 348, 63 Atl. 585, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 642, 112 Am. St. Rep. 757, 6 Ann. Cas. 275. In their efforts to better their condition they may inflict more or less damage upon others. But these results should be incidental damage and inconvenience consequent on the operation of general rules, lawful in themselves, rather than those which follow a specific intent and immediate purpose of injury to others in order that good may ultimately come to themselves. The doctrine that the end justifies the means has no place in a condition of society where law prevails; Curran v. Galen, 152 N. Y. 33, 46 N. E. 297, 37 L. R. A. 802, 57 Am. St. Rep. 496; Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass. 492, 57 N. E. 1011, 51 L. R. A. 339, 79 Am. St. Rep. 30, where it was said that the right to be free from molestation must be considered as well as that of bettering a class condition, per O. W. Holmes, Jr., C. J.

On the other hand, where the publication of a libelous circular for the purpose of creating a boycott was sought to be enjoined, it was held that the court cannot, by injunction interfere with the constitutional right freely to speak or write; Marx v. Haas Jeans Clothing Co. v. Watson, 168 Mo. 133, 67 S. W. 391, 56 L. R. A. 951, 90 Am. St. Rep. 440; and for the same offense, an injunction was refused on the ground that the plaintiffs had no property right in the trade of any particular person. In several states there are statutes on the subject, some of them merely declaratory of the common law, and others, more drastic, which extend the doctrine to new acts and circumstances.

BOZERO. In Spanish Law. An advocate; one who pleads the causes of others, either suing or defending. Las Partidas, part. 3, tit. v. l. 1-6.

Called also abogado. Amongst other classes of persons excluded from this office are minors under seventeen, the deaf, the dumb, friars, women, and infamous persons. White, New Rec. 274.

BRANCH. A portion of the descendants of a person, who trace their descent to some common ancestor, who is himself a descendant of such person.

The whole of a genealogy is often called the genealogical tree; and sometimes it is made to take the form of a tree, which is in the first place divided into as many branches as there are children, afterwards into as many branches as there are grandchildren, then great-grandchildren, etc. If, for example, it be desired to form the genealogical tree of Peter's family, Peter will be made the trunk of the tree; if he has had two children, John and James, their names will be written on the first two branches, which will themselves shoot out into as many smaller branches as John and James have children; from these others proceed, till the whole family is represented on the tree. Thus the origin, the application, and the use of the word branch in genealogy will be at once perceived.

BRANDING. An ancient mode of punishment by inflicting a mark on an offender with a hot iron. It is generally disused in civil law, but is a recognized punishment for some military offences.

It is also used with reference to the marking of cattle for the purpose of identification. See ANIMAL.

BRANKS. An instrument of punishment formerly made use of in some parts of England for the correction of scolds, which it was said to do so effectually and so very safely that it was looked upon by Dr. Plotts, in his History of Staffordshire, p. 389, "as much to be preferred to the ducking-stool, which not only endangers the health of the party, but also gives the tongue liberty 'twixt every dip, to neither of which is this liable; it brings such a bridle for the tongue as not only quite deprives them of speech, but brings shame for the transgression and humiliation thereupon before it is taken off."

BRASS KNUCKLES. A weapon worn on the hand for the purposes of offence or defence, so made that in hitting with the fist considerable damage is inflicted.

It is called "brass knuckles" because it was originally made of brass. The term is now used as the name of the weapon without reference to the metal of which it is made; Patterson v. State, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 575.

BREACH. In Contracts. The violation of an obligation, engagement, or duty.

A continuing breach is one where the condition of things constituting a breach continues during a period of time, or where the acts constituting a breach are repeated at brief intervals; F. Moore 242; Holt 178; 2 Ld. Raym. 1125.

The right to rescind a contract for non-performance is a remedy as old as the law of contract itself. When the contract is entire—indivisible—the right is unquestioned. The undertakings on the one side and on the other are dependent, and performance by the one party cannot be enforced by the other without performance or a tender of performance on his own part; Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 188, 6 Sup. Ct. 12, 29 L. Ed. 366. In that case plaintiff agreed to ship 5,000 tons of rails at the rate of about 1,000 tons a month beginning in February, and the whole contract to be shipped before the first of August of the same year. Only 400 tons were shipped in February and 885 in March, and it was held that the failure to fulfill the contract in respect to these first two installments justified the rescission of the whole contract, provided that the defendants distinctly and seasonably asserted their right to rescind; and the fact that the defendants had accepted the shipment of 400 tons in February was no waiver of this right, because it took place without notice or means of knowledge that the stipulated quantity had not been shipped in February. An English case in 1859 allowed rescission on the ground of insufficient delivery of the first installment of an iron contract; 5 H. & N. 19. Where on a year's contract for furnishing coke, payment to be made on the twentieth of each month for the deliveries of the preceding month, it was held that there might be a breach of the contract on the twenty-third of the month, if the sum were still unpaid; Hull Coal & Coke Co. v. Coal & Coke Co., 113 Fed. 256, 51 C. C. A. 213. The supreme court of Michigan has decided, in a contract to deliver wood in installments, that a refusal to pay for the third installment was not such a breach as to excuse the defendant from making further deliveries, on the ground that the defendant's refusal to pay did not evince an intention no longer to be bound by the contract; West v. Bechtel, 125 Mich. 144, 84 N. W. 69, 51 L. R. A. 791. This case is distinguished from Norrington v. Wright, supra, in that the latter was a breach for non-delivery and the Michigan case was a breach for non-payment.

In Iowa it was held that a failure to pay for a shipment of coal within thirty days, as agreed in a contract for the shipment of a certain amount in quantities as ordered, does not go to the whole consideration of the contract, and does not therefore give the right to rescind; Osgood v. Bauder, 75 Ia. 550, 39 N. W. 887, 1 L. R. A. 655; contra, Ross-Meehan Foundry Co. v. Wheel Co., 113 Tenn. 370, 83 S. W. 167, 68 L. R. A. 829, 3 Ann. Cas. 898; and in New Jersey a failure to deliver the first installment of goods on a contract for delivery in installments does not justify a rescission by the buyer; Gerli v. Silk Mfg. Co., 57 N. J. L. 432, 31 Atl. 401, 30 L. R. A. 61, 51 Am. St. Rep. 611. Acts indicating an intention to abandon a contract justify the aggrieved party in rescinding, but mere breach in performance, without repudiation, cannot warrant rescission; 9 C. P. 208; [1900] 2 Ch. 298. Where one party to a contract is guilty of a breach, the other party is at liberty to treat the contract as broken and desist from any further effort on his part to perform. Such an abandonment is not technically a rescission of the contract, but merely an acceptance of the situation which the wrongdoing of the other party has brought about; Anvil Min. Co. v. Humble, 153 U. S. 540, 14 Sup. Ct. 876, 38 L. Ed. 814; Pierce v. R. Co., 173 U. S. 1, 19 Sup. Ct. 335, 43 L. Ed. 591; Roehm v. Horst, 178 U. S. 14, 20 Sup. Ct. 780, 44 L. Ed. 953. It has been held that when a contract is repudiated by one party, and the other party has not elected to treat such a repudiation as a breach, the latter is not excused from continuing to perform on his part; Smith v. Banking Co., 113 Ga. 975, 39 S. E. 410.

Where the agreement is mutual and dependent, and one party fails to perform his part, the other party may treat it as rescinded; South Texas Telephone Co. v. Huntington (Tex.) 121 S. W. 242; and he is not bound to tender performance; Hollerbach & May Contract Co. v. Wilkins, 130 Ky. 51, 112 S. W. 1126. The abandonment of a ship is a renunciation of the contract of affreightment; The Eliza Lines, 199 U. S. 119, 26 Sup. Ct. 8, 50 L. Ed. 115, four judges dissenting. Where one party to a contract refuses, by anticipation, to perform the contract, the other party may consider it a breach and sue immediately; Hochster v. De la Tour, 2 El. & Bl. 678. In Frost v. Knight, 7 Ex. 111, defendant had promised to marry plaintiff as soon as his father should die. While his father was yet alive, he absolutely refused to marry plaintiff; it was held that an action would lie during the father's lifetime. In 17 Q. B. 127, it was held that upon the defendant railroad company giving notice to plaintiff that it would not receive any more of its chairs, it might sue for the breach without tendering the goods. In 16 Q. B. Div. 467, it was held that where one party by anticipation refuses to perform the contract, it entitled the other party, if he pleased, to agree to the contract being put an end to. In Dingley v. Oler, 117 U. S. 502, 6 Sup. Ct. 850, 29 L. Ed. 984, the court considered the cases, but declined to decide whether or not the rule should be maintained as applicable to the class of cases to which the one then before it belonged; and said it has been called in England a "novel doctrine" and has never been applied in that court.

v. Bullock, 59 Fed. 87, 8 C. C. A. 14, and Edward Hines Lumber Co. v. Alley, 73 Fed. 603, 19 C. C. A. 599, followed Hochster v. De la Tour. In Horst v. Roehm, 84 Fed. 569, Dallas, J., was of opinion that the question was an open one, so far as the supreme court was concerned, and followed the ruling of Judge Lowell in Dingley v. Oler, 11 Fed. 372, supported by the two federal cases last above mentioned. He considered that Judge Lowell had answered the argument of the court in Daniels v. Newton, 114 Mass. 530, 19 Am. Rep. 384; and concurred with him in thinking that the cases which follow the English rule are "founded in good sense, and rest on strong grounds of convenience however difficult it may be to reconcile them with the strictest logic."

Wallace, C. J., in Marks v. Van Eeghen, 85 Fed. 853, 30 C. C. A. 208, considered that Dingley v. Oler, 117 U. S. 490, 6 Sup. Ct. 850, 29 L. Ed. 984, was a dictum, and that there was an overwhelming preponderance of adjudication in favor of the doctrine of Hochster v. De la Tour. He cited also Nichols v. Steel Co., 137 N. Y. 471, 33 N. E. 561; Kalkhoff v. Nelson, 60 Minn. 284, 62 N. W. 332; Davis v. School-Furniture Co., 41 W. Va. 717, 24 S. E. 630.

In Roehm v. Horst, 178 U. S. 1, 20 Sup. Ct. 780, 44 L. Ed. 953, 4 Ann. Cas. 406, the court reviewing the English and American cases, held that, upon such breach, the other party may consider himself absolved from any future performance, and either sue immediately, or wait till the time when the act was to be done, still holding the contract as prospectively binding for the exercise of his option.

In The Eliza Lines, 199 U. S. 119, 26 Sup. Ct. 8, 50 L. Ed. 115, 4 Ann. Cas. 406, Holmes, J., said: "A repudiation of a contract, amounting to a breach, warrants the other party in going no further in performance on his side. Roehm v. Horst, 178 U. S. 1, 20 Sup. Ct. 780, 44 L. Ed. 953, 4 Ann. Cas. 406."

The rule adopted in Roehm v. Horst, 178 U. S. 1, 20 Sup. Ct. 780, 44 L. Ed. 953, 4 Ann. Cas. 406, was applied in John A. Roebeling's Sons' Co. v. Fence Co., 130 Ill. 660, 22 N. E. 518; Windmuller v. Pope, 107 N. Y. 674, 14 N. E. 436; id., 12 N. Y. St. Rep. 292; Hocking v. Hamilton, 158 Pa. 107, 27 Atl. 836; McCormick v. Basal, 46 Ia. 235; Davis v. Furniture Co., 41 W. Va. 717, 24 S. E. 630; Remy v. Olds, 88 Cal. 537, 26 Pac. 355; Kurtz v. Frank, 76 Ind. 594, 40 Am. Rep. 275.

The renunciation must be unequivocal and absolute; and must be acted upon by the other parties and must terminate the entire contract; [1900] 2 Ch. 298; John A. Roebeling's Sons' Co. v. Fence Co., 130 Ill. 660, 22 N. E. 518. It does not operate as a rescission of the contract, because one party alone cannot rescind; but the other party may adopt such renunciation with the effect that the contract is at an end, except for the purpose of bringing an action for the damages consequent upon the renunciation; [1910] 2 Ch. 248. The rule in Hochster v. De la Tour was disapproved in Daniels v. Newton, 114 Mass. 530, 19 Am. Rep. 384, and Stanford v. McGill, 6 N. D. 536, 72 N. W. 938, 38 L. R. A. 760, on elaborate consideration. The rejection of the rule in the former case was based upon its inapplicability to commercial paper, but in Reehm v. Horst, 178 U. S. 17, 20 Sup. Ct. 780, 44 L. Ed. 953, it was pointed out that in that case the consideration had passed, there were no mutual obligations, and that such case did not fall within the reason of the rule, citing Nichols v. Steel Co., 137 N. Y. 487, 33 N. E. 561.

See Wald's Anson, Contracts (Williston's ed.) 355.

Where a trust company agrees to make a loan upon a building to be built and later repudiates the agreement, a right of action arises at once and the prospective borrower need not wait until the building is completed; Holt v. Ins. Co., 74 N. J. L. 795, 67 Atl. 118, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 100, 12 Ann. Cas. 1105. In New York it is held that an action will not lie at once where the maker of a draft declares he will not pay it on maturity; Benecke v. Haebler, 38 App. Div. 344, 58 N. Y. Supp. 16; and so where an insurance company decides to limit the amount payable on existing policies; Langan v. Supreme Council, 174 N. Y. 266, 66 N. E. 932; Porter v. Supreme Council, 183 Mass. 326, 67 N. E. 238; contra, O'Neill v. Supreme Council, 70 N. J. L. 410, 57 Atl. 463, 1 Ann. Cas. 422.

In a contract for the purchase of a horse in return for personal services for a specified period, where the buyer refuses to work, the seller may retake the horse; Cleary v. Morrison, 94 Miss. 278, 48 South. 817; where one cancels an order for clothing before it is manufactured, the seller cannot complete the manufacture and sue for the full contract; he is bound to reduce his damages as far as possible; Woolf v. Hamburger, 129 App. Div. 883, 114 N. Y. Supp. 186.

Though a party has waived a breach for which he could have declared a forfeiture, he may still counterclaim damages for such breach; Clark v. West, 193 N. Y. 349, 86 N. E. 1; neither payments on account, nor permitting the contractor to complete the work after the specified time, is a waiver of such damages; Reading Hardware Co. v. City of New York, 129 App. Div. 292, 113 N. Y. Supp. 331; nor taking possession of a building before completion; Mikolajewski v. Pugell, 62 Misc. 449, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1084. But where the defendant has himself repudiated the contract after the delivery of one installment he is barred from setting up the defectiveness of such installment subsequently discovered; 21 T. L. R. 413. Where government officials test and accept a defective dock in ignorance of such defects which if known would have led to a refusal to accept, the government is not precluded from refusing it on subsequent discovery; U. S. v. Walsh, 115 Fed. 697, 52 C. C. A. 419.

An anticipatory breach will operate as a present breach only if accepted and acted upon by the other party, who may disregard it and await the appointed day. If not accepted by the other party, the renunciation may be withdrawn before performance is due, but if not withdrawn it is evidence of a continued intention to that effect. It operates as a continued waiver of all conditions precedent to the liability for performance; Leake, Contract 639.

As to one endeavoring to persuade a third party to break his contract, see INJUNCTION.

In Pleading. That part of the declaration in which the violation of the defendant's contract is stated.

It is usual in assumpsit to introduce the statement of the particular breach, with the allegation that the defendant, contriving and fraudulently intending craftily and subtly to deceive and defraud the plaintiff, neglected and refused to perform, or performed, the particular act, contrary to the previous stipulation.

In debt, the breach or cause of action complained of must proceed only for the non-payment of money previously alleged to be payable; and such breach is very similar whether the action be in debt on simple contract, specialty, record, or statute, and is usually of the following form: "Yet the said defendant, although often requested so to do, hath not as yet paid the said sum of ——— dollars, above demanded, nor any part thereof, to the said plaintiff, but hath hitherto wholly neglected and refused so to do, to the damage of the said plaintiff ——— dollars, and therefore he brings suit," etc.

The breach must obviously be governed by the nature of the stipulation; it ought to be assigned in the words of the contract, either negatively or affirmatively, or in words which are coextensive with its import and effect; Comyns, Dig. Pleader, C, 45; 2 Wms. Saund. 181 b, c; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 127, 3 L. Ed. 162. And see Hughes v. Smith, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 168; Bender v. Fromberger, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 436, 1 L. Ed. 898; Craghill v. Page, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 446; Steph. Pl. (And. ed.) 115.

When the contract is in the disjunctive, as on a promise to deliver a horse by a particular day, or to pay a sum of money, the breach ought to be assigned that the defendant did not do the one act nor the other; 1 Sid. 440; Hardr. 320; Comyns, Dig. Pleader, C.

BREACH OF CLOSE. Every unwarrantable entry upon the soil of another is a breach of his close; 3 Bla. Com. 209.

BREACH OF COVENANT. A violation of, or a failure to perform the conditions of, a bond or covenant. The remedy is in some cases by a writ of covenant; in others, by an action of debt; 3 Bla. Com. 156.

BREACH OF THE PEACE. A violation of public order; the offence of disturbing the public peace. One guilty of this offence may be held to bail for his good behavior. An act of public indecorum is also a breach of the peace. The remedy for this offence is by indictment.

Persons who go out on a "strike" and then linger about the place of their former employment, hooting at others taking their places, may be bound over to keep the peace; Com. v. Silvers, 11 Pa. Co. C. R. 481. One may disturb the peace while on his own premises by the use of violent language to a person lawfully there; State v. Brumley, 53 Mo. App. 126.

BREACH OF PRISON. An unlawful escape out of prison. This is of itself a misdemeanor; 1 Russell, Cr. 378; 4 Bla. Com. 129; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 18, s. 1; State v. Leach, 7 Conn. 452, 18 Am. Dec. 113. The remedy for this offence is by indictment. See ESCAPE.

BREACH OF PROMISE OF MARRIAGE. See PROMISE OF MARRIAGE.

BREACH OF TRUST. The wilful misappropriation, by a trustee, of a thing which had been lawfully delivered to him in confidence.

The distinction between larceny and a breach of trust is to be found chiefly in the terms or way in which the thing was taken originally into the party's possession; and the rule seems to be, that whenever the article is obtained upon a fair contract not for a mere temporary purpose, or by one who is in the employment of the deliverer, then the subsequent misappropriation is to be considered as an act of breach of trust. This rule is, however, subject to many nice distinctions. Lewer v. Com., 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 93, 97. It has been adjudged that when the owner of goods parts with the possession for a particular purpose, and the person who receives them avowedly for that purpose has at the time a fraudulent intention to make use of the possession as a means of converting the goods to his own use, and does so convert them, it is larceny; but if the owner part with the property, although fraudulent means have been used to obtain it, the act of conversion is not larceny; Allison, Princ. c. 12, p. 354.

In the Year Book 21 Hen. VII. 14, the distinction is thus stated:—"Pigot. If I deliver a jewel or money to my servant to keep, and he flees or goes from me with the jewel, is it felony? Cutler said, Yes: for so long as he is with me or in my house, that which I have delivered to him is adjudged to be in my possession; as my butler, who has my plate in keeping, if he flees with it, it is felony. Same law, if he who keeps my horse goes away with him. The reason is, they are always in my possession. But if I deliver a horse to my servant to ride to market or the fair, and he flee with him, it is no felony; for he comes lawfully to the possession of the horse by delivery. And so it is if I give him a jewel to carry to London, or to pay one, or to buy a thing, and he flee with it, it is not felony; for it is out of my possession, and he comes lawfully to it. Pigot. It can well be; for the master in these cases has an action against him, viz.: Detinue, or Account." See this point fully discussed in Stanford, Pl. Cr. lib. 1. See also Year B. Edw. IV. fol. 9; 52 Hen. III. 7; 21 Hen. VII. 15. See BREAKING BULK.

BREAKING. Parting or dividing by force and violence a solid substance, or piercing, penetrating, or bursting through the same.

In cases of burglary and housebreaking, the removal of any part of the house, or of the fastenings provided to secure it, with violence and a felonious intent.

The breaking is actual, as in the above case; or constructive, as when the burglar or housebreaker gains an entry by fraud, conspiracy or threat; Whart. Cr. L. 759; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 553; State v. Wiseman, 68 N. C. 207; Johnston v. Com., 85 Pa. 54, 27 Am. Rep. 622; Com. v. Lowrey, 158 Mass. 18, 32 N. E. 940; lifting a latch in order to enter a building is a breaking; State v. O'Brien, 81 Ia. 93, 46 N. W. 861. In England it has been decided that if the sash of a window be partly open, but not sufficiently so to admit a person, the raising of it so as to admit a person is not a breaking of the house; 1 Mood. 178; followed in Com. v. Strupney, 105 Mass. 588, 7 Am. Rep. 556. See People v. Dupree, 98 Mich. 26, 56 N. W. 1046. No reasons are assigned. It is difficult to conceive, if this case be law, what further opening will amount to a breaking. But see 1 Moody 327, 377; 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 524. See BURGLARY.

It was doubted, under the ancient common law, whether the breaking out of a dwelling-house in the night-time was a breaking sufficient to constitute burglary. Sir M. Hale thinks that this was not burglary, because fregit et exivit, non fregit et intravit; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 554; Rolland v. Com., 82 Pa. 324, 22 Am. Rep. 758; see Brown v. State, 55 Ala. 123, 28 Am. Rep. 693. It may, perhaps, be thought that a breaking out is not so alarming as a breaking in, and, indeed, may be a relief to the minds of the inmates; they may exclaim, as Cicero did of Catiline, Magno me metu liberabis, dummodo inter me atque te murus intersit. But this breaking was made burglary by the statute 12 Anne, c. 1, § 7 (1713). The getting the head out through a skylight has been held to be a sufficient breaking out of a house to complete the crime of burglary; 1 Jebb 99. The statute of 12 Anne is too recent to be binding as a part of the common law in all of the United States; 2 Bish. Crim. L. § 99; 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 540.

BREAKING BULK. The doctrine of breaking bulk proceeds upon the ground of a determination of the privity of the bailment by the wrongful act of the bailee. Thus, where a carrier had agreed to carry certain bales of goods, which were delivered to him, to Southampton, but carried them to another place, broke open the bales, and took the goods contained in them feloniously and converted them to his own use, the majority of the judges held that if the party had sold the entire bales it would not have been felony; "but as he broke them, and took what was in them, he did it without warrant," and so was guilty of felony; Y. B. 13 Edw. IV. fol. 9. If a miller steals part of the meal, "although the corn was delivered to him to grind, nevertheless if he steal it it is felony, being taken from the rest;" 1 Rolle, Abr. 73, pl. 16; Com. v. James, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 375. This construction involves the absurd consequence of its being felony to steal part of a package, but a breach of trust to steal the whole.

In an early case in Massachusetts, it was decided that if a wagon-load of goods, consisting of several packages, is delivered to a common carrier to be transported in a body to a certain place, and he, with a felonious intent, separates one entire package, whether before or after the delivery of the other packages, this is a sufficient breaking of bulk to constitute larceny, without any breaking of the package so separated: Com. v. Brown, 4 Mass. 580. But this decision is in direct conflict with the English cases. Thus, where the master and owner of a ship steals a package out of several packages delivered him to carry, without removing anything from the particular package; 1 Russ. & R. 92; or where a letter-carrier is intrusted with two directed envelopes, each containing a 5*l.* note, and delivers the envelopes, having previously taken out the two notes; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 215; or where a drover separates one sheep from a flock intrusted to him to drive a certain distance; 1 Jebb. 51; this is not a breaking of bulk sufficient to terminate the bailment and to constitute larceny; 2 Bish. Cr. L. 860, 868. The Larceny Act of 1861 has met the difficulty of deciding this class of cases in England, by providing that a bailee of any chattel, money, or valuable security, who fraudulently takes the same, although not breaking bulk, shall be guilty of larceny.

BREAKING DOORS. Forcibly removing the fastenings of a house so that a person may enter. See ARREST.

BREATH. In Medical Jurisprudence. The air expelled from the chest at each expiration.

Breathing, though a usual sign of life, is not conclusive that a child was wholly born alive; as breathing may take place before the whole delivery of the mother is complete; 5 C. & P. 329. See BIRTH; LIFE; INFANTICIDE.

BREHON LAW. The ancient system of Irish law; so named from the judges, called Brehons, or Breitheamhuin. Its existence has been traced from the earliest period of Irish history down to the time of the Anglo-Norman invasion. It is still a subject of antiquarian research. An outline of the system will be found in Knight's English Cyclopædia, and also in the Penny Cyclopædia. See Encyc. Brit.

BRETHREN. It is used in the sense of brother.

It may be legitimately used in addressing mixed numbers, although such use is unusual; it may include a daughter; Terry v. Brunson, 1 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 78. It is so used in the Protestant Episcopal Prayer Book.

BRETHREN OF TRINITY HOUSE. See ELDER BRETHREN.

BRETTS AND SCOTTS, LAWS OF THE. A code or system of laws in use among the Celtic tribes of Scotland down to the beginning of the fourteenth century, and then abolished by Edward I. A fragment only is now extant. See Acts of Parl. of Scotland, vol. 1, pp. 299-301, Edin. 1844. It is interesting, like the Brehon laws of Ireland, in a historical point of view.

BREVE (Lat. breve, brevis, short). A writ. An original writ. Any writ or precept issuing from the king or his courts.

It is the Latin term which in law is translated by "writ." In the Roman law these brevia were in the form of letters; and this form was also given to the early English brevia, and is retained to some degree in the modern writs. Spelman, Gloss. The name breve was given because they stated briefly the matter in question (rem quæ est breviter narrat). It was said to be "shaped in conformity to a rule of law" (formatum ad similitudinem regulæ juris); because it was requisite that it should state facts against the respondent bringing him within the operation of some rule of law. The whole passage from Bracton is as follows: "Breve quidem, cum sit formatum ad similitudinem regulæ juris quia breviter et paucis verbis intentionem proferentes exponit, et explanat sicut regula juris rem quæ est breviter narrat. Non tamen ita breve esse debet, quin rationem et vim intentionis contineat." Bracton 413 b, § 2. It is spelled briefe by Brooke. Each writ soon came to be distinguished by some important word or phrase contained in the brief statement, or from the general subject-matter; and this name was in turn transferred to the form of action, in the prosecution of which the writ (or breve) was procured. Stephen, Pl. 9. See WRIT. It is used perhaps more frequently in the plural (brevia) than in the singular, especially in speaking of the different classes of writs.

BREVE INNOMINATUM. A writ containing a general statement only of the cause of action.

BREVE NOMINATUM. A writ containing a statement of the circumstances of the action.

BREVE ORIGINALE. An original writ.

BREVE DE RECTO. A writ of right. The writ of right patent is of the highest nature of any in the law. Cowell; Fitzherb. Nat. Brev.

BREVE TESTATUM. A written memorandum introduced to perpetuate the tenor of the conveyance and investiture of lands. 2 Bla. Com. 307.

It was prepared after the transaction, and depended for its validity upon the testimony of witnesses, as it was not sealed. Spelman, Gloss.

In Scotch Law. A similar memorandum made out at the time of the transfer, attested by the pares curiæ and by the seal of the superior. Bell, Dict.

BREVET. In French Law. A warrant granted by government to authorize an individual to do something for his own benefit.

Brevet d'invention. A patent.

In American Law. A commission conferring on a military officer a degree of rank specified in the commission, without, however, conveying a right to receive corresponding pay. See U. S. v. Hunt, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 552, 20 L. Ed. 739.

BREVIA (Lat.). Writs. The plural of breve, which see.

BREVIA ANTICIPANTIA (Lat.). Writs of prevention. See QUIA TIMET.

BREVIA DE CURSU (Lat.). Writs of course. See BREVIA FORMATA.

BREVIA FORMATA (Lat.). Certain writs of approved and established form which were granted of course in actions to which they were applicable, and which could not be changed but by consent of the great council of the realm. Bracton 413 b.

All original writs, without which an action could not anciently be commenced, issued from the chancery. Many of these were of ancient and established form, and could not be altered; others admitted of variation by the clerks according to the circumstances of the case. In obtaining a writ, a præcipe was issued by the party demandant, directed to the proper officer in chancery, stating the substance of his claim. If a writ already in existence and enrolled upon the Register was found exactly adapted to the case, it issued as of course (de cursu), being copied out by the junior clerks, called cursitors. If none was found, a new writ was prepared by the chancellor and subjected to the decision of the grand council, their assent being presumed in some cases if no objection was made. In 1250 it was provided that no new writs should issue except by direct command of the king or the council. The clerks, however, it is supposed, still exercised the liberty of adapting the old forms to cases new only in the instance, the council, and its successor (in this respect, at least), parliament, possessing the power to make writs new in principle. The strictness with which the common-law courts, to which the writs were returnable, adhered to the ancient form, gave occasion for the passage of the Stat. Westm. 2, c. 24, providing for the formation of new writs. Those writs which were contained in the Register are generally considered as pre-eminently brevia formata.

BREVIA JUDICIALIA (Lat.). Judicial writs. Subsidiary writs issued from the court during the progress of an action, or in execution of the judgment.

They were said to vary according to the variety of the pleadings and responses of the parties to the action; Bract. 413 b; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 13, § 3; Co. Litt. 54 b, 73 b. The various forms, however, became long since fixed beyond the power of the courts to alter them; Barnet v. Ihrie, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 52. Some of these judicial writs, especially that of capias, by a fiction of the issue of an original writ, came to supersede original writs entirely, or nearly so. See ORIGINAL WRIT.

BREVIA MAGISTRALIA. Writs framed by the masters in chancery. They were subject to variation according to the diversity of cases and complaints. Bracton, 413 b; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 13, § 4.

BREVIA TESTATA. See BREVE TESTAMENTUM.

BREVIARIUM ALARICIANUM. A compilation made by order of Alaric II. and published for the use of his Roman subjects in the year 506. It contained large excerpts from the Theodosian Codex, a few from the Gregorianus and Hermogenianus, some post-Theodosian constitutions, some of the Sententiæ of Paulus, one little scrap of Papinian and an abridged version of the Institutes of Gaius. Maitland, 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 15 (14 L. Q. R. 13). It is also known as Lex Romana Visigothorum. It became the principal, if not the only, representative of Roman law among the Franks. id.

BREVIATE. An abstract or epitome of a writing. Holthouse. The name is usually applied to the famous brief of Mr. Murray (afterwards Lord Mansfield) for the complainant in the case of Penn v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. 444. A copy of the original printed folio is in the Pennsylvania Historical Society and it is reprinted in the Pennsylvania Archives, making volume 16 of the Third Series.

BREVIUS ET ROTULIS LIBERANDIS.

A writ or mandate directed to a sheriff, commanding him to deliver to his successor the county and the appurtenances, with all the briefs, rolls, remembrances, and other things belonging to his office.

BRIBE. The gift or promise, which is accepted, of some advantage as the inducement for some illegal act or omission; or of some illegal emolument, as a consideration for preferring one person to another, in the performance of a legal act.

BRIBERY. The receiving or offering any undue reward by or to any person whomsoever, whose ordinary profession or business relates to the administration of public justice, in order to influence his behavior in office, and to incline him to act contrary to his duty and the known rules of honesty and integrity. Co. 3d Inst. 149; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 67, s. 2; 4 Bla. Com. 139; State v. Ellis, 33 N. J. L. 102, 97 Am. Dec. 707; Dishon v. Smith, 10 Ia. 212.

The term bribery now extends further, and includes the offence of giving a bribe to many other classes of officers; it applies both to the actor and receiver, and extends to voters, cabinet ministers, legislators, sheriffs, and other classes; 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1858. The offence of the giver and the receiver of the bribe has the same name. For the sake of distinction, that of the former—viz.: the briber—might be properly denominated active bribery; while that of the latter—viz.: the person bribed—might be called passive bribery.

Bribery consists in offering a present or receiving one; extortion is demanding a fee or present by color of office; State v. Pritchard, 107 N. C. 921, 12 S. E. 50.

Bribery at elections for members of parliament has always been a crime at common law, and punishable by indictment or information. It still remains so in England, notwithstanding the stat. 24 Geo. II. c. 14; 3 Burr. 1340, 1589. So is payment or promise of payment for votes at an election of an assistant overseer of a parish; 16 Cox, C. C. 737. To constitute the offence, it is not necessary that the person bribed should in fact vote as solicited to do; 3 Burr. 1236; or even that he should have a right to vote at all; both are entirely immaterial; 3 Burr. 1590; State v. Ellis, 33 N. J. L. 102, 97 Am. Dec. 707; or that he acted without jurisdiction; People v. Jackson, 191 N. Y. 293, 84 N. E. 65, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1173, 14 Ann. Cas. 243.

Bribery of a voter consists in the offering of a reward or consideration for his vote or his failure to vote; Nichols v. Mudgett, 32 Vt. 546; State v. Jackson, 73 Me. 91, 40 Am. Rep. 342; Walsh v. People, 65 Ill. 58, 16 Am. Rep. 569; 15 Q. B. 870.

An attempt to bribe, though unsuccessful, has been held criminal; U. S. v. Worrall, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 384, Fed. Cas. No. 16,766, 1 L. Ed. 426; 4 Burr. 2500; Co. 3d Inst. 147; State v. Ellis, 33 N. J. L. 102, 97 Am. Dec. 707; Com. v. Chapman, 1 Va. Cas. 138. In Illinois a proposal by an officer to receive a bribe, though not bribery, was held to be an indictable misdemeanor at common law; 21 Am. L. Reg. 617 (with note by Judge Redfield); s. c. Walsh v. People, 65 Ill. 58, 16 Am. Rep. 569; but it has been held that upon such a proposal by an officer, one offering him a bribe was not punishable; O'Brien v. State, 6 Tex. App. 665. Keeping open house for the entertainment of the members of the legislature is not bribery; Randall v. News Ass'n, 97 Mich. 136, 56 N. W. 361.

On the trial of an officer for bribery for taking unlawful fees, a corrupt intent must be proved; State v. Pritchard, 107 N. C. 921, 12 S. E. 50.

A writing containing a statement that a person has been bribed to testify as a witness imputes to such person the crime of perjury and is libelous; Atlanta News Publishing Co. v. Medlock, 123 Ga. 714, 51 S. E. 756, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1139; Hillhouse v. Dunning, 6 Conn. 391.

See LOBBYIST; CORRUPT PRACTICES.

BRIBOUR. One who pilfers other men's goods; a thief. See 28 Edw. II. c. 1.

BRIDGE. A structure erected over a river, creek, stream, ditch, ravine, or other place to facilitate the passage thereof; including by the term both arches and abutments; Board of Chosen Freeholders of Sussex County v. Strader, 18 N. J. L. 108, 35 Am. Dec. 530; Bardwell v. Town of Jamaica, 15 Vt. 438; Daniels v. Intendant & Wardens of Athens, 55 Ga. 609; and approaches of the length of 180 feet on either side of it; 71 L. T. 430; and the roadway over it; 57 L. J. Q. B. 280. The embankment contiguous to a bridge is a part of it; Morgan County v. Glass, 139 Ga. 415, 77 S. E. 583. A railway viaduct, designed only for the passage of engines and cars, is not a "bridge," within the statutory meaning of that word; Bridge Proprietors v. Land & Improvement Co., 1 Wall. (U. S.) 116, 17 L. Ed. 571. See Lake v. R. Co., 7 Nev. 294; Whitall v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Gloucester County, 40 N. J. L. 305.

A bridge may be a street; 26 L. J. Q. B. 11. It is a public highway; Murphy v. Village of Ft. Edward, 79 Misc. 296, 140 N. Y. Supp. 885.

Bridges are either public or private. Public bridges are such as form a part of the highway, common, according to their character as foot, horse, or carriage bridges, to the public generally, with or without toll; 2 East 342; though their use may be limited to particular occasions, as to seasons of flood or frost; 2 Maule & S. 262; 4 Campb. 189. They are established either by legislative authority or by dedication.

By legislative authority. By the Great Charter (9 Hen. III. c. 15), in England, no town or freeman can be compelled to make new bridges where never any were before, but by act of parliament. Under such act, they may be erected and maintained by corporations chartered for the purpose, or by counties, or in whatever other mode may be prescribed; Woolrych, Ways 196. In this country it is the practice to charter companies for the same purpose, with the right to take tolls for their reimbursement; Williams v. Turnpike Corporation, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 341; or to erect bridges at the state's expense; or by general statutes to impose the duty of erection and maintenance upon towns, counties, or districts; Com. v. Com'rs of Monroe County, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 495; Sampson v. Goochland Justices, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 241; Town of Granby v. Thurston, 23 Conn. 416; Nelson County Court v. Washington County Court, 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 92; Lobdell v. Inhabitants of New Bedford, 1 Mass. 153; Hill v. Board of Sup'rs of Livingston County, 12 N. Y. 52; State v. Town of Campton, 2 N. H. 513; Town of Waterville v. Kennebec County Com'rs, 59 Me. 80. In re Saw-Mill Run Bridge, 85 Pa. 163; State v. Titus, 47 N. J. L. 89. For their erection the state may take private property, upon making compensation, as in case of other highways; Ang. Highw. § 81; the rule of damages for land so taken being not its mere value for agricultural purposes, but its value for a bridge site, minus the benefits derived to the owner from the erection; Young v. Harrison, 17 Ga. 30. The right to erect a bridge upon the land of another may also be acquired by mere parol license, which, when acted upon, becomes irrevocable; Ameriscoggin Bridge v. Bragg, 11 N. H. 102; Hall v. Boyd, 14 Ga. 1. But see Foster v. Browning, 4 R. I. 47, 67 Am. Dec. 505. The franchise of a toll bridge or ferry may be taken, like other property, for a free bridge; West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. (U. S.) 507, 12 L. Ed. 535; Central Bridge Corporation v.

Lowell, 4 Gray (Mass.) 474; State v. Canterbury, 28 N. H. 195; and, when vested in a town or other public corporation, may be so taken without compensation; Town of East Hartford v. Bridge Co., 10 How. (U. S.) 511, 13 L. Ed. 518.

A new bridge may be erected, under legislative authority, so near an older bridge or ferry as to impair or destroy its value, without compensation, unless the older franchise be protected by the terms of its grant; Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420, 9 L. Ed. 773; id., 7 Pick. (Mass.) 344; Thompson v. R. Co., 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 625; Platt v. Bridge Co., 8 Bush (Ky.) 31; Parrot v. Lawrence, 2 Dill. 332, Fed. Cas. No. 10,772; 21 Can. S. C. R. 456; The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 51, 18 L. Ed. 137; but, unless authorized by statute, a new bridge so erected is unlawful, and may be enjoined as a nuisance; 3 Bla. Com. 218; 2 Cr. M. & R. 432; Norris v. Farmers' & Teamsters' Co., 6 Cal. 590, 65 Am. Dec. 535; Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 621, 9 L. Ed. 773. And if the older franchise, vested in an individual or private corporation, be protected, or be exclusive within given limits, by the terms of its grant, the erection of a new bridge or ferry, even under legislative authority, is unconstitutional, as an act impairing the obligations of contract; Proprietors of Piscataqua Bridge v. New Hampshire Bridge, 7 N. H. 35; Enfield Toll Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 17 Conn. 40, 42 Am. Dec. 716; Mayor, etc., of City of Columbus v. Rodgers, 10 Ala. 37. See 21 Can. S. C. R. 456. The entire expense of a bridge erected within a particular district may be assessed upon the inhabitants; Shaw v. Dennis, 5 Gilman (Ill.) 405; Town of Granby v. Thurston, 23 Conn. 416. The absolute control of navigable streams in the United States is vested in congress; Miller, Const. 457; but in the absence of legislation by congress a state has the right to erect a bridge over a navigable river within its own limits; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 713, 18 L. Ed. 96; Com. v. Breed, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 460; Works v. R. Co., 5 McLean 425, Fed. Cas. No. 18,046; Dugan v. Bridge Co., 27 Pa. 303, 67 Am. Dec. 464; People v. R. Co., 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 113, 30 Am. Dec. 33; and so may a county; In re Waverly Borough's Bridge, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 669; although in exercising this right, care must be taken to interrupt navigation as little as possible; State v. Inhabitants of Freeport, 43 Me. 198; Renwick v. Morris, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 621; Terre-Haute Drawbridge Co. v. Halliday, 4 Ind. 36; Com. v. Proprietors of New Bedford Bridge, 2 Gray (Mass.) 339; Columbus Ins. Co. v. Ass'n, 6 McLean 70, Fed. Cas. No. 3,046; Columbus Ins. Co. v. Curtienus, 6 McLean 209, Fed. Cas. No. 3,045.

The erection of a bridge entirely within a state across a navigable river running partly within and partly without the state is not a matter so directly connected with interstate commerce as to be under the exclusive control of congress, and in the absence of congressional action the state has authority to regulate the same; Rhea v. R. Co., 50 Fed. 16.

A state has no power to fix tolls on a bridge connecting it with another state, thereby regulating charges on interstate commerce without the consent of congress or the concurrence of such other state. The chief justice and three associate justices concurred on the ground that concurrent acts of the state incorporating the bridge company and authorizing it to fix tolls constituted a contract between the corporation and both states which could not be altered by one state without the consent of the other; Covington & Cincinnati Bridge Co. v. Com., 154 U. S. 204, 224, 14 Sup. Ct. 1087, 38 L. Ed. 962. The power of erecting a bridge, and taking tolls thereon, over a navigable river forming the boundary between two states, can only be conferred by the concurrent legislation of both; President, etc., for Erecting a Bridge near Trenton v. Bridge Co., 13 N. J. Eq. 46; Dover v. Portsmouth Bridge, 17 N. H. 200.

A bridge is no less a means of commercial intercourse than a navigable stream, and the state power may properly determine whether the interruption to commerce occasioned by the bridge be not more than compensated by the facilities which it affords. And if the bridge be authorized in good faith by a state, the federal courts are not bound to enjoin it. However, congress, since its power to regulate commerce is supreme, may interpose whenever it may see fit, by general or special laws, and may prevent the building of a bridge, or cause the removal of one already erected; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 713, 18 L. Ed. 96; The Passaic Bridges, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 782, 16 L. Ed. 799; Silliman v. Bridge Co., 4 Blatchf. 74, Fed. Cas. No. 12,851; Id., 4 Blatchf. 395, Fed. Cas. No. 12,852; The Clinton Bridge, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 454, 19 L. Ed. 969; or it may authorize the erection of a bridge over a navigable river, although it may partially obstruct the free navigation; People v. Kelly, 76 N. Y. 475. So railroads, having become the principal instruments of commerce, are as much under the control of congress as navigable streams, and a railroad bridge might be authorized by congress; In re Clinton Bridge, 1 Woolw. 150, Fed. Cas. No. 2,900; which has power directly or through a corporation created for the purpose to construct bridges over navigable waters between states, for the purpose of interstate commerce by land; Luxton v. Bridge Co., 153 U. S. 525, 14 Sup. Ct. 891, 38 L. Ed. 808; or it may grant such rights to an existing corporation; Haeussler v. City of St. Louis, 205

Mo. 656, 103 S. W. 1034; the bridge across East River between New York and Brooklyn is authorized by acts of New York and of congress and cannot be declared to be a public nuisance, even though it may injuriously affect the business of a warehouseman on the banks of the river above the bridge; Miller v. New York, 109 U. S. 385, 3 Sup. Ct. 228, 27 L. Ed. 971. See also on the subject at large Miller, Const. U. S. Lect. ix. For any unnecessary interruption the proprietors of the bridge will be liable in damages to the persons specially injured thereby, or to have the bridge abated as a nuisance, by injunction, though not by indictment; such bridge, although authorized by state laws, being in contravention of rights secured by acts of congress regulating commerce; Pennsylvania v. Bridge Co., 13 How. (U. S.) 518, 14 L. Ed. 249; 1 W. & M. 401; Works v. Junction Railroad, 5 McLean 425, Fed. Cas. No. 18,046; Columbus Ins. Co. v. Bridge Ass'n, 6 McLean 70, Fed. Cas. No. 3,046; Jolly v. Drawbridge Co., 6 McLean 237, Fed. Cas. No. 7,441.

Dedication. The dedication of bridges depends upon the same principles as the dedication of highways, except that their acceptance will not be presumed from mere use, until they are proved to be of public utility; 5 Burr. 2594; State v. Town of Campton, 2 N. H. 513; Williams v. Cummington, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 312; 3 M. & S. 526. See Town of Dayton v. Town of Rutland, 84 Ill. 279, 25 Am. Rep. 457; State v. Bridge Co., 22 Kan. 438; HIGHWAYS.

Repairs to. At common law, all public bridges are primâ facie to be repaired by the inhabitants of the county, without distinction of foot, horse, or carriage bridges, unless they can show that others are bound to repair particular bridges; 13 East 95; Bacon, Abr. Bridges, p. 533; 5 Burr. 2594. In this country, the common law not prevailing, the duty of repair is imposed by statute, generally, upon towns or counties; State v. Town of Franklin, 9 Conn. 32; State v. Campton, 2 N. H. 513; Hill v. Livingston County, 12 N. Y. 52; House v. Board of Com'rs, 60 Ind. 580, 28 Am. Rep. 657; Township of Newlin v. Davis, 77 Pa. 317; Hedges v. Madison County, 1 Gilman (Ill.) 567; Bardwell v. Town of Jamaica, 15 Vt. 438; Saunders v. Hathaway, 25 N. C. 402; Waterville v. Kennebec County, 59 Me. 80; McCalla v. Multnomah County, 3 Or. 424; Agawam v. Hampden, 130 Mass. 528; or chartered cities; Shurtle v. Minneapolis, 17 Minn. 308 (Gil. 284); Holmes v. Hamburg, 47 Ia. 348; except that bridges owned by corporations or individuals are reparable by their proprietors; Williams v. Bridge & Turnpike Corp., 4 Pick. (Mass.) 341; Ward v. Turnpike Co., 20 N. J. L. 323; Townsend v. Turnpike Road, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 90; Beecher v. Ferry Co., 24 Conn. 491; and that where the necessity for a bridge is created by the act of an individual or corporation in cutting a canal, ditch, or railway through a highway, it is the duty of the author of such necessity to make and repair the bridge; Perley v. Chandler, 6 Mass. 458, 4 Am. Dec. 159; Dygert v. Schenck, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 446, 35 Am. Dec. 575; Nobles v. Langly, 66 N. C. 287; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Borough of Irwin, 85 Pa. 336; Roberts v. Ry. Co., 35 Wis. 679. Where a bridge is rebuilt at county expense, but over which it has no control or care and on which it expends no money thereafter, it does not become liable to maintain or repair it; Delta Lumber Co. v. Board of Auditors of Wayne County, 71 Mich. 572, 40 N. W. 1. The parties chargeable must constantly keep the bridge in such repair as will make it safe and convenient for the service for which it is required; Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 77, s. 1; Frankfort Bridge Co. v. Williams, 9 Dana (Ky.) 403, 35 Am. Dec. 151; Holley v. Turnpike Co., 1 Aik. (Vt.) 74; People v. Turnpike Road, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 254. See Town of Grayville v. Whitaker, 85 Ill. 439; Holmes v. City of Hamburg, 47 Ia. 348; Rapho Tp. v. Moore, 68 Pa. 408, 8 Am. Rep. 202; Hicks v. Chaffee, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 293; Abbot v. Wolcott, 38 Vt. 666.

Remedies for failure to repair. If the parties chargeable with the duty of repairing neglect so to do, they are liable to indictment; Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 77, s. 1; People v. Dutchess County, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 50; State v. Canterbury, 28 N. H. 195; Com. v. Newburyport Bridge, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 142; State v. King, 25 N. C. 411. It has also been held that they may be compelled by mandamus to repair; Brander v. Chesterfield Justices, 5 Call (Va.) 548, 2 Am. Dec. 606; Dinwiddie Justices v. Chesterfield Justices, 5 Call (Va.) 556; People v. Dutchess County, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 50; Nelson County Court v. Washington County Court, 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 92; State v. Freeholders of Essex, 23 N. J. L. 214. But see 12 A. & E. 427; 3 Campb. 222; State v. Cloud County Com'rs, 39 Kan. 700, 18 Pac. 952. If a corporation be charged with the duty by charter, they may be proceeded against by quo warranto for the forfeiture of their franchise; People v. R. Co., 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 254; or by action on the case for damages in favor of any person specially injured by reason of their neglect; Sherwood v. Weston, 18 Conn. 32; Townsend v. Turnpike Road, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 90; Richardson v. Turnpike Co., 6 Vt. 496; Randall v. Turnpike, 6 N. H. 147, 25 Am. Dec. 453; Williams v. Turnpike, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 341; Board of Com'rs of Sullivan County v. Sisson, 2 Ind. App. 311, 28 N. E. 374. And a similar action is given by statute, in many states, against public bodies chargeable with repair; Whipple v. Walpole, 10 N. H. 130; Board of Com'rs of Allen County v. Creviston, 133 Ind. 39, 32 N. E. 735. A city is liable to an action for damages caused by a failure to maintain a bridge as required by law; City of Boston

v. Crowley, 38 Fed. 202. In Georgia counties are not liable for injuries from defects in free bridges or ferries; Arline v. Laurens County, 77 Ga. 249, 2 S. E. 833.

Tolls. The law of travel upon bridges is the same as upon highways, except when burdened by tolls. The payment of tolls can be lawfully enforced only at the gate or toll-house; State v. Dearborn, 15 Me. 402. Where by the charter of a bridge company, certain persons are exempted from payment, such exemption is to be liberally construed; Cayuga Bridge Co. v. Stout, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 33; Salmon v. Mallett, 6 N. C. 372; South Carolina R. Co. v. Jones, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 459.

Bridges, when owned by individuals, are real estate; In re Meason's Estate, 4 Watts (Pa.) 341; Arnold v. Ruggles, 1 R. I. 165, Hudson River Bridge Co. v. Patterson, 74 N. Y. 365; and also when owned by the public; yet the freehold of the soil is in its original owner; Co. 2d Inst. 705. The materials of which they are formed belong to the parties who furnished them, subject to the public right of passage; and when the bridge is taken down or abandoned become the property of those who furnished them; 6 East 154; President, etc., of Turnpike Road Co. v. Com'rs of Franklin County, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 229.

A private bridge is one erected for the use of one or more private persons. Such a bridge will not be considered a public bridge although it may be occasionally used by the public; 12 East 203; Thompson v. R. Co., 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 625; 1 Rolle, Abr. 368, Bridges, pl. 2; 2 Inst. 701; 1 Salk. 359. The builder of a private bridge over a private way is not indictable for neglect to repair, though it be generally used by the public. See Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 344; id., 11 Pet. (U. S.) 539, 9 L. Ed. 773; People v. Cooper, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 516.

As to bridges over navigable waters, see that title.

See COMMERCE; FERRY.

BRIEF (Lat. brevis, L. Fr. briefe, short).

In Ecclesiastical Law. A papal rescript sealed with wax. See BULL.

In Practice. A writ. It is found in this sense in the ancient law authors.

An abridged statement of the party's case.

A trial brief properly and thoroughly prepared should contain a statement of the names of the parties, and of their residence and occupation, the character in which they sue and are sued, and wherefore they prosecute or resist the action; an abridgment of all the pleadings; a chronological and methodical statement of the facts, in plain language; a summary of the points or questions in issue, and of the proof which is to support such issues, mentioning specially the names of the witnesses by which the facts are to be proved, or, if there be written evidence, an abstract of such evidence; the personal character of the witnesses, whether the moral character is good or bad, whether they are naturally timid or over-zealous, whether firm or wavering; of the evidence of the opposite party, if known, and such facts as are adapted to oppose, confute, or repel it.

This statement should be perspicuous and concise. The object of a brief is to inform the person who tries the case of the facts important for him to know, to present his case properly where it has been prepared by another person—as is the general practice in England, and to some extent in this country—or as an aid to the memory of the person trying a case when he has prepared it himself.

A brief on error or appeal is a legal argument upon the questions which the record brings before the appellate court. These are written or printed and vary somewhat according to the purposes they are to subserve.

The rules of most of the appellate courts require the filing of printed briefs for the use of the court and opposing counsel at a time designated for each side before hearing. In the rules of the supreme court and circuit court of appeals of the United States the brief is required to contain a concise statement of the case, a specification of errors relied on, including the substance of evidence, the admission or rejection of which is to be reviewed, or any extract from a charge excepted to, and a brief of argument exhibiting clearly the points of law or fact to be discussed, with proper reference to the record or the authorities relied upon. When a statute is cited, so much as is relied on should be printed at length. Such a brief will generally be sufficient to answer the requirements of any of the courts in the several states whose rules require printed briefs.

See Briefmaking by Lyle (Cooley's ed.).

BRIEF OF TITLE. An abridged and orderly statement of all matters affecting the title to a certain portion of real estate.

It should give the effective parts of all patents, deeds, indentures, agreements, records, and papers relating to such estate, with sufficient fulness to disclose their full effect, and should mention incumbrances existing whether acquired by deed or use. All the documents of title should be arranged in chronological order, noticing particularly in regard to deeds, the date, names of parties, consideration, description of the property, and covenants. See 1 Chit. Pr. 304, 463; 14 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 529. See ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

BRIGBOTE (Sax.). A contribution to repair a bridge. See BOTE.

BRINGING MONEY INTO COURT. The act of depositing money in the hands of the proper officer of the court for the purpose of satisfying a debt or duty, or of an interpleader. See PAYMENT INTO COURT.

BROCAGE. The wages or commissions of a broker. His occupation is also sometimes called brokerage.

BROCARIUS, BROCATOR. A broker; a middle-man between buyer and seller; the agent of both transacting parties. Used in the old Scotch and English law. Bell, Dict.; Cowell.

BROKERAGE. The trade or occupation of a broker; the commissions paid to a broker for his services.

BROKERS. Those who are engaged for others in the negotiation of contracts relative to property, with the custody of which they have no concern. Paley, Agency 13. See Com. Dig. Merchant, C.

A broker is, for some purposes, treated as the agent of both parties; but, in the first place, he is deemed the agent only of the person by whom he is originally employed, and does not become the agent of the other until the bargain or contract has been definitely settled, as to the terms, between the principals, when he becomes the agent of both parties for the purpose of executing the bought and sold notes: Evans v. Waln, 71 Pa. 69; 5 B. & Ald. 333; Hinckley v. Arey, 27 Me. 362; Woods v. Rocchi, 32 La. Ann. 210.

A commission merchant differs from a broker in that he may buy and sell in his own name without disclosing his principal, while the broker can only buy or sell in the name of his principal. A commission merchant has a lien upon the goods for his charges, advances, and commissions, while the broker has no control of the property and is only responsible for bad faith; Edwards v. Hoeflinghoff, 38 Fed. 635.

One who negotiates a sale of another's property without having either actual or constructive possession of it is a broker as distinguished from a factor; J. M. Robinson, Norton & Co. v. Cotton Factory, 124 Ky. 435, 99 S. W. 305, 102 S. W. 869, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474, 14 Ann. Cas. 802.

The authority of a broker to bind his principal may by special agreement be carried to any extent that the principal may choose, but the customary authority of brokers is for the most part so well settled as to be a constituent part of the law merchant; Benj. Sales § 273.

Bill and Note Brokers negotiate the purchase and sale of bills of exchange and promissory notes.

They are paid a commission by the seller of the securities; and it is not their custom to disclose the names of their principals. There is an implied warranty that what they sell is what they represent it to be; and should a bill or note sold by them turn out to be a forgery, they are held to be responsible; but it would appear that by showing a payment over to their principals, or other special circumstances attending the transaction proving that it would be inequitable to hold them responsible, they will be discharged; Edw. Fact. & Bro. § 10; Aldrich v. Butts, 5 R. L. 218; contra, Baxter v. Duren, 29 Me. 434, 60 Am. Dec. 602; Morrison v. Currie, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 79.

Exchange Brokers negotiate bills of exchange drawn on foreign countries, or on other places in this country.

It is sometimes part of the business of exchange brokers to buy and sell uncurrent bank notes and gold and silver coins, as well as drafts and checks drawn or payable in other cities; although, as they do this at their own risk and for their own profit, it is difficult to see the reason for calling them brokers. The term is often thus erroneously applied to all persons doing a money business.

Insurance Brokers procure insurance, and negotiate between insurers and insured.

Merchandise Brokers negotiate the sale of merchandise without having possession or control of it, as factors have.

Pawnbrokers lend money in small sums, on the security of personal property, generally at usurious rates of interest. They are licensed by the authorities, and excepted from the operation of the usury laws.

Real Estate Brokers. Those who negotiate the sale or purchase of real property. In addition to the above duty they sometimes procure loans on mortgage security, collect rents, and attend to the leasing of houses and lands.

Ship Brokers negotiate the purchase and sale of ships, and the business of freighting vessels. Like other brokers, they receive a commission from the seller only.

Stock Brokers. Those employed to buy and sell stocks and bonds of incorporated companies, and government bonds.

In the larger cities, the stock brokers are associated together under the name of the Board of Brokers. This Board is an association admission to membership in which is guarded with jealous care. Membership is forfeited for default in carrying out contracts, and rules are prescribed for the conduct of the business, which are enforced on all members. The purchases and sales are made at sessions of the Board, and are all officially recorded and published by the association. Stock brokers charge commission to both the buyers and sellers of stocks.

See COMMISSIONS; MARGIN; STOCK EXCHANGE; PLEDGE; BOUGHT NOTE; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT; REAL ESTATE BROKER.

See Story, Ag. § 28; Malynes, Lex Merc. 143; Liverm. Ag.; Whart. Ag.; Benj. Sales; Lewis, Stock Exchange; Biddle, Stock Brokers; Mechem, Ag.; Gross; Walker, Real Est.

BROTHEL. A bawdy-house; a common habitation of prostitutes.

Such places have always been deemed common nuisances in the United States, and the keepers of them may be fined and imprisoned. Till the time of Henry VIII. they were licensed in England, but that prince suppressed them. See Coke, 2d Inst. 205; BAWDY-HOUSE. For the history of these places, see Merlin, Rép. Mot Bordel; Parent Duchatellat, De la Prostitution dans la Ville de Paris; Histoire de la Législation sur les Femmes publiques, etc., par Sabatier.

BROTHER. He who is born from the same father and mother with another, or from one of them only.

Brothers are of the whole blood when they are born of the same father and mother, and of the half-blood when they are the issue of one of them only. In the civil law, when they are the children of the same father and mother, they are called brothers germani; when they descend from the same father but not the same mother, they are consanguine brothers; when they are the issue of the same mother, but not the same father, they are uterine brothers. A half-brother is one who is born of the same father or mother, but not of both; one born of the same parents before they were married, a left-sided brother; and a bastard born of the same father or mother is called a natural brother. See BLOOD; HALF-BLOOD; LINE; Merlin, Répert. Frère; Dict. de Jurisp. Frère; Code 3. 23. 27; Nov. 84, præf.; Dane, Abr. Index; 44 U. C. Q. B. 536; Gardner v. Collins, 3 Mas. 393, Fed. Cas. No. 5,223; id., 2 Pet. (U. S.) 58, 7 L. Ed. 347; Wheeler v. Clutterbrick, 52 N. Y. 67.

To obtain a conviction of the crime of incest, under a statute forbidding the marriage of brother and sister, it is not necessary to show legitimacy of birth; State v. Schauhurst, 34 Ia. 547.

BROTHERHOOD AND GUESTLING, COURT OF. The Brotherhood was a conference of seven towns (i. e., the Cinque Ports and two other ancient towns) as to the provision of the necessary ships and as to arranging for the herring sale at Yarmouth, and for other such purposes. The Guestling was rather a wider meeting, at which not merely the Brotherhood, but deputies from other associated towns were present for the discussion of subjects of common interest to all.

BROTHER-IN-LAW. The brother of a wife, or the husband of a sister.

There is no relationship, in the former case, between the husband and the brother-in-law, nor in the latter, between the brother and the husband of the sister: there is only affinity between them. See Vaugh. 302, 329.

BRUISE. In Medical Jurisprudence. An injury done with violence to the person, without breaking the skin: it is nearly synonymous with contusion (q. v.). 1 Ch. Pr. 38. See 4 C. & P. 381, 487, 558.

BUBBLE ACT. The name given to the statute 6 Geo. I. c. 18 (1719), intended "for restraining several extravagant and unwarrantable practices therein mentioned." See 2 P. Wms. 219.

BUCKET SHOP. An establishment nominally for the transaction of a stock exchange business, or business of a similar character, but really for the registration of bets or wagers, usually for small amounts, on the rise and fall of the prices of stocks, grain, oil, etc., there being no transfer or delivery of the stock or commodities nominally dealt in. State v. McGinnis, 138 N. C. 724, 51 S. E. 50, adopting definition of Cent. Dict.; Gatewood v. North Carolina, 203 U. S. 531, 27 Sup. Ct. 167, 51 L. Ed. 305. Ostensible brokerage offices in which transactions in stocks and commodities are closed by the payment of gains or losses, as determined by price quotations. No property is bought or sold. Report to Gov. Hughes of N. Y., 1909. See GAMBLING.

BUGGERY. See SODOMY.

BUILDING. An edifice, erected by art, and fixed upon or over the soil, composed of brick, marble, wood, or other proper substance, connected together, and designed for use in the position in which it is so fixed. Every building is an accessory to the soil, and is therefore real estate; it belongs to the owner of the soil; Cruise, Dig. tit. 1, s. 46; but a building placed on another's land by his permission is the personal estate of the builder; 2 Bla. Com. 17.

BUILDING ASSOCIATIONS. Co-operative associations, usually incorporated, established for the purpose of accumulating and loaning money to their members upon real estate security. It is usual for the members to make monthly payments upon each share of stock, and for those who borrow money from the association to make such payments in addition to interest on the sum borrowed. When the stock, by successive payments and the accumulation of interest, has reached par, the mortgages given by borrowing members are cancelled, and the non-borrowing members receive in cash the par of their stock. See Endlich, Build. Assoc.; Wrigl. Build. Assoc. The general design of such an association is the accumulation from fixed periodical contributions of its shareholders and from the profits derived from the investment of the same, of a fund to be applied from time to time in accommodating such shareholders with loans, to enable them to acquire and improve real estate by building thereon; the conditions of the loan being such that the liability incurred therefor may be gradually extinguished by the borrower's periodical contributions upon his stock, so that when the latter shall be fully paid up the amount paid shall be sufficient to cancel the indebtedness; State v. Loan Ass'n, 45 Minn. 154, 47 N. W. 540, 10 L. R. A. 752. It differs from an ordinary corporation among other ways in the fact that in an ordinary business corporation stock is subscribed and either paid for at the time, or if partly paid for it becomes the property of the subscriber subject to future calls, while in a building association the stock subscriber is not the out and out owner of the stock from the beginning. He pays thereon a monthly payment, and, when these monthly payments, with his increment of gains accrued, equal the par value of the share of stock he is entitled to receive that amount. If, in the meantime, he has borrowed on his stock, it by pledge or operation of the loan remains the property or quasi property of the corporation, and the loan is returned by the payment of interest and stock dues, penalties, etc., the repayment of the loan culminating at the same time the stock itself matures, at which time, in theory, the corporation, or a given series or issue of its stock, is liquidated—the non-borrowing stockholders have their stock redeemed and the borrowers have their loans cancelled; Cobe v. Lovan, 193 Mo. 235, 92 S. W. 93, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 439, 112 Am. St. Rep. 480.

That it has power to borrow money to pay its stockholders when their stock reaches its par value is held in North Hudson Mut. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Bank, 79 Wis. 31, 47 N. W. 300, 11 L. R. A. 845; that such power is implied when no statute denies it is held in Bohn v. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 135 Ia. 140, 112 N. W. 199, 124 Am. St. Rep. 263; Marion Trust Co. v. Inv. Co., 27 Ind. App. 451, 61 N. E. 688, 87 Am. St. Rep. 257. Other cases hold that a loan for the purpose of paying withdrawing members is ultra vires and void in the absence of an express borrowing power in the association; 22 Ch. D. 61; Standard Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Aldrich, 163 Fed. 216, 89 C. C. A. 646, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 393.

It has no power to transfer to another association the contract of a borrowing stockholder; Thomp. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n (2d ed.) 286; Barton v. Loan & Bldg. Ass'n, 114 Ind. 226, 16 N. E. 486, 5 Am. St. Rep. 608; Lovell v. Pratt, 163 Mo. 70, 63 S. W. 383. That it has such power in the absence of statutory prohibitions, is held in Bowlby v. Kline, 28 Ind. App. 659, 63 N. E. 723; Quein v. Smith, 108 Pa. 325.

In case of an advance by one loan association to take up a loan in another upon stock which has partly matured, the net amount of the loan is the sum still due, and not the face value of the loan, although the latter amount is charged on the books of the association and a credit as of an advance payment thereon given for the withdrawal value of the stock in the other association; Butson v. Sav. & Trust Co., 129 Ia. 370, 105 N. W. 645, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 98, 113 Am. St. Rep. 463.

One loaning money to a building association to satisfy the claims of withdrawing members, taking an assignment of mortgages of borrowing members as security, cannot hold the mortgages against the claims of a receiver of the association, since he is charged with knowledge of the want of power of the association to make the assignment; Standard Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Aldrich, 163 Fed. 216, 89 C. C. A. 646, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 393. A statute authorizing such associations to retire stock out of a portion of its current receipts, was held not to confer any power to give its notes to retiring stockholders; Appeal of Powell, 93 Mo. App. 296. Such an association may stipulate in a contract of loan for the payment of a monthly premium limited to a certain number of payments; Burkheimer v. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 59 W. Va. 209, 53 S. E. 372, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1047.

When its articles have been amended to conform to a statute providing for lower rates of interest, the association may not deny its benefits to members who have borrowed before the act was passed on the ground that the provisions of the amended articles do not refer to pre-existing contracts; St. John v. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 136 Ia. 448, 113 N. W. 863, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 503.

An absolute promise to mature its shares in a specified time is not changed to a conditional one dependent upon the success of the enterprise, by the shareholder's agreement, as expressed in the certificate of stock, to pay a specified monthly installment on each share until it matures or is withdrawn, and the provision of the by-laws accepted by him, that such installments shall be paid until each share is fully paid; Eastern Building & Loan Ass'n v. Williamson, 189 U. S. 122, 23 Sup. Ct. 527, 47 L. Ed. 735, following Vought v. Building & Loan Ass'n, 172 N. Y. 508, 65 N. E. 496, 92 Am. St. Rep. 761, and affirming Williamson v. Building & Loan Ass'n, 62 S. C. 390, 38 S. E. 616, 1008.

The ground that such a promise on the part of the association was ultra vires was held not available where the shareholder had fully performed his part of the contract; Assets Realization Co. v. Heiden, 215 Ill. 9, 74 N. E. 56; Eastern Building & Loan Ass'n v. Williamson, 189 U. S. 122, 23 Sup. Ct. 527, 47 L. Ed. 735; Floyd-Jones v. Anderson, 30 Mont. 351, 76 Pac. 751; Leahy v. Building & Loan Ass'n, 100 Wis. 555, 76 N. W. 625, 69 Am. St. Rep. 945; Hammerquist v. Savings & Loan Co., 15 S. D. 70, 87 N. W. 524.

But it has been held, where authority to issue stock having a fixed period of maturity was not expressly given by statute or by the articles or by-laws of the association, the ground of ultra vires may be set up by the association; O'Malley v. Building, Loan & Savings Ass'n, 92 Hun 572, 36 N. Y. Supp. 1016; McKean v. Building & Loan Ass'n, 10 Pa. Dist. R. 197; and to the same effect, King v. Building, Loan & Inv. Union, 170 Ill. 135, 48 N. E. 677; Schell v. Loan & Inv. Ass'n, 150 Mo. 103, 51 S. W. 406.

A stockholder who actively or passively concurs in the management of the affairs of a building association must bear his share of the losses during his membership resulting from such management; Browne v. Sanders, 20 D. C. 455.

In considering the question of usury in a loan from a building association, payments made by the borrower as dues are not to be considered as interest, as such payments are made in order to acquire an interest in the property of the association and not for the use of money; Tilley v. Building & Loan Ass'n, 52 Fed. 618; a premium bid for a loan cannot be allowed as a cloak for usury; International Building & Loan Ass'n v. Biering, 86 Tex. 476, 25 S. W. 622, 26 S. W. 39.

Fines imposed for default in payment of dues and interest cannot be collected by foreclosure of a mortgage given to secure payment of an amount borrowed, unless it has been agreed that this may be done; Bowen v. Building & Loan Ass'n, 51 N. J. Eq. 272, 28 Atl. 67.

BUILDING CONTRACT. A contract to erect a building subject to the acceptance or rejection of the architect and in strict accordance with the plans, does not make the architect's acceptance conclusive (there being no clause to that effect); Mercantile Trust Co. v. Hensey, 205 U. S. 298, 27 Sup. Ct. 535, 51 L. Ed. 811, 10 Ann. Cas. 572.

BUILDING PERMIT. A city, when authorized by its charter to control the construction and repair of all houses, may require a permit from it as a prerequisite to the erection of a building; Fellows v. City of Charleston, 62 W. Va. 665, 59 S. E. 623, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 737, 125 Am. St. Rep. 990, 13 Ann. Cas. 1185; Commissioners of Easton v. Covey, 74 Md. 262, 22 Atl. 266. But it cannot require buildings to conform in size, appearance, etc., to other buildings in the same neighborhood; Bostock v. Sams, 95 Md. 400, 52 Atl. 665, 59 L. R. A. 282, 93 Am. St. Rep. 394.

BUILDING RESTRICTION. When one makes deeds of different portions of a tract of land, each containing the same restriction upon the lot conveyed which is imposed as a part of a general plan for the benefit of the several lots, such a restriction not only imposes a liability upon the grantee of each lot as between him and the grantor, but it gives him a right in the nature of an easement which will be enforced in equity against the grantee of one of the other lots, although there is no direct contractual relation between the two. Through the common character of the deeds, the grantees are given an interest in a contractual stipulation which is used for their common benefit; Evans v. Foss, 194 Mass. 513, 80 N. E. 587, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1039, 11 Ann. Cas. 171, where the erection of a garage was held to be within a restriction forbidding the erection on the property of any building for shops or any other business objectionable to the neighborhood for dwelling houses. The maintenance of a hospital was enjoined where a covenant provided that the premises should not be leased for any noisome, obnoxious or offensive trade or business; 58 L. J. Ch. N. S. 83; 48 id. 339. An undertaker's establishment where bodies were received, kept and embalmed, funeral services and autopsies were held, and bodies dissected, was enjoined where the restriction provided that no trade or business offensive to the neighborhood should be carried on; Rowland v. Miller, 139 N. Y. 93, 34 N. E. 765, 22 L. R. A. 182. The location of a coal yard which received and broke up coal and separated it from the dust was enjoined under such a restrictive covenant; Barron v. Richard, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 96; as was the location of a large school for boys; 68 L. J. Ch. 8.

But such a covenant is held not, as a matter of law, to be violated by the erection of a three-story building with stores on the first floor and flats or apartments above; Hurley v. Brown, 44 App. Div. 480, 60 N. Y. Supp. 846; or by one for the sale of groceries and provisions; Tobey v. Moore, 130 Mass. 448; Evans v. Foss, 194 Mass. 513, 80 N. E. 587, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1039, 11 Ann. Cas. 171. Generally, such restrictions will be construed in favor of the free use of property; James v. Irvine, 141 Mich. 376, 104 N. W. 631.

That a house shall be set back a certain distance and shall correspond with the grantor's adjoining house is the benefit of the land, and not a personal covenant: its life is limited to the life of the first house erected on the granted premises; Welch v. Austin, 187 Mass. 256, 72 N. E. 972, 68 L. R. A. 189.

See EASEMENT; MUNICIPAL CORPORATION; POLICE POWER.

The state may limit the height of buildings to be erected in cities; Welch v. Swasey, 193 Mass. 364, 79 N. E. 745, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1160, 118 Am. St. Rep. 523; Cochran v. Preston, 108 Md. 220, 70 Atl. 113, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1163, 129 Am. St. Rep. 432, 15 Ann. Cas. 1048. It may permit them to be higher in the sections where there is a demand for office space than in the residential portions, though the streets in the former may be narrower than in the latter; Welch v. Swasey, 193 Mass. 364, 79 N. E. 745, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1160, 118 Am. St. Rep. 523. It may restrict the height of buildings adjacent to a certain square in a city, compensation being given to persons injured in their property rights; Attorney General v. Williams, 174 Mass. 476, 55 N. E. 77, affirmed in Williams v. Parker, 188 U. S. 491, 23 Sup. Ct. 440, 47 L. Ed. 559, where the statute was held not to be in conflict with the federal constitution.

A city may forbid the erection of any frame structure within the "fire limits"; O'Bryan v. Apartment Co., 128 Ky. 282, 108 S. W. 257, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 419; may require the removal of a wooden building within such limits; Davison v. City of Walla Walla, 52 Wash. 453, 100 Pac. 981, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 454, 132 Am. St. Rep. 983; may require buildings used for certain purposes to be equipped with fire escapes; Arnold v. Starch Co., 194 N. Y. 42, 86 N. E. 815, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 178; may refuse its consent to the repair of a wooden building within the fire limits which has been damaged by fire; Brady v. Ins. Co., 11 Mich. 425. The owner thereof in such case, it is said, must first be given opportunity to remove the building; Village of Louisville v. Webster, 108 IH. 418.

It may destroy a building infected with smallpox, as a nuisance; Sings v. City of Joliet, 237 Ill. 300, 86 N. E. 663, 22 L. R. A.

(N. S.) 1128, 127 Am. St. Rep. 323. It may prevent the moving of a wooden building into the city limits from a point outside; Red Lake Falls Milling Co. v. City of Thief River Falls, 109 Minn. 52, 122 N. W. 872, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 456, 18 Ann. Cas. 182; Griffin v. City of Gloversville, 67 App. Div. 403, 73 N. Y. Supp. 684; Kaufman v. Stein, 138 Ind. 49, 37 N. E. 333, 46 Am. St. Rep. 368.

BULK. Merchandise which is neither counted, weighed, nor measured.

A sale by bulk is a sale of a quantity of goods such as they are, without measuring, counting, or weighing. La. Civ. Code, art. 3522, n. 6.

As to contracts forbidding "sales in bulk" of a tradesman's entire stock, see SALES.

BULL (Lat. bulia, a stud or boss). A letter from the pope of Rome, written on parchment, to which is attached a metal seal impressed with the images of Saint Peter and Saint Paul, on either side of a cross. On the other side of the seal is the name of the pope, with the year of his pontificate. See SEAL; BULLÆ.

There are three kinds of apostolical rescripts—the brief, the signature, and the bull; which last is most commonly used in legal matters. Bulls may be compared to the edicts and letters-patents of secular princes: when the bull grants a favor, the seal is attached by means of silken strings; and when to direct execution to be performed, with flax cords. Bulls are written in Latin, in a round and Gothic hand. Ayliffe, Par. 132; Ayliffe, Pand. 21; Merlin, Répert.

BULLÆ. Metal seals used, chiefly in the southern countries of Europe, in place of wax, which would be affected by heat; also used in other parts of Europe and even in England. Usually of lead, but sometimes of gold. Encycl. Br.

BULLETIN. An official account of public transactions in matters of importance. In France, it is the registry of the laws.

BULLION. The term bullion is commonly applied to uncoined gold and silver, in the mass or lump.

BULLION FUND. A deposit of public money at the mint and its branches. The object of this fund is to enable the mint to make returns of coins to private depositors of bullion without waiting until such bullion is actually coined. If the bullion fund is sufficiently large, depositors are paid as soon as their bullion is melted and assayed and the value ascertained. It thus enables the mint to have a stock of coin on hand to pay depositors in advance. Such bullion becomes the property of the government, and, being subsequently coined, is available as a means of prompt payment to other depositors; Act of June 22, 1874, Rev. Stat. U. S. § 3545.

BUNDLE. To sleep on the same bed without undressing; applied to the custom of a man and woman, especially lovers, thus sleeping. A. & E. Ency. See Seagar v. Slig- erland, 2 Cal. (N. Y.) 219; Hollis v. Wells, 3 Clark (Pa.) 169.

BUOY. A piece of wood, or an empty barrel, or other thing, moored at a particular place and floating on the water, to show the place where it is shallow, to mark the channel, or to indicate the danger there is to navigation.

The act of congress approved the 28th September, 1850, enacts that all buoys shall be so colored and lettered that in passing up the coast or up a harbor, red buoys with even numbers shall be on the right, black buoys with uneven numbers on the left and with red and black stripes on either hand. In channels with alternate black and white stripes.

BURDEN OF PROOF. The duty of proving the facts in dispute on an issue raised between the parties in a cause. See People v. McCann, 16 N. Y. 66, 69 Am. Dec. 642; Ex parte Walls, 64 Ind. 461; Wilder v. Cowles, 100 Mass. 487.

Burden of proof is to be distinguished from prima facie evidence or a prima facie case. Generally, when the latter is shown, the duty imposed upon the party having the burden will be satisfied; but it is not necessarily so; Delano v. Bartlett, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 364; Tourtellot v. Rosebrook, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 460; Swallow v. State, 22 Ala. 20; Doty v. State, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 427; Com. v. McKie, 1 Gray (Mass.) 61, 61 Am. Dec. 410.

The burden of proof lies upon him who substantially asserts the affirmative of the issue; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 74; 3 M. & W. 510; but where the plaintiff grounds his case on negative allegations, he has the burden; 1 C. & P. 220; 5 B. & C. 758; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 81; Daugherty v. Deardorf, 107 Ind. 527, 8 N. E. 296. As a general rule the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to establish the facts alleged as the cause of action; Read v. Buffum, 79 Cal. 77, 21 Pac. 555, 12 Am. St. Rep. 131; Stoddard v. Rowe, 74 Ia. 670, 39 N. W. 84; Woolsey v. Jones, 84 Ala. 88, 4 South. 190; Brimberry v. R. Co., 78 Ga. 641, 3 S. E. 274; but in certain forms of action the burden may by the pleadings be shifted to the defendant.

In criminal cases, on the twofold ground that a prosecutor must prove every fact necessary to substantiate his charge against a prisoner, and that the law will presume innocence in the absence of convincing evidence to the contrary, the burden of proof, unless shifted by legislative interference, will fall on the prosecuting party, though in order to convict he must necessarily have recourse to negative evidence; 1 Tayl. Ev. 8th ed. §§ 113, 371; U. S. v. Gooding, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 460, 6 L. Ed. 693. The burden of proof is throughout on the government, to make out the whole case; and when a prima facie case is established, the burden of proof is not thereby shifted upon the defendant, and he is not bound to restore himself to that presumption of innocence in which he was at the commencement of the trial; State v. Middleham, 62 Ia. 150, 17 N. W. 446; Wharton v. State, 73 Ala. 366; People v. Fairchild, 48 Mich. 31, 11 N. W.

773. As to the burden of proof where the defence of insanity is set up, see INSANITY.

BUREAU (Fr.). A place where business is transacted.

In the classification of the ministerial officers of government, and the distribution of duties among them, a bureau is understood to be a division of one of the great departments of which the secretaries or chief officers constitute the cabinet.

BURGAGE. A species of tenure, described by old law-writers as but tenure in socage, where the king or other person was lord of an ancient borough, in which the tenements were held by a rent certain.

Such boroughs had, and still have, certain peculiar customs connected with the tenure, which distinguished it from the ordinary socage tenure. These customs are known by the name of Borough-English; and they alter the law in respect of descent, as well as of dower, and the power of devising. By it the youngest son inherits the lands of which his father died seised. A widow, in some boroughs, has dower in respect to all the tenements which were her husband's; in others, she has a moiety of her husband's lands so long as she remains unmarried; and with respect to devises, in some places, such lands only can be devised as were acquired by purchase; in others, estates can only be devised for life; 2 Bla. Com. 82; Glanv. b. 7, c. 3; Litt. § 162; Cro. Car. 411; 1 P. Wms. 63; Fitzh. N. B. 150; Cro. Eliz. 415.

The tenure at a money rent would become the typical tenure of a burgage tenement; Maitl. Domesday & Beyond 198.

BURGATOR. One who breaks into houses or enclosed places, as distinguished from one who committed robbery in the open country. Spelman, Gloss. Burglaria.

BURGESS. A magistrate of a borough. Blount. An officer who discharges the same duties for a borough that a mayor does for a city. The word is used in this sense in Pennsylvania.

An inhabitant of a town; a freeman; one legally admitted as a member of a corporation. Spelman, Gloss. A qualified voter. 3 Steph. Com. 192. A representative in parliament of a town or borough. 1 Bla. Com. 174.

BURGESS ROLL. A list of those entitled to new rights under the act of 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 74; 3 Steph. Com. 34, 38.

BURGHMOTE. In Saxon Law. A court of justice held twice a year, or oftener, in a burg. All the thanes and free owners above the rank of ceorls were bound to attend without summons. The bishop or lord held the court. Spence, Eq. Jur.

BURGLAR. One who commits burglary. He that by night breaketh and entereth into the dwelling-house of another. Willmot, Burgl. 3.

BURGLARIOUSLY. A technical word which must be introduced into an indictment for burglary at common law. The essential words are "feloniously and burglariously broke and entered the dwelling-house in the night-time"; Whart. Cr. Pl. § 265. No other word at common law will answer the purpose, nor will any circumlocution be sufficient; 4 Co. 39; 5 id. 121; Cro. Eliz. 920; Bacon, Abr. Indictment (G, C); State v. McClung, 35 W. Va. 280, 13 S. E. 654. But there is this distinction: when a statute punishes an offence by its legal designation without enumerating the acts which constitute it, then it is necessary to use the terms which technically charge the offence named at common law. But this is not necessary when the statute describes the whole offence, and the indictment charges the crime in the words of the statute. Thus, an indictment which charges the statute crime of burglary is sufficient, without averring that the crime was committed "burglariously;" Tully v. Com., 4 Metc. (Mass.) 357. See Portwood v. State, 29 Tex. 47, 94 Am. Dec. 258; People v. Bosworth, 64 Hun 72, 19 N. Y. Supp. 114.

BURGLARY. The breaking and entering the house of another in the night-time, with intent to commit a felony therein, whether the felony be actually committed or not. Co. 3d Inst. 63; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 549; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 38, s. 1; 4 Bla. Com. 224; 2 Russ. Cr. 2; State v. Wilson, 1 N. J. L. 441, 1 Am. Dec. 216; Com. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 247; 1 Whart Cr. L. (9th ed.) § 758; Allen v. State, 40 Ala. 334, 91 Am. Dec. 477.

In what place a burglary can be committed. It must, in general, be committed in a mansion-house, actually occupied as a dwelling; but if it be left by the owner animo revertendi, though no person resides in it in his absence, it is still his mansion; Post. 77; Com. v. Brown, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 207; Com. v. Barney, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 478. See DWELLING-HOUSE. But burglary may be committed in a church, at common law. And under the statutes of some of the states, it has been held that it could be committed in a store over which were rooms in which the owner lived; Quinn v. People, 71 N. Y. 561, 27 Am. Rep. 87. A shoeshop in a room connected with the dwelling is a part of it; People v. Dupree, 98 Mich. 26, 56 N. W. 1046; a wheat house; Bass v. State, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 444; a railroad depot; State v. Bishop, 51 Vt. 287, 31 Am. Rep. 690; a stable; Orrell v. People, 94 Ill. 456, 34 Am. Rep. 241; but not a mill-house, seventy-five yards from the owner's dwelling, and not shown to be appurtenant; 3 Cox 581; Co. 3d Inst. 64. It must be the dwelling-house of another person; 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 90; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 502. A storehouse in which a clerk sleeps to protect the property is a dwelling; State v. Pressley, 90 N. C. 730; U. S. v. Johnson, 2 Cra. C. C. 21, Fed. Cas. No. 15,485.

At what time it must be committed. The offence must be committed in the night; for in the daytime there can be no burglary; 4 Bla. Com. 224; 1 C. & K. 77; Lewis v. State, 16 Conn. 32; State v. Bancroft, 10 N. H. 105. For this purpose it is deemed night when by the light of the sun a person cannot clearly discern the face or countenance of another; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 550; Co. 3d Inst. 62; 1 C. & P. 297; 7 Dane, Abr. 134. This rule, it is evident, does not apply to moonlight; 4 Bla. Com. 224; 2 Russ. Cr. 32; State v. Bancroft, 10 N. H. 105; Thomas v. State, 5 How (Miss.) 20; State v. McKnight, 111 N. C. 690, 16 S. E. 319. The breaking and entering need not be done the same night; 1 R. & R. 417; but it is necessary that the breaking and entering should be in the night-time: for if the breaking be in daylight and the entry in the night, or vice versa, it is said, it will not be burglary; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 551; 2 Russ. Cr. 32. But quære, Wilmot, Burgl. 9. See Com., Dig. Justices, P. 2; 2 Chit. Cr. Law 1092. In some states by statute the breaking and entering in the daytime with intent to commit a misdemeanor or felony is burglary; State v. Miller, 3 Wash. 131, 28 Pac. 375; State v. Hutchinson, 111 Mo. 257, 20 S. W. 34.

The means used. There must be both a breaking and an entry or an exit. An actual breaking takes place when the burglar breaks or removes any part of the house, or the fastenings provided for it, with violence; 1 Bish. Cr. Law 91. Breaking a window, taking a pane of glass out, by breaking or bending the nails or other fastenings; 1 C. & P. 300; 9 id. 44; 1 R. & R. 341, 499; Walker v. State, 52 Ala. 376; cutting and tearing down a netting of twine nailed over an open window; Com. v. Stephenson, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 354; Sims v. State, 136 Ind. 358, 36 N. E. 278; raising a latch, where the door is not otherwise fastened; 8 C. & P. 747; Coxe 439; Curtis v. Hubbard, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 336; State v. Newbegin, 25 Me. 500; Bass v. State, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 444; Timmons v. State, 34 Ohio St. 426, 32 Am. Rep. 376; State v. O'Brien, 81 Ia. 93, 46 N. W. 861; picking open a lock with a false key; putting back the lock of a door, or the fastening of a window, with an instrument; lowering a window fastened only by a wedge or weight; 1 R. & R. 355, 451; State v. Moore, 117 Mo. 395, 22 S. W. 1086; Walker v. State, 52 Ala. 376; or opening a door when not locked or bolted; Grimes v. State, 77 Ga. 762, 4 Am. St. Rep. 112; contra, Williams v. State (Tex.) 13 S. W. 609; State v. Reid, 20 Ia. 413; Timmons v. State, 34 Ohio St. 426, 32 Am. Rep. 376; People v. Nolan, 22 Mich. 229; Carter v. State, 68 Ala. 96; Lyons v. People, 68 Ill. 271; turning the key when the door is locked in the inside, or unloosing any other fastening which the owner has provided; lifting a trap-door; 1 Mood. 377; but see 4 C. & P. 231; are several instances of actual breaking. But removing a loose plank in a partition wall was held not a breaking; Com. v. Trimmer, 1 Mass. 476. According to the Scotch law, entering a house by means of the true key, while in the door, or when it had been stolen, is a breaking; Allison, Pr. 284. See 1 Swint. Just. 433.

Constructive breakings occur when the burglar gains an entry by fraud; 1 Cr. & D. 202; Ducher v. State, 18 Ohio, 308; State v. Henry, 31 N. C. 463; Rolland v. Commonwealth, 82 Pa. 306; by conspiracy or threats; 1 Russ. Cr. Graves ed. 792; 2 id. 2; State v. Rowe, 98 N. C. 629, 4 S. E. 506; by bribing a servant; by knocking at the door, and, when opened, rushing in; by gaining admittance on pretense of wishing to speak to some one within; by gaining admittance by threats; Odgers, Com. L. 383. When one of three breaks and enters, another watches at the door, and a third stands farther off to give notice if help comes, it is burglary in all; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 555.

Where one is let into a store in the night-time on pretence of making a purchase and while in he unbolts a door and admits his accomplice, who secretes himself on the inside and afterwards steals, both may be convicted of breaking and entering; Com. v. Lourey, 158 Mass. 18, 32 N. E. 940. Where a window is slightly raised in the daytime so as to prevent the bolt from being effectual, it would not prevent the subsequent breaking and entering in the night-time through the window from being burglary; People v. Dupree, 98 Mich. 26, 56 N. W. 1046. The breaking of an inner door of the house will be sufficient to constitute a burglary; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 553; 8 C. & P. 747; People v. Fralick, Lalor's Sup. (N. Y.) 63; 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 97; or the opening of an inner closed door; 2 East, P. C. 48; and it is not necessary that such breaking be accompanied with an intention to commit a felony in the very room entered; Hartmann v. Com., 5 Pa. 66. Entry through an open door in the night-time with intent to steal is not burglary; Costello v. State (Tex.) 21 S. W. 360.

Any, the least entry, with the whole or any part of the body, hand, or foot, or with any instrument or weapon, introduced for the purpose of committing a felony, will be sufficient to constitute the offence; Co. 3d Inst. 64; 4 Bla. Com. 227; Bacon, Abr. Burglary (B); Com. Dig. Justices, P. 4; Allen v. State, 40 Ala. 334, 91 Am. Dec. 477; Franco v. State, 42 Tex. 276; Com. v. Glover, 111 Mass. 395; Harris v. People, 44 Mich. 305, 6 N. W. 677. Where a person enters a chimney of a storehouse intending to go down such into the store to steal, he is guilty of burglary; Olds v. State, 97 Ala. 81, 12 South. 409. But the introduction of an instrument, in the act of breaking the house, will not be sufficient entry unless it be in-introduced for the purpose of committing a felony; 1 Leach 406; 1 Mood. 183. The whole physical frame need not pass within; 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 92; 1 Gabb. Cr. Law 176.

There was, at common law, doubt whether breaking out of a dwelling-house would constitute burglary; 4 Bla. Com. 227; 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 540; but it was declared to be so by stat. 12 Anne, c. 7, § 3, and 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, § 11. The better opinion seems to be that it was not so at common law; Rolland v. Com., 82 Pa. 324, 22 Am. Rep. 758; Whart. Cr. L. 9th ed. § 771; contra, State v. Ward, 43 Conn. 489, 21 Am. Rep. 665. As to what acts constitute a breaking out, see 1 Jebb 99; 8 C. & P. 747; 1 Russ. Cr. (Graves ed.) 792; 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 540.

The intention. The intent of the breaking and entry must be felonious; if a felony, however, be committed, the act will be prima facie evidence of an intent to commit it; 1 Gabb. Cr. Law 192. See Alexander v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 359, 20 S. W. 756; State v. Scripture, 42 N. H. 485; People v. Young, 65 Cal. 225, 3 Pac. 813. See State v. Colter, 6 R. I. 195; Com. v. Tuck, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 356; Lowder v. State, 63 Ala. 143, 35 Am. Rep. 9. If the breaking and entry be with an intention to commit a trespass, or a mere misdemeanor, and nothing further is done, the offence will not be burglary; Com. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 245; State v. Cooper, 16 Vt. 551; People v. Urquidas, 96 Cal. 239, 31 Pac. 52; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 560.

See HAMOSOCNE; BREAKING; CREPUSCULUM.

It need not appear that the ulterior felony was actually committed. And if a tramp enters for shelter and is tempted to steal, it is not burglary; Odgers, Com. L. 384.

BURGOMASTER. In Germany, this is the title of an officer who performs the duties of a mayor.

BURH. For a long time after the Germanic invasion of England, it meant a fastness. The hill-top that has been fortified is a burh. Very often it has given its name to a neighboring village; it is the future borough. The entrenchment around a great man's house was a burh. Early in the 10th century a burh came to have many men in it and usually a moot was held there—a burh-gemot. See Maitland, Domesday and Beyond, 183.

BURIAL. The act of interring the dead. No burial is lawful unless made in conformity with the local regulations; and when a dead body has been found, it cannot be lawfully buried until the coroner has holden an inquest over it. In England it is the practice for coroners to issue warrants to bury, after a view. See DEAD BODY; CEMETERY.

BURLAW COURTS. In Scotch Law. Assemblages of neighbors to elect burlaw men, or those who were to act as rustic judges in determining disputes in their neighborhood. Skene; Bell, Diet.

BURNING. See ACCIDENT; FIRE.

BURNING IN THE HAND. When a layman was admitted to benefit of the clergy he was burned in the hand, "in the brawn of the left thumb," in order that he might not claim the benefit twice. This practice was finally abolished by stat. 19 Geo. III. c. 74; though before that time the burning was often done with a cold iron; 12 Mod. 448; 4 Bla. Com. 267. See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

BURYING-GROUND. A place appropriated for depositing the dead; a cemetery. In Massachusetts, burying-grounds cannot be appropriated to roads without the consent of the owners. Mass. Gen. Stat. 244. So in Pennsylvania by acts passed in 1849 and 1861. See CEMETERY.

BUSHEL. The Winchester bushel, established by the 13 Will. III. c. 5 (1701) was made the standard of grain. A cylindrical vessel, eighteen and a half inches in diameter, and eight inches deep inside, contains a bushel; the capacity is 2145.42 cubic inches. The bushel established by the 5 & 6 Geo. IV. c. 74, is to contain 2218.192 cubic inches. This measure has been adopted in many of the United States. In other states the capacity varies.

See the subject discussed in report of the Secretary of State of the United States to the Senate, Feb. 22, 1821.

BUSINESS. That which occupies the time, attention, and labor of men for the purpose of livelihood or profit, but it is not necessary that it should be the sole occupation or employment. It embraces everything about which a person can be employed; Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U. S. 107, 31 Sup. Ct. 342, 55 L. Ed. 389, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1312. The doing of a single act pertaining to a particular business will not be considered engaging in or carrying on the business, yet a series of such acts would be so considered. Lemons v. State, 50 Ala. 130; People v. Com'rs of Taxes of City of New York, 23 N. Y. 244.

It is a word of large and indefinite import; the legislature could not well have used a larger word. Jessel, M. R., in 15 Ch. D. 258. See PLACE OF BUSINESS; DOMICIL.

BUSINESS HOURS. The time of the day during which business is transacted. In respect to the time of presentment and demand of bills and notes, business hours generally range through the whole day down to the hours of rest in the evening, except when the paper is payable at a bank or by a banker; Cayuga County Bank v. Hunt, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 635. See Flint v. Rogers, 15 Me.

67; Lunt v. Adams, 17 id. 230; Byles, Bills 283.

The term "usual business hours" does not mean the time an employer may require his employe's services, but those of the community generally; Derosa v. R. Co., 18 Minn. 154 (Gil. 119).

See TIME.

BUTLERAGE. A certain portion of every cask of wine imported by an alien, which the king's butler was allowed to take.

Called also prisage: 2 Bulstr. 254. Anciently, it might be taken also of wine imported by a subject. 1 Bla. Com. 315; Termes de la Ley; Cowell.

BUTT. A measure of capacity, equal to one hundred and eight gallons; also denotes a measure of land. Jac. Dict.; Cowell. See MEASURE.

BUTTALS. The bounding lines of land at the end; abuttals, which see.

BUTTS. The ends or short pieces of arable lands left in ploughing. Cowell.

BUTTS AND BOUND. The lines bounding an estate. The angles or points where these lines change their direction. Cowell; Spelman, Gloss. See ABUTTALS.

BUYING TITLES. The purchase of the rights of a disseisee to lands of which a third person has the possession.

When a deed is made by one who, though having a legal right to land, is at the time of the conveyance disseised, the sale is void as a general rule of the common law: the law will not permit any person to buy a quarrel, or, as it is commonly termed, a pretended title. Such a conveyance is an offence at common law and by a statute of 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9. This rule has been generally adopted in the United States, and is affirmed by statute in some states; 3 Washb. R. P. *596. In the following states the act is unlawful, and the parties are subject to various penalties in the different states: in Connecticut, Hinman v. Hinman, 4 Conn. 575; Georgia, Helms v. May, 29 Ga. 124; Indiana, Webb v. Thompson, 23 Ind. 432; Galbreath v. Doe, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 366; Kentucky, *Wash v. BY. Near, beside, passing in presence, and it also may be used as exclusive. Rankin v. Woodworth, 3 P. & W. (Pa.) 48.

When used descriptively in a grant it does not mean in immediate contact with, but near to the object to which it relates. It is a relative term, meaning, when used in land patents, very unequal and different distances; Wilson v. Inloes, 6 Gill (Md.) 121.

BY-BIDDING. Bidding with the connivance or at the request of the vendor of goods by auction, without an intent to purchase, for the purpose of obtaining a higher price than would otherwise be obtained.

By-bidders are also called puffers, which see. It has been said that the practice is probably allowable if it be done fairly, with an intention only to prevent a sale at an unduly low price; Latham's Ex'rs v. Morrow, 6 B. Monr. (Ky.) 630; Veazie v. Williams, 3 Sto. 622, Fed. Cas. No. 16,907; 15 M. & W. 371; Steele v. Ellmaker, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 86. A bidder is required to act in good faith and any combination to prevent a fair competition would avoid the sale; 3 B. & B. 116; Martin v. Ranlett, 5 Rich. (S. C.) 541, 57 Am. Dec. 770; Barnes v. Nays, 88 Ga. 696, 16 S. E. 67; Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195; Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 153, 12 L. Ed. 1018. See Bm; AUCTION.

Lord Mansfield held that the employment of a single puffer was a fraud; Cowp. 395; this rule was afterwards relaxed, in equity only, so as to allow a single bidder; 12 Ves. 477. The rule was stated in L. R. 1 Ch. 10, to be, that a single puffer will vitiate a sale in law, but may be allowed in equity; though either at law or in equity, such bidding is permissible upon notice at the sale. By 30 and 31 Vict. c. 48, the rule in equity was declared to be the same as at law. See L. R. 9 Eq. 60. Lord Mansfield's opinion was followed in Appeal of Pennock, 14 Pa. 446, 53 Am. Dec. 561, per Gibson, C. J., overruling Steele v. Ellmaker, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 86; Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195; Baham v. Bach, 13 La. 287, 33 Am. Dec. 561. In New Jersey it seems that if there is a bona fide bid next before that of the buyer, the bidding of puffers will not avoid the sale (so held also in Veazie v. Williams, 3 Story 611, Fed. Cas. No. 16,907); but it is intimated that it would be a better rule to forbid puffing; National Bank of the Metropolis v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 159. Kent favors Lord Mansfield's rule; 2 Kent *540. The employment of a puffer to enhance the price of property sold is a fraud; Fisher v. HERSHEY, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 373. So held in Caldwell v. U. S. 8 How. (U. S.) 378, 12 L. Ed. 1115. Exceptions to the rule may occur when it does not appear that the buyer paid more than the value of the property or than he had determined to bid; Tomlinson v. Savage, 41 N. C. 430. A purchaser thus misled must restore the property as soon as he discovers the fraud; Backenstoss v. Stahler's Adm'rs, 33 Pa. 251, 75 Am. Dec. 592; Veazie v. Williams, 3 Story 611, 631, Fed. Cas. No. 16,907. In Phippen v. Stickney, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 384, the validity of the sale is held to depend upon the animus with which the puffing is carried on. Where a sale is advertised to be "without reserve" or "positive," the secret employment of by-bidders renders the sale voidable by the buyer; Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am. Rep. 332.

BY BILL. Actions commenced by capias instead of by original writ were said to be by bill. 3 Bla. Com. 285, 286. See Harkness v. Harkness, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 213.

The usual course of commencing an action in the King's Bench was by a bill of Middlesex. In an action commenced by bill it is not necessary to notice the form or nature of the action; 1 Chit. Pl. 283.

BY ESTIMATION. A term used in conveyances. In sales of land it not unfrequently occurs that the property is said to contain a certain number of acres by estimation, or so many acres, more or less. When these expressions are used, if the land fall short by a small quantity, the purchaser will receive no relief. In one case of this kind, the land fell short two-fifths, and the purchaser received no relief; Ketchum v. Stout, 20 Ohio 453; Stull v. Hurtt, 9 Gill (Md.) 446; Jolliffe v. Hite, 1 Call (Va.) 301, 1 Am. Dec. 519; Stebbins v. Eddy, 4 Mas. 419, Fed. Cas. No. 13,342; Jones's Devises v. Carter, 4 H. & M. (Va.) 184; Boar v. McCormick, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 166; Mann v. Pearson, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 37; Howe v. Bass, 2 Mass. 382, 3 Am. Dec. 59; Snow v. Chapman, 1 Root (Conn.) 528. The meaning of these words has never been precisely ascertained by judicial decision. See Sugden, Vend. 231, where the author applies the rule to contracts in fieri. But this distinction was not accepted in Noble v. Googins, 99 Mass. 234.

See MORE OR LESS; SUBDIVISION.

BY-LAW MEN. In an ancient deed, certain parties are described as "yeomen and by-law men for this present year in Easinguold." 6 Q. B. 60.

They appear to have been men appointed for some purpose of limited authority by the other inhabitants, as the name would suggest, under by-laws of the corporation appointing.

BY-LAWS. Rules and ordinances made by a corporation for its own government. See Drake v. R. Co., 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 539. The office of a by-law is to regulate the conduct and define the duties of the members towards the corporation and among themselves; Flint v. Pierce, 99 Mass. 70, 96 Am. Dec. 691. A by-law was originally a town law, from "by" the Scandinavian word for town. So the Anglo-Saxon bylage, a private law. Thomp. Corp. § 938. As to the analogy between by-law and ordinance, see 34 Am. Dec. 627, n.; Dillon, Munc. Corp. § 307. The power to make by-laws is usually conferred by express terms of the charter creating the corporation. When not expressly granted, it is given by implication, and it is incident to the very existence of a corporation; Brice, Ultra Vires (3d Ed.) 6; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 491. When there is an express grant, limited to certain cases and for certain purposes, the corporate power of legislation is confined to the objects specified, all others being excluded by implication; 2 P. Wms. 207; Ang. Corp. 177. The power of making by-laws, if the charter is silent, resides in the members of the corporation; Union Bank of Maryland v. Ridgely, 1 Harr. & G. (Md.) 324; 4 Burr. 2515; 6 Bro. P. C. 519; Morton Gravel Road Co. v. Wysong, 51 Ind. 4; People v. Throop, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 183; State v. Ferguson, 33 N. H. 424; and the power to repeal them also exists; Bank of Holly Springs v. Pinson, 58 Miss. 4215, 38 Am. Rep. 330; 7 Dowl. & R. 267; Smith v. Nelson, 18 Vt. 511.

By-laws, when contrary to the Constitution or laws of the state or the U. S. are void whether the charter authorizes the making of such by-law or not; because no legislature can grant power larger than that which it possesses; Coates v. City of New York, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 585; Stuyvesant v. City of New York, id. 604; First Nat. Bank v. Lanier, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 369, 20 L. Ed. 172; Jay Bridge Corporation v. Woodman, 31 Me. 573; In re Butcher's Beneficial Ass'n, 35 Pa. 151; People v. Fire Department, 31 Mich. 458; State v. Curtis, 9 Nev. 325; 1 Q. B. D. 12. They must not be inconsistent with the charter; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires, 15.

By-laws must be reasonable; Cartan v. Benevolent Society, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 20; Com. v. Gill, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 228; State v. Merchants' Exchange, 2 Mo. App. 96; and not retrospective; People v. Crockett, 9 Cal. 112; People v. Fire Department, 31 Mich. 458; they bind the members; Cummings v. Webster, 43 Me. 192; Weatherly v. Medical & Surgical Society, 76 Ala. 567; Kent v. Mining Co., 78 N. Y. 179; Harrington v. Benevolent Ass'n, 70 Ga. 341; Flint v. Pierce, 99 Mass. 68, 96 Am. Dec. 691; who are presumed to have notice of them; Cummings

v. Webster, 43 Me. 192; Village of Buffalo v. Webster, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 100; Clark v. Life Ass'n, 14 App. D. C. 154, 43 L. R. A. 390; Purdy v. Life Ass'n, 101 Mo. App. 91, 74 S. W. 486; but a by-law void as against strangers or non-assenting members, may be good as a contract against assenting members: Slee v. Bloom, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 456, 10 Am. Dec. 273; Cooper v. Frederick, 9 Ala. 738; Davis v. Proprietors of Meeting-House, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 321. See State v. Overton, 24 N. J. L. 440, 61 Am. Dec. 671. It has been held that third parties dealing with corporations are not bound to take notice of by-laws; Fay v. Noble, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 1; Wild v. Bank, 3 Mas. 505, Fed. Cas. No. 17,646; see Samuel v. Holladay, Woolw. 400, Fed. Cas. No. 12,288, where a distinction was raised between by-laws made by the corporation and those made by the directors, so far as relates to notice to third parties; but, contra, Adrian v. Roome, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 399.

See Williston, 3 Sel. Essays on Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 213.

But it is said that where third persons who deal with a corporation know its course of business and follow a prescribed regulation, it will be presumed that they dealt with reference thereto; Thomp. Corp. Sec. 492. A court will not take judicial notice of the by-laws of a corporation; Haven v. Asylum for Insane, 13 N. H. 532, 38 Am. Dec. 512. Unless required by statute it is not necessary that the by-laws of a private corporation should be in writing; Knights and Ladies of America v. Weber, 101 Ill. App. 488.

A by-law may be created and made binding upon the members by custom; Stafford v. Banking Co., 16 Ohio Cir. Ct. 50.

A by-law which is acquiesced in for eleven years must be presumed to be regularly adopted; Marsh v. Mathias, 19 Utah, 350, 56 Pac. 1074; and by-laws adopted by stockholders but not by an expressed vote of the directors will be considered as adopted by the directors, their conduct indicating that they regarded them as the by-laws of the corporation; Graebner v. Post, 119 Wis. 392, 96 N. W. 783, 100 Am. St. Rep. 890.

In England the term by-law includes any order, rule or regulation made by any local authority or statutory corporation subordinate to Parliament; 1 Odgers, C. L. 91.

Under some circumstances an action may be brought upon by-laws against members; Thomp. Corp. § 949.

BY THE BYE. Without process. A declaration is said to be filed by the bye when it is filed against a party already in the custody of the court under process in another suit. This might have been done, formerly, where the party was under arrest and technically in the custody of the court; and even giving common bail was a sufficient custody in the King's Bench; 1 Sellon, Pr. 228; 1 Tidd, Pr. 419. It is no longer allowed; Archbold, New Pr. 293.

C

C. The third letter of the alphabet. It was used among the Romans to denote condemnation, being the initial letter of condemno. See A.

In Rhode Island as late as 1785 it was branded on the forehead as part of the punishment for counterfeiting; Anderson, Dict. Law.

C. A. V. See CUBA ADVISARI VULT.

C. C. An abbreviation of cepi corpus, I have taken his body.

C. C.; B. B. I have taken his body; bail bond entered. See CAPIAS AD RESPONDENDUM.

C. C. & C. I have taken his body and he is held.

C. F. & I. Letters used in British contracts for cost, freight and insurance, indicating that the price fixed covers not only cost but freight and insurance to be paid by the seller; Benj. Sales, § 887; L. R. 8 Ex. 179. The invoice gives the buyer credit for the freight he will have to pay on delivery of the goods; L. R. 5 H. L. 395, 406. A contract for a shipment of iron to a port C. F.

& I. does not of itself import a delivery at that port; 7 H. & N. 574.

C. O. D. Collect on delivery. Where goods shipped are thus marked, the carrier in addition to his ordinary liabilities, and responsibilities is to collect the amount specified by the consignor, and for failure to return to him, either the price or the goods, he has a right of action on the contract against the carrier. See United States Exp. Co. v. Keefer, 59 Ind. 264; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 73 Me. 278; American Merchants' Union Exp. Co. v. Schier, 55 Ill. 140; Collender v. Dinsmore, 55 N. Y. 206, 14 Am. Rep. 224.

These initials have acquired a fixed and determinate meaning, which courts and juries may recognize from their general information; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 73 Me. 278.

The weight of authority is said by Williston (Sales § 279) to support the view that possession only is to be retained by the seller until the price is paid, and that property passes immediately on delivery to the carrier, which view he prefers, citing U. S. v. Exp. Co., 119 Fed. 240; Pilgreen v. State, 71 Ala. 368; City of Carthage v. Munsell, 203 Ill. 474, 67 N. E. 831; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 98 Me. 464, 57 Atl. 798; Higgins v. Murray, 73 N. Y. 252; Coleman v. Lytle, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 44, 107 S. W. 562. That property does not pass, see The Robert W. Parsons, 191 U. S. 41, 24 Sup. Ct. 8, 48 L. Ed. 43; State v. Exp. Co., 118 Ia. 447, 92 N. W. 66; State v. Wingfield, 115 Mo. 428, 22 S. W. 363, 37 Am. St. Rep. 406; *State v. A. 429. See also Harlan, J., dissenting, in O'Neil v. Vermont, 144 U. S. 323, 12 Sup. Ct. 393, 36 L. Ed. 450. See cases collected in 4 Col. L. Rev. 541, by Prof. Gregory.

See SALES; DELIVERY.

CABALLERIA. In Spanish Law. A quantity of land, varying in extent in different provinces. In those parts of the United States which formerly belonged to Spain, it is a lot of one hundred feet front, two hundred feet depth, and equivalent to five peonias. 2 White, New Recop. 49; 12 Pet. (U. S.) 444, n.; Escriche, Dicc. Raz.

CABINET. Certain officers who, taken collectively, form a council or advisory board; as the cabinet of the president of the United States, which is composed of the secretary of state, the secretary of the treasury, the secretary of the interior, the secretary of war, the secretary of the navy, the secretary of agriculture, the attorney-general, the postmaster-general, the secretary of commerce and the secretary of labor. See DEPARTMENTS.

"The president—not the cabinet—is responsible for all the measures of the administration, and whatever is done by one of the heads of department is considered as done by the president, through the proper executive agent;" 1 Cooley's Bla. Com. 232. The cabinet, as such, has no legal existence. In passing the act (1913) creating the department of labor, a provision that the incumbent should "be a member of the cabinet" was stricken out.

In case of the removal, death, resignation or inability of both the president and vice-president of the United States, then the members of the cabinet shall act as president until such disability is removed or a president elected, in the following order: the secretary of state, secretary of the treasury, secretary of war, attorney-general, postmaster-general, secretary of the navy, and secretary of the interior; 24 Stat. L. p. 1. No provision is made for the succession of the remaining (and more recently created) secretaries.

These officers are the heads of their respective departments; and by the constitution (art. 2, sec. 2) the president may require the opinion in writing of these officers upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective departments. These officers respectively have, under different acts of congress, the power of appointing many inferior officers charged with duties relating to their departments. See Const. art. 2, sec. 2.

The cabinet meets frequently at the executive mansion, by direction of the president. No record of its doings is kept; and it has, as a body, no legal authority. Its action is advisory merely; and the president and heads of departments in the execution of their official duties may disregard the advice of the cabinet and take the responsibility of independent action.

See LERNED, The President's Cabinet.

In Great Britain, the members of the Ministry are the heads of various executive departments of the government. The Prime Minister and his associates, having been selected from the party in power in the House of Commons, may be said to be in control of the House. If they lose their majority in the House, they resign office in a body and a new Ministry is then chosen from the new party in power.

The head of the Cabinet and of the Ministry is the Prime Minister, who is selected by the Crown. He chooses his colleagues, but his choice really extends rather to the division of offices and to the choice of ministers; he is in effect limited to the prominent parliamentary leaders of his own party. He almost invariably holds the office of First Lord of the Treasury, unless he is a Peer, and then that office is held by the government leader of the House of Commons. His resignation dissolves the Cabinet. Other members of the Cabinet are: Lord Chancellor; the Chancellor of the Exchequer; the five Secretaries of State; the First Lord of the Admiralty; the Lord President of the Council; the Lord Privy Seal; the Attorney General; the Presidents of the Board of Trade, the Local Government Board and the Board of Education (of late years); the Chief Secretary for Ireland (except when the Lord Lieutenant is a member); the Secretary for Scotland; and the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (usually). The President of the Board of Agriculture, and the Postmaster General are often members; the First Commissioner of Works and the Lord Chancellor of Ireland (occasionally). The tendency now is said to be towards including the head of any considerable branch of the administration. Lowell, Gov. of Engl.

The king, under the British constitution, is irresponsible; or, as the phrase is, the king can do no wrong. (See that title.) The real responsibility of government in that country, therefore, rests with his ministers, some of whom constitute the cabinet. The king may dismiss his ministers if they do not possess his confidence; but they are seldom dismissed by the king. They ordinarily resign when they cannot command a majority in favor of their measures in the house of commons.

CABOTAGE. A nautical term from the Spanish, denoting strictly navigation from cape to cape along the coast without going out into the open sea. In International Law, cabotage is identified with coasting-trade so that it means navigating and trading along the coast between the ports thereof. In construing this term in commercial treaties and International Law no consideration need be given to the fact that municipal laws sometimes attach a meaning absolutely different from that it has or can have in International Law.

It is the universally recognized law of nations that every littoral state can exclude foreign merchantmen from the cabotage within the maritime belt, just as it can exclude foreigners from the fisheries therein.

In commercial treaties the meaning of cabotage has been stretched so as to exclude "sea-trade between any two ports of the same country, whether on the same coast or different coasts (cabotage petit or grand cabotage), provided always that the different coasts are all of them the coasts of the same country as a political and geographical unit." Thus Russia excludes foreigners from trade between Russian ports and Vladivostok. The United States makes a further extension of the word so as to exclude trade between ports of the United States proper and ports in the Philippines, Porto Rico and the Hawaiian Islands.

CACICAZGOS. In Spanish Law. Lands held in entail by the caciques in Indian villages in Spanish America.

CADASTRE. The official statement of the quantity and value of real property in any district, made for the purpose of justly apportioning the taxes payable on such property. 12 Pet. (U. S.) 423, n.; 3 Am. St. Pap. 679.

CADERE (Lat.). To fall; to fall; to end; to terminate.

The word was generally used to denote the termination or failure of a writ, action, complaint, or attempt: as, cadit actio (the action falls), cadit assisa (the assize abates), cadere causa or a causa (to lose a cause). Abate will translate cadere as often as any other word, the general signification being, as stated, to fall or cease. Cadere ad actionem (literally, to fall from an action), to fail in an action; cadere in partem, to become subject to a division.

To become; to be changed to; cadit assisa in juratam (the assize has become a jury). Calvinus, Lex.

CADET. A younger brother. One trained for the army or navy.

CADI. A Turkish civil magistrate.

CADUCA (Lat. cadere, to fall). In Civil Law. An inheritance; an escheat; every thing which falls to the legal heir by descent.

Bona caduca are said to be those to which no heir succeeds, equivalent to escheats. Du Cange. Glans caduca, "the acorn which has fallen to the ground," is used in a famous judgment of Kekewich, J., in [1902] 1 Ch. 847, where a fund in court belonging to an Austrian intestate, who was a bastard, was held not to go to the Austrian government by the law of Austria, but to the British crown by the law of England.

CADUCARY. Relating to or of the nature of escheat, forfeiture or confiscation. 2 Bla. Com. 245.

CÆSARIAN OPERATION. A surgical operation whereby the fœtus, which can neither make its way into the world by the ordinary and natural passage, nor be extracted by the attempts of art, whether the mother and fœtus be yet alive, or whether either of them be dead, is by a cautious and well-timed operation taken from the mother with a view to save the lives of both, or either of them.

If this operation be performed after the mother's death, the husband cannot be tenant by the curtesy; since his right begins from the birth of the issue, and is consummated by the death of the wife; but if mother and child are saved, then the husband would be entitled after her death. Wharton.

CÆTERIS PARIBUS (Lat.). Other things being equal.

CÆTERORUM. See ADMINISTRATION.

CALEFAGIUM. A right to take fuel yearly. Blount.

CALENDAR. An almanac.

Julius Cæsar ordained that the Roman year should consist of three hundred and sixty-five days, except every fourth year, which should contain three hundred and sixty-six—the additional day to be reckoned by counting the 24th day of February (which was the 6th of the calends of March) twice. See BISSEXTILE. This period of time exceeds the solar year by eleven minutes or thereabouts, which amounts to the error of a day in about one hundred and thirty-one years. In 1582 the error amounted to eleven days or more, which was corrected by Pope Gregory. Out of this correction grew the distinction between Old and New Style. The Gregorian or New Style was introduced into England in 1752, the 2d day of September (O. S.) of that year being reckoned as the 14th day of September (N. S.).

A list of causes pending in a court; as court calendar.

In Criminal Law. A list of prisoners, containing their names, the time when they were committed and by whom, and the cause of their commitments.

CALENDS. See IDES.

CALIFORNIA. The eighteenth state admitted to the Union.

In 1534 a Portuguese navigator in the Spanish service discovered the Gulf of California and penetrated into the mainland, but no settlement was made until about a century afterwards, when the Franciscan Fathers planted a mission on the site of San Diego; other settlements soon followed, and

In a short time the country was entirely under the control of the priests, who accumulated great wealth. The Spanish power in the territory now constituting California was overthrown by the Mexican revolution in 1822, and the secular government by the priests was abolished. By the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, May 30, 1848, terminating the war between the United States and Mexico, the latter country ceded to the United States for $15,000,000 a large tract of land including the present states of California, Nevada, and Utah, and part of Colorado and Wyoming, and of the present territories of Arizona and New Mexico, and the whole tract was called the territory of New Mexico.

The commanding officer of the U. S. forces exercised the duties of civil governor at first, but June 3, 1849, Brigadier-General Riley, then in command, issued a proclamation for holding an election August 1, 1849, for delegates to a general convention to frame a state constitution.

The convention met at Monterey, Sept. 1, 1849; adopted a constitution on October 10, 1849, which was ratified by a vote of the people, November 13, 1849. At the same time an election was held for governor and other state officers, and two members of congress.

The first legislature met at San Jose, December 15, 1849. General Riley, on December 20, 1849, resigned the administration of civil affairs to the newly elected officers under the constitution, and shortly thereafter two United States senators were elected.

In March, 1850, the senators and representatives submitted to congress the constitution, with a memorial asking the admission of the state into the American Union.

On September 9, 1850, congress passed an act admitting the state into the Union on an equal footing with the original states, and allowing her two representatives in congress until an apportionment according to an actual enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States. The third section of the act provides for the admission, upon the express condition that the people of the state, through their legislation or otherwise, shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the public lands within its limits, and shall not pass any law or do any act whereby the title of the United States to any right to dispose of the same shall be impaired or questioned; and that they shall never lay any tax or assessment of any description whatsoever upon the public domain of the United States, and that in no case shall non-resident proprietors who are citizens of the United States be taxed higher than residents; and that all the navigable waters within the state shall be common highways, and forever free, as well to the inhabitants of the state as to the citizens of the United States, and without any tax, impost, or duty therefor.

Congress passed an act, March 3, 1851, to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the state of California. By this act a board of commissioners was created, before whom every person claiming lands in California, by virtue of any right or title derived from the Spanish or Mexican governments, was required to present his claim, together with such documentary evidence and testimony of witnesses as he relied upon. From the decision of this board an appeal might be taken to the district court of the United States for the district in which the land was situated. Both the board and the court, on passing on the validity of any claim, were required to be governed by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the law of nations, the laws, usages, and customs of the government from which the claim was derived, the principles of equity, and the decisions of the supreme court of the United States.

A large part of the best agricultural lands of the state was claimed under Spanish and Mexican grants. The evidence in support of these grants was in many instances meagre and unsatisfactory, and the amount of litigation arising therefrom was enormous and has not yet wholly ceased. The board of commissioners, having completed its work, went out of existence.

By an act passed September 28, 1850, congress declared all laws of the United States, not locally inapplicable, in force within the State.

The constitution adopted in 1849 was amended November 4, 1856, and September 3, 1862, and on January 1, 1880, was superseded by the present constitution, which had been framed by a convention March 3, 1879, and adopted by popular vote May 7, 1879. It was further amended in 1898, 1902 and 1906. Section 1, article IV amended in 1911 by providing for initiative, referendum and recall; section 1, article II, amended by giving right of equal suffrage to women in 1912.

CALL. An agreement to sell. Treat v. White, 181 U. S. 264, 21 Sup. Ct. 611, 45 L. Ed. 853.

It is within the War Revenue Act of June 13, 1898, requiring a revenue stamp on all sales or agreements to sell or memoranda of sale or deliveries or transfers of stock; id.

CALL DAY. There are four call days at the Inns of Court in London: In January, May, June and November.

CALLING THE PLAINTIFF. A formal method of causing a nonsuit to be entered.

When a plaintiff perceives that he has not given evidence to maintain his issue, and intends to become nonsuited, he withdraws himself; whereupon the crier is ordered to call the plaintiff, and on his failure to appear he becomes nonsuited. The phrase "let the plaintiff be called," which occurs in some of the earlier state reports, is to be explained by reference to this practice. See 3 Bla. Com. 376; 2 C. & P. 403; Porter v. Perkins, 5 Mass. 236, 4 Am. Dec. 52; Trask v. Duval, 4 Wash. C. C. 97, Fed. Cas. No. 14,143; NON DICIT.

CALLING TO THE BAR. Conferring the degree or dignity of barrister upon a member of the Inns of court. Holthouse, Dict.

"Calls to the bench and bar are to be made by the most ancient, being a reader, who is present at supper on call night." 1 Black Books of Lincoln's Inn. 339. But see BARRISTER as to admission to the bar.

CALUMNIÆ JUSJURANDUM (Lat.). The oath against calumny.

Both parties at the beginning of a suit, in certain cases, were obliged to take an oath that the suit was commenced in good faith and in a firm belief that they had a good cause. Bell, Dict. It was a fore-oath—before suit brought. The object was to prevent vexatious and unnecessary suits. It was especially used in divorce cases, though of little practical utility; Bish. Marr. & Div. § 353; 2 Bish. Marr. Div. & Sep. § 264. A somewhat similar provision is to be found in the requirement made in some states that the defendant shall file an affidavit of merits.

CALUMNIATORS. In Civil Law. Persons who accuse others, whom they know to be innocent, of having committed crimes.

CALVO DOCTRINE. The doctrine stated by the Argentine jurist, Carlos Calvo, that a government is not bound to indemnify aliens for losses or injuries sustained by them in consequence of domestic disturbances or civil war, where the state is not at fault, and that therefore foreign states are not justified in intervening, by force or otherwise, to secure the settlement of claims of their citizens on account of such losses or injuries. Such intervention, Calvo says, is not in accordance with the practice of European States towards one-another, and is contrary to the principle of state sovereignty. 3 Calvo §§ 1280, 1297. The Calvo Doctrine is to be distinguished from the Drago Doctrine (q. v.).

See 18 Green Bag 377.

CAMBIALE JUS. The law of exchange.

CAMBIATORS. See BANK.

CAMBIO. Exchange.

CAMBIPARTIA. Champerty.

CAMBIPARTICEPS. A champertor.

CAMBIST. A person skilled in exchange; one who deals or trades in promissory notes or bills of exchange; a broker.

CAMBIUM. Change, exchange. Applied in the civil law to exchange of lands, as well as of money or debts. Du Cange.

Cambium reale or manuale was the term generally used to denote the technical common-law exchange of lands; cambium locale, mercantile, or trajectory, was used to designate the modern mercantile contract of exchange, whereby a man agrees, in consideration of a sum of money paid him in one place, to pay a like sum in another place. Pothier, de Change, n. 12; Story, Bills § 2.

CAMÉRA REGIS. In old English law a chamber of the king; a place of peculiar privileges especially in a commercial point of view. The city of London was so called. Year Book, p. 7, Hen. VI. 27; Burrill, Law Dict.

CAMERA SCACCARII. The Exchequer Chamber. Spelman, Gloss.

CAMERA STELLATA. The Star Chamber.

CAMERARIUS. A chamberlain; a keeper of the public money; a treasurer. Spelman, Gloss. Cambellarius; 1 Perr. & D. 243.

CAMPARTUM. A part or portion of a larger field or ground, which would otherwise be in gross or in common. See CHAMPERTY.

CAMPERTUM. A cornfield; a field of grain. Cowell; Whishaw.

CAMPUM PARTERE. To divide the land. See CHAMPERTY.

CAMPUS (Lat. a field). In old European law an assembly of the people so called from being held in the open air, in some plain capable of containing a large number of persons. 1 Robertson's Charles V. App. n. 38.

In feudal or old English law a field or plain. Burrill, Law Dict.

CANADA. The name given to a confederation of all the British possessions in North America except Newfoundland.

The first explorations of this country, of which any authentic information exists, were by Jacques Cartier, between the years 1534 and 1554, thus giving to France the first claim upon its territory. Great activity was shown during these and the succeeding years on the part of Great Britain and France to acquire territorial jurisdiction on the newly discovered continent, and the division lines between their acquisitions were not very clearly marked. Those of France included Florida in the south and the lands watered by the St. Lawrence in the north, and to it all the name of "New France" was given. In 1603 an expedition for trading purposes was fitted out under the command of Samuel Champlain, whose explorations up the river St. Lawrence and its tributary, the Richelieu River, brought him to the lake which still bears his name.

The viceroyalty of New France was conferred in 1612 upon the Prince de Condé, who made a formal assignment of it in 1613 to Admiral Montmorency, who personally visited the country.

In 1623, under the rule of Cardinal Richelieu in France, the colony was ceded to "La Compagnie de Cents Associés" (The Company of the One Hundred Associates), a trading company, but armed, like the Hudson Bay Company in later years, with full power for the administration of justice in the primitive forms practicable in new countries and with mixed populations.

This company had an unsuccessful career financially, and upon its disorganization, in 1663, Louis XIV. resumed territorial jurisdiction over the colony, and in April of that year published an edict establishing a "Sovereign Council" for the government of Canada, and this council was specially instructed to prepare laws and ordinances for the administration of justice, framed as much as possible upon those then in force in France under the provisions of the "Custom of Paris."

For more than one hundred years all the legal business of the province was determined by this council—in fact, until the conquest by the English in 1759. By the terms of the capitulation, it was stipulated and conceded that the ancient laws of land tenure should continue to subsist, but it was understood that the English criminal and commercial law should be introduced and adopted.

Under this stipulation the law of France, as it existed in 1759, was recognized as the civil law of Canada, and has always since formed the basis of that law—modified, of course, after the subsequent establishment of a representative government in the colony, by the statutory provisions of the colonial parliaments. This result was applicable, however, only to that section of the country which subsequently was called Lower Canada, now the province of Quebec. The portion of the colony since known as the province of Upper Canada (now the province of Ontario) was then unsettled, and being subsequently colonized from Great Britain and her other dependencies, the whole body of law, civil as well as criminal, was based upon that in force in England.

Under the provisions of a statute passed by the imperial parliament of Great Britain in 1774, called "The Quebec Act," a legislative council of twenty-three members was established for the province, with power to enact laws. In 1791, Pitt introduced the bill into the English House of Commons which gave a constitution to Canada and divided it into the two provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. Since then (with the short interregnum from 1837 to 1841), regular parliaments have been held, at which the jurisprudence of the country and the establishment of its courts have been determined by formal acts.

In 1867, the confederation of the different North American dependencies of Great Britain, under the name of the "Dominion of Canada," was consummated by an act of the imperial parliament, at the instance and request of the different provinces, including Upper and Lower Canada (under the names of Ontario and Quebec), New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia, to which have since been added Prince Edward Island, Manitoba, and British Columbia (all the provinces except Newfoundland). The act under which this confederation was established—called The British North American Act (in effect July 1, 1868)—contains the provisions of a written constitution, under which the executive government and authority is declared to be vested in the sover-sign of Great Britain, whose powers are deputed to a governor-general, nominated by the imperial government, but whose salary is paid by the Dominion. The form of government is modelled after that of Great Britain. The governor-general acts under the guidance of a council, nominally selected by himself, but which must be able to command the support of a majority in that branch of parliament which represents the suffrages of the electors.

THE JUDICIAL POWER.—There is a supreme court with ultimate jurisdiction in matters affecting the Dominion and as a final court of appeal from the provincial courts. It consists of a chief justice and five puisne judges, and holds three sessions a year at Ottawa. The exchequer court can hold sessions at any town, and is a colonial court of admiralty and exercises admiralty jurisdiction throughout Canada and the waters thereof. Certain local judges of admiralty are created with limited jurisdiction, the appeal from whose decisions lies to the Court of Exchequer, or it may lie direct to the Supreme Court of Canada under certain conditions.

CANAL. An artificial cut or trench in the earth, for conducting and confining water to be used for transportation. See Bishop v. Seeley, 18 Conn. 394.

Public canals originate under statutes and charters enacted to authorize their construction and to protect and regulate their use. They are in this country constructed and managed either by the state itself or by companies incorporated for the purpose. These commissioners and companies are armed with authority to appropriate private property for the construction of their canals, in exercising which they are bound to a strict compliance with the statutes by which it is conferred. Where private property is thus taken, it must be paid for in gold and silver; State v. Beackmo, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 246. Such payment need not precede or be contemporaneous with the taking; Rogers v. Bradshaw, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 735; Hankins v. Lawrence, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 266; though, if postponed, the proprietor of the land taken is entitled to interest; People v. Canal Com'rs, 5 Denio (N. Y.) 401; Harness v. Canal Co., 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 248. A city through which a canal passes cannot construct levees along its banks and recover the cost thereof from the canal company; City of New Orleans v. Canal & Nav. Co., 42 La. Ann. 6, 7 South. 63.

After the appropriation of land for a canal, duly made under statute authority, though the title remains in the original owner until he is paid therefor, he cannot sustain an action against the party taking the same for any injury thereto; Turrell v. Norman, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 263; Ligat v. Com., 19 Pa. 456. But if there be a deviation from the statute authority, the statute is no protection against suits by persons injured by such deviation; Lynch v. Stone, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 356; Farnum v. Canal Corp., 1 Sumn. 46, Fed. Cas. No. 4,675; 2 Dow. 519. Though a special remedy for damages be given by a statute authorizing the construction of a canal, the party injured thereby is not barred of his common-law action; Denslow v.

New Haven & N. Co., 16 Conn. 98. But see, to the contrary, Stevens v. Canal, 12 Mass. 466; Town of Lebanon v. Olcott, 1 N. H. 339. The legislature has the exclusive power to determine when land may be taken for a canal or other public use, and the courts cannot review its determination in that respect; Harris v. Thompson, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 350; Hankins v. Lawrence, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 266.

In navigating canals, it is the duty of the canal-boats to exercise due care in avoiding collisions, and in affording each other mutual accommodation; and for any injury resulting from the neglect of such care the proprietors of the boats are liable in damages; 1 Sher. & Redf. Neg. 404; Rathbun v. Payne, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 399; Sheerer v. Kissinger, 1 Pa. 44. The proprietors of the canal will be liable for any injury to canal-boats occasioned by a neglect on their part to keep the canal in proper repair and free from obstructions; Riddle v. Proprietors, 7 Mass. 169, 5 Am. Dec. 35; James River & Kanawha Co. v. Early, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 541; Muir v. Canal Co., 8 Dana (Ky.) 161; Moore v. Canal, 7 Ind. 462; Griffith v. Follett, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 620; 11 A. & E. 223. Where a state exercises control over a canal, it is liable for injuries caused by an officer's negligence in failing to repair bridges over it; Woodman v. People, 127 N. Y. 397, 28 N. E. 20.

In regard to the right of the proprietors of canals to tolls, the rule is that they are only entitled to take them as authorized by statute, and that any ambiguity in the terms of the statute must operate in favor of the public; 2 B. & Ad. 792; Perrine v. Canal Co., 9 How. (U. S.) 172, 13 L. Ed. 92; Myers v. Foster, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 567; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Coal Co., 21 Pa. 131. A statutory authority to charge tolls upon boats, etc., used for transportation along it gives no authority to charge tolls on tugs while towing vessels through the canal or on the return trip; Sturgeon Bay Harbor Co. v. Leatham, 164 Ill. 239, 45 N. E. 422.

A canal constructed and maintained at private expense is like a private highway over which the public is permitted to travel, but in which it obtains no vested right; Potter v. Ry. Co., 95 Mich. 389, 54 N. W. 956.

An easement in the waters of state canals cannot be acquired by prescription; Burbank v. Fay, 65 N. Y. 57.

CANAL ZONE. See PANAMA CANAL.

CANCELLARIA. Chancery; the court of chancery. Curia cancellaria is also used in the same sense. See 4 Bla. Com. 46; Cowell.

CANCELLARIUS (Lat.). A chancellor.

In ancient law, a janitor or one who stood at the door of the court and was accustomed to carry out the commands of the judges; afterwards a secretary; a scribe; a notary. Du Cange.

In early English law, the keeper of the king's seal.

The office of chancellor is of Roman origin. He appears at first to have been a chief scribe or secretary, but was afterwards invested with judicial power, and had superintendence over the other officers of the empire. From the Romans the title and office passed to the church; and therefore every bishop of the Catholic church has, to this day, his chancellor, the principal judge of his consistory. In ecclesiastical matters it was the duty of the cancellarius to take charge of all matters relating to the books of the church,—acting as librarian; to correct the laws, comparing the various readings, and also to take charge of the seal of the church, affixing it when necessary in the business of the church.

When the modern kingdoms of Europe were established upon the ruins of the empire, almost every state preserved its chancellor, with different jurisdictions and dignities, according to their different constitutions. In all he seems to have had a supervision of all charters, letters, and such other public instruments of the crown as were authenticated in the most solemn manner; and when seals came into use, he had the custody of the public seal.

According to Du Cange it was under the reign of the Merovingian kings in France that the cancellarius first obtained the dignity corresponding with that of the English chancellor, and became keepers of the king's seal.

In this latter sense only of keeper of the seal, the word chancellor, derived hence, seems to have been used in the English law; 2 Bla. Com. 46.

The origin of the word has been much disputed; but it seems probable that the meaning assigned by Du Cange is correct, who says that the cancellarii were originally the keepers of the gate of the king's tribunal, and who carried out the commands of the judges. Under the civil law their duties were varied, and gave rise to a great variety of names, as notarius, a notis, abactis, secretarius, a secretis, a cancellis, a responsis, a libellis, generally derived from their duties as keepers and correctors of the statutes and decisions of the tribunals.

The transition from keeper of the seal of the church to keeper of the king's seal would be natural and easy in an age when the clergy were the only persons of education sufficient to read the documents to which the seal was to be appended. And this latter sense is the one which has remained and been perpetuated in the English word Chancellor. See Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.; Spence, Bq. Jur. 78; 3 Bla. Com. 46.

It was an evolution which passed through several stages, the first of which had its origin in the period when the king was actually as well as theoretically the fountain of justice and equity. At first he personally heard their complaints and administered justice to his subjects.

It was, however, after the growth of the population had increased the applications to the king for the redress of grievances to such an extent as to require him to seek assistance, that the officer afterwards called chancellor appeared. He was then a scribe to whom were referred the complaints made, and it was his duty to determine if they should be entertained and the form of writ adapted to the case. Thus what was afterwards the primary duty of the chancellor was devolved upon this officer, called the referendarius, and known by this title, according to Selden, during the reign of Ethelbert and subsequent kings to Edred. To separate and protect them from the suitors this officer and his assistants sat by a lattice, the laths of which were called cancelli, and to this commentators ascribe the origin of the word cancellarius, which was used in the reign of the Confessor and is not clearly traced to an earlier date. At that time little more appears than that he was an officer who issued writs, but during Anglo-Saxon times he seems to have been little more, and the charter of Westminster shows his precedence at that time to have been after two archbishops, nine bishops, and seven abbots, though now the lord chancellor is second only after the royal family. True, it is said by Ingulphus that Edward the Elder appointed Torquatel his chancellor, so that whatever business of the king, spiritual or temporal, required a decision, should be decided by his advice and decree, and, being so decided, the decree should be held irrevocable; Spence, Bq. Jur. 78, n. Nevertheless there does not seem to have been at that period a conception of the office as one maintained for the exercise of judicial functions. According to Pollock and Maitland, "even in Edward I.'s reign it is not in our view a court of justice; it does not hear and determine causes. It was a great secretarial bureau, a home office, a foreign office, and a ministry of justice;" 1 Hist. Eng. Law 172.

The chancellor's jurisdiction was an off-shoot from that of the king's council. It does not appear that he had any individual judicial functions otherwise than as one of the council; he certainly acquired power to sit alone, or had it confirmed, in 1349, but this did not forthwith exclude the older practice. Pollock, Expans. of C. L. 68.

But whatever the origin of the title, it is not difficult to apprehend the development of the janitor or keeper of the gate, acting as intermediary between the suitor and the king or judge, into the officer whose judgment was relied on in dealing with the petition, and how the original scribe or referendarius, exercising at first clerical functions, but selected for them because it required legal learning to discharge them, gradually developed into the chancellor of modern conception, holding the seal and representing the conscience of the king. The fact that it is an evolution is clear, however obscure and difficult to trace are some of its successive stages.

Lord Ellesmere, who is practically the first chancellor whose decrees have come down to us, was the most conspicuous representative of the period of the Tudors and the first Stuarts. He did much towards settling the practice and procedure of the court. He successfully fought the great fight with Coke over the supremacy of the chancellor's writ of injunction, and during the period from Ellesmere to the Restoration the real foundation was laid of an equitable system modifying ancient common law principles and practices which no longer agreed with current views of justice; 15 Harv. L. Rev. 110. Instances of specific relief, under what became in after times the great heads of equity, may nevertheless be found at a surprisingly early day. The editor of the Selden Society's volume of Select Cases in Chancery gives the following list of the earliest cases: Accident, after 1398; account, 1385; cancellation and delivery of instruments, 1337; charities, after 1393; discovery, 1415-17; dower, 1393; duress, 1337; fraud, 1386; injunctions, 1396-1403; mistake, 1417-24; mortgage, 1456; partition, 1423-43; perpetuation of testimony, 1486-1500; rescission of contract, 1396-1403; specific performance, after 1398; trusts, after 1393; waste, 1461-67; wills, after 1393.

In his efforts to establish some sort of fixed practice, Lord Ellesmere frequently referred to precedents, but numerous instances of his vicarious charity reveal the latitude of his discretion. In the Earl of Oxford's Case, 2 W. & T. 644, he expressly claimed the power to legislate on individual rights.

The Restoration, or rather the chancellorship of Lord Nottingham, marks an epoch in the history of equity, of which he has been justly called the "father." The interference of the chancellors had been instrumental in bringing about, through legislation and otherwise, a steady improvement in common law practice and procedure, and the necessity for further intervention, except where there was an avowed divergence between the two systems, had become rare. Then the abolition of the incidents of feudal tenure by the Restoration Parliament introduced a system of real property which continued almost to the reign of Victoria. Controversies arising out of these new methods of conveying and settlement naturally found their way into chancery, where alone trusts and equities of redemption were recognized and contracts specifically enforced; and the contemporaneous abolition of the Court of Wards ultimately turned the guardianship of the estates of infants into chancery. Moreover, the searching investigations which had been made during the Commonwealth exercised a powerful influence in the direction of reform in procedure. All these influences combined to form a new era in equity. Prior to the Restoration, it could be said with entire accuracy that the "grand reason for the interference of a court of equity is the imperfection of the legal remedy in consequence of the universality of legislative provisions." But during the period from Nottingham to Eldon the chancellor was chiefly occupied with the adjudication and administration of proprietary rights. At the close of Lord Eldon's service, equity was no longer a system corrective of the common law; its principles were no less universal than those of the common law. It could be described only as that part of remedial justice which was administered in chancery; its work was administrative and protective, as contrasted with the remedial and retributive justice of the common law. See 15 Harv. L. Rev. 109.

CANCELLATION. The act of crossing out a writing. The manual operation of tearing or destroying a written instrument; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 409.

The statute of frauds provides that the revocation of a will by cancellation must be by the "testator himself, or in his presence and by his direction and consent." This provision is in force in many of the states; 1 Jarm. Wills (3d Am. ed.) *113 n. In order that a revocation may be effected, it must be proved to have been done according to the statute; Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 79; Heise v. Heise, 31 Pa. 246; Spoonemore v. Cables, 66 Mo. 579; Barker v. Bell, 46 Ala. 216; declarations of a testator are not sufficient; Lewis v. Lewis, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 455; Wittman v. Goodhand, 26 Md. 95; Jackson v. Kniffen, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 31, 3 Am. Dec. 390.

Cancelling a will, animus revocandi, is a revocation; and the destruction or obliteration need not be complete; 3 B. & Ald. 489; Avery v. Pixley, 4 Mass. 462; Card v. Grinman, 5 Conn. 168; Burns v. Burns, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 567. It must be done animus revocandi; Schoul. Wills 384; Wolf v. Bollinger, 62 Ill. 368; Dickey v. Malechi, 6 Mo. 177, 34 Am. Dec. 130; and evidence is admissible to show with what intention the act was done; Jackson v. Holloway, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 394; Hatch v. Hatch, 9 Mass. 307, 6 Am. Dec. 67; Botsford v. Morehouse, 4 Conn. 550; Corliss v. Corliss, 8 Vt. 373; Tomson v. Ward, 1 N. H. 9; Burns v. Burns, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 297; Bates v. Holman, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 502; Carroll's Lessee v. Llewellyn, 1 Harr. & McH. (Md.) 162; 4 Kent 531; Collagan v. Burns, 57 Me. 449; Harring v. Allen, 25 Mich. 505; Durant v. Ashmore, 2 Rich. (S. C.) 184; Patterson v. Hickey, 32 Ga. 156. Accidental cancellation is not a revocation; Smock v. Smock, 11 N. J. Eq. 156. Where the first few lines of a will were cut off, the remainder, which was complete, was admitted to probate; L. R. 2 P. & D. 206. Partial cancellation, with proof of an animus revocandi, will revoke a will; Bohanon v. Walcott, 1 How. (Miss.) 336, 29 Am. Dec. 631; and when more than one-third of the items were cancelled, leaving the remainder unintelligible and repugnant, the will was held to be revoked; Dammann v. Dammann (Md.) 28 Atl. 408. Where the testator wrote on his will "This will is invalid," held a revocation; Witter v. Mott, 2 Conn. 67.

Cancellation by an insane man will not revoke a valid will; In re Forman's Will, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 274; Ford v. Ford, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 92. See Laughton v. Atkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 535; Farr v. O'Neill, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 80.

In Louisiana it requires a written instrument executed with formalities to revoke a will, hence placing it among waste paper and refusal to receive it after attention was called to it, and an unsuccessful attempt to make a new will, were held to be no cancellation; Succession of Hill, 47 La. Ann. 329, 16 South. 819.

There may be a partial obliteration, which works a revocation pro tanto; Clark v. Smith, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 140; Bigelow v. Gillott, 123 Mass. 102, 25 Am. Rep. 32; Wolf v. Bollinger, 62 Ill. 368; Giffin v. Brooks, 48 Ohio St. 211, 31 N. E. 743; and a careful interlineation is not a cancellation; Dixon's Appeal, 55 Pa. 424. A cancellation by pencil is enough; 2 D. & B. 311; 6 Hare 39; L. R. 2 P. & D. 256; Estate of Tomlinson, 133 Pa. 245, 19 Atl. 482, 19 Am. St. Rep. 637. Where a will is found among a testator's papers, torn, there is a presumption of revocation; Beaumont v. Keim, 50 Mo. 28; In re Johnson's Will, 40 Conn. 587; Idley v. Bowen, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 227. Where after a person's death a will is found in an unsealed envelope which had been in his possession up to the time of his death and with lines drawn through his signature, the presumption is that he himself drew the lines for the purpose of revoking the will; In re Philp, 64 Hun, 635, 19 N. Y. Supp. 13.

Perpendicular marks across a will are not "handwriting;" In re Hopkins, 172 N. Y. 360, 65 N. E. 173, 65 L. R. A. 95, 92 Am. St. Rep. 746.

Mere cancellation of a deed does not divest the grantee's title; Devlin, Deeds 300, 305; Holbrook v. Tirrell, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 108; Fawcetts v. Kimmey, 33 Ala. 264; Botsford v. Morehouse, 4 Conn. 550; National Union Bld'g Ass'n v. Brewer, 41 Ill. App. 223; even though done before recording; Hall v. McDuff, 24 Me. 312; but it might practically have that effect between the parties by estoppel; Sawyer v. Peters, 50 N. H. 143; or by reason of the destruction of the only evidence of the transaction; Blaney v. Hanks, 14 Ia. 400; Parker v. Kane, 4 Wis. 12, 65 Am. Dec. 283.

On a bill in equity for the re-execution of lost securities, which were held by a decedent in his lifetime and after his death were not found among his papers, a party alleging their destruction or cancellation by the decedent is bound to prove the fact to the satisfaction of the court. The absence of the papers raises no presumption of such destruction or cancellation; nor is mere proof of an intention to destroy or cancel, or of the declaration of such intention, alone sufficient; Gilpin v. Chandler, 2 Del. Ch. 219.

In the case of an insurance policy after death, the remedy of the company for fraud, etc., is at law by way of a defence to a suit on the policy; a bill in equity will not lie for revocation in the absence of special facts; Riggs v. Ins. Co., 129 Fed. 207, 63 C. C. A. 365.

See DEED; INSURANCE; WILL; LOST INSTRUMENT; REVOCATION.

CANDIDATE (Lat. candidatus, from candidus, white. Said to be from the custom of Roman candidates to clothe themselves in a white tunic).

One who offers himself, or is offered by others, for an office.

One who seeks office is a candidate; it is not necessary that he should have been nominated for it. Leonard v. Com., 112 Pa. 624, 4 Atl. 220.

CANON. In Ecclesiastical Law. A prebendary, or member of a chapter. All members of chapters except deans are now entitled canons, in England. 2 Steph. Com. 11th ed. 687, n.; 1 Bla. Com. 382.

CANON LAW. A body of ecclesiastical law, which originated in the church of Rome, relating to matters of which that church has or claims jurisdiction.

A canon is a rule of doctrine or of discipline, and is the term generally applied to designate the ordinances of councils and decrees of popes. The position which the canon law obtains beyond the papal dominions depends on the extent to which it is sanctioned or permitted by the government of each country; and hence the system of canon law as it is administered in different countries varies somewhat.

In the wording of a canon it is not enough to admonish or to express disapprobation; its wording must be explicitly permissive or prohibitory, backed by the provision, expressed or admittedly understood, that its infringement will be visited with punishment. Cent. Dict.

Though this system of law is of primary importance in Roman Catholic countries alone, it still maintains great influence and transmits many of its peculiar regulations down through the jurisprudence of Protestant countries which were formerly Roman Catholic. Thus, the canon law has been a distinct branch of the profession in the ecclesiastical courts of England for several centuries; but the recent modifications of the jurisdiction of those courts have done much to reduce its independent importance.

The Corpus Juris Canonici is drawn from various sources—the opinions of the ancient fathers of the church, the decrees of councils, and the decretal epistles and bulls of the holy see, together with the maxims of the civil law and the teachings of the Scriptures. These sources were first drawn upon for a regular ecclesiastical system about the time of Pope Alexander III. (1139), when one Gratian, an Italian monk, animated by the discovery of Justinian's Pandects, collected the ecclesiastical constitutions also into some method in three books, which he entitled Concordia Discordantium Canonum. These are generally known as Decretum Gratiani. They were never promulgated as a code, like the preceding.

The subsequent papal decrees to the time of the pontificate of Gregory IX. were collected in much the same method, under the auspices of that pope, about the year 1234, in five books, entitled Decretalia Gregorii Nonii. A sixth book was added by Boniface VIII., about the year 1298, which is called Sextus Decretalium, or Liber Sextus. The Clementine Constitution, or decrees of Clement V., were in like manner authenticated in 1313 by his successor, John XXII., who also published twenty constitutions of his own, called the extravagantes Joannis, so called because they were in addition to, or beyond the boundary of, the former collections, as the additions to the civil law were called Novels. To these have since been added some decrees of later popes, down to the time of Sixtus IV., in five books, called Extravagantes communes. And all these together—Gratian's Decrees, Gregory's Decretals, the Sixth Decretals, the Clementine Constitutions, and the Extravagants of John and his successors—form the Corpus Juris Canonici, or body of the Roman canon law; 1 Bla. Com. 82; Encyclopédie, Droit Canonique, Droit Public Ecclésiastique; Dict. de Jur. Droit Canonique; Erskine, Inst. b. 1, t. 1, s. 10.

This body of canon law was the jus commune of the church in England. The English provincial constitutions merely formed a supplement to it and were valid only as interpreting or enforcing the papal decrees; 1 Holdsw. H. E. L. 355. It forms no part of the law of England, unless it has been brought into use and acted on there; 11 Q. B. 649.

CANONRY. An ecclesiastical benefice attaching to the office of canon. Holthouse, Dict.

CANT. A method of dividing property held in common by two or more persons peculiar to the civil law, and may be avoided by the consent of all of those who are interested, in the same manner that any other contract or agreement may be avoided. Hayes v. Cuny, 9 Mart. O. S. (La.) 89. See LICITACION.

CANTERBURY, ARCHBISHOP OF. The primate of all England; the chief ecclesiastical dignitary in the church. His customary privilege is to crown the kings and queens of England. By 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21, he had the power of granting dispensations in any case not contrary to the Holy Scriptures and the law of God where the pope used formerly to grant them, which is the foundation of his granting special licenses to marry at any place or time, etc. Wharton. See CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

CANTRED. A hundred, a district containing a hundred villages. Used in Wales in the same sense as hundred in England. Cowell; Termes de la Ley.

CANVASS. The act of examining the returns of votes for a public officer. This duty is usually intrusted to certain officers of a state, district, or county, who constitute a board of canvassers. The determination of the board of canvassers of the persons elected to an office is prima facie evidence only of their election. A party may go behind the canvass to the ballots, to show the number of votes cast for him. The duties of the canvassers are wholly ministerial; People v. Ferguson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 102; People v. Vail, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 14; People v. Van Cleve, 1 Mich. 362, 53 Am. Dec. 69; People v. Kilduff, 15 Ill. 492, 60 Am. Dec. 769. A canvassing board has no power to go behind the returns and inquire into the legality of the votes; McQuade v. Ferguson, 91 Mich. 438, 51 N. W. 1073; State v. Van Camp, 36 Neb. 9, 91, 54 N. W. 113. In making a recount they have no authority to throw out the vote of a precinct or ward on the ground of fraud, as their power is merely ministerial; May v. Board of Canvassers, 94 Mich. 505, 54 N. W. 377. See In re Woods, 5 Misc. 575, 26 N. Y. Supp. 169; ELECTION.

CANVASSING BOARD. See CANVASS.

CAPACITY. Ability, power, qualification, or competency of persons, natural or artificial, for the performance of civil acts depending on their state or condition as defined or fixed by law; as, the capacity to devise, to bequeath, to convey lands; or to take and hold lands; to make a contract, and the like. 2 Com. Dig. 294.

CAPAX DOLI (Lat. capable of committing crime). The condition of one who has sufficient mind and understanding to be made responsible for his actions. See DISCRETION.

CAPE. A judicial writ, now abolished, touching a plea of lands and tenements. The writs which bear this name are of two kinds—namely, cape magnum, or grand cape, and cape parvum, or petit cape. The cape magnum was the writ for possession where the tenant failed to appear. The petit cape is so called not so much on account of the smallness of the writ as of the latter; it was the shorter writ issued when the plaintiff prevailed after the tenant had appeared. Fleta, l. 6, c. 55, § 40. For the difference between the form and the use of these writs, see 2 Wms. Saund. 45 c, d; Fleta, l. 6, c. 55, § 40.

CAPERS. Vessels of war owned by private persons, and different from ordinary privateers only in size, being smaller. Beawes, Lex Merc. 230.

CAPIAS (Lat. that you take). A writ directing the sheriff to take the person of the defendant into custody.

It is a judicial writ, and issued originally only to enforce compliance with the summons of an original writ or with some judgment or decree of the court. It was originally issuable as a part of the original process in a suit only in case of injuries committed by force or with fraud, but was much extended by statutes. See ARREST; BAIL. Being the first word of distinctive significance in the writ, when writs were framed in Latin, it came to denote the whole class of writs by which a defendant's person was to be arrested. It was issuable either by the court of Common Pleas or King's Bench, and bore the seal of the court.

See Spence, Eq. Jur.; BAIL; BREVE; ARREST; and the titles here following.

CAPIAS AD AUDIENDUM JUDICIUM.

A writ issued, in a case of misdemeanor, after the defendant has appeared and is found guilty, to bring him to judgment if he is not present when called. 4 Bla. Com. 368.

CAPIAS AD COMPUTANDUM. A writ which issued in the action of account rendered upon the judgment quod computet, when the defendant refused to appear in his proper person before the auditors and enter into his account.

According to the ancient practice, the defendant might, after arrest upon this process, be delivered on mainprize, or, in default of finding mainperners, was committed to the Fleet prison, where the auditors attended upon him to hear and receive his account. The writ is now disused.

Consult Thesaurus Brevium 38; Coke, Entries 46, 47; Rastell, Entries 14 b. 15.

CAPIAS PRO FINE. A writ which issued against a defendant who had been fined and did not discharge the fine according to the judgment.

The object of the writ was to arrest a defendant against whom a plaintiff had obtained judgment, and detain him until he paid to the king the fine for the public misdemeanor, coupled with the remedy for the private injury sustained, in all cases of forcible torts; 11 Coke 43; 5 Mod. 285; falsehood in denying one's own deed; Co. Litt. 131; 8 Coke 60; unjustly claiming property in replevin, or contempt by disobeying the command of the king's writ, or the express prohibition of any statute; 8 Coke 60. It is now abolished; 3 Bla. Com. 398.

CAPIAS AD RESPONDENDUM. A writ commanding the officer to whom it is directed "to take the body of the defendant and keep the same to answer the plaintiff," etc.

This is the writ of capias which is generally intended by the use of the word capias, and was formerly a writ of great importance. For some account of its use and value, see ARREST; BAIL.

According to the course of the practice at common law, the writ bears teste, in the name of the chief justice, or presiding judge of the court, on some day in term-time, when the judge is supposed to be present, not being Sunday, and is made returnable on a regular return day.

If the writ has been served and the defendant does not give bail, but remains in custody, it is returned C. C. (cepi corpus); if he have given bail, it is returned C. C. B. (cepi corpus, bail bond); if the defendant's appearance have been accepted, the return is, "C. C., and defendant's appearance accepted." See 1 Archb. Pr. 67.

CAPIAS AD SATISFACIENDUM. A writ directed to the sheriff or coroner, commanding him to take the person therein named and him safely keep so that he may have his body in court on the return day of the writ, to satisfy (ad satisfaciendum) the party who has recovered judgment against him.

It is a writ of execution issued after judgment, and might have been issued against a plaintiff against whom judgment was obtained for costs, as well as against the defendant in a personal action. As a rule at common law it lay in all cases where a capias ad respondendum lay as a part of the mesne process. Some classes of persons were, however, exempt from arrest on mesne process who were liable to it on final. It was a very common form of execution, until within a few years, in many of the states; but its efficiency has been destroyed by statutes facilitating the discharge of the debtor, in some states, and by statutes prohibiting its issue, in others, except in specified cases. See ARREST; PRIVILEGE. It is commonly known by the abbreviation ca. sa.

It is tested on a general teste day, and returnable on a general return day.

It is executed by arresting the defendant and keeping him in custody. He cannot be discharged upon bail or by consent of the sheriff. See ESCAPE. And payment to the sheriff is held in England not to be sufficient to authorize a discharge. He might be discharged by showing irregularities in the writ; 3 D. P. C. 291; 4 id. 6.

The return made by the officer is either G. C. & C. (cepi corpus et committitur), or N. E. I. (non est inventus). The effect of execution by a ca. sa. is to prevent suing out any other process against the lands or goods of the person arrested, at common law; but this is modified by statutes in the modern law. See EXECUTION.

CAPIAS UTLAGATUM. A writ directing the arrest of an outlaw.

If general, it directs the sheriff to arrest the outlaw and bring him before the court on a general return day.

If special, it directs the sheriff, in addition, to take possession of the goods and chattels of the outlaw, summoning a jury to determine their value.

It was a part of the process subsequent to the capias, and was issued to compel an appearance where the defendant had absconded and a capias could not be served upon him. The outlawry was readily reversed upon any plausible pretext, upon appearance of a party in person or by attorney, as the object of the writ was then satisfied. The writ issued after an outlawry in a criminal as well as in a civil case. See 3 Bla. Com. 284; 4 id. 320.

CAPIAS IN WITHERNAM. A writ directing the sheriff to take other goods of a distrainer equal in value to a distress which he has formerly taken and still withholds from the owner beyond the reach of process.

When chattels taken by distress were decided to have been wrongfully taken and were by the distrainer eloigned, that is, carried out of the county or concealed, the sheriff made such a return. Thereupon this writ issued, thus putting distress against distress.

Goods taken in withernam are irrepleviable till the original distress be forthcoming; 3 Bla. Com. 148.

CAPIATUR PRO FINE. See CAPIAS PRO FINE.

CAPITA (Lat.). Heads, and figuratively entire bodies, whether of persons or animals. Spelman.

An expression of frequent occurrence in laws regulating the distribution of the estates of persons dying intestate. When all the persons entitled to shares in the distribution are of the same degree of kindred to the deceased person (e. g. when all are grandchildren), and claim directly from him in their own right, and not through an intermediate relation, they take per capita, that is, equal shares, or share and share alike. But when they are of different degrees of kindred (e. g. some the children, others the grandchildren or the great-grandchildren of the deceased), those more remote take per stirpem or per stirpes, that is, they take respectively the shares their parents (or other relation standing in the same degree with them of the surviving kindred entitled, who are in the nearest degree of kindred to the intestate) would have taken had they respectively survived the intestate. Reeve, Descent, Introd. xxvii.; also, 1 Roper, Leg. 126, 130. See PER CAPITA; PER STIRPES; STIRPES.

CAPITAL. The sum of money which a merchant, banker, or trader adventures in any undertaking, or which he contributes to the common stock of a partnership, and also the fund of a trading company. McCulloch.

Capital signifies the actual estate, whether in money or property, owned by an individual or corporation; People v. Com'rs of Taxes, 23 N. Y. 192; it is the fund upon which it transacts its business, which would be liable to its creditors, and in case of insolvency pass to a receiver; International Life Assur. Soc. of London v. Com'rs of Taxes, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 318; it does not include money borrowed temporarily; Bailey v. Clark, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 284, 22 L. Ed. 651. See, also, Mechanics' & Farmers' Bank v. Townsend, 5 Blatchf. 315, Fed. Cas. No. 9,381; People v. Sup'rs, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 605.

Profits of a corporation are not appropriated to its capital because it has incurred a debt nearly equal to such profits in permanent improvements; Davis v. Jackson, 152 Mass. 58, 25 N. E. 21, 23 Am. St. Rep. 801. See DIVIDENDS; INCOME; MONEYED CAPITAL.

As to what is moneyed capital in a federal act respecting state taxation of national bank stock, see Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 157, 7 Sup. Ct. 826, 30 L. Ed. 895; First Nat. Bank v. Chapman, 173 U. S. 214, 19 Sup. Ct. 407, 43 L. Ed. 669.

CAPITAL CRIME. One for which the punishment of death is inflicted.

CAPITAL PORTMEN. See IPSWICH, DOMESDAY OF.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT. The punishment of death.

The subject of capital punishment has occupied the attention of enlightened men for a long time, particularly since the middle of the last century; and none deserves to be more carefully investigated. The right of punishing its members by society is admitted; but how far this right extends, by the laws of nature or of God, has been much disputed by theoretical writers, although it cannot be denied that most nations, ancient and modern, have deemed capital punishment to be within the scope of the legitimate powers of government. Beccaria contends with zeal that the punishment of death ought not to be inflicted in time of peace, nor at other times, except in cases where the laws can be maintained in no other way. Beccaria, chap. 28.

The ancient method of administering the law was by retribution or the vindication of the law upon the offender, and in England, as late as Geo. III., there were about two hundred offences punishable by death, among which were cutting down a tree, robbing a rabbit warren, harboring an offender against the revenue acts, stealing in a dwelling-house to the amount of forty shillings, or in a shop goods to the amount of five shillings, counterfeiting the stamps that were used for the sale of perfumery, etc. Owing to the efforts of Sir Samuel Romilly, and later of Sir James Mackintosh, the old criminal code was succeeded by more humane legislation, and since the statute of 1861 there are but four crimes now punishable in England by death, high treason, murder, piracy with violence, and setting fire to the king's ships, dockyards, arsenals or stores. See, also, 2 Poll. & Maitl. 450; CRIMES; EXECUTION. It was abolished in Italy in 1890, and has recently been restored in France. It has been abolished in some states. It is usually by hanging; some states have adopted electrocution; and two states permit a choice between hanging and shooting.

See ELECTROCUTION.

CAPITAL STOCK. The sum, divided into shares, which is raised by mutual subscription of the members of a corporation. It is said to be the sum upon which calls may be made upon the stockholders, and dividends are to be paid; Barry v. Exchange Co., 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 280; State v. Fire Ass'n, 23 N. J. L. 195; Ang. & A. Corp. §§ 151, 556; Union Bank of Tennessee v. State, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 490; State Bank of Wisconsin v. City of Milwaukee, 18 Wis. 281. The term is used to indicate the amount of capital which the charter provides for, and not the value of the property of the corporation; State v. Fire Ass'n, 23 N. J. L. 195; or the original amount upon which a corporation commences; State Bank v. City Council, 3 Rich. (S. C.) 346. See St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Loftin, 30 Ark. 693 (contra, under an Illinois revenue statute; Pacific Hotel Co. v. Lieb, 83 Ill. 602); the entire sum agreed to be contributed to the enterprise, whether paid in or not; Reid v. Mfg. Co., 40 Ga. 98, 2 Am. Rep. 563.

It has been held to mean the amount paid in, not the amount subscribed; City of Philadelphia v. Ry. Co., 52 Pa. 177; Mayeski v. His Creditors, 40 La. Ann. 98, 4 South. 9; contra, Hightower v. Thornton, 8 Ga. 486, 52 Am. Dec. 412; nor that named in the articles of association; Pratt v. Munsou, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 475. See 1 Thomp. Corp. § 1060; STOCK.

CAPITALIS JUSTICIARIUS. See JUSTICIAR.

CAPITANEUS. He who held his land or title directly from the king himself.

A commander or ruler over others, either in civil, military, or ecclesiastical matters.

A naval commander. This latter use began A. D. 1264. Spelman, Gloss. Capitaneus, Admiratus.

CAPITATION (Lat. caput, head). A poll-tax. An imposition yearly laid upon each person.

The constitution of the United States provides that "no capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census, or enumeration, thereinbefore directed to be taken." Art. 1, s. 9, n. 4. See Hylton v. U. S., 3 Dall. (U. S.) 171, 1 L. Ed. 556; Loughborough v. Blake, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 317, 5 L. Ed. 98.

CAPITE. See IN CAPITE.

CAPITULA. Collections of laws and ordinances drawn up under heads or divisions. Spelman, Gloss.

The term is used in the civil and old English law, and applies to the ecclesiastical law also, meaning chapters or assemblies of ecclesiastical persons. Du Cange.

The Royal and Imperial Capitula were the edicts of the Frankish Kings and Emperors. They are distinguishable from the leges and probably had a less permanent effect. They might, by general consent, become a part of the leges—legibus addita.

CAPITULA CORONÆ. Specific and minute schedules, or capitula itineris.

CAPITULA ITINERIS. Schedules of inquiry delivered to the justices in eyre before setting out on their circuits, and which were intended to embrace all possible crimes.

CAPITULA DE JUDÆIS. A register of mortgages made to the Jews. 2 Bla. Com. 343; Crabb, Eng. Law 130.

CAPITULARY. In French Law. A collection of laws and ordinances orderly arranged by divisions.

The term is especially applied to the collections of laws made and published by the early French emperors. The execution of these capitularies was intrusted to the bishops, courts, and missi regis; and many copies were made. The best edition of the Capitularies is said to be that of Baluze, 1677; Co. Litt. 191 a, Butler's note 77.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A collection of laws and ordinances orderly arranged by divisions. A book containing the beginning and end of each Gospel which is to be read every day in saying mass. Du Cange.

CAPITULATION. The treaty which determines the conditions under which a fortified place or army in the field is abandoned to the commanding officer of the opposing army.

On surrender by capitulation, all the property of the inhabitants protected by the articles is considered by the law of nations as neutral, and not subject to capture on the high seas by the belligerent or its ally; Miller v. The Resolution, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 8, 1 L. Ed. 263.

Capitulations. The name used for treaty engagements between the Turkish government and the principal states of Europe by which subjects of the latter, residents in the territory of the former, were exempt from the laws of the places where they dwelt. 1 Kinglake, Invasion of Crimea 116.

In Civil Law. An agreement by which the prince and the people, or those who have the right of the people, regulate the manner in which the government is to be administered. Wollius, § 989.

CAPITULUM (Lat.). A leading division of a book or writing; a chapter; a section. Tert. Adv. Jud. 9, 19. Abbreviated, Cap.

CAPTAIN (Lat. capitaneus; from caput, head). The commander of a company of soldiers.

The term is also used of officers in the municipal police in a somewhat similar sense: as, captain of police, captain of the watch.

The master or commander of a merchant-vessel, or a vessel of war.

A subordinate officer having charge of a certain part of a vessel of war.

In the United States, the commander of a merchant-vessel is, in statutes and legal proceedings and language, more generally termed master, which title see. In foreign laws and languages he is frequently styled patron.

The rank of captain in the United States navy is next above that of commander; and captains are generally appointed from this rank in the order of seniority. The president has the appointing power, subject to the approval and consent of the senate.

CAPTATION. In French Law. The act of one who succeeds in controlling the will of another, so as to become master of it. It is generally taken in a bad sense.

It was formerly applied to the first stage of the hypnotic or mesmeric trance.

Captation takes place by those demonstrations of attachment and friendship, by those assiduous attentions, by those services and officious little presents, which are usual among friends, and by all those means which ordinarily render us agreeable to others. When these attentions are unattended by deceit or fraud, they are perfectly fair, and the captation is lawful; but if, under the mask of friendship, fraud is the object, and means are used to deceive the person with whom you are connected, then the captation is fraudulent, and the acts procured by the captator are void.

CAPTION (Lat. capere, to take). A taking, or seizing; an arrest. The word is no longer used in this sense.

The heading of a legal instrument, in which is shown when, where, and by what authority it was taken, found, or executed.

In the English practice, when an inferior court, in obedience to the writ of certiorari, returned an indictment into the king's bench, it was annexed to the caption, then called a schedule, and the caption concluded with stating that "it is presented in manner and form as appears in a certain indictment thereto annexed," and the caption and indictment were returned on separate parchments. 1 Wms. Saund. 309, n. 2.

In some of the states, every indictment has a caption attached to it, and returned by the grand jury as part of their presentment in each particular case; and in this respect a caption differs essentially from that of other tribunals, where the separate indictments are returned without any caption, and the caption is added by the clerk of the court, as a general caption embracing all the indictments found at the term; Com. v. Stone, 3 Gray (Mass.) 454; Com. v. Edwards, 4 Gray (Mass.) 5; Com. v. Gee, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 174.

In Criminal Practice. The object of the caption is to give a formal statement of the proceedings, describe the court before which the indictment is found, and the time when and place where it was found; Hall, Int. L. 413; Com. v. Stone, 3 Gray (Mass.) 454; and the jurors by whom it was found; Whart. Cr. Pl. § 91. Thus particulars must be set forth with reasonable certainty; U. S. v. Prentice, 6 McLean, 66, Fed. Cas. No. 16,083; State v. Conley, 39 Me. 78; Reeves v. State, 20 Ala. 33. It must show that the venire facias was returned and from whence the jury came; Whart. Cr. Pl. § 91. The caption may be amended in the court in which the indictment was found; *U. S. v. CAPTIVE. A prisoner of war. Such a person does not by his capture lose his civil rights.

CAPTOR. In International Law. A belligerent who has taken property from an enemy or from an offending belligerent. The term also designates a belligerent who has captured the person of an enemy.

Formerly, goods taken in war were adjudged to belong to the captor; they are now considered to vest primarily in the state or sovereign, and belong to the individual captors only to the extent that the municipal laws provide. Captors are responsible to the owners of the property for all losses and damages, when the capture is tortious and without reasonable cause in the exercise of belligerent rights. But if the capture is originally justifiable, the captors will not be responsible, unless by subsequent misconduct they become trespassers ab initio; 1 C. Rob. Adm. 93, 96. See The Flying Fish, 2 Gall. 374, Fed. Cas. No. 4,892; The Anne Green, 1 Gall. 274, Fed. Cas. No. 414; Hart v. The Littlejohn, 1 Pet. Adm. 116, Fed. Cas. No. 6,153; The London Packet, 1 Mas. 14, Fed. Cas. No. 8,474.

CAPTURE. In International Law. The taking of property by one belligerent from another or from an offending neutral.

Private property of the enemy is not subject to capture on land, but the contrary rule holds at sea. When private enemy vessels are seized at sea, title does not immediately vest in the captor, but the vessel must be brought before a prize court and legally condemned. When public enemy vessels are seized, title vests immediately in the captor state. Capture is deemed lawful when made in accordance with the laws of war.

Private neutral property is subject to capture by a belligerent for the carriage of contraband (q. v.), breach of blockade (q. v.) and unneutral service (q. v.) The Declaration of Paris (q. v.) laid down the rule that enemy goods, except contraband of war, should not be subject to capture under a neutral flag, nor neutral goods under an enemy flag.

It has been a subject of controversy whether captured neutral vessels may be destroyed by a belligerent under exceptional circumstances. British practice held that neutral prizes should be abandoned if they could not be brought into court. Russia followed the opposite rule in the war with Japan in 1905. The Declaration of London (q. v.) compromised the question and allows destruction of a neutral vessel when it is liable to condemnation upon the facts of the case and when the release of the vessel would involve danger to the safety of the war-ship and the success of the operations in which she is engaged at the time. II Opp. 546-558. See NEUTRALITY.

CAPUT (Lat. head).

In Civil Law. Status; a person's civil condition.

According to the Roman law, three elements concurred to form the status or caput of the citizen, namely, liberty, libertas, citizenship, civitas, and family, familia.

Libertas est naturalis facultas ejus quod cuique jaccere libet, nisi si quid vi aut jure prohibetur. This definition of liberty has been translated by Dr. Cooper, and all the other English translators of the Institutes, as follows: "Freedom, from which we are denominated free, is the natural power of acting as we please, unless prevented by force or by the law." This, although it may be a literal, is certainly not a correct, translation of the text. It is absurd to say that liberty consists in the power of acting as we think proper, so far as not restrained by force; for it is evident that even the slave can do what he chooses, except so far as his volition is controlled by the power exercised over him by his master. The true meaning of the text is: "Liberty (from which we are called free) is the power which we derive from nature of acting as we please, except so far as restrained by physical and moral impossibilities." It is obvious that a person is perfectly free though he cannot reach the moon nor stem the current of the Mississippi; and it is equally clear that true freedom is not impaired by the rule of law not to appropriate the property of another to ourselves, or the precept of morality to behave with decency and decorum.

Civitas—the city—reminds us of the celebrated expression, "civis sum Romanus," which struck awe and terror into the most barbarous nations. The citizen alone enjoyed the jus Quiritium, which extended to the family ties, to property, to inheritance, to wills, to alienations, and to engagements generally. In striking contrast with the civis stood the peregrinus hostis, barbarus. Familia—the family—conveyed very different ideas in the early period of Roman jurisprudence from what it does in modern times. Besides the singular organization of the Roman family, explained under the head of pater familias, the members of the family were bound together by religious rites and sacrifices,--sacra familiae.

The loss of one of these elements produced a change of the status, or civil condition; this change might be threefold; the loss of liberty carried with it that of citizenship and family, and was called the maxima capitis deminutio; the loss of citizenship did not destroy liberty, but deprived the party of his family, and was denominated media capitis deminutio; when there was a change of condition by adoption or abrogation, both liberty and citizenship were preserved, and this produced the minima capitis deminutio. But the loss or change of the status, whether the great, the less, or the least, was followed by serious consequences: all obligations merely civil were extinguished; those purely natural continued to exist. Gaius says, Eas obligationes quæ naturalem præstationem habere intelliguntur, palam est capitis deminutione non perire, quia civilis ratio naturalia jura corrumpere non potest. Usufruct was extinguished by the diminution of the head: amittitur usufructus capitis deminutione. D. 3. 6. § 28. It also annulled the testament: "Testamenta jure facta infirmantur, cum is qui fecerit testamentum capite deminutus sit." Gaius, 2, § 143.

At Common Law. A head.

Caput comitatus (the head of the county). The sheriff; the king. Spelman, Gloss.

A person; a life. The upper part of a town. Cowell. A castle. Spelman, Gloss.

Caput anni. The beginning of the year. Cowell.

CAPUT LUPINUM (Lat.). Having a wolf's head.

Outlaws were anciently said to have caput lupinum, and might be killed by any one who met them, if attempting to escape; 4 Bla. Com. 320. In the reign of Edward III. this power was restricted to the sheriff when armed with lawful process; and this power, even, disappeared, and the process of outlawry was resorted to merely as a means of compelling an appearance; Co. Litt. 128 b; 4 Bla. Com. 284; 1 Reeve's Hist. Eng. Law 471. See OUTLAWRY.

CAPUTAGIUM. Head-money; the payment of head-money. Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell.

CAR TRUST ASSOCIATION. See ROLLING STOCK.

CAR TRUST SECURITIES. A name used commercially to indicate a class of investment securities based upon the conditional sale or hire of railroad cars or locomotives to railroad companies with a reservation of title or lien in the vendor or bailor until the property is paid for. See ROLLING STOCK.

CARAT. The weight of four grains, used by jewellers in weighing precious stones. Webster.

CARCAN. In French Law. An instrument of punishment, somewhat resembling a pillory. It sometimes signifies the punishment itself. Biret, Vocab.

CARDINAL. The title given to one of the highest dignitaries of the church of Rome.

Cardinals are next to the pope in dignity: he is elected by them and out of their body. There are cardinal bishops, cardinal priests, and cardinal deacons. See Fleury, Hist. Eccles. liv. xxxv. n. 17, li. n. 19; Thomassin, part. II. liv. I. c. 53, part IV. liv. I. cc. 79, 80; Loiseau, Traité des Ordres, c. 3, n. 31; André Droit Canon.

CARDS. Small rectangular pasteboards, on which are figures of various colors, used for playing certain games. The playing of cards for amusement is not forbidden; nor is gaming for money, at common law; Bish. Stat. Cr. § 504.

One who obtains from another a sum of money by a fraudulent use of cards is guilty of larceny; State v. Donaldson, 35 Utah 96, 99 Pac. 447, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1164, 136 Am. St. Rep. 1041.

Cards are a gambling device; State v. Herryford, 19 Mo. 377; State v. Lewis, 12 Wis. 434.

CARE. Charge or oversight; implying responsibility for safety and prosperity. Webst. Dict.

It is used with reference to the degree of care required of bailees and carriers. For the utmost care, see Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Worthington, 21 Md. 275, 83 Am. Dec. 578; Brand v. R. Co., 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 368; extraordinary care, Toledo, W. & W. Ry. Co. v. Baddeley, 54 Ill. 19, 5 Am. Rep. 71; great care, Brand v. R. Co., 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 368; especial care, Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Clark, 2 Ill. App. 116; proper and reasonable care, Neal v. Gillett, 23 Conn. 443; South & N. A. R. Co. v. Henlein, 52 Ala. 606, 23 Am. Rep. 578; due care, Heathcock v. Pennington, 33 N. C. 640; Butterfield v. R. Co., 10 Allen (Mass.) 532, 87 Am. Dec. 678; ordinary care, State v. Railroad, 52 N. H. 528; Ernst v. R. Co., 35 N. Y. 9, 90 Am. Dec. 761; Smith v. R. Co., 10 R. I. 22; slight care, Johnson v. R. Co., 20 N. Y. 65, 75 Am. Dec. 375. See NEGLIGENCE.

CARETA (spelled, also, Carreta and Car-ecta). A cart; a cart-load.

In Magna Charta (9 Hen. III. c. 21) it is ordained that no sheriff shall take horses or carts (careta) without paying the ancient livery therefor.

CARGO. The entire load of a ship or other vessel. Abbott, Shipp.; Phile v. The Anna, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 197, 1 L. Ed. 98; Mer- lin, Répert.; Allegre's Adm'rs v. Ins. Co., 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 136, 20 Am. Dec. 424. See Benj. Sales §§ 589, 590.

This term is usually applied to goods only, and does not include human beings; 1 Phill. Ins. 185; 4 Pick. 429. But in a more extensive and less technical sense it includes persons: thus, we say, A cargo of emigrants. See 7 M. & G. 729, 744; Davi- son v. Von Lingen, 113 U. S. 49, 5 Sup. Ct. 346, 28 L. Ed. 885.

CARLISLE TABLES. Life and annuity tables compiled at Carlisle, England, about 1870. Used by actuaries and others. See LIFE TABLES.

CARMACK ACT. An act of Congress, June 29, 1906, amending the Hepburn Act. It supersedes all state regulations; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Miller, 226 U. S. 513, 33 Sup. Ct. 155, 57 L. Ed. 323.

CARNAL KNOWLEDGE. Sexual connection. Com. v. Squires, 97 Mass. 59; Noble v. State, 22 Ohio St. 541. The term is generally, if not exclusively, applied to the act of a male.

In the statutes relating to abuse or carnal knowledge of a female child of tender age, the word abuse includes the words carnally know, and the latter term also includes the former, as there could be no carnal knowl- edge of such a child by a man capable of committing rape, without injury; Dawkins v. State, 58 Ala. 376, 29 Am. Rep. 754.

CARNALLY KNEW. A technical phrase usual in an indictment to charge the defend- ant with the crime of rape.

These words were considered essential; Com. Dig. Indictment; 1 Ch. Cr. L. 243; 1 Hale, P. C. 632; but Chitty afterwards says that it does not seem so clear; 3 Ch. Cr. L. 812; and the settled opinion seems to be that the words "carnally knew" are included in the term "rapuit" and are therefore unneces- sary; 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25, § 56; 2 Stark. Cr. Pl. 431, n. (e); but it is safer not to omit them; id.; 1 Ch. Cr. L. 243; 1 East, P. C. 448. These authorities would apply in states in which the offence is described simply as the crime of rape, but in those states where the crime is designated by the words "did ravish and carnally know" it would on gen- eral principles of criminal pleading be safer to use the words of the statute. The use of the words "carnally knew" will not supply the omission of the word "ravished"; 1 Hale, P. C. 628, 632; 3 Russell, Cr. (6th ed.) 230. See Noble v. State, 22 Ohio St. 545; Dawk- ins v. State, 58 Ala. 378, 29 Am. Rep. 754.

CARRIAGE. See VEHICLE; AUTOMOBILE.

CARRIER. One who undertakes to trans- port goods from one place to another. 2 Pars. Contr. (8th ed.) *163.

They are either common or private. Pri- vate carriers incur the responsibility of the exercise of ordinary diligence only, like other bailees for hire; Story, Bailm. § 495; Satter- lee v. Groat, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 272; — v. Jackson, 2 N. C. 14; Robertson & Co. v. Kennedy, 2 Dana (Ky.) 430, 26 Am. Dec. 466; 2 C. B. 877. Special carriers of goods are not insurers and are only liable for injuries caused by negligence; Allis v. Voigt, 90 Mich. 125, 51 N. W. 190. A carrier's liability at- taches the moment goods are delivered to him; Gregory v. Ry. Co., 46 Mo. App. 574;

Railway Co. v. Neel, 56 Ark. 279, 19 S. W. 963.

See COMMON CARRIERS.

CARRYING AWAY. Such a removal or taking into possession of personal property as is required in order to constitute the crime of larceny.

The words "did take and carry away" are a translation of the words cepit et asportavit, which were used in indictments when legal processes and records were in the Latin language. But no single word in our language expresses the meaning of asportavit. Hence the word "away," or some other word, must be subjoined to the word "carry," to modify its general signification and give it a special and distinctive meaning. Com. v. Adams, 7 Gray (Mass.) 45.

Any removal, however right, of the entire article, which is not attached either to the soil or to any other thing not removed, is sufficient; 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 699; 1 Dears. 421; State v. Wilson, 1 N. J. L. 439, 1 Am. Dec. 216. Thus, to snatch a diamond from a lady's ear, which is instantly dropped among the curls of her hair; 1 Leach 320; to remove sheets from a bed and carry them into an adjoining room; 1 Leach 222, n.; to take plate from a trunk, and lay it on the floor with intent to carry it away; id.; to remove a package from one part of a wagon to another, with a view to steal it; 1 Leach 236; have respectively been holden to be felonies. But nothing less than such a severance will be sufficient; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 556; 1 Ry. & M. 14; 4 Bla. Com. 231; 2 Russ. Cr. 96; Clarke, Cr. L. 242, 260.

CARRYING CONCEALED WEAPONS.

See ARMS.

CARS. See RAILROAD; INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION; ROLLING STOCK.

CART. A carriage for luggage or burden, with two wheels, as distinguished from a wagon, which has four wheels. Worcester, Dict.; Brande. The vehicle in which criminals are taken to execution. Johnson.

The term has been held to include four-wheeled vehicles, to carry out the intent of a statute; Favers v. Glass, 22 Ala. 621, 58 Am. Dec. 272.

CART BOTE. An allowance to the tenant of wood sufficient for carts and other instruments of husbandry. 2 Bla. Com. 35. See BOTE.

CARTA. A charter, which title see. Any written instrument.

In Spanish Law. A letter; a deed; a power of attorney. Las Partidas, pt. 3, t. 18, l. 30.

CARTA DE FORESTA. See CHARTA DE FORESTA.

CARTA MERCATORIA. A grant (1303) to certain foreign merchants, in return for custom duties, of freedom to deal wholesale in all cities and towns of England, power to export their merchandise, and liberty to dwell where they pleased, together with other rights pertaining to speedy justice; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 311.

CARTE BLANCHE. The signature of one or more individuals on a white paper, with a sufficient space left above it to write a note or other writing.

In the course of business, it not unfrequently occurs that, for the sake of convenience, signatures in blank are given with authority to fill them up. These are binding upon the parties. But the blank must be filled up by the very person authorized; Musson v. Bank, 6 Mart. O. S. (La.) 707. See Chit. Bills 70; Frazer v. D'Inville, 2 Pa. 200, 44 Am. Dec. 190. BLANK.

CARTEL. Agreements between belligerents authorizing certain non-hostile intercourse between one another which would otherwise be prevented by the state of war; for example, agreements for the exchange of prisoners, for intercommunication by post, telegraph, telephone, railway. II Op. 282.

Cartel ship. A ship commissioned in time of war to exchange prisoners, or to carry any proposals between hostile powers; she must carry no cargo, ammunition, or implements of war, except a single gun for signals. The conduct of ships of this description cannot be too narrowly watched. The service on which they are sent is so highly important to the interests of humanity that it is peculiarly incumbent on all parties to take care that it should be conducted in such a manner as not to become a subject of jealousy and distrust between the two nations; 4 C. Rob. Adm. 357. See Merlin, Répert.; Dane, Abr. c. 40, a. 6, § 7; 1 Kent 68; 3 Phill. Int. Law 161; Crawford v. Penn, 1 Pet. C. C. 106, Fed. Cas. No. 3,372; 3 C. Rob. Adm. 141; 6 id. 336; 1 Dods. Adm. 60.

A written challenge to a duel.

CARTMEN. Persons who carry goods and merchandise in carts, either for great or short distances, for hire.

Cartmen who undertake to carry goods for hire as a common employment are common carriers; 3 C. & K. 61; Edw. Bailm. 500; Story, Bailm. § 496. And see Allen v. Sewall, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 327; Cohen v. Hume, 1 McCord (S. C.) 444; Smyrl v. Niolon, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 421, 23 Am. Dec. 146; Spencer v. Daggett, 2 Vt. 92; Williams v. Branson, 5 N. C. 417, 4 Am. Dec. 562; Bac. Abr. Carriers, A.

CARTULARIES. Ancient English records containing documents and legal proceedings—the muniments of title of the great landowners, and other miscellaneous documents. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 273. See 1 Poll. & Maitl. p. xxii.

CARUCA. A plow. A four-wheeled carriage. A team for a plow, of four oxen abreast. See CARUCATA.

CARUCAGE. A taxation of land by the caruca. The act of plowing.

The caruca was as much land as a man could cultivate in a year and a day with a single plow (caruca). Carucage, carugage, or caruage was the tribute paid for each caruca by the carucarius, or tenant. Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell.

CARUCATA, CARUCATE. A certain quantity of land used as the basis for taxation. A cartload. As much land as may be tilled by a single plow in a year and a day. Skene, de verb. sig. A plow land of one hundred acres. Ken. Gloss. The quantity varies in different counties from sixty to one hundred and twenty acres. Whart. See Littleton, Ten. cclxii.

It may include houses, meadow, woods, etc. It is said by Littleton to be the same as soca, but has a much more extended signification. Spelman, Gloss.; Blount; Cowell.

Carucate was a primitive measure of land in England. Caruca was a plow team. Carucate was based upon the amount of land eight oxen could cultivate in a year. As a fiscal unit it was equivalent to a hide of 120 acres. An eighth was a bovine. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 56; Maitl. Domesday Book and Beyond 395. See 1 L. J. R. 96.

CASE. A question contested before a court of justice. An action or suit at law or in equity. Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 352, 4 L. Ed. 97.

A case arising under a treaty, within U. S. Const. art. 3, § 2, is a suit in which the validity or construction of a treaty of the United States is drawn in question; 2 Sto. Const. § 1647; and under the judiciary act of 1789, § 25, the United States supreme court exercises an appellate jurisdiction in such cases decided by a state court only when the decision of the latter is against the title, right, privilege, or exemption set up or claimed by the party seeking to have the decision reviewed; Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 356, 4 L. Ed. 97. The decision of the state court against the claimant must be upon the construction of the treaty; if it rests upon other grounds it is not a case arising under a treaty, and the supreme court is without any jurisdiction; Gill v. Oliver, 11 How. (U. S.) 529, 13 L. Ed. 799; Williams v. Oliver, 12 How. (U. S.) 111, 13 L. Ed. 915.

In Practice. A form of action which lies to recover damages for injuries for which the more ancient forms of action will not lie. Steph. Pl., And. ed. § 52.

Case, or, more fully, action upon the case, or trespass on the case, includes in its widest sense assumpsit and trover, and distinguishes a class of actions in which the writ is framed according to the special circumstances of the case, from the ancient actions, the writs in which, called brevia formata, are collected in the Registrum Brevium.

By the common law, and by the statute Westm. 2d, 13 Edw. I. c. 24, if any cause of action arose for which no remedy had been provided, a new writ was to be formed, analogous to those already in existence which were adapted to similar causes of action. The writ of trespass was the original writ most commonly resorted to as a precedent; and in process of time the term trespass seems to have been so extended as to include every species of wrong causing an injury, whether it was malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance, apparently for the purpose of enabling an action on the case to be brought in the king's bench. It thus includes actions on the case for breach of a parol undertaking, now called assumpsit (see ASSUMPSIT), and actions based upon a finding and subsequent unlawful conversion of property, now called trover (see TROVER), as well as many other actions upon the case which seem to have been derived from other originals than the writ of trespass, as nuisance, deceit, etc.

And, as the action had thus lost the peculiar character of a technical trespass, the name was to a great extent dropped, and actions of this character came to be known as actions on the case.

As used at the present day, case is distinguished from assumpsit and covenant, in that it is not founded upon any contract, express or implied; from trover, which lies only for unlawful conversion; from detinue and replevin, in that it lies only to recover damages; and from trespass, in that it lies for injuries committed without force, or for forcible injuries which damage the plaintiff consequentially only, and in other respects. See 3 Reeves, Eng. Law 84; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 237; 1 Chit. Pl. 123; 3 Bla. Com. 41; Poll. Tort 645; 5 Term 648.

A similar division existed in the civil law, in which upon nominate contracts an action distinguished by the name of the contract was given. Upon innominate contracts, however, an action præscriptis verbis (which lay where the obligation was one already recognized as existing at law, but to which no name had been given), or in factum (which was founded on the equity of the particular case), might be brought.

The action lies for:

Torts not committed with force, actual or implied; Metcalf v. Alley, 24 N. C. 38; Law v. Law, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 366; Griffin v. Farwell, 20 Vt. 151; as, for malicious prosecution; Muse v. Vidal, 6 Munf. (Va.) 27; Shaver v. White, 6 Munf. (Va.) 113, 8 Am. Dec. 730; Warfield v. Walter, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 80; Hays v. Younglove, 7 B. Monr. (Ky.) 545; Seay v. (Ky.) 515; also where grantor destroys an unrecorded deed placed in his hands for safekeeping by the grantee; Edwards v. Dickinson, 102 N. C. 519, 9 S. E. 456.

As to the effect of intention, as distinguishing case from trespass, see Bell v. Lakin, 1 McMull. (S. C.) 364; Schuer v. Veeder, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 342; Vandenburgh v. Truax, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 464, 47 Am. Dec. 268; Schuneman v. Palmer, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 225; Kelly

v. Lett, 35 N. C. 50; Moore v. Appleton, 26 Ala. 633. In some states the distinction is expressly abolished by statute; Welch v. Whittemore, 25 Me. 86; Hines v. Kinnison, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 119; Luttrell v. Hazen, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 20; Schultz v. Frank, 1 Wis. 352.

The declaration must not state the injury to have been committed vi et armis; Gates v. Miles, 3 Conn. 64 [yet after verdict the words vi et armis (with force and arms) may be rejected as surplusage; White v. Marshall, Harp. (S. C.) 122]; and should not conclude contra pacem; Com. Dig. Action on the Case (C, 3).

Damages not resulting necessarily from the acts complained of must be specially stated; Rowand v. Bellinger, 3 Strobb. (S. C.) 373; Swan v. Tappan, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 164; Morris v. McCamey, 9 Ga. 160; Hall v. Kitson, 4 Chandl. (Wis.) 20. Evidence which shows the injury to be trespass will not support case; Dillingham v. Snow, 5 Mass. 560; Burdick v. Worrall, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 596; Scott v. Bay, 3 Md. 431.

The plea of not guilty raises the general issue; Henion v. Morton, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 150. Under this plea almost any matter may be given in evidence, except the statute of limitations; the rule is modified in actions for slander and a few other instances; 1 Wms. Saund. 130.

The judgment is that the plaintiff recover a sum of money ascertained by a jury for his damages sustained by the commission of the grievances complained of in the declaration; Cox v. Skeen, 24 N. C. 221, 38 Am. Dec. 691; Burdick v. Glasko, 18 Conn. 494; with costs. See Act. & Def. ch. xxxiv., as to cases in which this action will lie.

"Case or controversy," as used in the judiciary act, imply the existence of present or possible adverse parties whose contentions are submitted to the court for adjudication; Muskrat v. U. S., 219 U. S. 346, 31 Sup. Ct. 250, 55 L. Ed. 246.

Cases, in the title of an old law book, may mean moot cases or questions put by the author for the consideration of the reader; e. g., Stillingleet's "Ecclesiastical Cases . . . Stated and Resolved," 1698-1704.

CASE CERTIFIED. Where there is a difference of opinion between the judges of the circuit court, they may certify the question to the supreme court of the United States, but it must be a distinct point or proposition of law so clearly stated that it can be answered without regard to the other issues of law or fact in the case; Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Wickham, 128 U. S. 426, 9 Sup. Ct. 113, 32 L. Ed. 503; U. S. v. Perrin, 131 U. S. 55, 9 Sup. Ct. 681, 38 L. Ed. 88; U. S. v. Reilly, 131 U. S. 58, 9 Sup. Ct. 664, 33 L. Ed. 75. It must not involve the whole case and must be a question of law only; Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Wickham, 128 U. S. 426, 9 Sup. Ct. 113, 32 L. Ed. 503; nor can a case be certified in advance of a regular trial; U. S. v. Perrin, 131 U. S. 55, 9 Sup. Ct. 681, 38 L. Ed. 88.

CASE LAW. The body of law created by judicial decisions, as distinguished from law derived from statutory and other sources. See PRECEDENTS; STARE DECISIS.

CASE MADE. A statement of facts in relation to a disputed point of law, agreed to by both parties and submitted to the court without a preceding action. This is only found in the Code states. See De Armond v. Whitaker, 99 Ala. 252, 13 South. 613; Farthing v. Carrington, 116 N. C. 315, 22 S. E. 9; Bradford v. Buchanan, 39 S. C. 237, 17 S. E. 501.

CASE STATED. A statement of all the facts of a case, with the names of the witnesses, and a detail of the documents which are to support them. A brief.

An agreement in writing, between a plaintiff and defendant, that the facts in dispute between them are as therein agreed upon and set forth. Diehl v. Ihrie, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 143.

Some process of this kind exists, it is presumed, in all the states, for the purpose of enabling parties who agree upon the facts to dispense with a formal trial to ascertain what is already known, and secure a decision upon the law involved merely. These agreements are called also agreed cases, cases agreed on, agreed statements, etc. In chancery, also, when a question of mere law comes up, it is referred to the king's bench, or common pleas, upon a case stated for the purpose; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 433, n.; 6 Term 313.

A case stated usually embodies a written statement of the facts in the case consented to by both parties as correct, and submitted to the court by their agreement, that a decision may be rendered upon the court's conclusions of law on the facts stated, without a trial by jury.

The facts being thus ascertained, it is left for the court to decide for which party is the law. As no writ of error lies on a judgment rendered on a case stated; Dane, Abr. c. 137, art. 4, § 7; it is usual in the agreement to insert a clause that the case stated shall be considered in the nature of special verdict. In that case, a writ of error lies on the judgment which may be rendered upon it. But a writ of error will also lie on a judgment on a case stated, when the parties have agreed to it; Fuller v. Trevoir, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 529; and it is usual to include such a provision.

There must be a pending action, in which the case is stated; Smith v. Eline, 4 D. R. (Pa.) 490; it must state all the facts; and cannot refer to outside documents; Hemphill v. Yerkes, 132 Pa. 545, 19 Atl. 342, 19 Am. St. Rep. 607; the court must decide on the case stated, not on the report of a master subsequently appointed; Fralley v. Legion of Honor, 132 Pa. 578, 20 Atl. 684; and cannot go outside of the case stated in deciding it; Northampton Co. v. Ry. Co., 148 Pa. 282, 23 Atl. 895; Mutchler v. City of Easton, 148 Pa. 441, 23 Atl. 1109; Com. v. Howard, 149 Pa. 302, 24 Atl. 308; if no right of appeal is reserved, the decision of the court is final; Com. v. Callahan, 153 Pa. 625, 25 Atl. 1000.

Where a controversy is submitted to a court upon a case stated, but which fails to recite that it is submitted for its opinion on the law and judgment, the court is without jurisdiction to render judgment; Tyson v. Bank, 77 Md. 412, 26 Atl. 520, 23 L. R. A. 161. Where an agreed statement was made by the parties under a mistake of facts, it was a proper subject of amendment; Levy v. Sheehan, 3 Wash. St. 420, 28 Pac. 748.

CASE SYSTEM. A method of teaching or studying the science of the law by a study of the cases historically, or by the inductive method. It was introduced in the Law School of Harvard University in 1869-70 by Christopher C. Langdell, Dane Professor of Law. It is usually based upon printed collections of selected cases arranged chronologically under appropriate titles. The system is not necessarily based upon the exclusive use of cases, but the cases are made the basis of instruction. Text-books may be used for the purpose of reference and collateral reading, and are so used by many teachers under this system. It has been very generally adopted in law schools.

The reasons for the adoption of this system of instruction are given in a paper read before the Section of Legal Education of the American Bar Association in 1894 by Professor W. A. Keener, formerly of the Law School of Harvard University.

"1. That law, like other applied sciences, should be studied in its application, if one is to acquire a working knowledge thereof. 2. That this is entirely feasible for the reason that while the adjudged cases are numerous the principles controlling them are comparatively few. 3. That it is by the study of cases that one is to acquire the power of legal reasoning, discrimination and judgment, qualities indispensable to the practising lawyer. 4. That the study of cases best develops the power to analyze and to state clearly and concisely a complicated state of facts, a power which, in no small degree, distinguished the good from the poor and indifferent lawyer. 5. That the system, because of the study of fundamental principles, avoids the danger of producing a mere case lawyer, while it furnishes, because the principles are studied in their application to facts, an effectual preventive of any tendency to mere academic learning. 6. That the student, by the study of cases, not only follows the law in its growth and development, but thereby acquires the habit of legal thought, which can be acquired only by the study of cases, and which must be acquired by him either as a student, or after he has become a practitioner, if he is to attain any success as a lawyer. 7. That it is the best adapted to exciting and holding the interest of the student, and is, therefore, best adapted to making a lasting impression upon his mind. 8. That it is a method distinctly productive of individuality in teaching and of a scientific spirit of investigation, independence, and self-reliance on the part of the student." Reprinted in 28 Am. L. Rev. 709.

CASH. That which circulates as money, including bank bills, but not mere bills receivable. The provision of the limited partnership acts requiring "actual cash payment" by the special partner is not complied with by the delivery to the firm of promissory notes, which are received and treated as cash; Pierce v. Bryant, 5 Allen (Mass.) 91; nor of credits, Van Ingen v. Whitman, 62 N. Y. 513; nor of post-dated checks, Durant v. Abendroth, 69 N. Y. 148, 25 Am. Rep. 158; though regular checks of third parties, conceded to represent cash, have been allowed; Hogg v. Orgill, 34 Pa. 344.

Cash price is the price of articles paid for in cash at the time of purchase, in distinction from the barter and credit prices. A sale for cash is a sale for money in hand; Steward v. Scudder, 24 N. J. L. 101.

CASH-BOOK. A book in which a merchant enters an account of all the cash he receives or pays. An entry of the same thing ought to be made, under the proper dates, in the journal. The object of the cash-book is to afford a constant facility to ascertain the true state of a man's cash. Pardessus, n. 87.

CASH REGISTER. In a prosecution for selling liquor on certain days, cash register records were held inadmissible to sustain the testimony of a party to the transaction that liquor had not been sold; Cullinan v. Moncrief, 90 App. Div. 538, 85 N. Y. Supp. 745. They are not books of account, but memoranda made by a party in his own interest. See note in 13 Yale L. J. 397.

CASHIER. An officer of a moneyed institution, or of a private person or firm, who is entitled by his office to take care of the cash or money of such institution, person, or firm.

The cashier of a bank is usually intrusted with all the funds of the bank, its notes, bills, and other choses in action, to be used from time to time for the ordinary and extraordinary exigencies of the bank. He usually receives, directly, or through subordinate officers, all moneys and notes of the bank; delivers up all discounted notes and other securities; signs drafts on corresponding banks, and, with the president, the notes payable on demand issued by the bank; and, as an executive officer of the bank, transacts much of its general business. He is the chief executive officer of the bank; Morse, Bank, § 152; Minor v. Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 46, 7 L. Ed. 47; Rissell v. Bank, 69 Pa. 415. He is the custodian of its money, securities, books, and valuable papers; Mason v. Moore, 73 Ohio St. 275, 76 N. E. 932, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 597, 4 Ann. Cas. 240. He may borrow money for the use of the bank and pledge notes owned by it as security for the loan; Citizens' Bank v. Bank, 126 Ky. 169, 103 S. W. 249, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 598, 128 Am. St. Rep. 282. He may certify checks; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Bank, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 604, 19 L. Ed. 1008. He will bind the bank by his contract to pay commissions for the disposal of its land through a broker, but which, through a mistake in identity, the bank does not own; Arnold v. Bank, 126 Wis. 362, 105 N. W. 828, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 580.

He need not be a stockholder; indeed, some bank charters prohibit him from owning stock in the bank. He usually gives security for the faithful discharge of his trusts. It is his duty to make reports to the proper state officer (in banks incorporated under the national bank act to the comptroller of the currency; U. S. R. S. § 5210) of the condition of the bank, as provided by law.

In general, the bank is bound by the acts of the cashier within the scope of his authority, express or implied; Minor v. Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 46, 7 L. Ed. 47; Fleckner v. Bank, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 361, 5 L. Ed. 631; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Bank, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 604, 19 L. Ed. 1008; Wild v. Bank, 3 Mas. 505, Fed. Cas. No. 17,646; Matthews v. Nat. Bank, 1 Holmes 396, Fed. Cas. No. 9,286; Pendleton v. Bank, 1 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 179; Davenport v. Stone, 104 Mich. 521, 62 N. W. 722, 53 Am. St. Rep. 467. It is bound by his act in drawing checks in its name, though with the intent to apply the proceeds to his own use; Phillips v. Bank, 67 Hun (N. Y.) 378, 22 N. Y. Supp. 254; Lowndes v. Bank, 82 Conn. 8, 72 Atl. 150, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 408. He may endorse to himself and sue on a note payable to the bank; Young v. Hudson, 99 Mo. 102, 12 S. W. 632. But the bank is not bound by a declaration of the cashier not within the scope of his authority; as if, when a note is about to be discounted by the bank, he tells a person that he will incur no responsibility by becoming an indorser on such note; Bank of U. S. v. Dunn, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 51, 8 L. Ed. 316; see West St. Louis Sav. Bank v. Bank, 95 U. S. 557, 24 L. Ed. 490; President, etc., of Salem Bank v. Bank, 17 Mass. 1, 9 Am. Dec. 111; State Bank at Elizabeth v. Chet- wood, 8 N. J. L. 1; Bank of Kentucky v. Bank, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 240. He has no authority to accept certificates of the capital stock of an insurance company in payment of a debt due the bank; Bank of Commerce v. Hart, 37 Neb. 197, 55 N. W. 631, 20 L. R. A. 780, 40 Am. St. Rep. 479. He may not accept a new note, so as to discharge a surety on the first note; Gray v. Bank, 81 Md. 631, 32 Atl. 518. He may not give away, surrender, or release the bank's securities; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 395; Morse, Banks & Bankg. § 169.

Where a cashier does acts on behalf of a bank which are not against public policy or criminal, when once executed in whole or part, they are binding on the bank, as it cannot enjoy the benefits and escape the liabilities; Owens v. Stapp, 32 Ill. App. 653; a cashier of a bank has authority to have the paper of the bank rediscounted, in the usual course of business; Davenport v. Stone, 104 Mich. 521, 62 N. W. 722, 53 Am. St. Rep. 467. Merely by virtue of his office, he has no implied power to receive money for interest in advance on a note owned by the bank, and to agree to extend the time of payment, thus discharging an indorser from liability; Bank of Ravenswood v. Wetzel, 58 W. Va. 1, 50 S. E. 886, 70 L. R. A. 305, 6 Ann. Cas. 48; Vanderford v. Bank, 105 Md. 164, 66 Atl. 47, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 129 (a case under the negotiable instrument law). When the cashier of a bank instituted an action in the name of the bank commenced by capias issued on his affidavit, alleging his connection with the bank, it will be presumed that he has authority to do so; Wachmuth v. Bank, 96 Mich. 426, 56 N. W. 9, 21 L. R. A. 278. A banking corporation, whose charter does not otherwise provide, may be represented by its cashier in transactions outside of his ordinary duties, without his authority to do so being in writing, or appearing in the records of the proceedings of the directors, and where the cashier has so acted for a series of years without objection, the bank is estopped to deny his authority; Martin v. Webb, 110 U. S. 7, 3 Sup. Ct. 428, 28 L. Ed. 49.

The mere notification by the cashier to his individual creditor that he has placed the amount of the debt to the latter's credit on the books of the bank, followed by the honoring of his check for a portion of the amount, does not charge the bank with responsibility for the credit; Langlois v. Gragnon, 123 La. 453, 49 South. 18, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 414.

He has no authority to bind the bank by a pledge of its credit to secure a discount of his own notes for the benefit of a corporation in which he was a stockholder; State Nat. Bank v. Bank, 68 Fed. 691, 14 C. C. A. 61; nor has he authority to sell property belonging to the bank; Greenawalt v. Wil- son, 52 Kan. 109, 34 Pac. 403; nor has he power to bind the bank to pay the draft of a third person on one of its customers, to be drawn at a future day, when it expects to have a deposit from him sufficient to cover it; Flannagan v. Bank, 56 Fed. 959, 23 L. R. A. 836; nor to assign collaterals belonging to himself, which were given to secure a loan to another person for the cashier's benefit; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Demere, 92 Ga. 735, 19 S. E. 38.

The power of a bank cashier to transfer notes and securities held by the bank can be questioned only by the bank or its representative; Haugan v. Sunwall, 60 Minn. 367, 62 N. W. 398.

See NATIONAL BANK; DIRECTORS; AGENT. In Military Law. To deprive a military officer of his office. See Art. of War, art. 14.

CASSARE. To quash; to render void; to break. Du Cange.

CASSATION. In French Law. A decision emanating from the sovereign authority, by which a decree or judgment in the court of last resort is set aside or annulled. See COUR DE CASSATION.

CASSETUR BREVE (Lat. that the writ be quashed). A judgment sometimes entered against a plaintiff at his request when, in consequence of allegations of the defendant, he can no longer prosecute his suit with effect.

The effect of such entry is to stop proceedings, and exonerate the plaintiff from liability for future costs, leaving him free to sue out new process; 3 Bla. Com. 303. See Gould, Pl. c. 5, § 139; 5 Term 634.

CAST. A term used in connection with the imposition upon a party litigant of costs in the suit: A is cast for the costs of the case.

CASTELLORUM OPERATIO. In Old English Law. Service or labor done by inferior tenants for the building and upholding of castles and public places of defence.

Towards this some gave their personal service, and others, a contribution of money or goods. This was one branch of the trinoda necessitas; 1 Bla. Com. 263; from which no lands could be exempted under the Saxons; though immunity was sometimes allowed after the conquest; Kennett, Paroch. Ant. 114; Cowell.

CASTIGATORY. An engine used to punish women who have been convicted of being common scolds. It is sometimes called the trebucket, tumbrel, ducking-stool, or cucking-stool. This barbarous punishment has perhaps never been inflicted in the United States; James v. Com., 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 225.

CASTING-VOTE. The privilege which the presiding officer possesses of deciding a question where the body is equally divided. It sometimes signifies the single vote of a person who never votes except in the case of a tie; sometimes the double vote of a person who first votes with the rest, and then upon a tie creates a majority by giving a second vote; Christian's note to 1 Bla. Com. 18. The vice-president of the United States, as president of the senate, has the casting-vote when that body is equally divided, but cannot vote at any other time; Const. I. 3. This is a provision frequently made, though in some cases the presiding officer, after giving his vote with the other members, is allowed to decide the question in case of a tie; People v. Church, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 603.

A casting vote neither exists in corporations or elsewhere, unless it is expressly given by statute or charter, or, what is equivalent, exists by immemorial usage; and in such cases it cannot be created by a by-law; 6 T. R. 732; see 2 B. & Ad. 704.

See MEETING.

CASTRATION. The act of gelding. When this act is maliciously performed upon a man, it is a mayhem, and punishable as such, although the sufferer consented to it; 2 Bish. Cr. Law §§ 1001, 1008. By the ancient law of England the crime was punished by retaliation, membrum pro membro; Co. 3d Inst. 118. It is punished in the United States, generally, by fine and imprisonment. The civil law punished it with death; Dig. 74. 8. 4. 2. For the French law, vide Code Pénal art. 316. The consequences of castration, when complete, are impotence and sterility; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 72.

Voluntary castration after marriage is no ground of divorce; Berger v. Berger, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 232.

CASU CONSIMILI. See CONSIMILI CASU.

CASU PROVISIO (Lat. in the case provided for). A writ of entry framed under the provisions of the statute of Gloucester (6 Edw. I.) c. 7, which lay for the benefit of the reversioner when a tenant in dower aliened in fee or for life.

It seems to have received this name to distinguish it from a similar writ framed under the provisions of the statute Westm. 2d (13 Edw. I.) c. 24, where a tenant by curtesy had alienated as above, and which was known emphatically as the writ in consimili casu.

The writ is now practically obsolete. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 205; Dane, Abr. Index.

CASUAL EJECTOR. The person supposed to perform the fictitious ouster of the tenant of the demandant in an action of ejectment. See EJECTMENT.

CASUALTY. Inevitable accident. Unforeseen circumstances not to be guarded against by human agency, and in which man takes no part. Story, Bailm. § 240; 1 Pars. Contr. 543; 2 Whart. Negl. 8th ed. *159, 160. See 17 C. B. N. S. 51; Waldeck v. Ins. Co. 56 Wis. 98, 14 N. W. 1.

CASUALTY INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

CASUS FÖDERIS (Lat.). In International Law. A case within the stipulations of a treaty of alliance.

The question whether, in case of a treaty of alliance, a nation is bound to assist its ally in war against a third nation, is determined in a great measure by the justice or injustice of the war. It is manifestly unjust on the part of the ally, it cannot be considered as casus föderis. Grotius, b. 2, c. 25; Vattel, b. 2, c. 12, § 168.

See 1 Kent 49.

In Commercial Law. The case or event contemplated by the parties to a contract, or stipulated for by it, or coming within its terms. Black, Law Dict.

CASUS FORTUITUS (Lat.). An inevitable accident. A loss happening in spite of all human effort and sagacity. 3 Kent 217, 300; Whart. Negl. §§ 113, 553.

It includes such perils of the sea as strokes of lightning, etc. A loss happening through the agency of rats was held an unforeseen, but not an inevitable, accident. Bullard v. Ins. Co., 1 Curt. C. C. 148, Fed. Cas. No. 2, 122. The happening of a casus fortuitus excuses shipowners from liability for goods conveyed: 3 Kent 216; L. R. 1 C. P. D. 143.

CASUS MAJOR (Lat.). An unusual accident. Story, Bailm. § 240.

CASUS OMISSUS (Lat.). A case which is not provided for. When such cases arise in statutes which are intended to provide for all cases of a given character which may arise, the common law governs; 5 Co. 38; 11 East 1; Cresoe v. Laidley, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 279; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 260; Broom, Max. 46. A casus omissus may occur in a contract as well as in a statute; 2 Bla. Com. 260.

CAT. A whip sometimes used for whipping criminals. It consists of nine lashes tied to a handle, and is frequently called cat-o-nine-tails. It is used where the whipping-post is retained as a mode of punishment and was formerly resorted to in the navy.

CATALLA OTIOSA (Lat.). Dead goods, and animals other than beasts of the plow, averia carucæ, and sheep. 3 Bla. Com. 9; Bract. 217 b.

CATALLUM. A chattel.

The word is used more frequently in the plural, catalla, but has then the same signification, denoting all goods, movable or immovable, except such as are in the nature of fees and freeholds. Cowell; Du Cange.

CATANEUS. A tenant in capite. A tenant holding immediately of the crown. Spelman, Gloss.

CATCHING BARGAIN. An agreement made with an heir expectant for the purchase of his expectancy at an inadequate price.

In such cases the heir is, in general, entitled to relief in equity, and may have the contract rescinded upon terms of redemption; 1 Vern. 167, 320, n.; 2 Cox 80; 2 Ch.

Cas. 136; 1 P. Wms. 312; 1 Cro. Car. 7; 2 Atk. 133; 2 Swanst. 147; L. R. 8 Ch. Ap. 484; L. R. 10 Eq. 641. It has been said that all persons dealing for a reversionary interest are subject to this rule; but it may be doubted whether the course of decisions authorizes so extensive a conclusion, and whether, in order to constitute a title to relief, the reversioner must not combine the character of heir; 2 Swanst. 148, n. See 1 Ch. Pr. 112, 113, n., 458, 826, 838, 839. A mere hard bargain is not sufficient ground for relief.

The English law on this subject was altered by stat. 31 and 32 Vic. c. 4. Before that act slight inadequacy of consideration was sufficient to set the contract aside; under the act only positive unfairness was relieved against; Bisph. Eq. § 221. Under the Moneylenders' Act, 1900, the courts have power to re-open catching bargains where the interest is excessive and the transaction is unconscionable, and where the interest is excessive and the transaction is such that a court of equity would give relief; [1906] A. C. 469; [1903] 1 K. B. 705; [1906] 1 K. B. 79, where 75 per cent. was held reasonable under the circumstances. This act does not include pawnbrokers, registered building or loan societies, banking or insurance companies, etc. Money lenders are subjected to having their contracts judicially varied in the interest of borrowers, but the rights of bona fide assignees or holders for value without notice may not be affected. Money lenders are obliged to register. Bellot, Bargains with Money-Lenders. See Chesterfield v. Janssen, 1 Lead. Cas. in Eq. 773, and notes. The contract may be for a loan, sale, annuity, or mortgage; 16 Ves. 512; L. R. 10 Ch. Ap. 389; 26 Beav. 644; Butler v. Duncan, 47 Mich. 94, 10 N. W. 123, 41 Am. Rep. 711.

CATCHPOLE. A name formerly given to a sheriff's deputy, or to a constable, or other officer whose duty it is to arrest persons. He was a sort of sergeant. The word is not now in use as an official designation; Minshew.

CATER COUSIN. A very distant relation. Bla. Law Tracts 6.

CATHEDRAL. A tract set apart for the service of the church.

After the establishment of Christianity, the emperors and other great men gave large tracts of land whereon the first places of public worship were erected,—which were called cathedræ, cathedrals, sees, or seats, from the clergy's residence thereon. And when churches were afterwards built in the country, and the clergy were sent out from the cathedrals to officiate therein, the cathedral or head seat remained to the bishop, with some of the chief of the clergy as his assistants.

CATHOLIC EMANCIPATION ACT. The act 10 Geo. IV. c. 7. This act relieves from disabilities and restores all civil rights to Roman Catholics, except that of holding ecclesiastical offices and certain high state offices. The previous legislation which by gradual stages led up to the final removal of these disabilities is to be found in the acts of 18 Geo. III. c. 60; 31 Geo. III. c. 32; and 43 Geo. III. c. 7. 2 Steph. Com. 721.

CATTLE. A collective name for domestic quadrupeds generally, including not only the bovine tribe, but horses, asses, mules, sheep, goats, and swine. Web. Dict.; Decatur Bank v. Bank, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 299, 22 L. Ed. 560.

A railroad engineer cannot take chances of an animal's getting off the track, where he has an opportunity of avoiding all possibility of an injury; Elmsley v. R. Co. (Miss.) 10 South. 41. It is immaterial whether the stock was legally at large or not, where the road is not fenced; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Schaefer, 5 Ind. App. 86, 31 N. E. 557; but where not legally at large and the company is under no legal obligation to fence its road, it will only be responsible for gross, wanton, or wilful negligence in causing injury to stock; Windsor v. R. Co., 45 Mo. App. 123. See Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. Gross, 41 Ill. App. 561. The law does not presume negligence from the mere fact that stock was killed or injured by a railroad company; Eddy v. Lafayette, 49 Fed. 798, 1 C. C. A. 432; See ANIMALS; RUNNING AT LARGE.

CATTLE GATE. A customary proportionate right of pasture enjoyed in common with others. The right is measured not by the number of cattle to be pastured, but by reference to the rights of others and the whole amount of pasture. 34 E. L. & Eq. 511; 1 Term 137.

CATTLE GUARDS. See FENCE.

CAUCUS. See ELECTION.

CAUSA (Lat.). A cause; a reason.

A condition; a consideration. Used of contracts, and found in this sense in the Scotch law also. Bell, Dict.

It cannot be considered that consideration was borrowed from equity as a modification of the Roman "causa." Prof. J. B. Ames in 3 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 279. Practically it covers somewhat wider ground than the modern "Consideration Executed," but it has no generic notion corresponding to it, at least none coextensive with the notion of contract; Poll. Contr. 74.

A suit; an action pending. Used in this sense in the old English law.

Property. Used thus in the civil law in the sense of res (a thing). Non porcellum, non agnellum nec alia causa (not a hog, not a lamb, nor other thing). Du Cange.

By reason of.

Causa proxima. The immediate cause.

Causa remota. A cause operating indirectly by the intervention of other causes.

Causa causans. The inducing or immediate cause.

In its general sense, causa denotes anything operating to produce an effect. Thus, it is said, causa causantis causa est causati (the cause of the thing causing is the cause of the thing caused). Marble v. City of Worcester, 4 Gray (Mass.) 398; 4 Campb. 284. In law, however, only the direct cause is considered. See 9 Co. 50; 12 Mod. 639; CAUSA PROXIMA NON REMOTA SPECTATUR; CONTRACTS.

CAUSA JACTITATIONIS MARITAGII (Lat.). A form of action which anciently lay against a party who boasted or gave out that he or she was married to the plaintiff, whereby a common reputation of their marriage might ensue. 3 Bla. Com. 93. See JACTITATION OF MARRIAGE.

CAUSA MATRIMONII PRÆLOCUTI (Lat.). A writ lying where a woman has given lands to a man in fee-simple with the intention that he shall marry her, and he refuses so to do within a reasonable time, upon suitable request. Cowell. Now obsolete. 3 Bla. Com. 183, n.

CAUSA MORTIS DONATIO. See DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA.

CAUSA PROXIMA NON REMOTA SPECTATUR (Lat.). The direct and not the remote cause is considered.

In many cases important questions arise as to which, in the chain of acts tending to the production of a given state of things, is to be considered the responsible cause. It is not merely distance of place or of causation that renders a cause remote. The cause nearest in the order of causation, without any efficient concurring cause to produce the result, may be considered the direct cause. In the course of decisions of cases in which it is necessary to determine which of several causes is so far responsible for the happening of the act or injury complained of, what is known as the doctrine of proximate cause is constantly resorted to in order to ascertain whether the act, omission, or negligence of the person whom it is sought to hold liable was in law and in fact responsible for the result which is the foundation of the action.

The rule was formulated by Bacon, and his comment on it is often cited: "It were infinite for the law to judge the cause of causes, and their impulsions one of another: therefore it contenteth itself with the immediate cause; and judgeth of acts by that, without looking to any further degree;" Max. Reg. 1. Its subsequent development has resulted rather in its application to new conditions than in deviation from the principle as originally stated. Proximate cause, it may be generally stated, is such adequate and efficient cause as, in the natural order of events, and under the particular circumstances surrounding the case, would necessarily produce the event; and this having been discovered, is to be deemed the true cause, unless some new cause not incidental to, but independent of, the first, shall be found to intervene between it and the first. Sh. & Redf. Neg. § 10; Marble v. City of Worcester, 4 Gray (Mass.) 412; Story, J., in Peters v. Ins. Co., 14 Pet. (U. S.) 99, 10 L. Ed. 371; Alexander v. Town of New Castle, 115 Ind. 51, 17 N. E. 200; State v. R. R., 52 N. H. 528; Webb's Poll. Torts 29. It is a cause which in natural sequence, undisturbed by any independent cause, produces the result complained of; Rehling v. Pipe Lines, 160 Pa. 359, 28 Atl. 777, 40 Am. St. Rep. 724; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. Ed. 256; Putnam v. R. Co., 55 N. Y. 108, 14 Am. Rep. 190; Taylor v. Baldwin, 78 Cal. 517, 21 Pac. 124; and the result must be the natural and probable consequence such as ought to have been foreseen as likely to flow from the act complained of; Ewing v. R. Co., 147 Pa. 44, 23 Atl. 340, 14 L. R. A. 666, 30 Am. St. Rep. 709; McDonald v. Snelling, 14 Allen (Mass.) 290, 92 Am. Dec. 768; Pilmer v. Traction Co., 14 Ida. 327, 94 Pac. 432, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 254, 125 Am. St. Rep. 161; Kreigh v. Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co., 152 Fed. 120, 81 C. C. A. 338, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 684.

Two elements go to make up proximate cause: 1. The act must be the efficient cause of the injury; 2. The result must be one which might reasonably have been anticipated when the negligent act was committed; Goodlander Mill Co. v. Oil Co., 63 Fed. 400, 11 C. C. A. 253, 27 L. R. A. 583; Cole v. Sav. & Loan Soc., 124 Fed. 113, 59 C. C. A. 593, 63 L. R. A. 416; Kreigh v. Church, 152 Fed. 120; 81 C. C. A. 338, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 684; Teis v. Min. Co., 158 Fed. 260, 85 C. C. A. 478, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 893; Hoag v. R. Co., 85 Pa. 293, 27 Am. Rep. 653; Hartman v. Clarke, 104 App. Div. 62, 93 N. Y. Supp. 314; Seith v. Electric Co., 241 Ill. 252, 89 N. E. 425, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 978, 132 Am. St. Rep. 204.

From a legal point of view it is said to be of two kinds: 1. As in insurance cases; 2. Responsibility for a wrongful act, whether in tort or contract; 15 Harv. L. Rev. 566, where it is said: "The fundamental difference between these classes is that in the former investigation ceases when the nearest cause adequate to produce the result in question has been discovered, while in the latter the object is to connect the circumstances which are the subject of the action with a responsible human will." id.; see Gilson v. Canal Co., 36 Am. St. Rep. 807, note.

Where a train was forty-five minutes late when a gust of wind threw it from the track and injured a passenger, it was held that though the train would have escaped the gust of wind had it been on time, yet the accident was neither the natural nor probable consequence of the delay; McClary v. R. Co., 3 Neb. 44, 19 Am. Rep. 631. When a horse hitched to a defective hitching-post was frightened by the running away of another horse, and broke the post and ran over a person in the street, the latter could not recover against the owner of the post for the defect in the post as the cause of the injury; City of Rockford v. Tripp, 83 Ill. 247, 25 Am. Rep. 381. Negligently setting fire to grass on the property of another may be found to be the proximate cause of the death of one burned whilst attempting to extinguish it; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Siler, 229 Ill. 390, 82 N. E. 362, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 819, 11 Ann. Cas. 368. Exposure to cold was held the proximate cause of injury to the health of one who, although ill at the time, would not have suffered seriously but for such exposure; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Daugherty, 108 S. W. 336, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 1392, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 740. The escape of oil from a tank near a river bank was held the proximate cause of injury caused by the oil to boats lower down; Brennan Construction Co. v. Cumberland, 29 App. D. C. 554, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 535, 10 Ann. Cas. 865. Where a railroad company obstructed a railroad crossing and delayed a physician, held that his patient had a right of action against it if she suffered by the delay; Terry v. R. Co. (Miss.) 60 South. 729. Permitting a road to remain out of repair so that fire apparatus is hindered in responding to an alarm is not the proximate cause of the destruction of the property by fire; Hazel v. Owensboro, 99 S. W. 315, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 627, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 235.

The question of proximate cause is said to be determined, not by the existence or non-existence of intervening events, but by their character and the natural connection between the original act or omission and the injurious consequences. When the intervening cause is set in operation by the original negligence, such negligence is still the proximate cause; Seith v. Electric Co., 241 Ill. 252, 89 N. E. 425, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 978, 132 Am. St. Rep. 204. If the party guilty of the first act of negligence might have anticipated the intervening cause, the connection is not broken; Seith v. Electric Co., 241 Ill. 252, 89 N. E. 425, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 978, 132 Am. St. Rep. 204; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Columbia, 65 Kan. 390, 69 Pac. 338, 58 L. R. A. 399; Smith v. Tel. Co., 113 Mo. App. 429, 87 S. W. 71; Citizens Telephone Co. of Texas v. Thomas, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 20, 99 S. W. 879. Any number of causes and effects may intervene, and if they are such as might with reasonable diligence have been foreseen, the last result is to be considered as the proximate result. But whenever a new cause intervenes, which is not a consequence of the first wrongful cause, which is not under control of the wrongdoer, which could not have been foreseen by the exercise of reasonable diligence, and except for which the final injurious consequence could not have happened, then such injurious consequence must be deemed too remote; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Stanford, 12 Kan. 354, 15 Am. Rep. 362; Kreigh

v. Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co., 152 Fed. 120, 81 C. C. A. 338, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 684. Gas was negligently permitted to remain in a mine. A workman was overcome by the gas, and, in removing him to the surface, his leg was broken in the elevator. The gas-filled mine was not the proximate cause of the broken leg; Teis v. Smuggler Min. Co., 158 Fed. 260, 85 C. C. A. 478, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 893.

The cases in which the original wrong-doer is still liable, though independent acts of other persons may have intervened, are classified generally by Prescott F. Hall in 15 Harv. L. Rev. 541, as:

1. Acts directly malicious; Laidlaw v. Sage, 158 N. Y. 73, 52 N. E. 679, 44 L. R. A. 216 (where an explosion was held the proximate cause, though the person injured by it was forced by another into the position of danger). Taylor v. Hayes, 63 Vt. 475, 21 Atl. 610; Isham v. Dow's Estate, 70 Vt. 588, 41 Atl. 585, 45 L. R. A. 87, 67 Am. St. Rep. 691. One who violates a duty owed to others or commits a tortious or wrongfully negligent act is liable, not only for those injuries which are the direct and immediate consequences of his act, but for such consequential injuries as, according to common experience, are likely to, and in fact do, result from his act; Smethurst v. Barton Square Church, 148 Mass. 261, 19 N. E. 387, 2 L. R. A. 695, 12 Am. St. Rep. 550 (snow from a roof fell on a horse causing it to start and thereby injure a passer-by).

2. Acts such as wilful misrepresentation and false warranties: Of this class of cases is Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455 (where a druggist carelessly labelled a deadly poison as a harmless medicine); where a druggist labelled extract of belladonna as extract of dandelion; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455; where naphtha was sold for oil; Wellington v. Oil Co., 104 Mass. 64; or poisonous food; Bishop v. Weber, 139 Mass. 411, 1 N. E. 154, 52 Am. Rep. 715; or a proprietary medicine containing ingredients harmful to one using it according to its directions; Blood Balm Co. v. Cooper, 83 Ga. 457, 10 S. E. 118, 5 L. R. A. 612, 20 Am. St. Rep. 324; or a beverage represented to be harmless, but containing bits of broken glass; Watson v. Brewing Co., 124 Ga. 121, 52 S. E. 152, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1178, 110 Am. St. Rep. 157; or where a manufacturer sold a defective article knowing it to be defective, though there was no privity of contract between the person injured and the manufacturer; Schubert v. Clark Co., 49 Minn. 331, 51 N. W. 1103, 15 L. R. A. 818, 32 Am. St. Rep. 559; Woodward v. Miller, 119 Ga. 618, 46 S. E. 847, 64 L. R. A. 932, 100 Am. St. Rep. 188; Holmvik v. Self-feeder Co., 98 Minn. 424, 108 N. W. 810.

3. Acts conclusively presumed to be malicious, such as violations of statutes. Where liability for personal injury is imposed by statute on counties, etc., or persons for defective highways, bridges, etc., the innocent intervening act of a third person will not discharge the first wrong-doer from his responsibility; Hayes v. Hyde Park, 153 Mass. 514, 27 N. E. 522, 12 L. R. A. 249.

Generally it is held that a company maintaining overhead wires is liable for injuries resulting from their fall notwithstanding an intervening act of a third person who attempts to remove them. This is usually on the ground that the company should have foreseen that some person would interfere with such wires; Citizens' Telephone Co. of Texas v. Thomas, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 20, 99 S. W. 879; Neal v. R. Co., 3 Pennewill (Del.) 467, 53 Atl. 338; Smith v. Telephone Co., 113 Mo. App. 429, 87 S. W. 71; Dannenhower v. Telegraph Co., 218 Pa. 216, 67 Atl. 207; Kansas City v. Gilbert, 65 Kan. 469, 70 Pac. 350; but where a wire fell to the ground and was knocked by a policeman with his club towards the sidewalk, the intervening act of the policeman was held the proximate cause of injury to one who caught the wire; Seith v. Electric Co., 241 Ill. 252, 89 N. E. 425, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 978, 132 Am. St. Rep. 204. And the negligence of a telephone company in maintaining a pole in a dangerous position until it fell across a highway was held not the proximate cause of an accident, when it was set back in the hole by passers-by and insecurely propped, afterwards falling and killing the daughter of the plaintiff; Harton v. Telephone Co., 146 N. C. 429, 59 S. E. 1022, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 956, 14 Ann. Cas. 390.

Where a manufacturer undertook to supply a boiler which would stand a working pressure of one hundred pounds and at a less pressure the boiler exploded in consequence of the defective construction of a hinge, thereby injuring the buyer's employees, and rendering such buyer liable in damages to them, it was held that though the buyer might have discovered the defect by inspection, yet he was entitled to recover from the manufacturer, as, even if his conduct be called want of ordinary care, it was induced by the warranty or representations of the manufacturer; Boston Woven Hose & Rubber Co. v. Kendall, 178 Mass. 232, 59 S. E. 657, 51 L. R. A. 781, 86 Am. St. Rep. 478. In [1895] 1 Q. B. 857, and [1895] 2 Q. B. 650, it is intimated that the injured workman could have recovered against the manufacturer in the first place. In the Massachusetts case it is said that there are difficulties in holding one liable in damages when the tort of another has intervened between his act and the consequences complained of, but that in some cases there may be a recovery, citing Nashua Iron & Steel Co. v. R. Co., 62 N. H. 159.

The manufacturer or vendor of a tool machine or appliance which is not in its nature intrinsically dangerous is not ordinarily liable for defects therein to one not in privity with him; Heizer v. Mfg. Co., 110 Mo. 605, 19 S. W. 630, 15 L. R. A. 821, 33 Am. St. Rep. 482; Heindirk v. Elevator Co., 122 Ky. 675, 92 S. W. 608, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1103; but a well recognized exception to this rule is where the thing is eminently dangerous to human life; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455; as where circulars sent out by a bottler of aerated water indicated his knowledge that the bottles were liable to explode, and the evidence tended to show that the tests applied by him to the bottles sent out were not adequate to justify the conclusion that they would not burst under customary usage, with the knowledge of which defendants might reasonably be chargeable; Torgesen v. Schultz, 192 N. Y. 156, 84 N. E. 956, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 726, 127 Am. St. Rep. 894.

A contractor, after the completion and delivery of possession of a building and its acceptance by the owner, is not liable to a stranger to the contract for injuries resulting from defects in the construction of the building; Curtin v. Somerset, 140 Pa. 70, 21 Atl. 244, 12 L. R. A. 322, 23 Am. St. Rep. 220, where the court said, quoting from Whart. Neg. 439, "There must be causal connection between the negligence and the hurt, and such causal connection is interrupted by the interposition between the negligence and the hurt of any independent human agency; Miner v. McNamara, 81 Conn. 690, 72 Atl. 138, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477; Fitzmaurice v. Fabian, 147 Pa. 199, 23 Atl. 444; Fowles v. Briggs, 116 Mich. 425, 74 N. W. 1046, 40 L. R. A. 528, 72 Am. St. Rep. 537, where a shipper of lumber negligently loaded was held not liable for injury to a brakeman, after it had become the duty of the railroad company to provide for the inspection of the car.

The manufacturer and seller of a side saddle to a husband was held to be under no duty to the wife, for whose use he knows it to have been purchased, for its defective construction; Bragdon v. Perkins-Campbell Co., 87 Fed. 109, 30 C. C. A. 567, 66 L. R. A. 924. The leading case is Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 M. & W. 109, where the defendant had contracted with the postmaster-general to provide a mail coach and keep it in repair. He was held not liable to an employee of one who contracted with the postmaster-general to provide horses and coachmen for the purpose of carrying the mail.

Where the defendant sold gunpowder to a child, and the parents took charge of it and let the child have some, the sale was held too remote as a cause of injury to the child by an explosion; Carter v. Towne, 103 Mass.

507; on the other hand an injury from a railway accident, having been the direct cause of a diseased condition which resulted in paralysis, was held to be the proximate cause of the latter; Bishop v. R. Co., 48 Minn. 26, 50 N. W. 927; but where by reason of injury in a collision a passenger became disordered in mind and body and eight months after committed suicide, in a suit for damages against the railroad company it was held that his own act was the proximate cause of his death; Scheffer v. R. Co., 105 U. S. 249, 26 L. Ed. 1070. A woman's illness, caused by fright from shooting a dog in her presence, is not a result reasonably to be anticipated; Renner v. Canfield, 36 Minn. 90, 30 N. W. 435, 1 Am. St. Rep. 654.

If two causes operate at the same time to produce a result which might be produced by either, they are concurrent causes, and in such case each is a proximate cause, but if the two are successive and unrelated in their operation, one of them must be proximate and the other remote; Herr v. City of Lebanon, 149 Pa. 222, 24 Atl. 207, 16 L. R. A. 106, 34 Am. St. Rep. 603. When there is no order of succession in time, when there are two concurrent causes of a loss, the predominating efficient one must be regarded as the proximate when the damage done by each cannot be distinguished; Howard Fire Ins. Co. v. Transp. Co., 12 Wall. (U. S.) 194, 20 L. Ed. 378 (a marine insurance case). See the reporter's note of Mr. J. C. Carter's argument for appellant. As an illustration of concurrent causes, where lumber was negligently piled, and remained a long time in that condition, and was caused to fall by the negligence of a stranger, the negligence in piling concurring with the negligence of the stranger, was the direct and proximate cause; Pastene v. Adams, 49 Cal. 87.

The question as to what is the proximate cause of an injury is ordinarily not one of science or of legal knowledge, but of fact for the jury to determine in view of the accompanying circumstances, all of which must be submitted to the jury, who must determine whether the original cause is by continuous operation linked to each successive fact; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. McKeen, 90 Pa. 122, 35 Am. Rep. 644; Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. Ed. 256; a finding that the burning of the plaintiff's mill and lumber was the unavoidable consequence of the burning of the defendant's elevator, is in effect a finding that there was no intervening and independent cause between the negligent conduct of defendant and injury to plaintiff; id. The doctrine under consideration finds its most frequent application in fire and marine insurance; L. R. 4 Q. B. 414; L. R. 4 C. P. 206; L. R. 5 Ex. 204; Nelson v.

Ins. Co., 8 Cush. (Mass.) 477; 54 Am. Dec. 770; Paine v. Smith, 2 Duer (N. Y.) 301; Mathews v. Ins. Co., 11 N. Y. 9; Montgomery v. Ins. Co., 16 B. Monr. (Ky.) 427; Western Ins. Co. v. Cropper, 32 Pa. 351, 75 Am. Dec. 561; General Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sherwood, 14 How. (U. S.) 351, 14 L. Ed. 452; in cases of tort founded on negligence; 5 C. & P. 190; L. R. 4 C. P. 279; L. R. 8 Q. Rep. 689; in measure of damages and in highway cases; 15 Harv. L. Rev. 541, which see for a thorough review of the history of this doctrine; Webb's Poll. Torts 29, 566; Howe, Civ. L. 201.

See NEGLIGENCE.

CAUSA REI (Lat.). In Civil Law. Things accessory or appurtenant. All those things which a man would have had if the thing had not been withheld. Du Cange; 1 MacKeldey, Civ. Law 55.

CAUSARE (Lat. to cause). To be engaged in a suit; to litigate; to conduct a cause. Used in the old English and in the civil law.

CAUSATION. See CAUSA PROXIMA.

CAUSATOR (Lat.). A litigant; one who takes the part of the plaintiff or defendant in a suit.

CAUSE (Lat. causa). In Civil Law. The consideration or motive for making a contract. Dig. 2. 14. 7; Toullier, liv. 3, tit. 3, c. 2, § 4; 1 Abb. 28.

In Pleading. Reason; motive.

In a replication de injuria, for example, the plaintiff alleges that the defendant of his own wrong and without the cause by him, etc., where the word cause comprehends all the facts alleged as an excuse or reason for doing the act. 8 Co. 67; 11 East 451; 1 Chit. Pl. 585.

In Practice. A suit or action. Any question, civil or criminal, contested before a court of justice. Wood, Civ. Law 301. It was held to relate to civil actions only, and not to embrace quo warranto; 5 E. & B. 1. See Logan v. Small, 43 Mo. 254; 3 Q. B. 901.

CAUSE OF ACTION. In Practice. Matter for which an action may be brought.

A cause of action is said to accrue to any person when that person first comes to a right to bring an action. There is, however, an obvious distinction between a cause of action and a right, though a cause of action generally confers a right. Thus, statutes of limitation do not affect the cause of action, but take away the right. A cause of action implies that there is some person in existence who can bring suit and also a person who can lawfully be sued; Douglas v. Beasley, 40 Ala. 148; Parker v. Enslow, 102 Ill. 272, 40 Am. Rep. 588. See Parish v. Ward, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 330; 4 Blng. 704; Graham v. Scripture, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 501.

When a wrong has been committed, or a breach of duty has occurred, the cause of action has accrued, although the claimant may be ignorant of it; 3 B. & Ald. 288, 626; 5 B. & C. 259; 4 C. & P. 127. A cause of action does not accrue until the existence of such a state of things as will enable a person having the proper relations to the property or persons concerned to bring an action; 5 B. & C. 360; 8 D. & R. 346; 4 Bingh. 686.

"A cause of action consists of those facts as to two or more persons entitling at least some one of them to a judicial remedy of some sort against the other, or others, for the redress or prevention of a wrong. It is essential to the existence of such facts that there should be a right to be violated and a violation thereof. Since those two elements constitute a cause of action, and to satisfy the statute [Code pleading statute as to joinder of action] they must arise out of one or more circumstances called a transaction, the latter is to be viewed as something distinct from the cause of action itself, else the latter could not arise out of the former." Emerson v. Nash, 124 Wis. 369, 102 N. W. 921, 70 L. R. A. 326, 109 Am. St. Rep. 944.

Every judicial action has in it certain necessary elements—a primary right belonging to the plaintiff and a corresponding primary right devolving upon the defendant; the wrong done by the defendant, which consists of a breach of such primary right and duty; a remedial right in plaintiff and a remedial duty upon the defendant, and, finally, the remedy or relief itself. Of these the primary right and duty and the delict or wrong constitute the cause of action; Wildman v. Wildman, 70 Conn. 700, 41 Atl. 1. Stated in brief, a cause of action may be said to consist of a right belonging to the plaintiff and some wrongful act or omission done by defendant by which that right has been violated. Pom. Rem. § 453.

It comprises every fact necessary to the right to the relief prayed for; McAndrews v. R. Co., 162 Fed. 856, 89 C. C. A. 546. In United States v. Land Co., 192 U. S. 355, 24 Sup. Ct. 266, 48 L. Ed. 476, it was said by Holmes, J.: "The whole tendency of our decisions is to require a plaintiff to try his whole cause of action and his whole case at one time; he cannot even split up his claim (1 Salk. 11; Trask v. R. Co., 2 Allen (Mass.) 331; Freem. Judge [4th Ed.] § 238, 241) and, a fortiori, he cannot divide the grounds of recovery;" and this language is quoted in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Slaght, 205 U. S. 132, 27 Sup. Ct. 446, 51 L. Ed. 742.

Where a party brings an action for a part only of the entire indivisible demand and recovers judgment, he cannot subsequently sue for another part of the same demand; Baird v. U. S., 96 U. S. 432, 24 L. Ed. 703.

This rule applies to the foreclosure of a mortgage on several tracts of land; if the mortgagee forecloses as to a portion of the land, he waives his lien as to the rest; Mascarel v. Raffour, 51 Cal. 242. So of a vendor having a lien for the purchase money on lands; if he enforces the lien as to a portion of the land, he may not bring a second suit: Day v. Preskett, 40 Ala. 624. And it was held in Codwise v. Taylor, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 346, that if he proceeded to enforce his lien for a portion of the money which is due, he exhausts his remedy as to the rest of the land for that portion of the debt afterwards maturing.

But a defendant may not split his counterclaim, using part of it as a defense and then sue on the other part; Palm's Adm'rs v. Howard, 102 S. W. 267, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 316; id.; 102 S. W. 1199, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 814. A suit on a bond and a suit on its coupons are on different causes of action; Presidio County v. Bond & Stock Co., 212 U. S. 58, 29 Sup. Ct. 237, 53 L. Ed. 402. The words "arising out of the same cause of action" in United States admiralty rule 53 are used in a more general sense as meaning the same transaction, dispute or subject matter; United Transp. & Lighterage Co. v. Transp. Line, 185 Fed. 388, 107 C. C. A. 442, following Vianello v. The Credit Lyonnais, 15 Fed. 637.

CAUSIDICUS. A speaker or pleader. See ADVOCATE.

CAUTIO, CAUTION. In Civil Law. Security given for the performance of any thing. A bond whereby the debtor acknowledges the receipt of money and promises to pay it at a future day.

In French Law. The person entering into an obligation as a surety.

In Scotch Law. A pledge, bond, or other security for the performance of an obligation, or completion of the satisfaction to be obtained by a judicial process. Bell, Dict.

CAUTIO FIDEJUSSORIA. Security by means of bonds or pledges entered into by third parties. Du Cange.

CAUTIO PIGNORATITIA. A pledge by a deposit of goods.

CAUTIO PRO EXPENSIS. Security for costs or expenses.

This term is used among the civilians, Nov. 112, c. 1, and generally on the continent of Europe. In nearly all the countries of Europe, a foreign plaintiff, whether resident or not, is required to give caution pro expensis: that is, security for costs. In some countries this rule is modified, and, when such plaintiff has real estate or a commercial or manufacturing establishment within the state, he is not required to give such caution. Felix, Droit Intern. Privé, n. 106.

CAUTIO USUFRUCTUARIA. Security, which tenants for life give, to preserve the property rented free from waste and injury. Ersk. Inst. 2. 9. 59.

CAUTION JURATORY. Security given by oath. That which a suspender swears is the best he can afford in order to obtain a suspension. Ersk. Pr. 4. 3. 6.

CAUTIONARY BOND. See BOND.

CAUTIONARY JUDGMENT. Where an action in tort was pending and the plaintiff feared the defendant would dispose of his real property before judgment, a cautionary judgment was entered with a lien on the property; Seisner v. Blake, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 333; so in an action on a note against a religious association, where it was alleged that the defendant was endeavoring to sell its real estate before judgment on the note; Witmer & Dundore v. Port Treverton Church, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 38.

CAUTIONER. A surety; a bondsman. One who binds himself in a bond with the principal for greater security. He is still a cautioner whether the bond be to pay a debt or whether he undertake to produce the person of the party for whom he is bound. Bell, Dict.

CAVEAT (Lat. let him beware). A notice not to do an act, given to some officer, ministerial or judicial, by a party having an interest in the matter.

It is a formal caution or warning not to do the act mentioned, and is addressed frequently to prevent the admission of wills to probate, the granting letters of administration, etc. See Wms. Ex. 581.

1 Burn, Eccl. Law 19, 263; Nelson, Abr.; Dane, Abr.; Ayliffe, Parerg.; 3 Bla. Com. 246; 2 Chit. Pr. 502, note b; 3 Redf. Wills 119; 4 Brew. Pr. 3974; Poph. 133; 1 Sid. 371; In re Road, 8 N. J. L. 139. See WILL.

Filing a caveat to the probate of a will does not of itself constitute a "contest" of a will; In re McCahan's Estate, 221 Pa. 188, 70 Atl. 711.

In Patent Law. A legal notice to the patent office that the caveator claims to be the inventor of a particular device, in order to prevent the issue of a patent on it to any other person without notice to the caveator. It gives no advantage to the caveator over any rival claimant, but only secures to him an opportunity to establish his priority of invention.

It is filed in the patent office under statutory regulations; U. S. R. S. § 4902. The principal object of filing it is to obtain for an inventor time to perfect his invention without the risk of having a patent granted to another person for the same thing. The practice was abolished by act of June 10, 1910.

It is also used to prevent the issue of land patents; Harper v. Baugh, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 508; and where surveys are returned to the land office, and marked "in dispute," this entry has the effect of a caveat against their acceptance; Hughes v. Stevens, 43 Pa. 197.

CAVEAT EMPTOR (Lat. let the purchaser take care). In every sale of real property, a purchaser's right to relief at law or in equity on account of defects or incumbrances in or upon the property sold depends solely upon the covenants for title which he has received; 2 Sugd. Vend. 425; Co. Litt. 384 a, Butl. note; 3 Swanst. 651; Hodges v. Saunders, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 475; Redwine v. Brown, 10 Ga. 311; Dorsey v. Jackman, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 52, 7 Am. Dec. 611; unless there be fraud on the part of the vendor; 3 B. & P. 162; Abbott v. Allen, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 519, 7 Am. Dec. 554; Miles v. Williamson, 24 Pa. 142; Etheridge v. Vernoy, 70 N. C. 713; Tuck v. Downing, 76 Ill. 71; Beale v. Seiveley, 8 Leigh (Va.) 658; Sutton v. Sutton, 7 Gratt. (Va.) 238, 56 Am. Dec. 109; Butler v. Miller, 15 B. Monr. (Ky.) 627; Allen v. Hopson, Freem. Ch. (Miss.) 276; Nance v. Elliott, 38 N. C. 408; Maney v. Porter, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 347; Brandt v. Foster, 5 Ia. 293; Rice v. Burnet, 39 Tex. 177; and consult Rawle, Cov. for Title, 5th ed. § 319. This doctrine applies to a sale made under a decree foreclosing a mortgage, and the purchaser cannot rely upon statements made by the officer conducting the sales; Norton v. Loan & Trust Co., 35 Neb. 466, 53 N. W. 481, 18 L. R. A. 88, 37 Am. St. Rep. 441.

In sales of personal property substantially the same rule applies, and is thus stated in Story, Sales, 3d ed. § 348: The purchaser buys at his own risk, unless the seller gives an express warranty, or unless the law implies a warranty from the circumstances of the case or the nature of the thing sold, or unless the seller be guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment in respect to a material inducement to the sale; Benj. Sales, § 611; Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 383, 19 L. Ed. 987; Gaylord Mfg. Co. v. Allen, 53 N. Y. 515; Porter v. Bright, 82 Pa. 441; Mixer v. Coburn, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 559, 45 Am. Dec. 230; Dean v. Morey, 33 Ia. 120; Roseman v. Canovan, 43 Cal. 110; Armstrong v. Bufford, 51 Ala. 410; Biggs & Co. v. Perkins, 75 N. C. 397. It is the settled doctrine of English and American law that the purchaser is required to notice such qualities of the goods purchased as are reasonably supposed to be within the reach of his observation and judgment. Under the civil law there was on a sale for a fair price an implied warranty of title and that the goods sold were sound, but under the common law there is a clear distinction between the responsibility of the seller as to title and as to quality; the former he warranted, the latter, if the purchaser had opportunity to examine, he did not; 2 Kent 478; Pothier, Cont. de Vente, No. 184; See MISREPRESENTATION; CONCEALMENT; SALES; WARRANTY.

This doctrine does not apply in an action for damages for inducing one by false representations to take an assignment of a lease executed by one who had no title to the land; Cheney v. Powell, 88 Ga. 629, 15 S. E. 750. It was applied where the buyer of cows was a competent judge and had ample time, before buying, for inspection; Dorsey v. Watkins, 151 Fed. 340.

Consult Rawle, Covenants for Title; Benjamin, Sales; Story, Sales; 2 Kent 478; Leake, Cont. 198; 1 Story, Equity; Sugden, Vendors & P.

CAVEATOR. One who files a caveat.

CAYAGIUM. A toll or duty paid the king for landing goods at some quay or wharf. The barons of the Cinque Ports were free from this duty. Cowell.

CEAPGILD. Payment of an animal. An ancient species of forfeiture. Cowell.

CEDE. To assign; to transfer. Applied to the act by which one state or nation transfers territory to another.

CEDENT. An assignor. The assignor of a chose in action. Kames, Eq. 43.

CEDULA. In Spanish Law. A written obligation, under private signature, by which a party acknowledges himself indebted to another in a certain sum, which he promises to pay on demand or on some fixed day.

In order to obtain judgment on such an instrument, it is necessary that the party executing it should acknowledge it in open court, or that it be proved by two witnesses who saw its execution.

The citation affixed to the door of an absconding offender, requiring him to appear before the tribunal where the accusation is pending.

CELEBRATION OF MARRIAGE. The solemn act by which a man and woman take each other for husband and wife, conformably to the rules prescribed by law.

CELIBACY. The state or condition of life of a person not married.

CEMETERY. A place set apart for the burial of the dead. Cemeteries are regulated in England and many of the United States by statute.

After ground has once been devoted to this object it can be applied to secular purposes only with the sanction of the legislature; L. R. 4 Q. B. 407; Sohler v. Church, 109 Mass. 1.

An abandoned cemetery, from which all the bodies had not been removed, cannot be sold; Ritter v. Couch (W. Va.) 76 S. E. 428, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1216. A cemetery association holds the fee of lands purchased for the purposes of the association. The persons to whom lots are conveyed for burial purposes take only an easement—the right to use their lots for such purposes; Buffalo City Cemetery v. Buffalo, 46 N. Y. 503; People v. Trustees of St. Patrick's Cathedral; 21 Hun (N. Y.) 184; Washb. Easem. 604; Sohler v. Church, 109 Mass. 21; Price v. Church, 4 Ohio 515; it resembles the grant of a pew in a church; Jones v. Towne, 58 N. H. 462, 42 Am. Rep. 602; Sohler v. Church, 109 Mass. 1. It is a mere (exclusive) usufructuary right, subject to the conditions of the charter and by-laws of the cemetery company; Roanoke Cemetery Co. v. Goodwin, 101 Va. 605, 44 S. E. 769. It is in the nature of an easement; id.; so is the right to burial in a particular burial vault; 22 Beav.

506; capable of being created by deed only; S. B. & C. 288; but it can be created by prescription; Hook v. Joyce, 94 Ky. 450, 22 S. W. 651, 21 L. R. A. 96. It has been held to be a license; Buffalo City Cemetery v. Buffalo, 46 N. Y. 503; Page v. Symonds, 63 N. H. 17, 56 Am. Rep. 481. A statute directing a removal of bodies, without providing compensation to the lot owners, is constitutional; Went v. Church of Williamsburgh, 80 Hun 266, 30 N. Y. Supp. 157. In the absence of a deed, or certificate equivalent thereto, they are mere licensees; S. B. & C. 288. Non-residence does not divest an heir at law of an easement in a burial lot while the grave-stones of his parents remain; Hook v. Joyce, 94 Ky. 450, 22 S. W. 651, 21 L. R. A. 96.

Their rights cease when the cemetery is vacated, as such, by authority of law; Partidge v. Church, 39 Md. 631; Craig v. Church, 88 Pa. 42, 32 Am. Rep. 417; and the owner of a lot in which no interments have been made, loses all use of it by the passage of a law making interments therein unlawful; Kincaid's Appeal, 66 Pa. 411, 5 Am. Rep. 377. An act declaring it unlawful to open a public street through a cemetery does not prevent one who has laid out a cemetery from dedicating a strip along the edge of it which he still owns for a public alley, it not abridging the rights of parties to whom lots had been sold; Du Bois Cemetery Co. v. Griffin, 165 Pa. 81, 30 Atl. 840.

A cemetery association has the right to limit all interments to the family of the lot owner and their relatives; Farely v. Cemetery Ass'n, 44 La. Ann. 28, 10 South. 386.

The property of cemetery associations is usually exempt from taxation; Woodlawn Cemetery v. Inhabitants of Everett, 118 Mass. 354; People v. Cemetery Co., 86 Ill. 336, 29 Am. Rep. 32; People v. Pratt, 129 N. Y. 68, 29 N. E. 7; and this exemption has been held to include immunity from claims for municipal improvements; Olive Cemetery Co. v. City of Philadelphia, 37 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 264. See 1 Washb. R. P. 9; Washb. Easem. 515; Cooley, Tax. 203; but it is held that it would not be relieved from paying an assessment for street improvements; Lima v. Cemetery Ass'n, 42 Ohio St. 128, 51 Am. Rep. 809; Alexander v. City Council, 5 Gill (Md.) 396, 46 Am. Dec. 630; Boston Seamen's Friend Society v. Boston, 116 Mass. 181, 17 Am. Rep. 153; President, etc., of City of Paterson v. Society, 24 N. J. L. 385; People v. Cemetery Co., 86 Ill. 336, 29 Am. Rep. 32; Sheehan v. Hospital, 50 Mo. 155, 11 Am. Rep. 412.

A lot owner may maintain an action of trespass against one who wrongfully trespasses upon it; Smith v. Thompson, 55 Md. 5, 39 Am. Rep. 409; Gowen v. Bessey, 94 Me. 114, 46 Atl. 792; it has been held that he may even sue the owner of the fee for such wrongful act; Hoff v. Olson, 101 Wis. 1181, 76 N. W. 1121, 70 Am. St. Rep. 903; Bessemer Land & Improvement Co. v. Jenkins, 111 Ala. 135, 18 South. 565, 56 Am. St. Rep. 26. He may enjoin the cemetery association from preventing a member of his family from being buried in the family lot; Wright v. Cemetery Corp., 112 Ga. 884, 38 S. E. 94, 52 L. R. A. 521; or from removing the ashes of the dead; Beatty v. Kurtz, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 566, 7 L. Ed. 521; or may obtain an order to compel the association to keep the grounds in good order and maintain the whole as a cemetery; Clark v. Cemetery Co., 69 N. J. Eq. 636, 61 Atl. 261.

An injunction may issue against the lot owner and the cemetery association to prevent the burial of a dog; Hertle v. Riddell, 127 Ky. 623, 106 S. W. 282, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 796, 128 Am. St. Rep. 364.

A purchaser of a lot must look to the charter and by-laws of the corporation, they being part of his contract of purchase. When the by-laws provide that "this cemetery is set apart for the burial of the white race," a negro may not be buried therein; Hertle v. Riddell, 127 Ky. 623, 106 S. W. 282, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 796, 128 Am. St. Rep. 364; People v. Cemetery Co., 258 Ill. 36, 101 N. E. 219. One who purchased a lot in a distinctively Roman Catholic cemetery takes it with the tacit understanding that he will not be allowed to use it for the burial of one not a member of that church; People v. Trustees of St. Patrick's Cathedral, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 184; Dwenger v. Geary, 113 Ind. 106, 14 N. E. 903. But, where a lot was sold to a colored man for burial purposes, the corporation was not allowed afterwards to change its by-laws so as to exclude him and his family from the right of burial therein; Mt. Moriah Cemetery Ass'n v. Com., 81 Pa. 235, 22 Am. Rep. 743.

Where a testator devised to trustees a lot of ground for burial of the dead of his family, without any fund for its care, and the lot fell into disuse, the Orphans' Court may decree its sale and apply the proceeds in part to buying a lot in another cemetery, removing the dead, marking the graves or caring for the lot in the future and may divide the remainder among the heirs of the testator, but with no part for an elaborate monument to the testator; Young's Estate, 224 Pa. 570, 73 Atl. 941. The residue is distributable as real estate; Young's Estate, 20 Pa. D. R. 686.

See DEAD BODY; CHARITABLE USES (as to a legacy to keep a lot in order).

CENEGILD. In Saxon Law. A pecuniary mulct or fine paid to the relations of a murdered person by the murderer or his relations. Spelman, Gloss.

CENNINGA. A notice given by a buyer to a seller that the things which had been sold were claimed by another, in order that he might appear and justify the sale. Blount; Whishaw.

The exact significance of this term is somewhat doubtful. It probably denoted notice, as defined above. The finder of stray cattle was not always entitled to it; for Spelman says, "As to strange (or stray) cattle, no one shall have them but with the consent of the hundred of tithingmen; unless he have one of these, we cannot allow him any cenninga (I think notice)." Spelman, Gloss.

CENS. In Canadian Law. An annual payment or due reserved to a seigneur or lord, and imposed merely in recognition of his superiority. Guyot, Inst. c. 9.

The land or estate so held is called a censive; the tenant is a censtariæ. It was originally a tribute of considerable amount, but became reduced in time to a nominal sum. It is distinct from the rentes. The cens varies in amount and in mode of payment. Payment is usually in kind, but may be in silver; 2 Low. C. 40.

CENSARIA. A farm, or house and land, let at a standing rent. Cowell.

CENSO. In Spanish and Mexican Law. An annuity; a ground rent. The right which a person acquires to receive a certain annual pension, in consideration of the delivery to another of a determined sum of money or of an immovable thing. Civil Code Mex. art. 3206; Black, Dict.; Trevino v. Fernandez, 13 Tex. 655.

CENSO RESERVATIO. In Spanish and Mexican Law. The right to receive from another an annual pension by virtue of having transferred land to him by full and perfect title. Trevino v. Fernandez, 13 Tex. 655.

CENSUS. An official reckoning or enumeration of the inhabitants and wealth of a country.

The census of the United States is taken every tenth year, in accordance with the constitution; and many of the states have made provisions for a similar decennial reckoning at intervening periods.

The act of July 2, 1909, provides for the 13th and subsequent censuses. The period of three years beginning July 1st next preceding the census, is designated as the decennial census period and the reports must be completed and published within that period.

Certified copies of census returns are admissible in evidence upon the question of the age of a citizen deceased since the return was made; Priddy v. Boice, 201 Mo. 309, 99 S. W. 1055, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 718, 119 Am. St. Rep. 762, 9 Ann. Cas. 874; but the record does not import absolute verity; Western Cherokee Indians v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cl. 1.

The courts take judicial notice of the results of a census; State v. Braskamp, 87 Ia. 588, 54 N. W. 532; People v. Williams, 64 Cal. 87, 27 Pac. 939; Guldin v. Schuylkill County, 149 Pa. 210, 24 Atl. 171; Hawkins v. Thomas, 3 Ind. App. 399, 29 N. E. 157; State v. County Court, 128 Mo. 427, 30 S. W. 103; contra, People v. Rice, 135 N. Y. 473, 31 N. E. 921, 16 L. R. A. 836.

CENSUS REGALIS. The royal property (or revenue).

CENT (Lat. centum, one hundred). A coin of the United States, weighing forty-eight grains, and composed of ninety-five per centum of copper and of tin and zinc in such proportions as shall be determined by the Director of the Mint. Act of Feb. 12, 1873, s. 13. See Rev. Stat. section 3515.

Previous to the act of congress just cited, the cent was composed wholly of copper. By the act of April 2, 1792, Stat. at Large, vol. 1, p. 248, the weight of the cent was fixed at eleven pennyweights, or 264 grains; the half cent in proportion. Afterwards, namely, on the 14th of January, 1793, it was reduced to 208 grains; the half-cent in proportion. 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 299. In 1796 (Jan. 26), by the proclamation of President Washington, who was empowered by law to do so, act of March 3, 1795, sect. 8, 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 440, the cent was reduced in weight to 168 grains; the half-cent in proportion. It remained at this weight until the passage of the act of Feb. 21, 1837, which provided for a weight of seventy-eight grains and an alloy of eighty-eight per centum of copper and twelve of nickel. The same act directs that the coinage of half-cents should cease. By the coinage act of Feb. 12, 1873, the weight and alloy were fixed as above stated. The first issue of cents from the national mint was in 1793, and has been continued every year since, except 1815. But in 1791 and 1792 some experimental pieces were struck, among which was the so-called Washington cent of those years.

CENTENA. See HUNDRED.

CENTESIMA (Lat. centum). In Roman Law. The hundredth part.

Usuræ centesimæ. Twelve per cent. per annum; that is, a hundredth part of the principal was due each month,—the month being the unit of time for which the Romans reckoned interest. 2 Bla. Com. 462, n.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT. A court in England (erected in 1834) which is the court of assize and of quarter sessions for the city of London and its liberties and the court of assize for the counties of London and Middlesex, and parts of Essex, Kent and Surrey. It has jurisdiction over all offences committed on the high seas or within the jurisdiction of the admiralty and offences committed outside its jurisdiction, sent to it by the King's Bench Division under a writ of certiorari. It consists of the lord chancellor, the judges of the High Court, the lord mayor, the aldermen, recorder, and common serjeant of the city of London, and two commissioners.

Twelve sessions at least are held every year, at the Old Bailey. The important cases are heard in a session of the court presided over by two of the judges of the High Court. The less important cases are tried by either the recorder or common serjeant. Odger, C. L. 986.

CENTUMVIRI (Lat. one hundred men). The name of a body of Roman judges.

Their exact number was one hundred and five, there being selected three from each of the thirty-five tribes comprising all the citizens of Rome. They constituted, for ordinary purposes, four tribunals; but some cases (called centumvirales causæ) required the judgment of all the judges. 3 Bla. Com. 515.

CENTURY. One hundred. One hundred years.

The Romans were divided into centuries, as the English were formerly divided into hundreds.

CEORL. A tenant at will of free condition, who held land of the thane on condition of paying rent or services.

A freeman of inferior rank occupied in husbaudry. Spelman, Gloss.

Those who tilled the outlands paid rent; those who occupied or tilled the inlands, or demesne, rendered services. Under the Norman rule, this term, as did others which denoted workmen, especially those which applied to the conquered race, became a term of reproach, as is indicated by the popular signification of churl. Cowell; Spelman, Gloss. See 1 Poll. & Maitl. 8; 2 id. 458.

CEPI (Lat.). I have taken. It was of frequent use in the returns of sheriffs when they were made in Latin; as, for example, cepi corpus et B. B. (I have taken the body and discharged him on bail bond); cepi corpus et est in custodia (I have taken the body and it is in custody); cepi corpus et est languidus (I have taken the body and he is sick).

CEPIT (Lat. capere, to take; cepit, he took or has taken). A form of replevin which is brought for carrying away goods merely. Wells, Repl. § 53; Cummings v. Vorce, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 282. Non detinet is not the proper answer to such a charge; Davis v. Calvert, 17 Ark. 85. And see Ford v. Ford, 3 Wis. 399. Success upon a non cepit does not entitle the defendant to a return of the property; Douglass v. Garrett, 5 Wis. 85. A plea of non cepit is not inconsistent with a plea showing property in a third person; Smith v. Morgan, 8 Gill (Md.) 133.

A technical word necessary in an indictment for larceny. The charge must be that the defendant took the thing stolen with a felonious design. Bacon, Abr. Indictment, G., 1.

CEPIT ET ABDUXIT (Lat.). He took and led away. Applicable in a declaration in trespass or indictment for larceny where the defendant has taken away a living chattel.

CEPIT ET ASPORTAVIT (Lat.). He took and carried away. Applicable in a declaration in trespass or an indictment for larceny where the defendant has carried away goods without right. 4 Bla. Com. 231. See CARRYING AWAY; LARCENY.

CEPIT IN ALIO LOCO (Lat. he took in another place). A plea in replevin, by which the defendant alleges that he took the thing replevied in another place than that mentioned in the declaration; 1 Chit. Pl. 490; 2 id. 558; Rast. Entr. 554, 555; Morris, Repl. 141; Wells, Repl. § 707. It is the usual plea where the defendant intends to avow or justify the taking to entitle himself to a return.

CERT MONEY. The head-money given by the tenants of several manors yearly to the lords, for the purpose of keeping up certain inferior courts. Called in the ancient records certum letæ (leet money). Cowell.

CERTAINTY. In Contracts. Distinctness and accuracy of statement.

A thing is certain when its essence, quality, and quantity are described, distinctly set forth, etc. Dig. 12, l. 6. It is uncertain when the description is not that of an individual object, but designates only the kind. La. Civ. Code, art. 3522, no. 8; 5 Co. 121.

If a contract be so vague in its terms that its meaning cannot be certainly collected, and the statute of frauds preclude the admissibility of parol evidence to clear up the difficulty; 5 B. & C. 583; or parol evidence cannot supply the defect, then neither at law nor in equity can effect be given to it; 1 R. & M. 116. If it is impossible to ascertain any definite meaning, such agreement is necessarily void; [1892] Q. B. 478. As to uncertainty of contract see Davie v. Min. Co., 93 Mich. 491, 53 N. W. 625, 24 L. R. A. 357; Van Schaick v. Van Buren, 70 Hun 575, 24 N. Y. Supp. 306.

It is a maxim of law that that is certain which may be made certain: id certum est quod certum reddi potest; Co. Litt. 43. For example, when a man sells the oil he has in his store at so much a gallon, although there is uncertainty as to the quantity of oil, yet, inasmuch as it can be ascertained, the maxim applies, and the sale is good. See, generally, Story, Eq. § 240; Mitf. Eq. Pl., Jeremy ed. 41.

In Pleading. Such clearness and distinctness of statement of the facts which constitute the cause of action or ground of defence that they may be understood by the party who is to answer them, by the jury who are to ascertain the truth of the allegations, and by the court who are to give the judgment. 2 B. & P. 267; Co. Litt. 303; Com. Dig. Pleader. See Giroux Amalgamator Co. v. White, 21 Or. 435, 28 Pac. 396.

Certainty to a common intent is attained by a form of statement in which words are used in their ordinary meaning, though by argument or inference they may be made to bear a different one. See 2 H. Bla. 530; Andr. Steph. Pl. 384.

Certainty to a certain intent in general is attained when the meaning of the statute may be understood upon a fair and reasonable construction without recurrence to possible facts which do not appear; 1 Wms. Saund. 49; Spencer v. Southwick, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 317; Fuller v. Hampton, 5 Conn. 423.

Certainty to a certain intent in particular is attained by that technical accuracy of statement which precludes all argument, inference, and presumption against the party pleading. When this certainty is required, the party must not only state the facts of his case in the most precise way, but add to them such as show that they are not to be controverted, and, as it were, anticipate the case of his adversary; Lawes, Pl. 54.

The last description of certainty is required in estoppels; Co. Litt. 303; 2 H. Bla. 530; Dougl. 159; and in pleas which are not favored in law, as alien enemy; 8 Term 167; Russel v. Skipwith, 6 Binn (Pa.) 247. See Clarke v. Morey, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 70. With respect to an indictment, it is laid down that "an indictment ought to be certain to every intent, and without any intendment to the contrary;" Cro. Eliz. 490; and the charge contained in it must be sufficiently explicit to support itself; for no latitude of intention can be allowed to include anything more than is expressed; 2 Burr. 1127; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588; U. S. v. Simmons, 96 U. S. 360, 24 L. Ed. 819; State v. Stiles, 40 Ia. 148; State v. Philbrick, 31 Me. 401; Com. v. Terry, 114 Mass. 263; State v. Fancher, 71 Mo. 460; State v. Messenger, 58 N. H. 348.

These definitions, which have been adopted from Coke, have been subjected to severe criticism, but are of some utility in drawing attention to the different degrees of exactness and fulness of statement required in different instances. Less certainty is required where the law presumes that the knowledge of the facts is peculiarly in the opposite party; 8 East 85; 13 id. 112; 3 Maule & S. 14; People v. Dunlap, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 437.

Less certainty than would otherwise be requisite is demanded in some cases, to avoid prolixity of statement; 2 Wms. Saund. 117, n. 1. See, generally, 1 Chit. Pl.

CERTIFICANDO DE RECOGNITIONE STAPULÆ. In English Law. A writ commanding the mayor of the staple to certify to the lord chancellor a statute staple taken before him where the party himself detains it, and refuses to bring in the same. There is a like writ to certify a statute merchant and in divers other cases. Reg. Orig. 148; Black, Dict.

CERTIFICATE. A writing made in any court, and properly authenticated, to give notice to another court of anything done therein.

A writing by which testimony is given that a fact has or has not taken place.

Certificates are either required by law, as an insolvent's certificate of discharge, an alien's certificate of naturalization, which are evidence of the facts therein mentioned; or voluntary, which are given of the mere motion of the party giving them, and are in no case evidence. Com. Dig. Chancery (T. 5); 1 Greenl. Ev. § 498; 2 Willes 549.

There were anciently various modes of trial commenced by a certificate of various parties, which took the place of a writ in a common-law action. See Com. Dig. Certificate.

By statute, the certificates of various officers may be made evidence, in which case the effect cannot be extended by including facts other than those authorized; 1 Maule & S. 599; U. S. v. Buford, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 12, 29, 7 L. Ed. 585; Arnold v. Tourtellot, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 172; Stewart v. Allison, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 324, 9 Am. Dec. 433; Governor v. Bell, 7 N. C. 331; Exchange & Banking Co. of New Orleans v. Boyce, 3 Rob. (La.) 307. An officer who has made a defective certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment cannot correct the defect after the expiration of his term; Griffith v. Ventress, 91 Ala. 366, 8 South. 312, 11 L. R. A. 193, 24 Am. St. Rep. 918; nor can he contradict his own certificate by testifying to fraud and coercion on the part of the husband toward the wife; Hockman v. McClanahan, 87 Va. 33, 12 S. E. 230. A certificate of acknowledgment is a judicial act, and in the absence of fraud conclusive of material facts stated in it; Cover v. Manaway, 115 Pa. 338, 8 Atl. 393, 2 Am. St. Rep. 552; Citizen's Saving & Loan Ass'n v. Heiser, 150 Pa. 514, 24 Atl. 733; but only of facts required by statute to be included in it, and therefore not that the wife of the grantor was of full age; Williams v. Baker, 71 Pa. 476. See RETURN; NOTARY; ACKNOWLEDGMENT; STOCK.

CERTIFICATE OF ASSIZE. A writ granted for the re-examination or retrial of a matter passed by assize before justices. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 181. It is now entirely obsolete. 3 Bla. Com. 389. Consult, also, Comyns, Dig. Assize (B, 27, 28).

CERTIFICATE OF COSTS. See JUDGE'S CERTIFICATE.

CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT. A written statement from a bank that the party named therein has deposited the amount of money specified in the certificate and that the same is held subject to his order in accordance with the terms thereof.

When payable at a future date, with interest till due, for the use of a person named or to his order, upon return of the certificate, it is a negotiable promissory note; Miller v. Austen, 13 How. (U. S.) 218, 14 L. Ed. 119; Bull v. Bank, 123 U. S. 105, 8 Sup. Ct. 62, 31 L. Ed. 97; In re Baldwin's Estate, 170 N. Y. 160, 63 N. E. 62, 58 L. R. A. 124. Poorman v. Mills, 35 Cal. 118, 95 Am. Dec. 90; Lynch v. Goldsmith, 64 Ga. 42; Beardsley v. Webber, 104 Mich. 88, 62 N. W. 173; Bank of Saginaw v. Title & Trust Co., 105 Fed. 491; Forrest v. Trust Co., 174 Fed. 345. This has been substantially followed in all the states except Pennsylvania, where it has always been held otherwise, if the certificate contains no express promise to pay; Patterson v. Poindexter, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 227, 40 Am. Dec. 554; and this was recognized to be the law in Pennsylvania as late as 1909; Forrest v. Trust Co., 174 Fed. 345, where the court followed the rule of Miller v. Austen, 13 How. (U. S.) 218, 14 L. Ed. 119; and expressed the opinion that such certificates were negotiable under the Negotiable Instruments Act enacted in Pennsylvania, as well as under the general commercial law.

CERTIFICATE OF REGISTRY. A certificate that a ship has been registered as the law requires. 3 Kent 149. Under the United States statutes, "every alteration in the property of a ship must be indorsed on the certificate of registry, and must itself be registered." Unless this is done, the ship or vessel loses its national privileges as an American vessel; 1 Pars. Sh. & Adm. 50. The English statutes make such a transfer void. Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV, c. 54; 17 & 18 Viet. c. 104; Abb. Sh. (13th ed.) 925.

The registry is not a document required by the law of nations as expressive of a ship's national character; 4 Taunt. 367; and is at most only prima facie evidence of ownership; U. S. v. Brune, 2 Wall. Jr. 264, Fed. Cas. No. 14,677; Newb. Adm. 176, 312; Lincoln v. Wright, 23 Pa. 76, 62 Am. Dec. 316; Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 481; 33 E. L. & Eq. 204. The registry acts are to be considered as forms of local or municipal institution for purposes of public policy; 3 Kent 149.

CERTIFIED CHECK. A check which has been recognized by the proper officer as a valid appropriation of the amount of money therein specified to the person therein named, and which bears upon itself the evidence of such recognition. See CHECK.

CERTIFIED PUBLIC ACCOUNTANT. A term applied to trained accountants who examine the books of accounts of corporations and others and report upon them. See AUDITOR.

CERTIORARI. A writ issued by a superior to an inferior court of record, or other tribunal or officer, exercising a judicial function, requiring the certification and return to the former of some proceeding then pending, or the record and proceedings in some cause already terminated, in cases where the procedure is not according to the course of the common law.

The extensive use of this writ and the lack of precise judicial definition of the public bodies and proceedings to which it is applicable lend interest to the early common law definitions, which are of value since the use of the writ is still usually regulated by common law principles and precedents.

The most frequently quoted common law definitions are those of Fitzherbert and Bacon, by the first of which the writ lies in the case of records of the courts, the treasury, sheriffs, coroners, commissioners, escheators; F. N. B. 554 A. He includes among forms given one to the mayor and sheriff of London in case of indictment and attachment and one to the mayor and sheriffs of York in assize of fresh force sued out before them without writ; id. 554 E, 557 L. Bacon uses only the general terms, "judges or officers of inferior courts"; Bac. Abr. 162; but in an enumeration of instances entitled "to what court it lies" he puts an "inquisition taken by a sheriff . . . and the verdict and judgment thereon," which were quashed on the ground that, no notice appearing, the record did not show jurisdiction, and on objection that the writ did not, he was answered that "there can be no doubt of that if it is not prohibited by the act of Parliament"; id. 168, citing 4 Burr. 2244. It was said that "the substance of this (Bacon's) definition has never been departed from, except where the statute has broadened the scope of the writ"; In re Dauce, 2 N. D. 184, 49 N. W. 733, 33 Am. St. Rep. 768. The English Court of Appeal says that "certiorari is a writ in aid of justice, and is the apt means of preventing the infliction or continuance of wrong from any assumption or excess of jurisdiction"; 2 L. R. (K. B.) 318; it is matter of discretion, not of right; id.

Blackstone refers only to it as a means of removing criminal causes from an inferior court to the King's Bench, as the supreme court of criminal jurisdiction; 4 Bla. Com. 265; or cases of Peers to the House of Lords; id. 321; or after summary order in a lower court which might be quashed or confirmed; id. 272. It might be granted at the instance of either prosecution or defendant, in the former case as matter of right, in the latter as matter of discretion; id. 321.

The function of the writ is to secure the correction of errors of a judicial nature in the proceedings of inferior courts or in the decisions of special tribunals, commissioners, magistrates and officers exercising judicial powers affecting the property or rights of a citizen, who act in a summary way, and not according to the course of the common law, and it also applies in many cases to the proceedings of municipal corporations. It has also been allowed when the power is ministerial but necessarily connected with judicial action; People v. Hill, 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 170; In re Nichols, 6 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 474. The writ is issued in two classes of cases: (1) Where the inferior court has exceeded its jurisdiction; (2) where it has proceeded illegally and there is no appeal or writ of error; White v. Wagar, 185 Ill. 195, 57 N. E. 26, 50 L. R. A. 60, quoting Hyslop v. Finch, 99 Ill. 171.

"Official acts, executive, legislative, administrative or ministerial in their nature or character, were never subject to review by certiorari. The writ could be issued only for the purpose of reviewing some judicial act;" People v. Brady, 166 N. Y. 44, 47, 59 N. E. 701; St. Louis, S. F. & T. Ry. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 33 Sup. Ct. 651, 57 L. Ed. —. In some states the writ has been abolished by statute so far as the common law name is concerned, but the remedy is preserved under the new statutory name of "writ of review"; but this term and the old one mean precisely the same remedy, except so far as it may be modified by statute; People v. County Judge, 40 Cal. 479; Sutherland v. Roberts, 4 Or. 388; Southwestern Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Robinson, 48 Fed. 771, 1 C. C. A. 91. So where, by statute, appellate proceedings are to be taken by appeal in all cases theretofore covered by error, appeal or certiorari, but the right of review is not changed in extent, it was held that the appeal was in effect a common law certiorari, and the right to issue a certiorari remained the same as before; Rand v. King, 134 Pa. 641, 19 Atl. 806; so an appeal in a habeas corpus case is equivalent to a certiorari and brings up only the record; Com. v. Superintendent of Philadelphia County Prison, 220 Pa. 401, 69 Atl. 916, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 939.

The writ lies in most of the states to remove from the lower courts proceedings which are created and regulated by statute merely, for the purpose of revision; Com. v. West Boston Bridge, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 195; Bath Bridge & Turnpike Co. v. Magoun, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 293; Bob v. State, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 173; Williamson v. Carnan, 1 G. & J. (Md.) 196; Adams v. Newfane, 8 Vt. 271; People v. Lawrence, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 589; John v. State, 1 Ala. 95; People v. Supervisors, 8 Cal. 58; In re Robinson's Estate, 6 Mich. 137; Board of Com'rs of Hillsboro v.

Smith, 110 N. C. 417, 14 S. E. 972; Miller v. Trustees, 88 Ill. 27; and to complete the proceedings when the lower court refuses to do so, upon erroneous grounds; Anonymous, 2 N. C. 302; Auditor v. Woodruff, 2 Ark. 73, 33 Am. Dec. 368; and to correct errors in law; McAllilley v. Horton, 75 Ala. 491; Rawson v. McElvaine, 49 Mich. 194, 13 N. W. 513; Lapan v. Cumberland County Com'rs, 65 Me. 160; Conover v. Davis, 48 N. J. L. 112, 2 Atl. 667. In England; 13 E. L. & Eq. 129; 9 L. R. Q. B. 350; and in some states; State v. Stone, 3 H. & McH. (Md.) 115; State v. Hunt, 1 N. J. L. 287; People v. Vermilyea, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 141; Com. v. McGinnis, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 117; State v. Washington, 6 N. C. 100; John v. State, 1 Ala. 95; Kenney v. State, 5 R. I. 385; the writ may also be issued to remove criminal causes to a superior court; Har. Certiorari 8. But see Winn v. State, 10 Ohio 345. It also lies where a probate court proceeds without jurisdiction in admitting a claim against an estate; Durham v. Field, 30 Ill. App. 121; or where the court has jurisdiction but makes an order exceeding its power; State v. County Court, 45 Mo. App. 387. It is also given by statute to review the acts and powers of official boards and officers; Haven v. County Com'rs, 155 Mass. 467, 29 N. E. 1083; State v. City of Ashland, 71 Wis. 502, 37 N. W. 809.

The writ has been used to review the proceedings of courts-martial; Rathbun v. Sawyer, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 451; of canal appraisers charged with acting without notice; Fonda v. Canal Appraisers, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 288; of commissioners of appeal in cases of taxation; State v. Falkinburge, 15 N. J. L. 320; of commissioners of highways; Lawton v. Com'rs of Highways, 2 Cal. (N. Y.) 179; or where a void order was made by them; Fitch v. Com'rs of Highways, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 132; a municipal assessment for a local improvement departing essentially from the statutory method; People v. Rochester, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 656; common council of a city in laying out a new street; State v. City of Fond du Lac, 42 Wis. 287. It has also been issued upon the refusal to grant a writ of habeas corpus on the ground of want of jurisdiction; People v. Mayer, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 362; and upon the discharge of a complaint under the act abolishing imprisonment for debt on the ground of want of proof; Learned v. Duval, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 141. It may issue at the suit of a taxpayer and voter to test the legality of an act uniting highway districts by the trustees of the township; Dunham v. Fox, 100 Ia. 131, 69 N. W. 436.

The supreme court may issue writs of certiorari in all proper cases, and will do so when the circumstances imperatively demand that form of interposition, to correct excesses of jurisdiction, and in furtherance of justice. In re Chetwood, 165 U. S. 443, 17 Sup. Ct. 385, 41 L. Ed. 782.

To warrant a certiorari the act must be plainly judicial and not executive or legislative; People v. N. Y., 2 Hill (N. Y.) 14; accordingly it was refused in case of a corporate resolution appropriating land for a public square; id.; and of an order of a board of health adjudging a question of nuisance; 15 Wend. 255; 21 Barb. 656.

It is used also as an auxiliary process to obtain a full return to other process, as when, for example, the record of an inferior court is brought before a superior court by appeal, writ of error, or other lawful mode, and there is a manifest defect or suggestion of diminution, to obtain a perfect transcript and all papers; Stewart v. Ingle, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 526, 6 L. Ed. 151; Colden v. Knickerbacker, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 38; Stewart v. Court of County Com'rs, 82 Ala. 209, 2 South. 270; Smick v. Opydycke, 12 N. J. L. 85; Colerick v. Hooper, 3 Ind. 316, 56 Am. Dec. 505; State v. Reid, 18 N. C. 382, 28 Am. Dec. 572; Thatcher v. Miller, 11 Mass. 414; Scott v. Hall, 2 Munf. (Va.) 229; Franklin Academy v. Hall, 16 B. Monr. (Ky.) 472; Carter v. Douglass, 2 Ala. 499; Clements v. Hahn, 1 Col. 490. It does not issue as a matter of right on mere suggestion of defects in the record, but the application must be supported by proof; State v. Orrick, 106 Mo. 111, 17 S. W. 176, 329.

The office of the writs of certiorari and mandamus is often much the same. It is the practice of the U. S. supreme court, upon a suggestion of any defect in the transcript of the record sent up to that court upon a writ of error, to allow a special certiorari, requiring the court below to certify more fully; Fowler v. Lindsey, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 411, 1 L. Ed. 658; Barton v. Petit, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 288, 3 L. Ed. 347; Stimpson v. R. Co., 3 How. (U. S.) 553, 11 L. Ed. 722; U. S. v. Adams, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 661, 19 L. Ed. 808. Relief may also be had in the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on allegation of diminution in the record sent up from the circuit court, as provided by rule 18; Blanks v. Klein, 49 Fed. 1, 1 C. C. A. 254. The same result might also be effected by a writ of mandamus. The two remedies are, when addressed to an inferior court of record, from a superior court, requiring the return of a record, much the same. But where diminution of the record is suggested in the inferior court, and the purpose is to obtain a more perfect record, and not merely a more perfect copy or transcript, it is believed that the writ of mandamus is the appropriate remedy.

In many of the states, the writ produces the same result in proceedings given by statute, such as the proceedings for obtaining damages under the mill acts, highway acts, pauper laws, etc., as the writ of error does when the proceedings are according to the course of the common law. Where the lower court is to be required to proceed in a cause, a writ of procedendo or mandamus is the proper remedy.

The writ is generally said to issue only after final judgment of the inferior court or tribunal whose proceedings are to be reviewed; Patterson v. United States, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 221, 4 L. Ed. 224; People v. Railroad Com'rs, 160 N. Y. 202, 54 N. E. 697; Lynde v. Noble, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 80;

Wallace v. Jameson, 179 Pa. 94, 36 Atl. 145; Case of Road from Rough Street, 2 S. & R. 419; Vaughn v. Marshall, 1 Honst. (Del.) 348; Stewart v. State, 98 Ga. 202, 25 S. E. 424; Meads v. Copper Mines, 125 Mich. 456, 84 N. W. 615; People v. Lindsay, 1 Idaho, 401; State v. Valliant, 123 Mo. 524, 27 S. W. 379, 28 S. W. 586; State v. Gill, 137 Mo. 627, 39 S. W. 81; Glennon v. Burton, 144 Ill. 551, 33 N. E. 23; Gauld v. Board of Sup'rs, 122 Cal. 18, 54 Pac. 272; Culver v. Travis, 108 Mich. 640, 66 N. W. 575; where the reason for the rule is thus stated: "The writ of certiorari is a writ of review. Its office is to bring up for review final determinations and adjudications of inferior tribunals, boards or officers exercising judicial functions, where there is no appeal, nor any plain, speedy and adequate remedy. The writ is necessarily founded on a final determination. Were the rule otherwise a writ might issue at any step in the proceedings of the inferior tribunal, although such tribunal might, were the point presented, decide that it had no jurisdiction in the matter submitted to it. This would be the exercise of original jurisdiction by the court issuing the writ and not a review of the determination of the inferior tribunal. The matter complained of would be, not that the tribunal had exceeded, but that it was about to exceed, its jurisdiction." As the writ relates back to the first day of the term, it will not issue to review a case not pending at that time; Womer v. R. Co., 37 W. Va. 287, 16 S. E. 488.

The English rule is different in civil cases, and the writ is usually issued before the final determination; 7 D. & R. 769; 13 L. J. Q. B. 149; 8 Ont. L. J. 277; 2 Ont. L. J. N. S. 277; 3 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 149. In one state at least it is held that the writ may issue, in the case of municipal corporations, before final decision; State v. City Council of Camden, 47 N. J. L. 64, 54 Am. Rep. 117.

Under the act of March 2, 1833, providing for the removal by certiorari of suits in state courts against revenue officers, the writ from the United States circuit court to a state court will stay all proceedings; State v. Circuit Judge, 33 Wis. 127. And under the removal act of 1875, if the state court decides to retain jurisdiction in a removable case, a certiorari may be resorted to to obtain a transfer of the record; U. S. R. S. 1 Supp. 84.

It does not lie to enable the superior court to revise a decision upon matters of fact; People v. Board of Fire Com'rs, 100 N. Y. 82, 2 N. E. 613; Appeal of Yeager, 34 Pa. 176; Beach v. Mullin, 34 N. J. L. 343; Farmington River Water Power Co. v. County Com'rs, 112 Mass. 206; Lapan v. Cumberland County Com'rs, 65 Me. 160; Low v. R. Co., 18 Ill. 324; Frederick v. Clark, 5 Wis. 191; Central Pac. R. Co. v. Placer County, 46 Cal. 667; Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Board of Equalization, 97 Cal. 318, 32 Pac. 312; North & South St. R. Co. v. Spullock, 88 Ga. 283, 14 S. E. 478; Herbert v. Curtis, 55 N. J. L. 87, 25 Atl. 386; State v. Whitford, 54 Wis. 150, 11 N. W. 424; Shearous v. Morgan, 111 Ga. 858, 36 S. E. 927; State v. Judge, 41 La. Ann. 179, 6 South. 18; nor matters resting in the discretion of the judge of the inferior court; Inhabitants of New Marlborough v. County Com'rs, 9 Mete. (Mass.) 423; Roston v. Morris, 25 N. J. L. 173; Brown v. Board of Sup'rs, 124 Cal. 274, 57 Pac. 82; State v. Judge, 43 La. Ann. 825, 9 South. 639; People v. Board of Fire Com'rs, 82 N. Y. 358; Hall v. Oyster, 168 Pa. 399, 31 Atl. 1007; Sunberg v. District Court of Linn County, 61 Ia. 597, 16 N. W. 724; Huffaker v. Boring, 8 Ala. 87; Matter of Saline County Subscription, 45 Mo. 52, 100 Am. Dec. 337; 3 El. & Bl. 529; 8 Ont. 651, 12 Can. Sup. Ct. 111; 29 Nova Scotia 521; unless by special statute; Starr v. Trustees of Village of Rochester, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 564; In re Hayward, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 358; Independence v. Pompton, 9 N. J. L. 209; or where palpable injustice has been done; Duggen v. McGruder, Walk. (Miss.) 112, 12 Am. Dec. 527; Fonda v. Canal Appraisers, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 288; Com. v. Coombs, 2 Mass. 489; State v. Smith, 101 Mo. 174, 14 S. W. 108; Bostick v. Palmer, 79 Ga. 680, 4 S. E. 319; Lapan v. County Com'rs, 65 Me. 160; Ex parte Schmidt, 24 S. C. 363.

It does not lie where the errors are formal merely, and not substantial; 8 Ad. & E. 413; Patrick v. McKernon, 5 How. (Miss.) 578; Furbush v. Cunningham, 56 Me. 184; Hermann v. Butler, 59 Ill. 225; nor where substantial justice has been done though the proceedings were informal; Criswell v. Richter, 13 Tex. 18; Knapp v. Heller, 32 Wis. 467; City of Charlestown v. Middlesex County Com'rs, 109 Mass. 270; Hyslop v. Finch, 99 Ill. 171; State v. Kemen, 61 Wis. 494, 21 N. W. 530; nor where the proceedings are not void on their face and show no arbitrary action on the part of the trial judge; Williams v. District Court, 45 La. Ann. 1295, 14 South. 57.

Under the statute authorizing all writs not specifically provided for the federal courts have power to issue writs of certiorari in proper cases; American Construction Co. v. R. Co., 148 U. S. 372, 13 Sup. Ct. 158, 37 L. Ed. 486; In re Tampa Suburban R. Co., 168 U. S. 583, 18 Sup. Ct. 177, 42 L. Ed. 589.

Certiorari will not lie as a substitute for an appeal from an interlocutory order of a superior court; Guilford County v. Georgia Co., 109 N. C. 310, 13 S. E. 861; nor to review an appealable order; In re McConnell, 74 Cal. 217, 15 Atl. 746. The evidence cannot be reviewed upon certiorari; Com. v.

Gillespie, 146 Pa. 546, 23 Atl. 393; nor rulings on the admission of evidence; Lord v. Wirt, 96 Mich. 415, 56 N. W. 7.

The court may deal only with questions of law and cannot say what the court should have done if the facts had been different; Beach v. Mullin, 34 N. J. L. 343; Inhabitants of Plymouth v. Plymouth County Com'rs, 16 Gray (Mass.) 341; nor can it determine questions of fact depending on evidence arising outside of the record; Hayford v. City of Bangor, 102 Me. 340, 66 Atl. 731, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 940; nor are such facts to be considered in determining the propriety of the writ; U. S. Standard Voting Machine Co. v. Hobson, 132 Ia. 38, 109 N. W. 458, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 512, 119 Am. St. Rep. 539, 10 Ann. Cas. 972. The evidence forms no part of the record, and in the absence of anything in the record to establish the contrary, it will be presumed that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the finding; De Rochebrune v. South-eimer, 12 Minn. 78 (Gil. 42); People v. Dawell, 25 Mich. 251, 12 Am. Rep. 260; whatever the evidence tended to show is treated as proved; id.

Certiorari may issue in criminal cases in aid of habeas corpus to review proceedings before a commissioner on commitments; In re Martin, 5 Blatchf. 303, Fed. Cas. No. 9,151 (but not to review his decision on the facts; In re Stupp, 12 Blatchf. 501, Fed. Cas. No. 13,563); or to the circuit court to ascertain from its proceedings whether that court has exceeded its authority; Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 163, 21 L. Ed. 872 (citing the prior cases); Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 343; 25 L. Ed. 676; State v. Johnson, 103 Wis. 625, 79 N. W. 1081, 51 L. R. A. 33.

A court of exclusively appellate jurisdiction cannot issue a certiorari to pass over an intermediate appellate court; Carr v. Tweedy, Hempst. 287, Fed. Cas. No. 2,440a. The common law writ does not lie with respect to proceedings subsequent to appeal or writ of error; U. S. v. Young, 94 U. S. 258, 24 L. Ed. 153.

It is granted or refused in the discretion of the superior court; Lees v. Childs, 17 Mass. 352; Huse v. Grimes, 2 N. H. 210; People v. McCarthy, 102 N. Y. 642, 8 N. E. 85; State v. Blauvelt, 34 N. J. L. 261; Freeman v. Oldham's Lessee, 4 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 420; Flourney v. Payne, 28 Ark. 87; West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 16 Vt. 446; Livingston v. Livingston, 24 Ga. 379; L. R. 5 Q. B. 466; Welch v. County Court, 29 W. Va. 63, 1 S. E. 337; Ex parte Hitz, 111 U. S. 766, 4 Sup. Ct. 698, 28 L. Ed. 592; Board of Supervisors v. Magoon, 109 Ill. 142; and the application must disclose a proper case upon its face; 8 Ad. & E. 43; Lees v. Childs, 17 Mass. 351; Cullen v. Lowery, 2 Harr. (Del.) 459; Willis v. Dun, Wright (Ohio) 130; Hartsfield v. Jones, 49 N. C. 309; Redmond v. Anderson, 18 Ark. 449; Russell v. Pickering, 17 Ill. 31; Mays v. Lewis, 4 Tex. 1; McMurray v. Milan, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 176.

As stated supra, the doctrine that certiorari will not lie where there is an appeal is characterized as "the rule" to that effect. That this is too broad a generalization will readily appear from an examination of the numerous cases, which are collected in a very full note on "Exceptions to the Rule" in 50 L. R. A. 787. The note is appended to two cases in the same court, each decided by a divided court, which will illustrate the difficulty of the question. In one it was stated as the general rule that certiorari will not lie to correct mere errors of a tribunal having jurisdiction, in the rightful exercise of that jurisdiction, where there is an appeal by means of which those errors may be corrected; State v. Shelton, 154 Mo. 670, 55 S. W. 1008, 50 L. R. A. 798. In the other case it was said that that statement of the law was too broad, and that, to bar the writ, the remedy by appeal must be adequate to meet the necessities of the case and must be equally beneficial, speedy and sufficient; State v. Guinotte, 156 Mo. 513, 57 S. W. 281, 50 L. R. A. 787. It is doubtful if a general rule can be formulated to apply to all cases, and, with reference to any given state of the facts, the authorities must be critically examined. It may however be said that it should not issue where there is another adequate remedy; People v. Board of Health, 140 N. Y. 1, 35 N. E. 320, 23 L. R. A. 481, 37 Am. St. Rep. 522; In re Randall, 11 Allen (Mass.) 472; State v. Probate Court, 72 Minn. 434, 75 N. W. 700; Oyster v. Bank, 107 Ia. 39, 77 N. W. 523; Ex parte Howard-Harrison Iron Co., 130 Ala. 185, 30 South. 400; In re Tampa Suburban R. Co., 168 U. S. 583, 18 Sup. Ct. 177, 42 L. Ed. 589; Watson v. City of Plainfield, 60 N. J. L. 260, 37 Atl. 615; Kern's Adm'r v. Foster, 16 Ohio, 274; 9 Ad. & E. 540; 33 N. Brunsw. 80; 20 Nova Scotia 283; 17 Quebec Super. Ct. 383. And though as stated by Bacon (supra) it may issue out of chancery, it cannot be used for the review of decrees in equity alleged to be void for want of power; In re Tampa Suburban R. Co., 168 U. S. 583, 18 Sup. Ct. 177, 42 L. Ed. 589; In re Haney, 14 Wis. 417; Gilliland v. Sellers' Adm'rs, 2 Ohio St. 223; "nor can certiorari be made to operate as an injunction, and restrain a tribunal from acting beyond its jurisdiction, however well grounded may be the apprehension in that respect;" Glennon v. Burton, 144 Ill. 551, 33 N. E. 23.

The common law remedy has been successfully invoked where statutes provided that the decision of the inferior tribunal should be final and conclusive, upon the theory that it is an inherent part of the judicial power of the superior court and cannot be taken away without express negative words; Murfree v. Leeper, 1 Overt (Tenn.); Ritter v. Kunkle, 39 N. J. L. 259; and even where the statute directed that no certiorari should issue to remove proceedings had in pursuance of it, the writ may be used to ascertain whether the proceedings have been invoked in pretence of the statutory authority and are therefore not in pursuance, but in derogation, of it; Ackerman v. Taylor, 8 N. J. L. 305; id., 9 N. J. L. 65. Possibly the New York Court of Appeals may have come near to the formulation of a general rule in saying that a common law certiorari can only be availed of to review when there is no other adequate remedy; in other cases it will be confined to its original and appropriate office, to enable a court of review to determine whether the inferior tribunal proceeded within its jurisdiction; People v. Betts, 55 N. Y. 600, which is cited in Harris v. Barber, 129 U. S. 371, 9 Sup. Ct. 314, 32 L. Ed. 697, and the language of which is quoted in People v. Feitner, 51 App. Div. 196, 64 N. Y. Supp. 675. The last case was a certiorari to the secretary of state for granting a charter for a name claimed to be already in use. The court quashed the writ, saying that the existing company had a remedy in equity, but if the charter had been refused there might be no other remedy.

The judgment is either that the proceedings below be quashed or that they be affirmed; Har. Certiorari 38, 49; Marshall v. Hill, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 102; Kincaid v. Smith, id. 218; Com. v. Turnpike Corporation, 5 Mass. 423; Hall v. State, 12 G. & J. (Md.) 329; Weigand v. Malatesta, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 362; see McAllilley v. Horton, 75 Ala. 491; Hamilton v. Harwood, 113 Ill. 154; Taylor v. Gay, 20 Ga. 77; Bandlow v. Thieme, 53 Wis. 57, 9 N. W. 920; either wholly or in part; Com. v. Turnpike Corp. 5 Mass. 420; Nichol v. Patterson, 4 Ohio 200; Bronson v. Mann, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 461. See, also, Beck v. Knabb, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 58; Henry v. Heritage, 3 N. C. 38. Y.) 321; Com. v. Ellis, 11 Mass. 465; State v. Leavitt, 3 N. H. 44; Nichol v. Patterson, 4 Ohio 200; and the matter is regulated by statute in some states; *Atkinson v. By the act of congress of March 3, 1891, establishing circuit courts of appeal, § 6, it is provided that in any case in which the decision of that court is final a certiorari may issue from the supreme court to bring up the record to that court for "its review and determination with the same power and authority in the case as if it had been carried by appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court." 1 U. S. Comp. Stat. 550. At the first term of the supreme court after the passage of this act, upon an application for a certiorari, it was said that "It is evident that it is solely questions of gravity and importance" that should be certified up to the supreme court either by the action of the circuit courts of appeals or by requirement of the supreme court upon certiorari; In re Lau Ow Bew, 141 U. S. 583, 12 Sup. Ct. 43, 35 L. Ed. 868, where although it was said the jurisdiction should be exercised sparingly and with great caution, the writ was issued to determine the effect of the Chinese exclusion acts. The rule thus early laid down was reiterated in several subsequent cases illustrating what the court considered cases of sufficient "gravity and importance."

"While the power is coextensive with all possible necessities and sufficient to secure to this court a final control over the litigation in all the courts of appeal, it is a power which will be sparingly exercised, and only where the circumstances of the case satisfy us that the importance of the question involved, the necessity of avoiding conflict between two or more courts of appeal, or between courts of appeal and the courts of a state, or some matter affecting the interests of the nation in its internal or external relations demands such exercise." Forsyth v. Hammond, 166 U. S. 506, 17 Sup. Ct. 665, 41 L. Ed. 1095.

It was held that a case which could otherwise be finally determined by that court may, under the statute, be removed from the circuit court of appeals on certiorari at any time during its pendency there; but where there is merely private interest involved it will not be done where there has been no final judgment; id., citing to this express point Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Osborne, 146 U. S. 354, 13 Sup. Ct. 281, 36 L. Ed. 1002, which is sometimes incorrectly referred to as holding that the Supreme Court has no power to remove by certiorari before final judgment. While the supreme court may require a case to be certified up at any stage, particularly when the question of jurisdiction is involved, it should not be done to review an interlocutory decree "unless it is necessary to prevent extraordinary inconvenience and embarrassment in the conduct of the cause"; American Const. Co. v. Ry. Co., 148 U. S. 372, 13 Sup. Ct. 158, 37 L. Ed. 486. The writ may issue after the mandate has gone down from the circuit court of appeals; The Conqueror, 166 U. S. 110, 17 Sup. Ct. 510, 41 L. Ed. 937. It may issue to an inferior state court when the highest state court has refused jurisdiction; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Hughes, 203 U. S. 505, 27 Sup. Ct. 162, 51 L. Ed. 294.

The decisions upon applications for this writ indicate the construction which it has placed upon the phrase used by it in the first case, "questions of gravity and importance." These words are evidently applied only to cases of public and not private interest and importance. For example, the writ was issued to settle the construction of a treaty and immigration laws; The Three Friends, 166 U. S. 1, 17 Sup. Ct. 495, 41 L. Ed. 897; to review a case of habeas corpus finally determined by the circuit court of appeals; Lau Ow Baw v. U. S., 144 U. S. 47, 12 Sup. Ct. 517, 36 L. Ed. 340; to settle questions of jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court; Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 22 Sup. Ct. 269, 46 L. Ed. 405; Louisville Trust Co. v. Cominger, 184 U. S. 18, 22 Sup. Ct. 293, 46 L. Ed. 413; to secure a uniform construction of the bankruptcy act; Holden v. Stratton, 191 U. S. 115, 24 Sup. Ct. 45, 48 L. Ed. 116; or of a tariff act; The Conqueror, 166 U. S. 110, 17 Sup. Ct. 510, 41 L. Ed. 937; to determine whether a judge who made an order was disqualified to sit in the circuit court of appeals on the review of it; American Const. Co. v. Ry. Co., 148 U. S. 372, 13 Sup. Ct. 158, 37 L. Ed. 486; to prevent conflict of decision between federal and state courts within the same territorial jurisdiction; Forsyth v. Hammond, 166 U. S. 506, 17 Sup. Ct. 665, 41 L. Ed. 1095; to avoid a possible question of jurisdiction upon a writ of error; Montana Min. Co. v. Min. Co., 204 U. S. 204, 27 Sup. Ct. 254, 51 L. Ed. 444; and when there have been conflicting decisions of different circuit courts of appeals; Expanded Metal Co. v. Bradford, 214 U. S. 366, 29 Sup. Ct. 652, 53 L. Ed. 1034.

On the other hand the writ has been refused where the court of appeals has reversed proceedings putting a railroad company in the hands of a receiver; American Const. Co. v. Ry. Co., 148 U. S. 372, 13 Sup. Ct. 158, 37 L. Ed. 486; where questions of the state law of res judicata and of master and servant were considered not of sufficient "gravity and general importance"; In re Woods, 143 U. S. 202, 12 Sup. Ct. 417, 36 L. Ed. 125; in a case of where the circuit court of appeals was found to have no jurisdiction, and had rendered no decision except to certify that question; Good Shot v. U. S., 179 U. S. 87, 21 Sup. Ct. 33, 45 L. Ed. 101; or where the issue is a mere technicality and the essential rights of the parties are not involved; Smith v. Vulcan Iron Works, 165 U. S. 518, 17 Sup. Ct. 407, 41 L. Ed. 810.

While under section 6 of the Circuit Court of Appeals Act certiorari can only be issued when a writ of error cannot lie, it will not be issued merely because the writ of error will not lie, but only where the case is one of gravity, or where there is conflict between decisions of state and federal courts or between federal courts of different circuits, or something affecting the relations of this nation with foreign nations or of general interest to the public; Fields v. U. S., 205 U. S. 292, 27 Sup. Ct. 543, 51 L. Ed. 807.

▲ certiorari may be allowed when a case has been improperly brought up on a writ of error and the record filed in the latter may be treated as a proper return; Security Trust Co. v. Dent, 187 U. S. 237, 23 Sup. Ct. 61, 47 L. Ed. 158. When a case is removed to it under the act of 1891, the entire record is before the supreme court, which has power to decide the case; Lutcher & Moore Lumber Co. v. Knight, 217 U. S. 257, 30 Sup. Ct. 505, 54 L. Ed. 757.

See UNITED STATES COURTS; BILL OF CERTIORARI.

CERTIORARI FACIAS. Cause to be certified. The command of a writ of certiorari.

CERVISARII (cervisia, ale). Among the Saxons, tenants who were bound to supply drink for their lord's table. Cowell.

CERVISIA. Ale. Cervisarius. An ale-brewer; an ale-house keeper. Cowell.

CESIONARIO. In Spanish Law. An assignee. White, New Recop. 304.

CESSAVIT PER BIENNIIUM (Lat. he has ceased for two years). An obsolete writ, which could formerly have been sued out when the defendant had for two years ceased or neglected to perform such service or to pay such rent as he was bound to do by his tenure, and had not upon his lands sufficient goods or chattels to be distrained. Fitzh. N. B. 208. It also lay where a religious house held lands on condition of performing certain spiritual services which it failed to do. 3 Bla. Com. 232.

CESSET EXECUTIO (Lat. let execution stay). The formal order for a stay of execution, when proceedings in court were conducted in Latin. See EXECUTION.

CESSET PROCESSUS (Lat. let process stay). The formal order for a stay of process or proceedings, when the proceedings in court were conducted in Latin. See 2 Dougl. 627; 11 Mod. 231.

CESSIO BONORUM (Lat. a transfer of property). In Civil Law. An assignment of his property by a debtor for the benefit of his creditors.

Such an assignment discharged the debtor to the extent of the property ceded only, but exempted him from imprisonment. Dig. 2. 4. 25; 48. 19. 1; Nov. 4. 3. See La. Civ. Code 2166; Golis v. His Creditors, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 108; Richards v. His Creditors, 5 Mart. N. S. (La.) 299; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122, 4 L. Ed. 529; 1 Kent 422.

CESSION (Lat. cessio, a transfer). In Civil Law. An assignment. The act by which a party transfers property to another. See CESSIO BONORUM.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A surrender. When an ecclesiastic is created bishop, or when a parson takes another benefice, without dispensation, the first benefice becomes void by a legal cession or surrender. Cowell.

In Government Law. The transfer of land by one government to another.

France ceded Louisiana to the United States, by the treaty of Paris, of April 30, 1803; Spain made a cession of East and West Florida, by the treaty of Feb. 22, 1819. Cessions have been severally made to the general government of a part of their territory by New York, Virginia, Massachusetts, Connecticut, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Georgia. See Gordon, Dig. art. 2236-2250.

It is the usage of civilized nations, when territory is ceded, to stipulate for the property rights of its inhabitants; U. S. v. Chaves, 159 U. S. 452, 16 Sup. Ct. 57, 40 L. Ed. 215.

In case of a cession to the United States, the laws of the ceded country inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the United States, so far as applicable, would cease to be of obligatory force; but otherwise the municipal laws of the foreign country continue; Municipality of Ponce v. Church, 210 U. S. 310, 28 Sup. Ct. 737, 52 L. Ed. 1068.

Annexation is an act of state, and any obligation assumed under a treaty to that effect, either to the ceding sovereign or to individuals, is not one which municipal courts are authorized to enforce; [1899] A. C. 572.

CESTUI QUE TRUST. He for whose benefit another person is seised of lands or tenements or is possessed of personal property.

He who has a right to a beneficial interest in and out of an estate the legal title to which is vested in another. 2 Wash. R. P. *163.

He may be said to be the equitable owner; Will. R. P. 188; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 497; Inhabitants of Orleans v. Inhabitants of Chatham, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 29; is entitled, therefore, to the rents and profits; may transfer his interest, subject to the provisions of the instrument creating the trust; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 507; 2 Washb. R. P. 195; and may ordinarily mortgage his interest; Perrine v. Newell, 49 N. J. Eq. 57, 23 Atl. 492; may defend his title in the name of his trustee; 1 Cruise, Dig. tit. 12, c. 4, § 4; but has no legal title to the estate, as he is merely a tenant at will if he occupies the estate; 2 Ves. Sen. Ch. 472; 16 C. B. 652; 1 Washb. R. P. 88; and may be removed from possession in an action of ejectment by his own trustee; Lew. Trust. 8th ed. *677; Hill, Trust. 274; Mordecai v. Parker, 14 N. C. 425; Russell v. Lewis, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 508; he cannot sue for damages to trust lands unless the trustee refuses to protect the rights of the beneficiary; Lindheim v. R. Co., 68 Hun 122, 22 N. Y. Supp. 685. Where the trustee neglects to defend the legal title to trust property, the beneficiary may sue to remove a cloud on the title; President, etc., of Bowdoin College v. Merritt, 54 Fed. 55. See TRUST; BENEFICIARY; SPENDTHRIFT TRUST.

CESTUI QUE USE. He for whose benefit land is held by another person.

He who has a right to take the profits of lands of which another has the legal title and possession, together with the duty of defending the same and to direct the making estates thereof; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 252; 2 Bla. Com. 330. See 2 Washb. R. P. 95; USE.

CESTUI QUE VIE. He whose life is the measure of the duration of an estate. 1 Washb. R. P. 88.

CHAFEWAX. An officer in chancery who fits the wax for sealing to the writs, commissions, and other instruments there made to be issued out. He is probably so called because he warms (chaufe) the wax.

CHAFFERS. Anciently signified wares and merchandise; hence the word chaffering, which is yet used for buying and selling, or beating down the price of an article. The word is used in stat. 3 Edw. III. c. 4.

CHALDRON. A measure of capacity, equal to fifty-eight and two-thirds cubic feet, nearly. Cowell.

CHALLENGE. A request by one person to another to fight a duel. No particular form of words is necessary to constitute a challenge, and it may be oral or written; State v. Perkins, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 20; Ivey v. State, 12 Ala. 276; State v. Strickland, 2 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 181; Com. v. Pope, 3 Dana (Ky.) 418. Sending a challenge is a high offence at common law, and indictable as tending to a breach of the peace; Hawk, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 3, § 3; Com. v. Tibbs, 1 Dana (Ky.) 524; State v. Gibbons, 4 N. J. L. 40; State v. Dupont, 2 McCord (S. C.) 334; State v. Taylor, 1 Const. (S. C.) 107; State v. Farrier, 8 N. C. 487; State v. Perkins, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 20; Com. v. Lambert, 9 Leigh (Va.) 603. He who carries a challenge is also punishable by indictment; Clark, Cr. L. 340; U. S. v. Shackelford, 3 Cra. C. C. 178, Fed. Cas. No. 16,260. In most of the states, this barbarous practice is punishable by special laws. 2 Bish. Cr. Law, § 312. And in a large number of them by their constitutions the giving, accepting, or knowingly carrying a challenge, deprives the party of the right to hold any office of honor or profit in the commonwealth.

In most of the civilized nations, challenging another to fight is a crime, as calculated to destroy the public peace; and those who partake in the offence are generally liable to punishment. In Spain, it is punished by loss of offices, rents, and honors received from the king, and the delinquent is incapable to hold them in future; Aso & M. Inst. b. 2, t.

19, c. 2, § 6. See, generally, Joy, Chall.; 1 Russ. Cr. 275; 2 Bish. Cr. Law, chap. xv.; Com. v. Hart, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 120; State v. Taylor, 1 Const. (S. C.) 107; In re Leigh, 1 Munf. (Va.) 468.

In Practice. An exception to the jurors who have been arrayed to pass upon a cause on its trial. See 2 Poll. & Maitl. 619, 646.

An exception to those who have been returned as jurors. Co. Litt. 155 b.

The most satisfactory derivation of the word is that adopted by Webster and Crabb, from call, challenge implying a calling off. The word is also used to denote exceptions taken to a judge's capacity on account of interest; Bank of North America v. Fitzsimons, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 454; Pearce v. Affleck, 4 id. 349; and to the sheriff for favor as well as affinity; Co. Litt. 153 a; Munshower v. Patton, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 336, 13 Am. Dec. 678. The right is not allowed to enable the prisoner to select such jurors as he may wish, but to select just and impartial ones; State v. Jones, 97 N. C. 469, 1 S. E. 680.

Challenges are of the following classes:—

To the array. Those which apply to all the jurors as arrayed or set in order by the officer upon the panel. Such a challenge is, in general, founded upon some error or manifest partiality committed in obtaining the panel, and which, from its nature, applies to all the jurors so obtained. These are not allowed in the United States generally; U. S. v. Reed, 2 Blatchf. 435, Fed. Cas. No. 16,134; Thomas v. State, 5 How. (Miss.) 20; the same end being attained by a motion addressed to the court, but are in some states; Bowman v. State, 41 Tex. 417; Boles v. State, 24 Miss. 445; Quinebaug Bank v. Tarbox, 20 Conn. 510; Peck v. Freeholders of Essex County, 21 N. J. L. 656; Pringle v. Huse, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 432; Cowgill v. Wood- en, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 332; Rolland v. Com., 82 Pa. 306, 22 Am. Rep. 758. The challenge must be based upon objection to all the jurors composing the panel; Cleary v. Stanley, 34 Ill. App. 338. Mere irregularity in drawing a jury is not sufficient cause to sustain a challenge to the array; Nealon v. People, 39 Ill. App. 481; nor is the fact that a challenge to the array has been sustained for bias and prejudice of the officer summoning them and few of the same jurors are on the second venire; People v. Vincent, 95 Cal. 425, 30 Pac. 581; nor is the fact that one of the men named on the special venire is dead and another removed from the county; State v. Whitt, 113 N. C. 716, 18 S. E. 715; Smith v. Smith, 52 N. J. L. 207, 19 Atl. 255. It was a good ground of challenge to the array that no persons of African descent were selected as jurors but all such were excluded because of their race and color, on affidavit of the prisoner to that effect, no evidence having been adduced pro or con; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. Ed. 567.

For cause. Those for which some reason is assigned.

These may be of various kinds, unlimited in number, may be to the array or to the poll, and depend for their allowance upon the existence and character of the reason assigned.

To the favor. Those challenges to the poll for cause which are founded upon reasonable grounds to suspect that the juror will act under some undue influence or prejudice, though the cause be not so evident as to authorize a principal challenge; Co. Litt. 147 a, 157 a; Bacon, Abr. Juries, E, 5; Shoefler v. State, 3 Wis. 823. Such challenges are at common law decided by triors, and not by the court. See Triors; Cancemi v. People, 16 N. Y. 501; Mann v. Glover, 14 N. J. L. 195. But see Milan v. State, 24 Ark. 346; Costigan v. Cuyler, 21 N. Y. 134; Weston v. People, 6 Hun (N. Y.) 140.

Peremptory. Those made without assigning any reason, and which the court must allow. The number of these in trials for felonies was, at common law, thirty-five; 4 Bla. Com. 354; but, by statute, has been reduced to twenty in most states, and is allowed in criminal cases only when the offence is capital; Thorn. Juries 119; U. S. v. Cottingham, 2 Blatchf. 470, Fed. Cas. No. 14,872; Hayden v. Com., 10 B. Monr. (Ky.) 125; Fouts v. State, 8 Ohio St. 98; see Schumaker v. State, 5 Wis. 324; State v. Cadwell, 46 N. C. 289; Todd v. State, 85 Ala. 339, 5 South. 278. The prosecuting officer may exercise his right of peremptory challenge of a juror at any time previous to the acceptance of the jury by the defendant; State v. Haines, 36 S. C. 504, 15 S. E. 555; in civil cases the right is not allowed at all; 9 Exch. 472; 2 F. & F. 137; U. S. v. Cottingham, 2 Blatchf. 470, Fed. Cas. No. 14,872; or, if allowed, only to a very limited extent; How v. Canal Co., 5 Harr. (Del.) 245; Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Stanley, 7 Ohio St. 155; Waterford & W. Turnpike v. People, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 161; Quinebaug Bank v. Tarbox, 20 Conn. 510; Wyatt v. Noble, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 507; Lewis v. Detrich, 3 Ia. 216. Unless given by statute no right exists; Brown v. R. Co., 86 Ala. 206, 5 South. 195. The rule that a juror shall be accepted or challenged and sworn as soon as his examination is completed is not objectionable as embarrassing the exercise of the right of peremptory challenge; St. Clair v. U. S., 154 U. S. 134, 14 Sup. Ct. 1002, 38 L. Ed. 936. In the federal courts in trials for treason or capital cases, the accused has twenty and the United States five peremptory challenges; U. S. R. S. § 819. The act granting peremptory challenges to the government in criminal cases has not taken away the right to conditional or qualified challenges when permitted in a state, or where it has been adopted by a federal court as a rule or by special order. The exercise of the right is under the supervision of the court, which should not permit it to be used unreasonably or so as to prejudice the defendant. It is not an unreasonable exercise of the privilege where, notwithstanding its exercise, neither the government nor the defendant had exhausted all their peremptory challenges; Sawyer v. U. S., 202 U. S. 150, 26 Sup. Ct. 575, 50 L. Ed. 972.

The allowance of peremptory challenges in excess of the statutory provision is not ground for reversal, where no prejudice to the opposite party appears; Stevens v. R. Co., 26 R. I. 90, 58 Atl. 492, 66 L. R. A. 465. The number of peremptory challenges allowed varies much in the different states. See 12 A. & E. Encyc. 346, 347, n. 3, for state statutes on the subject.

To the poll. Those made separately to each juror to whom they apply. Distinguished from those to the array.

Principal. Those made for a cause which when substantiated is of itself sufficient evidence of bias in favor of or against the party challenging. Co. Litt. 156 b. See 3 Bla. Com. 363; 4 id. 353. They may be either to the array or to the poll; Co. Litt. 156 a, b.

The importance of the distinction between principal challenges and those to the favor is found in the case of challenges to the array or of challenges to the poll for favor or partiality. All other challenges to the poll must, it seems, be principal. The distinctions between the various classes of challenges are of little value in modern practice, as the court generally determine the qualifications of a juror upon suggestion of the cause for challenge, and examination of the juror upon oath when necessary. See TRIALS.

The causes for challenge are said to be either propter honoris respectum (from regard to rank), which do not exist in the United States; propter defectum (on account of some defect), from personal objections, as alienage, infancy, lack of statutory requirements; propter affectum (on account of partiality), from some bias or partiality either actually shown to exist or presumed from circumstances; propter delictum (on account of crime), including cases of legal incompetency on the ground of infamy; Co. Litt. 155 b et seq.

These causes include, amongst others, alienage; Hollingsworth v. Duane, Wall. C. C. 147, Fed. Cas. No. 6,618; but see Queen v. Hepburn, 2 Cra. 3, Fed. Cas. No. 11,503; incapacity resulting from age, lack of statutory qualifications; Montague v. Com., 10 Gratt. (Va.) 767; see State v. Garig, 43 La. People*, 39 Mich. 245; Weston v. Com., 111 Pa. 251, 2 Atl. 191. A juror may be asked whether his "political affiliations or party predilections tend to bias his judgment either for or against the defendant"; Connors v. U. S., 158 U. S. 408, 15 Sup. Ct. 951, 39 L. Ed. 1033.

Who may challenge. Both parties, in civil as well as in criminal cases, may challenge, for cause; and equal privileges are generally allowed both parties in respect to peremptory challenges; but see Tharp v. Feltz's Adm'r, 6 B. Monr. (Ky.) 15; Shoemaker v. State, 3 Wis. 823; Pfomer v. People, 4 Park. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 586; and after a juror has been challenged by one party and found indifferent, he may yet be challenged by the other; Williams v. State, 32 Miss. 389, 66 Am. Dec. 615. A juror has no right to challenge himself, and though a good cause of challenge subsists, yet, if neither party will take advantage of it, the court cannot reject him; Denn v. Pissant, 1 N. J. L. 220; but see Gilliam v. Brown, 43 Miss. 641.

The time to make a challenge is between the appearance and swearing of the jurors; Thompson v. Com., 8 Gratt. (Va.) 637; State v. Patrick, 48 N. C. 443; Lewis v. Detrich, 3 Ia. 216; McFadden v. Com., 23 Pa. 12, 62 Am. Dec. 308; Jackson v. Pittsford, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 194; Williams v. State, 3 Ga. 453; State v. Bunker, 14 La. Ann. 461; *State v. E. 88; Thorp v. Deming, 78 Mich. 124, 43 N. W. 1097; the fact that a panel has been passed by a party as satisfactory will not prevent him from challenging one of the jurors so passed at any time before he is sworn; Silcox v. Lang, 78 Cal. 118, 20 Pac. 297; Daniels v. State, 88 Ala. 220, 7 South. 337. See Mayers v. Smith, 121 Ill. 442, 13 N. E. 216; Boteler v. Roy, 40 Mo. App. 234. A challenge for cause should be made before the juror is sworn; People v. Duncan, 8 Cal. App. 186, 96 Pac. 414; but the court may permit it before the jury is completed; People v. Schmitz, 7 Cal. App. 330, 94 Pac. 407, 419, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717; so also peremptory challenges may be made before the juror is sworn; State v. Deliso, 75 N. J. L. 808, 69 Atl. 218.

It is a general rule at common law that no challenge can be made till the appearance of a full jury; 4 B. & Ald. 476; Taylor v. R. Co., 45 Cal. 323; on which account a party who wishes to challenge the array may pray a tales to complete the number, and then make his objection. Challenges to the array, where allowed, must precede those to the poll; and the right to the former is waived by making the latter; Co. Litt. 158 a; Bacon, Abr. Juries, E, 11; People v. Roberts, 6 Cal. 214; Weeping Water Electric Light Co. v. Haldeman, 35 Neb. 139, 52 N. W. 892; but see Clinton v. Englebrecht, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 434, 20 L. Ed. 659. In cases where peremptory challenges are allowed, a juror unsuccessfully challenged for cause may subsequently be challenged peremptorily; 4 Bla. Com. 356; 6 Term 531; 4 B. & Ald. 476. See Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711.

Manner of making. Challenges to the array must be made in writing; People v. Doe, 1 Mich. 451; Suttle v. Batie, 1 Ia. 141; but challenges to the poll are made orally and generally by the attorney's or party's saying, "Challenge," or "I challenge," or "We challenge;" 1 Chit. Cr. Law 533-541; 4 Hargr. St. Tr. 740; Trials per Pais 172; Cro. Car. 105. See State v. Knight, 43 Me. 11; Zimmerly v. Road Com'rs, 25 Pa. 134; Rolland v. Com., 82 Pa. 306, 22 Am. Rep. 758.

The guaranty in the constitution of a trial by jury does not prevent legislation as to the manner of selecting jurors or allowing peremptory challenges to the state; State v. Ward, 61 Vt. 153, 17 Atl. 483. See JURY, sub-tit. Qualifications.

CHAMBER. A room in a house. There may be an estate of freehold in a chamber as distinct and separate from the ownership of the rest of the house; 1 Term 701; Co. Litt. 48 b; Loring v. Bacon, 4 Mass. 576; Proprietors of South Congregational Meeting-house v. City of Lowell, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 538; Cheeseborough v. Green, 10 Conn. 318, 26 Am. Dec. 396; and ejectment will lie for a deprivation of possession; 1 Term 701; Otis v. Smith, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 293; though the owner thereof does not thereby acquire any interest in the land; Stockwell v. Hunter, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 448, 45 Am. Dec. 220. See Brooke, Abr. Demand 20; Aldrich v. Parsons, 6 N. H. 555; Wusthoff v. Dracourt, 3 Watts (Pa.) 243; 3 Leon. 210.

Consult Washburn; Preston, Real Property.

CHAMBER OF ACCOUNTS. In French Law. A sovereign court, of great antiquity, in France which took cognizance of and registered the accounts of the king's revenue: nearly the same as the English court of exchequer. Encyc. Brit.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE. A society of the principal merchants and traders of a city, who meet to promote the general trade and commerce of the place. Some of these are incorporated, as in Philadelphia. Similar societies exist in all the large commercial cities, and are known by various names, as, Board of Trade, etc.

CHAMBERS. The private room of the judge. Any hearing before a judge which does not take place during a term of court or while the judge is sitting in court, or an order issued under such circumstances, is said to be in chambers. The act may be an official one, and the hearing may be in the court-room; but if the court is not in session, it is still said to be done, in chambers. See IN CAMERA; OPEN COURT.

CHAMPART. In French Law. The grant of a piece of land by the owner to another, on condition that the latter would deliver to him a portion of the crops. 18 Toullier, n. 182.

CHAMPERTOR. One who makes pleas or suits, or causes them to be moved, either directly or indirectly, and sues them at his proper costs, upon condition of having a part of the gain. Stat. 33 Edw. I. stat. 2.

One who is guilty of champerty.

CHAMPERTY (Lat. campum partire, to divide the land). A bargain with a plaintiff or defendant in a suit, for a portion of the land or other matter sued for, in case of a successful termination of the suit which the champertor undertakes to carry on at his own expense. See 19 Alb. L. J. 468; Nickels v. Kane's Adm'r, 82 Va. 309; 7 Bing. 369.

Champerty differs from maintenance chiefly in this, that in champerty the compensation to be given for the service rendered is a part of the matter in suit, or some profit growing out of it; 4 Bla. Com., Chase's ed. 905, n. 8; Wheeler v. Pounds, 24 Ala. 472; Lathrop v. Bank, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 489; Barnes v. Strong, 54 N. C. 100; Arden v. Patterson, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 44; Meeks v. Dewberry, 57 Ga. 263; Hayney v. Coyne, 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 339; Coleman v. Billings, 89 Ill. 183; while in simple maintenance the question of compensation does not enter into the account; 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 131; Quigley v. Thompson, 53 Ind. 317.

The offence was indictable at common law; 4 Bla. Com. 135; Thurston v. Percival, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 415; Brown v. Beauchamp, 5 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 413, 17 Am. Dec. 81; Douglas v. Wood's Lessee, 1 Swan. (Tenn.) 393; 8 M. & W. 691; see L. R. 8 Q. B. 112; 2 App. Cas. 186; 4 L. R. Ir. 43; Key v. Vattier, 1 Ohio 132; Wright v. Meek, 3 G. Greene (Ia.) 472; Newkirk v. Cone, 18 Ill. 449; Danforth v. Streeter, 28 Vt. 490; McMullen v. Guest, 6 Tex. 275; and is in some of the states by statute; Low v. Hutchinson, 37 Me. 196; Sedgwick v. Stanton, 14 N. Y. 289; Thompson v. Reynolds, 73 Ill. 11; Davis v. Sharron, 15 B. Monr. (Ky.) 64; Stoddard v. Mix, 14 Conn. 12; Richardson v. Rowland, 40 Conn. 565; Bentinck v. Franklin, 38 Tex. 458; Duke v. Harper, 2 Mo. App. 1. Champerty avoids contracts into which it enters; Martin v. Clarke, 8 R. I. 389, 5 Am. Rep. 586. A common instance of champerty, as defined and understood at common law, is where an attorney agrees with a client to collect by suit at his own expense a particular claim or claims in general, receiving a certain proportion of the money collected; Dumas v. Smith, 17 Ala. 305; Key v. Vattier, 1 Ohio 132; 4 Dowl. 304; or a percentage thereon; Lathrop v. Bank, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 489; 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 132; Kelly v. Kelly, 86 Wis. 170; 56 N. W. 637; and see Ogden v. Des Arts, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 275; Major's Ex'r v. Gibson, 1 Pat. & H. (Va.) 48; Newkirk v. Cone, 18 Ill. 449; Davis v. Sharron, 15 B. Monr. (Ky.) 64; Poe v. Davis, 29 Ala. 676; Evans v. Bell, 6 Dana (Ky.) 479; Lytle v. State, 17 Ark. 608; Backus v. Byron, 4 Mich. 535; Martin v. Clarke, 8 R. I. 389, 5 Am. Rep. 586; Fetrow v. Merriwether, 53 Ill. 275; Harmon v. Brewster, 7 Bush (Ky.) 355.

The tendency of modern decisions is, while departing from the unnecessary severity of the old law, at the same time to preserve the principle which defeats the mischief to which the old law was directed. It has been the disposition of courts to look not so much to technical distinctions, and by treating statutes on the subject as declaratory of the common law, to deal with the subject with more flexibility, keeping in view the real object of the policy to restrain what was defined by Knight Bruce, L. J., to be "the traffic of merchandizing in quarrels, of huckstering in litigious discord;" 1 D. M. & G. 680, 686. In this spirit, the common-law rule relative to champerty and maintenance is no longer recognized in many states; Nickels v. Kane's Adm'r, 82 Va. 309; Brown v. Begne, 21 Or. 260, 28 Pac. 11, 14 L. R. A. 745, 28 Am. St. Rep. 752; Byrne v. R. Co., 55 Fed. 44; but in New York by statute it is unlawful for an attorney to give or promise a consideration for placing in his hands a claim for injuries against a railroad company; Code C. P. 678; Oishei v. Lazzarone, 61 Hun 623, 15 N. Y. Supp. 933. Where an attorney agrees to prosecute an action for damages and advance all costs because of the poverty of the plaintiff, taking a contingent fee of a portion of the amount recovered, it is not void for champerty; Dunne v. Herrick, 37 Ill. App. 180; nor is a contract to pay for services of an attorney contingent entirely upon success; Lewis v. Brown, 36 W. Va. 1, 14 S. E. 444; Mumma's Appeal, 127 Pa. 474, 18 Atl. 6; Omaha & R. V. R. Co. v. Brady, 39 Neb. 27, 57 N. W. 767; Lewis v. Brown, 36 W. Va. 1, 14 S. E. 444 (and see Elliott v. Rubel, 132 Ill. 9, 23 N. E. 400); Fowler v. Callan, 102 N. Y. 395, 7 N. E. 169; Winslow v. R. Co., 71 Ia. 197, 32 N. W. 330; Belding v. Smythe, 138 Mass. 530; Phelps v. Park Com'rs, 119 Ill. 626, 10 N. E. 230; Aultman v. Waddle, 40 Kan. 195, 19 Pac. 730; Stevens v. Sheriff, 76 Kan. 124, 90 Pac. 799, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1153; Taylor v. Bemiss, 110 U. S. 42, 3 Sup. Ct. 441, 28 L. Ed. 64; if unconscionable, it will not be upheld; Muller v. Kelly, 125 Fed. 212, 60 C. C. A. 170. A committee of the Pennsylvania Bar Association (1908, 1909) and one of the New York State Bar Association (1909) have reported strongly against contingent fees. The purchase by attorneys of rights of action, for the purpose of bringing suit thereon, is commonly prohibited in law, on grounds of public policy; Chase's Bla. Com. 905, n. 8; and an agreement that the client shall receive a certain amount out of the sum recovered, and that all above that shall belong to the attorney, is champertous; Dahms v. Sears, 13 Or. 47, 11 Pac. 891; Silverman v. R. Co., 141 Fed. 382; but such an agreement for collection without suit is not champertous; Burnham v. Heselton, 84 Me. 578, 24 Atl. 955.

A contract by an attorney to pay witness fees out of a contingent fee to be allowed him for successful services in a suit is champertous; Barngrover v. Pettigrew, 128 Ia. 533, 104 N. W. 904, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260, 111 Am. St. Rep. 206, and so is a contract stipulating that the client shall not compromise or settle his claim without the consent of the attorney; Davy v. Ins. Co., 78 Ohio St. 256, 85 N. E. 504, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 443, 125 Am. St. Rep. 694. Some cases have held that an attorney is under absolute disability to purchase from his client the subject of his retainer; 12 Ir. Eq. 1; West v. Raymond, 21 Ind. 305; such purchases have been held in other cases to be presumptively void; Stubinger v. Frey, 116 Ga. 396, 42 S. E. 713; Roby v. Colehour, 135 Ill. 300, 25 N. E. 777; or to be voidable at the option of the client; Lane v. Black, 21 W. Va. 617; they will be closely scrutinized by the court; Mitchell v. Colby, 95 Ia. 202, 63 N. W. 769; Barrett v. Ball, 101 Mo. App. 288, 73 S. W. 865; but they will not be set aside if they were "open, honest and in every way fair to the client"; Vanasse v. Reid, 111 Wis. 303, 87 N. W. 192. Many cases have refused to hold the attorney to be under an absolute disability in this respect; Handlin v. Davis, 81 Ky. 34; Cox v. Delmas, 99 Cal. 104, 33 Pac. 836; Klein v. Borchert, 89 Minn. 377, 95 N. W. 215. The attorney, to sustain such a purchase, must establish the utmost good faith and fairness and adequacy of consideration and that he gave full information and disinterested advice to the client; Byrne v. Jones, 159 Fed. 321, 90 C. C. A. 101; Dunn v. Record, 63 Me. 17; Day v. Wright, 233 Ill. 218, 84 N. E. 226; he must prove uberrima fides; Young v. Murphy, 120 Wis. 49, 97 N. W. 496; this rule has been applied to purchases made after the relation has terminated; 33 Beav. 133; Barrett v. Ball, 101 Mo. App. 288, 73 S. W. 865.

A contract by one not acting as attorney, for a specific consideration, to defeat the probate of a will, is void as a species of champerty or maintenance; Cochran v. Zachery, 137 Ia. 585, 115 N. W. 486, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 235, 126 Am. St. Rep. 307, 15 Ann. Cas. 297; but an agreement by one having a claim against a decedent's estate to do everything proper and legitimate to aid the heirs in recovering the estate in consideration that they would pay his claim is not void as champerty or maintenance; Smith v. Hartsell, 150 N. C. 71, 63 S. E. 172, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 203.

In England contingent fees to solicitors are void by a statute of 1870. They are unknown in the case of barristers.

In England, in New York, and probably most of the states, the purchase of land, pending a suit concerning it, is champerty; and if made with knowledge of the suit and not pursuant to a previous agreement, it is void; 4 Kent 449; Bowling's Heirs v. Roark (Ky.) 24 S. W. 4; Sneed v. Hope (Ky.) 30 S.

W. 20; Snyder v. Church, 70 Hun 428, 24 N. Y. Supp. 337; this doctrine, established by the English statutes, Westm. 1, c. 25, Westm. 2, c. 49, and 28 Edw. I. c. 11, became part of the common law, and either as such or by statutory adoption became engrafted upon the law of almost all the states. The principle extends to the purchase of any cause of action, as a patent which has been infringed; Keiper v. Miller, 68 Fed. 627; unpaid promissory notes; Hamilton v. Gray, 67 Vt. 233, 31 Atl. 315, 48 Am. St. Rep. 811. In Pennsylvania a person may convey an interest in lands held adversely to him; Murray's Estate, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 70.

See BUYING TITLES.

The champerty of the plaintiff is no defence in the action concerning which the contract was made. A railroad company sued for an overcharge cannot defend by showing that the plaintiff made a champertous contract with his attorney to induce the company to accept the overcharge and then sue for the penalty; Railway Co. v. Smith, 60 Ark. 221, 29 S. W. 752; nor is such defence good in actions for personal injuries; Omaha & R. V. Ry. Co. v. Brady, 39 Neb. 27, 57 N. W. 767; nor can a purchaser of a disputed title defend against a prior unrecorded deed to plaintiff's attorney for one-half of the land, on the ground that the latter was given under a champertous contract; Chamberlain v. Grimes, 42 Neb. 701, 60 N. W. 948; and generally the objection that a contract is champertous cannot be set up by a stranger to it or in defence of a suit brought under it; Ashurst v. Peck, 101 Ala. 499, 14 South. 541; Pennsylvania Co. v. Lombardo, 49 Ohio St. 1, 29 N. E. 573, 14 L. R. A. 785; Gilkeson Sloss Commission Co. v. Bond, 44 La. Ann. 841, 11 South. 220; Euneau v. Rieger, 105 Mo. 659, 16 S. W. 854.

An attorney suing as "administrator" to recover for a death by wrongful act may be guilty of a champertous agreement with the beneficiaries, which may be pleaded as a defence to the suit under a statute investing the courts with equity powers for the purpose of discovering and preventing the offence; Byrne v. R. Co., 55 Fed. 44. For an analysis of the cases, see Wald's Poll. Cont. 293.

As to agreements between attorney and client regarding fees in divorce cases, see DIVORCE; ATTORNEY; ETHICS, LEGAL.

As to conditional fees in Roman Law, see ADVOCATI.

CHAMPION. He who fights for another, or who takes his place in a quarrel. One who fights his own battles. Bracton, l. 4, t. 2, c. 12.

CHANCE. See ACCIDENT.

CHANCE-MEDLEY. A sudden affray. This word is sometimes applied to any kind of homicide by misadventure, but in strictness it is applicable to such killing only as happens in defending one's self. 4 Bla. Com. 184.

CHANCELLOR. An officer appointed to preside over a court of chancery, invested with various powers in the several states.

There is a chancellor for the state in Delaware, and also, with vice-chancellors, in New Jersey, and in Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee there are district chancellors elected by the people. Under the federal system and in the other states the powers and jurisdiction of courts of equity are administered by the same judges who hold the common-law courts.

The title is also used in some of the dioceses of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States to designate a member of the legal profession who gives advice and counsel to the bishop and other ecclesiastical authorities.

In Scotland, this title is given to the foreman of the jury. Bisp. Eq. 7.

An officer bearing this title is to be found in some countries of Europe, and is generally invested with extensive political authority. It was finally abolished in France in 1848. The title and office of chancellor came to us from England.

See 1 Spence, Eq. Jur.; 4 Viner, Abr. 374; Woodd. Lect. 95.

For the history of the office, see CANCELLARIUS.

In England the title is borne by several functionaries, thus:

Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain. This has been the title of his office since the Union with Scotland (in effect May 1, 1707). He is appointed by the Crown, by the delivery to him of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, and verbally addressing him by the title. It is usual to appoint the person recommended by the Prime Minister, from such members of the bar as hold or have held the office of Attorney or Solicitor General. There is no qualification for the office, except that none but a Protestant can be appointed. 7 Halsb. Laws of Eng. 56. He holds office during pleasure, and as a member of the Cabinet and under the usage accepts or retires from office with the political party to which he belongs. He is expressly excepted from the term of office during good behavior provided for the judges in the Judicature Acts. He is a member of the Privy Council, probably by prescription; also prolocutor or speaker of the House of Lords by prescription. He is not necessarily a peer, and if not, he cannot address the House of Lords. He is custodian of the Great Seal, except when it is entrusted to a Lord Keeper, or is in commission. He is head of the judicial administration of England and is responsible for the appointment of judges of the High Court, except the Chief Justice, who is appointed by the Prime Minister. He appoints County Court judges (except where the whole of the County Court district lies within the Duchy of Lancaster). He advises the Crown as to nominating Justices of the Peace. He is President of the High Court of Justice, and of the Chancery Division of the High Court and an ex officio member of the Court of Appeals, and presiding officer thereof.

There is a Lord Chancellor of Ireland, but none in Scotland since the Union.

The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, who presides over the court of the duchy, to judge and determine controversies relating to lands holden of the king in right of the Duchy of Lancaster.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer is an officer who formerly sat in the court of exchequer, and, with the rest of the court, ordered things for the king's benefit. Cowell. This part of his functions is now practically obsolete; the chancellor of the exchequer is now known as the minister of state who has control over the national revenue and expenditure. 2 Steph. Com. 467.

The Chancellor of a Diocese is the officer appointed to assist a bishop in matters of law, and to hold his consistory courts for him. 1 Bla. Com. 382; 2 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 684.

The Chancellor of a University, who is the principal officer of the university. His office is for the most part honorary.

CHANCELLORS' COURTS IN THE TWO UNIVERSITIES. Courts of local jurisdiction, resembling borough courts, in and for the two Universities of Oxford and Cambridge in England. 3 Bla. Com. 83. These are courts subsisting under ancient charters granted to these universities and confirmed by act of parliament. If the defendant be a member of the University of Oxford resident within its limits, the suit must be in this court, although the plaintiff is not connected with the university or resident there, and although the cause of action did not arise within its limits; Odgers, C. L. 1030, citing 16 Q. B. D. 761. The rule at Cambridge is the same, except that the privilege cannot be claimed if any person not a member of the university be a party. The University of Oxford claims a similar privilege in criminal matters when any member of the university, resident within its limits, is defendant or prosecutor; Odgers, C. L. 1030; 4 Inst. 227; Rep. t. Hardw. 341; 2 Wils. 406; 12 East 12; 13 id. 635; 15 id. 634; 10 Q. B. 292. This privilege of exclusive jurisdiction was granted in order that the students might not be distracted from their studies and other scholastic duties by legal process from distant courts.

The most ancient charter containing this grant to the University of Oxford was 28 Hen. III. A. D. 1244, and the privileges thereby granted were confirmed and enlarged by every succeeding prince down to Hen. VIII., in the 14th year of whose reign the largest and most extensive charter of all was granted, and this last-mentioned charter is the one now governing the privileges of that university. A charter somewhat similar to that of Oxford was granted to Cambridge in the third year of Elizabeth. And subsequently was passed the statute of 13 Eliz. c. 29, whereby the legislature recognized and confirmed all the charters of the two universities, and those of the 14 Henry VIII. and 3 Eliz. by name (13 Eliz. c. 29); 16 Q. B. D. 761 (Oxford), 12 East 12 (Cambridge), which act established the privileges of these universities without any doubt or opposition.

It is to be observed, however, that the privilege can be claimed only on behalf of members who are defendants, and when an action in the High Court is brought against such member the university enters a claim of consuance, that is, claims the cognizance of the matter, whereupon the action is withdrawn from the High Court and transferred to the University Court; 16 Q. B. D. 761.

Procedure in these courts was usually regulated according to the laws of the civilians, subject to specific rules made by the vice-chancellor, with the approval of three of his Majesty's judges. See (as to Oxford) 25 & 26 Vict. c. 26, § 12. Under the charter of Henry VIII. the chancellor and vice-chancellor and the deputy of such vice-chancellor are justices of the peace for the counties of Oxford and Berks, which jurisdiction was confirmed in them by 49 & 50 Vict. c. 31; 3 Steph. Com. 325.

The judge of the chancellor's court at Oxford was a vice-chancellor, with a deputy or assessor. An appeal lay from his sentence to delegates appointed by the congregation, thence to delegates appointed by the house of convocation, and thence, in case of any disagreement only, to judges delegates appointed by the crown under the great seal in chancery; 3 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 325.

CHANCER. To adjust according to principles of equity, as would be done by a court of chancery. Cent. Dict.

The practice indicated by the word arose in parts of New England at a time when the courts had no equity jurisdiction, and were sometimes compelled to act upon equitable principles; as by restraining the enforcement of the penalty of a bond beyond what was equitable.

In Inhabitants of Machiasport v. Small, 77 Me. 109, and Lewiston v. Gagne, 89 Me. 395, 36 Atl. 629, 56 Am. St. Rep. 432, bonds were "chancered" after judgment had been entered for the penalty. The court will "chancer" a bond upon a writ of scire facias; Colt v. Eaton, 1 Root (Conn.) 524; a court of bankruptcy may "chancer" a bond given for the release of a bankrupt; In re Appel, 163 Fed. 1002, 90 C. C. A. 172, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 76 (C. C. A., 1st Cir.). Under a statute, the penalty of a recognizance to prosecute a writ of error was "chancered" after execution had been returned satisfied; James v. Smith, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 128. See Vt. Stat. 1894, §§ 2035-2038. In the absence of a statute "chancering" was refused in Philbrick v. Buxton, 40 N. H. 384.

The practice of "chancering" is a very old one. A forfeiture could be "chancered" under a law of 1699; Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Clark, 59 N. H. 561. Adjudged cases in 1630-1692 may be found in the Records of the Court of Assistants of Massachusetts Bay Colony. The early laws of Massachusetts provided for "chancering" the forfeiture of any penal bond; Acts of 1692, 1693, 1697, 1698, 1699; and bonds and mortgages were frequently "chancered" by special act; 10 Acts and Resolves of Massachusetts Bay, 403, 676; 11 id. 585; 13 id. 244; 16 id. 95. In Rhode Island an act of 1746 provided for "chancering" the forfeiture "where any penalty is forfeited, or conditional estate recovered, or equity of redemption sued for, whether judgment is confessed or otherwise obtained."

Chancer is defined in the New Dictionary as to "tax" (an account or bill of costs) but there seems to be no authority for this.

CHANCERY. See COURT OF CHANCERY.

CHANNEL. The bed in which the main stream of a river flows, and not the deep water of the stream, as followed in navigation. Dunkleth & Dubuque Bridge Co. v. Dubuque County, 55 Ia. 558, 8 N. W. 443. The main channel is that bed of the river over which the principal volume of water flows. St. Louis & St. P. Packet Co. v. Bridge Co., 31 Fed. 757.

By act of congress of Sept. 19, 1890, U. S. R. S. 1 Supp. 800, any alteration or modification of the channel of any navigable water of the United States, by any construction, excavation, or filling, or in any other manner without the approval of the secretary of war, is prohibited. For the construction of this act, see U. S. v. Burns, 54 Fed. 351.

CHANTRY. A church or chapel endowed with lands for the maintenance of priests to say mass daily for the souls of the donors. Termes de la Ley; Cowell.

CHAPELRY. The precinct of a chapel; the same thing for a chapel that a parish is for a church. Termes de la Ley; Cowell.

CHAPELS. Places of worship. They may be either private chapels, such as are built and maintained by a private person for his own use and at his own expense, or free chapels, so called from their freedom or exemption from all ordinary jurisdiction, or chapels of ease, which are built by the mother-church for the ease and convenience of its parishioners, and remain under its jurisdiction and control.

CHAPTER. In Ecclesiastical Law. A congregation of clergymen.

Such an assembly is termed capitulum, which signifies a little head; it being a kind of head, not only to govern the diocese in the vacation of the bishopric, but also for other purposes. Coke, Litt. 103.

CHARACTER. The possession by a person of certain qualities of mind or morals, distinguishing him from others.

In Evidence. The opinion generally entertained of a person derived from the common report of the people who are acquainted with him; his reputation. Kimmel v. Kimmel, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 336, 8 Am. Dec. 655; Boynton v. Kellogg, 3 Mass. 192, 3 Am. Dec. 122; 3 Esp. 236; Tayl. Ev. 328, 329.

A clear distinction exists between the strict meaning of the words character and reputation. Character is defined to be the assemblage of qualities which distinguish one person from another, while reputation is the opinion of character generally entertained; Worcester, Dict. This distinction, however, is not regarded either in the statutes or in the decisions of the courts; thus, a libel is said to be an injury to character; the character of a witness for veracity is said to be impeached; evidence is offered of a prisoner's good character; Abbott, Law Dict. See Leverich v. Frank, 6 Or. 213; Powers v. Leach, 26 Vt. 278. The word character is therefore used in the law rather to express what is properly signified by reputation.

The moral character and conduct of a person in society may be used in proof before a jury in three classes of cases; first, to afford a presumption that a particular person has not been guilty of a criminal act; second, to affect the damages in particular cases, where their amount depends on the reputation and conduct of any individual; and, third, to impeach or confirm the veracity of a witness.

Where the guilt of an accused person is doubtful, and the character of the supposed agent is involved in the question, a presumption of innocence arises from his former conduct in society, as evidenced by his general reputation; since it is not probable that a person of known probity and humanity would commit a dishonest or outrageous act in the particular instance. But where it is a question of great and atrocious criminality, the commission of the act is so unusual, so out of the ordinary course of things and beyond common experience—it is so manifest that the offence, if perpetrated, must have been influenced by motives not frequently operating upon the human mind—that evidence of reputation and of a man's habitual conduct under common circumstances, must be considered far inferior to what it is in the instance of accusations of a lower grade. Against facts strongly proved, good character cannot avail. It is therefore in smaller offences, in such as relate to the actions of daily and common life, as when one is charged with pilfering and stealing, that evidence of a high character for honesty will satisfy a jury that the accused is not likely to yield to so slight a temptation. People v. Ryder, 151 Mich. 187, 114 N. W. 1021. In such case, where the evidence is doubtful, proof of character may be given with good effect. But still, even with regard to the higher crimes, evidence of good character, though of less avail, is competent evidence to the jury, and a species of evidence which the accused has a right to offer. But it behooves one charged with an atrocious crime, like murder, to prove a high character, and by strong evidence, to make it counterbalance a strong amount of proof on the part of the prosecution. It is the privilege of the accused to put his character in issue, or not. Lewis v. State, 93 Miss. 697, 47 South. 467. If he does, and offers evidence of good character, then the prosecution may give evidence to rebut and counteract it. But it is not competent for the prosecution to give in proof the bad character of the defendant, unless he first opens that line of inquiry by evidence of good character; Per Shaw, C. J., Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 325, 52 Am. Dec. 711. See 1 Campb. 460; 2 St. Tr. 1038; State v. Wells, 1 N. J. L. 424, 1 Am. Dec. 211; Nash v. Gilkeson, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 352; Gregory v. Thomas, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 286, 5 Am. Dec. 608; Grannis v. Branden, 5 Day (Conn.) 260, 5 Am. Dec. 143; Humphrey v. Humphrey, 7 Conn. 116; Fowler v. Ins. Co., 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 673, 16 Am. Dec. 460; Jeffries v. Harris, 10 N. C. 105; Felsenthal v. State, 30 Tex. App. 675, 18 S. W. 644; State v. Ellwood, 17 R. I. 763, 24 Atl. 782; Carter v. State, 36 Neb. 481, 54 N. W. 853; Smother's v. City of Jackson, 92 Miss. 327, 45 South. 982.

Where, in a criminal trial, no evidence has been offered, there is a presumption of good character, as to which the jury should, on his request, be instructed; it is error for the court to comment unfavorably upon the character of the accused; Mullen v. U. S., 106 Fed. 895, 46 C. C. A. 22; and a prosecuting officer may not appeal to the jury to assume that his character was bad, because he had produced no evidence to the contrary; Lowdon v. U. S., 149 Fed. 673, 79 C. C. A. 361; Gater v. State, 141 Ala. 10, 37 South. 692; McQuiggan v. Ladd, 79 Vt. 90, 64 Atl. 503, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 689; People v. Van Gaasbeck, 189 N. Y. 408, 82 N. E. 718, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 650, 12 Ann. Cas. 745.

In a trial for rape there is no presumption, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the defendant was of good character. Adison v. People, 193 Ill. 405, 62 N. E. 235.

On the trial of an indictment for homicide, evidence offered generally to prove that the deceased was well known, and understood to be a quarrelsome, riotous, and savage man, is inadmissible; 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 641; see Perry v. State, 94 Ala. 25, 10 South. 650; Com. v. Straesser, 153 Pa. 451, 26 Atl. 17; but for the purpose of showing that the homicide was justifiable on the ground of self-defence, proof of the character of the deceased may be admitted, if it is also shown that the prisoner was influenced by his knowledge thereof in committing the deed; Marts v. State, 26 Ohio St. 162; Garner v. State, 28 Fla. 113, 9 South. 835, 29 Am. St. Rep. 232; but in a civil action for damages for homicide which defendant alleges was committed in self-defence evidence of good character was held not admissible; Morgan v. Barnhill, 118 Fed. 24, 55 C. C. A. 1. The general reputation of the deceased as a violent and dangerous person is presumptive proof of knowledge of decedent's character; Trabune v. Com. (Ky.) 17 S. W. 186. Unless the character of the deceased is attacked, it is clearly not admissible for the prosecution to prove its peaceableness; Davis v. People, 114 Ill. 86, 29 N. E. 192. Good character will not avail one if the crime has been proven beyond a reasonable doubt; People v. Sweeney, 133 N. Y. 609, 30 N. E. 1005; Hathcock v. State, 88 Ga. 91, 13 S. E. 959; Kistler v. State, 54 Ind. 400; People v. Jassino, 100 Mich. 536, 59 N. W. 230; contra, Com. v. Cate, 220 Pa. 138, 69 Atl. 322, 123 Am. St. Rep. 683. It is erroneous to instruct a jury that evidence of good character can only be considered when the question of guilt or innocence is in doubt; Rowe v. U. S., 97 Fed. 779, 38 C. C. A. 496; State v. Dickerson, 77 Ohio St. 34, 82 N. E. 969, 122 Am. St. Rep. 479, 11 Ann. Cas. 1181. In a criminal case the defendant has the right to prove his reputation for honesty and truth; Browder v. State, 30 Tex. App. 614, 18 S. W. 197; though he be indicted for murder by poisoning, he can show his reputation for peace and quietude; Hall v. State, 132 Ind. 317, 31 N. E. 536.

In a prosecution for theft, the accused may prove his reputation for honesty and integrity, but not particular acts; Leonard v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 187, 109 S. W. 149; nor special traits or particular instances not bearing on the peculiar nature of the crime charged; Arnold v. State, 131 Ga. 494, 62 S. E. 806. Proof of previous occupations and of family history is inadmissible; State v. Clem, 49 Wash. 273, 94 Pac. 1079. It is competent for a witness to testify that he has never heard the reputation of the defendant questioned; State v. McClellan, 79 Kan. 11, 98 Pac. 209, 17 Ann. Cas. 106; Foerster v. U. S., 116 Fed. 860, 54 C. C. A. 210, but proof that he has never before been arrested or accused of crime is incompetent; State v. Marfaudille, 48 Wash. 117, 92 Pac. 939, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 346, 15 Ann. Cas. 584.

It is proper to cross-examine a witness who has testified to the defendant's reputation for peace and quiet, as to how many men she had heard he had shot; People v. Laudiero, 192 N. Y. 304, 85 N. E. 132.

In an action by a locomotive engineer for injury resulting from a collision, evidence that he frequently had slept at his post, and run by stations where he should have stopped, was properly excluded; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Johnson, 92 Tex. 380, 48 S. W. 568.

In some instances, evidence in disparagement of character is admissible, not in order to prove or disprove the commission of a particular fact, but with a view to damages. In actions for criminal conversation with the plaintiff's wife, evidence may be given of the wife's general bad reputation for want of chastity, and even of particular acts of adultery committed by her previous to her intercourse with the defendant; Whart. Ev. 51; Bull. N. P. 27, 296; 12 Mod. 232;

3 Esp. 236; and a wife who has confessed her adultery cannot prove previous good conduct; State v. Foster, 136 Ia. 527, 114 N. W. 36. See Ligon v. Ford, 5 Munf. (Va.) 10. As to the statutory use of the word "character," see Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 603; People v. Kenyon, 5 Park. Cr. C. (N. Y.) 254; Andre v. State, 5 Ia. 389, 68 Am. Dec. 708; Boak v. State, 5 Ia. 430; State v. Prizer, 49 Ia. 531, 31 Am. Rep. 155.

In actions for slander or libel, the law is well settled that evidence of the previous general character of the plaintiff, before and at the time of the publication of the slander or libel, is admissible, under the general issue, in mitigation of damages. The ground of admitting such evidence is that a person of disparaged fame is not entitled to the same measure of damages as one whose character is unblemished. And the reasons which authorize the admission of this species of evidence under the general issue alike exist, and require its admission, where a justification has been pleaded but the defendant has failed in sustaining it; Stone v. Varney, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 86, 39 Am. Dec. 762; where the decisions are collected and reviewed; Hamer v. McFarlin, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 509; Bowen v. Hall, 20 Vt. 232; Steinman v. McWilliams, 6 Pa. 170; Eifert v. Sawyer, 2 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 511, 10 Am. Dec. 633. When evidence is admitted touching the general reputation of a person, it is manifest that it is to be confined to matters in reference to the nature of the charge against him; Douglass v. Tousey, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 352, 20 Am. Dec. 616. See People v. Cowgill, 93 Cal. 596, 29 Pac. 228.

In an action for damages for assault and battery it is error to admit evidence of defendant's good character; Pokriefka v. Mackurat, 91 Mich. 399, 51 N. W. 1059; Sturgeon v. Sturgeon, 4 Ind. App. 232, 30 N. E. 805.

The party against whom a witness is called may disprove the facts stated by him, or may examine other witnesses as to his general character; but they will not be allowed to speak of particular facts or parts of his conduct; Bull. N. P. 296; State v. Rose, 47 Minn. 47, 49 N. W. 404. For example, evidence of the general character of a prosecutrix for a rape may be given, as that she was a street-walker; but evidence of specific acts of criminality cannot be admitted; 3 C. & P. 589. And see Cadwell v. State, 17 Conn. 467; Low v. Mitchell, 18 Me. 372; Commonwealth v. Murphy, 14 Mass. 387; 5 Cox, Cr. Cas. 146. The regular mode is to inquire whether the witness under examination has the means of knowing the former witness's general character, and whether, from such knowledge, he would believe him on his oath; 4 St. Tr. 693; 4 Esp. 102; Knode v. Williamson, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 586, 21 L. Ed. 670. In answer to such evidence against character, the other party may cross-examine the witness as to his means of knowledge and the grounds of his opinion, or he may attack such witness's general character, and by fresh evidence support the character of his own; 2 Stark. 151, 241; Stark. Ev. pt. 4, 1753 to 1758; 1 Phill. Ev. 229. A party cannot give evidence to confirm the good character of a witness, unless his general character has been impugned by his antagonist; Braddee v. Brownfield, 9 Watts (Pa.) 124; State v. Cooper, 71 Mo. 436; Fitzgerald v. Goff, 99 Ind. 28; Turner v. Commonwealth, 86 Pa. 74, 27 Am. Rep. 683; Atwood v. Dearborn, 1 Allen (Mass.) 483, 79 Am. Dec. 755.

CHARGE. A duty or obligation imposed upon some person. A lien, incumbrance, or claim which is to be satisfied out of the specific thing or proceeds thereof to which it applies.

To impose such an obligation; to create such a claim.

To accuse.

The distinctive significance of the term rests in the idea of obligation directly bearing upon the individual thing or person to be affected, and binding him or it to the discharge of the duty or satisfaction of the claim imposed. Thus, charging an estate with the payment of a debt is appropriating a definite portion to the particular purpose; charging a person with the commission of a crime is pointing out the individual who is bound to answer for the wrong committed; charging a jury is stating the precise principles of law applicable to the case immediately in question. In this view, a charge will, in general terms, denote a responsibility peculiar to the person or thing affected and authoritatively imposed, or the act fixing such responsibility.

In Contracts. An obligation, binding upon him who enters into it, which may be removed or taken away by a discharge. Termes de la Ley.

An undertaking to keep the custody of another person's goods.

An obligation entered into by the owner of an estate, which binds the estate for its performance. Comyns, Dig. Rent, c. 6; 2 Ball & B. 223.

In Devises. A duty imposed upon a devisee, either personally, or with respect to the estate devised. It may be the payment of a legacy or sum of money or an annuity, the care and maintenance of a relative or other person, the discharge of an existing lien upon land devised or the payment of debts, or, in short, the performance of any duty or obligation which may be lawfully imposed as a condition of the enjoyment of the bounty of a testator. A charge is not an interest in, but a lien upon, lands; Potter v. Gardner, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 498, 6 L. Ed. 706; Thayer v. Finnegan, 134 Mass. 62, 45 Am. Rep. 285; Appeal of Walter, 95 Pa. 305; 1 Ves. & B. 260; it will not be divested by a sheriff's sale; Rohn v. Odenwelder, 162 Pa. 346, 29 Atl. 899.

Where a charge is personal, and there are no words of limitation, the devisee will generally take the fee of the estate devised; 4 Kent 540; 2 Bla. Com. 108; Jackson v. Mer- rill, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 185, 5 Am. Dec. 213; Wait v. Belding, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 139; but he will take only a life estate if it be upon the estate generally; 14 Mees. & W. 698; Gardner v. Gardner, 3 Mas. 209, Fed. Cas. No. 5,227; Wright v. Denn, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 231, 6 L. Ed. 303; Jackson v. Martin, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 35; McLellan v. Turner, 15 Me. 436; Lithgow v. Kavenagh, 9 Mass. 161; Spraker v. Van Alstyne, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 200; unless the charge be greater than a life estate will satisfy; 6 Co. 16; 4 Term 93; Olmsted v. Harvey, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 102; Wait v. Belding, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 138; 1 Washb. R. P. 59. See 9 L. R. A. 584, n., LEGACY.

In Equity Pleading. An allegation in the bill of matters which disprove or avoid a defence which it is alleged the defendant is supposed to pretend or intend to set up. Story, Eq. Pl. § 31.

It is frequently omitted, and this the more properly, as all matters material to the plaintiff's case should be fully stated in the stating part of the bill; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 11; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 372, 1883, n.; 11 Ves. Ch. 574. See 2 Hare, Ch. 264.

In Practice. The instructions given by the court to the grand jury or inquest of the county, at the commencement of their session, in regard to their duty.

The exposition by the court to a petit jury of those principles of the law which the latter are to apply in order to render such a verdict as will, in the state of facts proved at the trial to exist, establish the legal rights of the parties to the suit.

It formerly preceded the addresses of counsel to the jury; Thayer, Evid.; and that is still the practice in the federal district court in Maryland. It usually includes a summing up of the facts.

The essential idea of a charge is that it is authoritative as an exposition of the law, which the jury are bound by their oath and by moral obligations to obey; Com. v. Porter, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 285-287; Pierce v. State, 13 N. H. 536; Townsend v. State, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 162; Davenport v. Com., 1 Leigh (Va.) 588; Montee v. Com., 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 150; 21 How. St. Tr. 1039; Kane v. Com., 89 Pa. 522, 33 Am. Rep. 787. See 5 South. L. Rev. 352; 1 Crim. L. Mag. 51; 3 id. 484. This is the rule in the federal courts; Sparf v. U. S., 156 U. S. 51, 15 Sup. Ct. 273, 39 L. Ed. 343; Alabama; Pierson v. State, 12 Ala. 153; Arkansas; Pleasant v. State, 13 Ark. 360; Sweeney v. State, 35 Ark. 585; California; People v. Anderson, 44 Cal. 65; Kentucky; Com. v. Van Tuyl, 1 Metc. 1, 71 Am. Dec. 455; Maine; State v. Wright, 53 Me. 336; Massachusetts; Com. v. Porter, 10 Metc. 286; Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray 185; Michigan; People v. Mortimer, 48 Mich. 37, 11 N. W. 776; Mississippi; Bangs v. State, 61 Miss. 363; Missouri; Hardy v. State, 7 Mo. 607; Nebraska; Parrish v. State, 14 Neb. 60, 15 N. W. 357; New Hampshire; Pierce v. State, 13 N. H. 536; New York; People v. Bennett, 49 N. Y. 141; North Carolina; State v. Peace, 46 N. C. 251; Ohio; Adams v. State, 29 Ohio St. 412; Pennsylvania; Com. v. McManus, 143 Pa. 64, 21 Atl. 1018, 22 Atl. 761, 14 L. R. A. 89; South Carolina; State v. Drawdy, 14 Rich. 87; Texas; Pharr v. State, 7 Tex. App. 472. By statute, in some states, the jury are constituted judges of the law as well as of the facts in criminal cases,—an arrangement which assimilates the duties of a judge to those of the moderator of a town-meeting or of the preceptor of a class of law-students, besides subjecting successive criminals to a code of laws varying as widely as the impulses of successive juries can differ. It is so in Georgia; Oneil v. State, 48 Ga. 66; Illinois; Board of Super's of Clay County v. Plant, 42 Ill. 331; Indiana; Anderson v. State, 104 Ind. 467, 4 N. E. 63, 5 N. E. 711; Louisiana; State v. Ford, 37 La. Ann. 444; Maryland; Forwood v. State, 49 Md. 531; Tennessee; Nelson v. State, 2 Swan 237; and Vermont; State v. Croteau, 23 Vt. 14, 54 Am. Dec. 90. Even in these states, however, the courts have tried to escape from this doctrine, and have of late years practically nullified it in many instances. See Habersham v. State, 56 Ga. 61; Bell v. State, 57 Md. 108; Mullinix v. People, 76 Ill. 211; State v. Ford, 37 La. Ann. 449; State v. Hopkins, 56 Vt. 263. The charge frequently and usually includes a summing up of the evidence, given to show the application of the principles involved; and in English practice the term summing up is used instead of charge. Though this is customary in many courts, the judge is not bound to sum up the facts; Thomps. Charging Juries § 79; State v. Morris, 10 N. C. 390. But if he do sum up he must present all the material facts; Parker v. Donaldson, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 132; Merchants' Bank of Macon v. Bank, 1 Ga. 428, 44 Am. Dec. 665. This is the practice in the courts of the United States; United States Exp. Co. v. Kountze Bros., 8 Wall. 342, 19 L. Ed. 457.

It should be a clear and explicit statement of the law applicable to the condition of the facts; Finch's Ex'rs v. Elliot, 11 N. C. 61; Cannon v. Alsbury, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 76, 10 Am. Dec. 709; Williams v. Cheesebrough, 4 Conn. 356; Van Hoesen v. Van Alstyne, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 75; Com. v. White, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 14; Com. v. Porter, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 263; Coleman v. Roberts, 1 Mo. 97; Jenness v. Parker, 24 Me. 289; Lett v. Horner, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 296; Whiteford v. Burckmyer & Adams, 1 Gill (Md.) 127, 39 Am. Dec. 640; People v. Murray, 72 Mich. 10, 40 N. W. 29. The defendant in a criminal case is entitled to a full statement of the law from the court; Bird v. U. S., 180 U. S. 356, 21 Sup. Ct. 403, 45 L. Ed. 570. The charge should add such comments on the evidence as are necessary to explain its application; Ware v. Ware, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 42; Kinloch v. Palmer, 1 Mill, Const. (S. C.) 216; Nieman v. Ward, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 68; Wyley v. Stanford, 22 Ga. 385 (though in some states the court is prohibited by law from charging as to matters of fact, "but may state the testimony and the law;" e. g., California, Tennessee, South Carolina, Georgia, Massachusetts, etc.); and may include an opinion on the weight of evidence; Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How. (U. S.) 115, 14 L. Ed. 75; 2 M. & G. 721; Cook v. Brown, 34 N. H. 460; Swift v. Stevens, 8 Conn. 431; Dunlap v. Patterson, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 243; Hinson v. King, 50 N. C. 393; though the rule is otherwise in some states; Frame v. Badger, 79 Ill. 441; Wannack v. Mayor, etc., of City of Macon, 53 Ga. 162; Jenkins v. Tobin, 31 Ark. 307; Barnett v. State, 83 Ala. 40, 3 South. 612; State v. Huffman, 16 Or. 15, 16 Pac. 640; People v. Gastro, 75 Mich. 127, 42 N. W. 937; but should not undertake to decide the facts; Fightmaster v.

Beasley, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 410; Sullivan v. Enders, 3 Dana (Ky.) 66; Beekman v. Bemus, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 29; Planters' Bank of Prince George's County v. Bank, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 346; State v. Lynott, 5 R. I. 295; unless in the entire absence of opposing proof; Chase v. Breed, 5 Gray (Mass.) 440; Nichols v. Goldsmith, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 160; Rippey v. Friede, 26 Mo. 523; Jones' Ex'rs v. Mengel, 1 Pa. 68. A United States court may express an opinion upon the facts; Lovejoy v. U. S., 128 U. S. 171, 9 Sup. Ct. 57, 32 L. Ed. 389; Sorenson v. R. Co., 36 Fed. 166. In federal courts the trial judge may express his opinion on the facts, while leaving them to the jury; this power is not controlled by state statutes forbidding judges to express any opinion on the facts; Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Putnam, 118 U. S. 545, 7 Sup. Ct. 1, 30 L. Ed. 257. It is improper to instruct which of two conflicting theories of the evidence the jury shall accept; Mitchell v. State, 94 Ala. 68, 10 South. 331. The presiding judge may express to the jury his opinion as to the weight of evidence. He is under no obligation to recapitulate all the items of the evidence, nor even all bearing on a single question; Allis v. U. S., 155 U. S. 117, 15 Sup. Ct. 36, 39 L. Ed. 91.

Failure to give instructions not asked for is not error; Winn v. State, 82 Wis. 571, 52 N. W. 775; People v. Ahern, 93 Cal. 518, 29 Pac. 49; Mead v. State, 53 N. J. L. 601, 23 Atl. 264; Small v. Williams, 87 Ga. 681, 13 S. E. 589. A request to charge is properly refused though embodying correct principles, where there is no evidence to support it; Bostic v. State, 94 Ala. 45, 10 South. 602; Com. v. Cosseboom, 155 Mass. 298, 29 N. E. 463; Page v. Alexander, 84 Me. 84, 24 Atl. 584; Frost v. Lumber Co., 3 Wash. 241, 28 Pac. 354, 915; Everitt v. Walker, 109 N. C. 132, 13 S. E. 860; Guernsey v. Greenwood, 88 Ga. 446, 14 S. E. 709; Floyd v. Efron, 66 Tex. 221, 18 S. W. 497; Kitchen v. McCloskey, 150 Pa. 376, 24 Atl. 688, 30 Am. St. Rep. 811; New York & C. Mining Co. v. Fraser, 130 U. S. 611, 9 Sup. Ct. 665, 32 L. Ed. 1031; City of Rock Island v. Cuinely, 126 Ill. 408, 18 N. E. 753; Spoonemore v. State, 25 Tex. App. 358, 8 S. W. 280. A request to charge may be disregarded when the court has already fully instructed the jury on the point. The court should refuse to charge upon a purely hypothetical statement of facts calculated to mislead the jury; White v. Van Horn, 159 U. S. 3, 15 Sup. Ct. 1027, 40 L. Ed. 55. A judge is not bound to charge a jury in the exact words proposed to him by counsel, and there is no error if he instructs the jury correctly and substantially covers the relevant rules of law suggested; Cunningham v. Springer, 204 U. S. 647, 27 Sup. Ct. 301, 51 L. Ed. 662, 9 Ann. Cas. 897.

Erroneous instructions in matters of law which might have influenced the jury in forming a verdict are a cause for a new trial; Lane v. Crombie, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 177; West v. Anderson, 9 Conn. 107, 21 Am. Dec. 737; Doe v. Paine, 11 N. C. 64, 15 Am. Dec. 507; even though on hypothetical questions; Etting v. Bank, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 59, 6 L. Ed. 419; Yarborough v. Tate, 14 Tex. 483; People v. Roberts, 6 Cal. 214; on which no opinion can be required to be given; Jordan v. James, 5 Ohio, 88; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 388; Pollard v. Teel, 25 N. C. 470; Smith v. Sasser, 50 N. C. 388; Dunlap v. Robinson, 28 Ala. 100; Whitaker v. Pullen, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 466; Nicholas v. State, 6 Mo. 6; Whitney v. Goin, 20 N. H. 354; Hammat v. Russ, 16 Me. 171; Miller v. Gorman, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 112; McDaniel v. State, 8 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 401, 47 Am. Dec. 93; Hicks' Adm'x v. Bailey, 16 Tex. 229; Raver v. Webster, 3 Ia. 509, 66 Am. Dec. 96; McDougald v. Bellamy, 18 Ga. 411; but the rule does not apply where the instructions could not prejudice the cause; Johnson v. Blackman, 11 Conn. 342; U. S. v. Wright, 1 McLean, 509, Fed. Cas. No. 16,775; Rhett v. Poe, 2 How. (U. S.) 457, 11 L. Ed. 338. See Miller v. State, 3 Wyo. 657, 29 Pac. 136. Any decision or declaration by the court upon the law of the case, made in the progress of the cause, and by which the jury are influenced and the counsel controlled, is considered within the scope and meaning of the term "instructions;" Hilliard, New Trials 255.

Where on a trial for murder defendant's counsel asks the court to give its charge in writing, and after complying it gives orally other and additional charges, it is cause for new trial; Willis v. State, 89 Ga. 188, 15 S. E. 32.

When an instruction to the jury embodies several propositions of law, to some of which there are no objections, the party objecting must point out specifically to the trial court the part to which he objects, in order to avail himself of the objection; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 157 U. S. 72, 15 Sup. Ct. 491, 39 L. Ed. 624.

"But no charge delivered by a trial court is to be judged by the same standards as a statement of law carefully elaborated and deliberately pronounced by a court of appeals, sitting in banc. It serves a very different office. It is to call the attention of twelve men unfamiliar with legal distinctions to whatever is necessary and proper to guide them to a right decision in a particular case, and to nothing more. To make almost any rule of law intelligible to the ordinary juror, it must be expressed in a few words. Qualifications and exceptions which the case does not call for are worse than useless, and those which are requisite it may be better to supply later, by a separate statement. A charge must be taken as a whole in determining its natural effect." Per

Baldwin, J., in Sturdevant's Appeal, 71 Conn. 392, 42 Atl. 70.

See Thompson, Charging Juries.

CHARGEABLE. This word in its ordinary acceptation, as applicable to the imposition of a duty or burden, signifies capable of being charged, subject, or liable to be charged, or proper to be charged, or legally liable to be charged. Walbridge v. Walbridge, 46 Vt. 625.

CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES. CHARGÉ DES AFFAIRES. In International Law. The title of a diplomatic representative or minister of an inferior grade, to whose care are confided the affairs of his nation. The term is usually applied to a secretary of legation or other person in charge of an embassy or legation during a vacancy in the office or temporary absence of the ambassador or minister.

He has not the title of minister, and is generally introduced and admitted through a verbal presentation of the minister at his departure, or through letters of credence addressed to the minister of state of the court to which he is sent. He has the essential rights of a minister; 1 Kent 39, n.; Du Pont v. Pichon, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 321, 1 L. Ed. 851. The term chargé des affaires is sometimes restricted to a chargé d'affaires ad interim, who is not accredited from one Foreign Office to another, but who is merely in temporary charge of the affairs of the mission.

CHARGES. The expenses which have been incurred in relation either to a transaction or to a suit. Thus, the charges incurred for his benefit must be paid by a hirer; the defendant must pay the charges of a suit. In relation to actions, the term includes something more than the costs, technically so called.

CHARITABLE USES, CHARITIES. Gifts to general public uses, which may extend to the rich as well as the poor. Camden, Ld. Ch. in Ambl. 651; adopted by Kent, Ch., Coggeshall v. Pelton, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 294, 11 Am. Dec. 471; Lyndhurst, Ld. Ch., in 1 Ph. Ch. 191; and U. S. Supreme Court in Perin v. Carey, 24 How. (U. S.) 506, 16 L. Ed. 701; Bisp. Eq. § 124; Franklin v. Armfield, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 305.

Gifts to such purposes as are enumerated in the act 43 Eliz. c. 4, or which, by analogy, are deemed within its spirit or intentment. Boyle, Char. 17.

Such a gift was defined by Mr. Binney to be "whatever is given for the love of God or for the love of your neighbor, in the catholic and universal sense—given from these motives, and to these ends—free from the stain or taint of every consideration that is personal, private, or selfish." Vidal v. Girard, 2 How. (U. S.) 128, 11 L. Ed. 205; approved in Price v. Maxwell, 28 Pa. 35, and

Ould v. Hospital, 95 U. S. 311, 24 L. Ed. 450.

Lord MacNaghten said in [1891] A. C. 531: Charity in its legal sense comprises four principal divisions: trusts for the relief of poverty, trusts for the advancement of education, trusts for the advancement of religion, and trusts for other purposes beneficial to the community not falling under any of the preceding heads.

They had their origin under the Christian dispensation, and were regulated by the Justinian Code. Code Just. 1. 3, De Episc. et Cler.; Domat, b. 2, t. 2, § 6, 1, b. 4, t. 2, § 6, 2; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 96; Mr. Binney's argument on the Girard will, p. 40; Chastel on the Charity of the Primitive Churches, b. 1, c. 2, b. 2, c. 10; Codeex, donationem piarum, passim. Under that system, donations for pious uses which had not a regular and determined destination were liable to be adjudged invalid, until the edicts of Valentinian III. and Marcian declared that legacies in favor of the poor should be maintained even if legatees were not designated. Justinian completed the work by sweeping all such general gifts into the coffers of the church, to be administered by the bishops. The doctrine of pious uses seems to have passed directly from the civil law into the law of England; Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbor, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 100, 139, 7 L. Ed. 617; Howe, Studies in the Civil Law 68. It would seem that, by the English rule before the statute, general and indefinite trusts for charity, especially if no trustees were provided, were invalid. If sustainable, it was under the king's prerogative, exercising in that respect a power analogous to that of the ordinary in the disposition of bona vacantia prior to the Statute of Distributions; F. Moore 882, 890; Duke, Char. Uses 72, 362; 1 Vern. 224, note; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 96, pl. 8; 1 Ves. Sen. 225; Hob. 136; Chittenden v. Chittenden, 1 Am. L. Reg. 545. The main purpose of the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4 was to define the uses which were charitable, as contradistinguished from those which, after the Reformation in England, were deemed superstitious, and to secure their application; Shelf. Mortm. 89, 103. The objects enumerated in the statute were, "Relief of aged, impotent and poor people; maintenance of sick and maimed soldiers and mariners, schools of learning, free schools and scholars in universities; repairs of bridges, ports, havens, causeways, churches, seabanks and highways; education and preferment of orphans, relief, stock or maintenance for houses of correction; marriage of poor maids; supportation, aid and help of young tradesmen, handicraftsmen and persons decayed; relief or redemption of prisoners or captives; aid or ease of any poor inhabitants concerning payments of fifteens, setting out of soldiers, and other taxes."

Subsequently it appears that this statute, as a mode of proceeding, fell into disuse, although under its influence and by its mere operation many charities were upheld which would otherwise have been void; Shelf. Mortm. 378, 379, and notes; Gallego's Ex'rs v. Attorney General 3 Leigh (Va.) 470, 24 Am. Dec. 650; Nelson, Lex Test. 137; Boyle, Char. 18 et seq.; 1 Burn, Eccl. Law, 317 a. Under this statute, courts of chancery are empowered to appoint commissioners to superintend the application and enforcement of charities; and if, from any cause, the charity cannot be applied precisely as the testator has declared, such courts exercise the power in some cases of appropriating it, according to the principles indicated in the devise, as near as they can to the purpose expressed. And this is called an application cy pres; 3 Washb. R. P. 614. See Cy Pres.

There is no need of any particular persons or objects being specified; the generality and indefiniteness of the object constituting the charitable character of the donation; Boyle, Char. 23. A charitable use, when neither law nor public policy forbids, may be applied to almost anything that tends to promote the well-doing and well-being of man; Perry, Trusts, § 687.

They embrace gifts to the poor of every class, including poor relations, where the intention is manifest: Soohan v. City of Philadelphia, 33 Pa. 9; Franklin v. Arnfield, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 305; Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 518, 4 L. Ed. 629; Allen v. McKean, 1 Sumn. 276, Fed. Cas. No. 229; Chapin v. School District No. 2, 35 N. H. 445; 7 Ch. D. 714; for the poor of a county, "who by timely assistance may be kept from being carried to the poor house;" State v. Griffith, 2 Del. Ch. 392; Griffith v. State, id. 421; for the poor, though the distribution of the fund is private and to private persons: Bullard v. Chandler, 149 Mass. 532, 21 N. E. 951, 5 L. R. A. 104; for every description of college and school; Stevens v. Shippen, 28 N. J. Eq. 487; City of Cincinnati v. McMicken, 6 Ohio C. C. 188; Dodge v. Williams, 46 Wis. 70, 1 N. W. 92, 50 N. W. 1103; Bedford v. Bedford's Adm'r, 99 Ky. 273, 35 S. W. 926; Handley v. Palmer, 103 Fed. 39, 43 C. C. A. 100; Howe v. Wilson, 91 Mo. 45, 3 S. W. 390, 60 Am. Rep. 226 (that the state provides free education for children will not render a private bequest for the same purpose void; Tincher v. Arnold, 147 Fed. 665, 77 C. C. A. 649, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 471, 8 Ann. Cas. 917); to all institutions for the advancement of the Christian religion; Alexander v. Slavens, 7 B. Monr. (Ky.) 351; Gibson v. Armstrong, 7 B. Monr. (Ky.) 481; White v. Attorney General, 39 N. C. 19, 44 Am. Dec. 92; Appeal of Domestic & Foreign Missionary Society, 30 Pa. 425; to all churches; Inhabitants of Princeton v. Adams, 10 Cush. corporation for charitable uses; Vidal v. Girard, 2 How. (U. S.) 128, 11 L. Ed. 205; Barkley v. Donnelly, 112 Mo. 561, 19 S. W. 305; Skinner v. Harrison Tp., 116 Ind. 139, 18 N. E. 529, 2 L. R. A. 137; and a city may refuse to accept such a bequest; Dailey v. City of New Haven, 60 Conn. 314, 22 Atl. 945, 14 L. R. A. 69.

In determining whether or not a gift is charitable, courts will consider the nature of the gift, rather than the motives of the donor; In re Smith's Estate, 181 Pa. 109, 37 Atl. 114.

When a testator creates a trust which is invalid because it is one which the law will not permit to be carried out, the trust fails; Fairchild v. Edson, 154 N. Y. 199, 48 N. E. 541, 61 Am. St. Rep. 609; Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen (Mass.) 539; Campbell's Heirs v. McArthur, 4 N. C. 557; State v. Griffith, 2 Del. Ch. 392; Zeisweiss v. James, 63 Pa. 465, 3 Am. Rep. 558; De Camp v. Dobbins, 31 N. J. Eq. 671.

A bequest for a religious purpose is prima facie a bequest for a charitable purpose; [1893] 2 Ch. 41. In England bequests for masses for the repose of the testator's soul are void as being for superstitious uses; 2 Drew. 417; 2 Myl. & K. 684. In the United States they have been held good charitable trusts; Petition of Schouler, 134 Mass. 426; Appeal of Seibert, 18 W. N. C. (Pa.) 276; Hoeffler v. Cloghan, 171 Ill. 462, 49 N. E. 527, 40 L. R. A. 730, 63 Am. St. Rep. 241. In New York, though they were held charitable, they were held void for want of a specific legatee; Holland v. Alcock, 108 N. Y. 312, 16 N. E. 305, 2 Am. St. Rep. 420; Gilman v. McArdle, 99 N. Y. 451, 2 N. E. 464. In Alabama the gift was held not charitable; Festorazzi v. Church, 104 Ala. 327, 18 South. 394, 25 L. R. A. 360, 53 Am. St. Rep. 48; so in California; In re Lennon's Estate, 152 Cal. 327, 92 Pac. 870, 125 Am. St. Rep. 58, 14 Ann. Cas. 1024. Such a bequest was upheld, not as a charity, but as an expenditure directed by the testator for services rendered to him; Moran v. Moran, 104 Ia. 216, 73 N. W. 617, 39 L. R. A. 204, 65 Am. St. Rep. 443. It is upheld, not as a charitable, but as a religious use; Appeal of Rhymer's, 93 Pa. 142, 39 Am. Rep. 736. Money given by his followers to the founder of a church constitutes a trust fund; Holmes v. Dowle, 148 Fed. 634. If given "for poor souls," it is a public charity, not being restricted to designated persons; Ackerman v. Fichter (Ind.) 101 N. E. 493.

In Ireland gifts for masses are generally held good charitable bequests; Ir. R. 2 Eq. 321. They were held not to be bequests for any purpose merely charitable, within the exception of a statute imposing a legacy duty; 11 Ir. R. 10 C. L. 104; 21 L. R. Ir. 480. Such a bequest was held not to be an attempt to create a perpetuity; 21 L. R. Ir. 138; but that it is such was held in 25 L. R. Ir. 388; [1896] 1 Ir. 418; and that the gift was void for the want of a definite cestui que trust was held in Ir. R. 11 Eq. 433.

A charitable devise may become void for uncertainty as to the beneficiary; Society of the Most Precious Blood v. Moll, 51 Minn. 277, 53 N. W. 648; Brennan v. Winkler, 37 S. C. 457, 16 S. E. 190; Yingling v. Miller, 77 Md. 104, 26 Atl. 491; Johnson v. Johnson, 92 Tenn. 559, 23 S. W. 114, 22 L. R. A. 179, 36 Am. St. Rep. 104; Simmons v. Burrell, 8 Misc. 388, 28 N. Y. Supp. 625. The decision that the appropriation for the World's Columbian Exposition was a charitable use; U. S. v. Exposition, 56 Fed. 630; was reversed by the circuit court of appeals, which held that, being made for the benefit of a local corporation, it did not constitute a charitable trust, although aiding a great public enterprise; World's Columbian Exposition v. U. S., 56 Fed. 654, 6 C. C. A. 58.

When the purposes of a charity may be best sustained by alienating the specific property bequeathed and investing the proceeds in a different manner, a court of equity has jurisdiction to direct such sale and investment, taking care that no deviation of the gift be permitted; City of Newark v. Stockton, 44 N. J. Eq. 179, 14 Atl. 630; Peter v. Carter, 70 Md. 139, 16 Atl. 450.

Charities in England were formerly interpreted, sustained, controlled, and applied by the court of chancery, in virtue of its general jurisdiction in equity, aided by the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4 and the prerogative of the crown; the latter being exercised by the lord chancellor, as the delegate of the sovereign acting as parens patriæ; Spence, Eq. Jur. 439, 441; Bartlet v. King, 12 Mass. 537, 7 Am. Dec. 99. The subject has since been regulated by various statutes; the Charitable Trusts Act of 1853, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, amended by various subsequent acts down to 1894; Tud. Char. Tr. part iii.; 3d ed. By the Toleration Act, 1 Wm. & M. c. 18, charitable trusts for promoting the religious opinions of Protestant Dissenters have been held valid; 2 Ves. Sen. 273. Roman Catholics share in their benefits; 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 115; and Jews, by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 59, § 2.

The weight of judicial authority in England was in favor of the doctrine which, as will be seen, prevails in this country, that equity exercised an inherent jurisdiction over charitable uses independently of the statute of Elizabeth; that the statute did not create, but was in aid of, the jurisdiction. In support of this conclusion are found such judges as Ld. Ch. Northington, in 1 Eden 10; Amb. 351; Sir Jos. Jekyll, in 2 P. Wms. 119; Ld. Ch. Redesdale, in 1 Bligh 347; Ld. Ch. Hardwicke, in 2 Ves. Sr. 327; Ld. Keeper Finch, in 2 Lev. 167; Ld. Ch. Sugden, in 1 Dr. & W. 258; Ld. Ch. Somers, in 2 Vern. 342; Ld. Ch. Eldon, in 1 Bligh 358, and 7 Ves. 36; Wilmot, C. J., in Wilmot's Notes 24; Ld. Ch. Lyndhurst, in Bligh 335; and Sir John Leach, in 1 Myl. & K. 376.

The stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4 has not been re-enacted or strictly followed in the United States. In some states it has been adopted by usage; but, with several striking exceptions, the decisions of the English Chancery upon trusts for charity have furnished the rule of adjudication in our courts, without particular reference to the fact that the most remarkable of them were only sustainable under the peculiar construction given to certain phrases in the statute; Boyle, Char. 18. The opinion prevailed extensively in this country that the validity of charitable endowments and the jurisdiction of courts of equity in such cases depended upon that statute. In the case of the Baptist Association v. Hart, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 4 L. Ed. 499, the court adopted that view and accepted the conclusion that there was at common law no jurisdiction of charitable uses exercised in chancery, although in afterwards reviewing that decision an effort was made to distinguish the case by the two features that such cases are not recognized by the law of Virginia, where it arose, and that it was a donation to trustees incapable of taking, with beneficiaries uncertain and indefinite; Vidal v. Girard, 2 How. (U. S.) 128, 11 L. Ed. 205. These views were assailed in 1833 by Baldwin, J. (Magill v. Brown, Bright, 346, Fed. Cas. No. 8,952), in 1835 in Burr's Ex'rs v. Smith, 7 Vt. 241, 29 Am. Dec. 154, and in 1844 by Mr. Binney in the Girard will case in Vidal v. Girard, 2 How. (U. S.) 128, 11 L. Ed. 205. In that case there was furnished a memorandum of fifty cases extracted from the then recently published chancery calendars, in which the jurisdiction had been exercised prior to the stat. of 43 Eliz. (2 How. [U. S.] 155, note); and although the accuracy of this list was challenged by Mr. Webster in argument; (id. 179 note), the court, per Story, J., accepted it to "establish, in the most satisfactory and conclusive manner," the conclusion stated. Baldwin, J., also enumerated forty-six cases of the enforcement of such trusts independently of the statute; Magill v. Brown, Bright, 346, Fed. Cas. No. 8,952. The doctrine was fully adopted by the United States supreme court in the Girard will case, and has been since adhered to; Ould v. Hospital, 95 U. S. 304, 24 L. Ed. 450. It is now conceded as settled that courts of equity have an inherent and original jurisdiction over charities, independent of the statute; Perry, Trusts § 694; Tappan v. Deblois, 45 Me. 122; Chambers v. St. Louis, 29 Mo. 543; Paschal v. Acklin, 27 Tex. 173; State v. Griffith, 2 Del. Ch. 392; Griffith v. State, id. 421, 463; Kronshage v. Varrell, 120 Wis. 161, 97 N. W. 928.

In Virginia and New York, that statute, with all its consequences, seems to have been repudiated; Gallego's Ex'rs v. Attorney General, 3 Leigh (Va.) 450, 24 Am. Dec. 650; Cottman v. Grace, 112 N. Y. 299, 19 N. E. 839, 3 L. R. A. 145. So in North Carolina, Connecticut, Maryland, and the District of Columbia; McAuley v. Wilson, 16 N. C. 276, 18 Am. Dec. 587; Griffin v. Graham, 8 N. C. 96, 9 Am. Dec. 619; Bridges v. Pleasants, 39 N. C. 26, 44 Am. Dec. 94; Greene v. Dennis, 6 Conn. 293, 16 Am. Dec. 58; White v. Fisk, 22 Conn. 31; Dashiell v. Attorney General, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 392, 9 Am. Dec. 572; id., 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 1; Wilderman v. Baltimore, 8 Md. 551; Halsey v. Church, 75 Md. 275, 23 Atl. 781; Ould v. Hospital, 95 U. S. 304, 24 L. Ed. 450. In Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont, and perhaps some other states, the English rule is acted on; McCord v. Ochiltree, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 15; Baptist Church v. Church, 18 B. Monr. (Ky.) 635; Beall v. Fox, 4 Ga. 404; Going v. Emery, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 107, 26 Am. Dec. 645; Derby v. Derby, 4 R. I. 414; Fink v. Fink's Ex'rs, 12 La. Ann. 301; Burr's Ex'rs v. Smith, 7 Vt. 241, 29 Am. Dec. 154; Trustees of Philadelphia Baptist Ass'n v. Hart's Ex'rs, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 4 L. Ed. 499; Vidal v. Girard's Ex'rs, 2 How. (U. S.) 127, 11 L. Ed. 205; Perin v. Carey, 24 How. (U. S.) 465, 16 L. Ed. 701; Crerar v. Williams, 145 Ill. 625, 34 N. E. 467, 21 L. R. A. 454. See Gilman v. Hamilton, 16 Ill. 225; Dickson v. Montgomery, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 348. While not in force as a statute in Pennsylvania, it is embodied as to its principles in the common law of that state; Fire Ins. Patrol v. Boyd, 120 Pa. 624, 15 Atl. 553, 1 L. R. A. 417, 6 Am. St. Rep. 745; Dulles's Estate, 218 Pa. 162, 67 Atl. 49, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1177. Connecticut has a substitute statute for that of 43 Eliz., passed in 1684, which is more strict than the English law in that it requires certainty in the person to be benefited or at least a certain and definite class of persons, with an ascertained mode of selecting them; Adge v. Smith, 44 Conn. 60, 26 Am. Rep. 424.

It is said that charitable uses are favorites with courts of equity; the construction of all instruments, when they are concerned, is liberal in their behalf; Ould v. Hospital, 95 U. S. 313, 24 L. Ed. 450; and even the rule against perpetuities is relaxed for their benefit; id.; [1891] 3 Ch. 252; Woodruff v. Marsh, 63 Conn. 125, 26 Atl. 846, 38 Am. St. Rep. 346; Bisph. Eq. § 133; Perin v. Carey, 24 How. (U. S.) 495, 16 L. Ed. 701; Brown v. Baptist Society, 9 R. I. 177; contra, Bascom v. Albertson, 34 N. Y. 584. See also Gray, Perp. § 589. But if a gift to charity is made to depend on a condition precedent, the event must occur within the rule against perpetuities; [1894] 3 Ch. 265; except where the event is the divesting of another charity; [1891] 3 Ch. 252.

An immediate gift to charity is valid, although the particular application of the fund directed by the will may not of necessity take effect within any assignable limit of time, or may never take effect at all, except on the occurrence of events in their essence contingent and uncertain; while on the other hand, a gift in trust for charity which is conditional upon a future and uncertain event is subject to the same rules as any other estate depending on its coming into existence upon a condition precedent; 74 L. J. Ch. 354; [1905] 1 Ch. 669, 92 L. T. 715.

A gift may be made to a charity not in esse at the time; id.; Perry, Trusts § 736; Dodge v. Williams, 46 Wis. 70, 1 N. W. 92, 50 N. W. 1103. See Booth v. Baptist Church, 126 N. Y. 215, 28 N. E. 238; Hayes v. Pratt, 147 U. S. 557, 13 Sup. Ct. 503, 37 L. Ed. 279. And a gift for specific charitable purposes will not fail for want of trustees; Sears v. Chapman, 158 Mass. 400, 33 N. E. 604, 35 Am. St. Rep. 502; Municipality of Ponce v. Roman Catholic Apostolic Church, 210 U. S. 296, 28 Sup. Ct. 737, 52 L. Ed. 1068. See Dammert v. Osborn, 140 N. Y. 30, 35 N. E. 407.

Generally, the rules against accumulations do not apply; Perry, Trusts § 738; Odell v. Odell, 10 Allen (Mass.) 1; City of Philadelphia v. Girard's Heirs, 45 Pa. 9, 84 Am. Dec. 470; as accumulations for charity, for a longer period than is allowed by the rule against perpetuities will be upheld; Brigham v. Hospital, 126 Fed. 796; St. Paul's Church v. Attorney General, 164 Mass. 188, 41 N. E. 231. A bequest of money to be accumulated until the fund, with any additions from other sources, should suffice to pay the state debt, was held void as exceeding the limitation of the rule against remoteness and accumulations; Russell v. Trust Co., 171 Fed. 161.

Where there is no trustee appointed or none capable of acting, the trust will be sustained, and a trustee appointed; 3 Hare 191; Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbor, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 99, 7 L. Ed. 617. In New York a certain designated beneficiary was essential to the creation of a valid trust and the cy pres doctrine formerly was not accepted; see Power v. Cassidy, 79 N. Y. 602, 35 Am. Rep. 550, said to reach the limit of uncertainty in that state, and In re O'Hara's Will, 95 N. Y. 418, 47 Am. Rep. 53, and Holland v. Alcock, 108 N. Y. 312, 16 N. E. 305, 2 Am. St. Rep. 420, commenting on that case and reasserting the general rule in New York as stated; Tilden v. Green, 130 N. Y. 29, 28 N. E. 880, 14 L. R. A. 33, 27 Am. St. Rep. 487; a bequest in which the beneficiary is not designated and the selection thereof is delegated to trustees with complete discretionary power was held invalid, and the uncertainty as to beneficiaries could not be cured by anything done by the trustees to execute it; id.

But by New York Laws of 1893, c. 701, it is provided that if in an instrument creating a gift, grant, devise, or bequest there is a trustee named to execute the same, the legal title to the property shall vest in such trustee, and if no trustee be named, the title shall vest in the supreme court; Bowman v.

Domestic & Foreign Missionary Society, 182 N. Y. 498, 75 N. E. 535; Allen v. Stevens, 161 N. Y. 122, 55 N. E. 568. The effect of this act is to restore the ancient doctrine of charitable uses and trusts as a part of the laws of New York; id.; to confer all power over charitable trusts and trustees on the supreme court and to require the attorney general to represent the beneficiaries in cases within the statute as was the practice in England; Rothschild v. Goldenberg, 58 App. Div. 499, 69 N. Y. Supp. 523.

A testamentary gift for a charity to an unincorporated association afterwards incorporated is sometimes sustained; as when the devise does not vest until after the incorporation; Plymouth Soc. of Milford v. Hepburn, 57 Hun 161, 10 N. Y. Supp. 817; but otherwise the incapacity to take cannot be cured by subsequent incorporation or amendment; Loughheed v. Dykeman's Baptist Church and Soc., 129 N. Y. 211, 29 N. E. 249, 14 L. R. A. 410 and note. A devise to a charity, however, is held valid where future incorporation is provided for or contemplated; id.; Field v. Theological Seminary, 41 Fed. 371; Trustees of Storrs Agricultural School v. Whitney, 54 Conn. 342, 8 Atl. 141; Miller v. Chittenden, 4 Ia. 252; Swasey v. Bible Soc., 57 Me. 523; Burrill v. Boardman, 43 N. Y. 254, 3 Am. Rep. 694; Kinnaird v. Miller's Ex'r, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 107. Under the civil law, a similar rule seems to have prevailed, and gifts for pious uses might be made to a legal entity to be established by the state after the testator's death; Mackeldy, Civ. Law § 157; Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbor, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 100, 7 L. Ed. 617; Milne's Heirs v. Milne's Ex'rs, 17 La. 46; Howe, Studies in the Civil Law 68.

A legacy to a corporation for general corporate purposes is in some cases held to create a trust; De Camp v. Dobbins, 29 N. J. Eq. 36; 1 Dr. & War. 258; President, etc., of Harvard College v. Society, 3 Gray (Mass.) 280; in others not a trust but a gift with conditions annexed as to its expenditure; Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Methodist Episcopal Church v. Mitchell, 93 Md. 199, 48 Atl. 737, 53 L. R. A. 711; In re Griffin's Will, 167 N. Y. 71, 60 N. E. 284; Bird v. Merkle, 144 N. Y. 544, 39 N. E. 645, 27 L. R. A. 423.

A gift to a perpetual institution not charitable is not necessarily bad. The gift is good if it is not subject to any trust that will prevent the existing members of the association from dealing with it as they please, or if it can be construed as a gift to or for the benefit of the individual members of the association. If the gift is one which by the terms of it, or which by reason of the constitution of the association in whose favor it is made, tends to a perpetuity, the gift is bad; 70 L. J. Ch. 631; [1901] 2 Ch. 110.

A gift to a society the object of which was the employment of its funds for mutual benevolences among its members and their families was held not a charitable use under the common law of Pennsylvania or the statute of Elizabeth; Babb v. Reed, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 151, 28 Am. Dec. 650; Swift's Ex'rs v. Society, 73 Pa. 362.

In England a devise or bequest for benevolent purposes is held to be too indefinite and therefore void; 3 Mer. 17; 9 Ves. 399; but though wider than charity in legal significance; Norris v. Thomson's Ex'rs, 19 N. J. Eq. 307; its meaning may be narrowed by the context; De Camp v. Dobbins, 31 N. J. Eq. 695. Any act of kindness, forethought, good will, or friendship may properly be described as benevolent; Suter v. Hilliard, 132 Mass. 413, 42 Am. Rep. 444; and it has been held that whatever may be the meaning of the word when used alone in a bequest in connection with charity, it is synonymous with it; Saltonstall v. Sanders, 11 Allen (Mass.) 446. A fund for providing oysters for benchers at one of the Inns of Court, however benevolent, would hardly be called charitable; [1891] A. C. 580. A gift to an archbishop of property to be used as he "may judge most conducive to the good of religion in this diocese," is not a gift for "religious purposes" and is invalid; 106 L. T. 394 (P. C.). A bequest to executors to distribute the property among benevolent objects is not too indefinite to be permitted to stand; Dulles's Estate, 218 Pa. 162, 67 Atl. 49, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1177.

Legacies to pious or charitable uses are not, by the law of England, entitled to a preference in distribution; although such was the doctrine of the civil law. Nor are they in the United States, except by special statutes.

In jurisdictions which have adopted the statute of uses, or which accept the doctrine of original jurisdiction in equity, trusts otherwise valid, especially when in aid of religious, educational, or charitable objects, are not void because of lack of corporate capacity in the beneficiary; Appeal of Evangelical Ass'n, 35 Pa. 316; Conklin v. Davis, 63 Conn. 377, 28 Atl. 537; Tappan v. Déblois, 45 Me. 122; Lewis v. Curnutt, 130 Ia. 423, 106 N. W. 914; Burbank v. Whitney, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 146, 35 Am. Dec. 312; Parker v. Cowell, 16 N. H. 149; Mason's Ex'rs v. M. E. Church, 27 N. J. Eq. 47.

In Evangelical Ass'n's Appeal, supra, it was held that a bequest to an unincorporated religious society, not upon any defined charity, or for any specified charitable use, was valid; in such case it is necessary only to name the legatee; such a society can take without any direction that the legacy (or gift) should be expended for charity purposes; its own character determines the character of the gift. Strong, J. (a great authority on this law), in delivering the opinion of the court, cited 3 Russ. 142, where it was held that in a bequest to a purely charitable corporation the court will decree payment without requiring that a scheme be settled for its distribution; also, 1 Sim. & Stu. 43, where a legacy to an unincorporated charitable institution, to become part of its general funds, was upheld. See also Burr's Ex'rs v. Smith, 7 Vt. 241, 29 Am. Dec. 154. He also cited with disapproval the statement to the contrary in 1 Jarm. Wills 193. The case also held that it makes no difference that the members of such society are largely non-residents.

A devise for the benefit of an unincorporated association of individuals unnamed, which may increase and add to its number, or lose by death or withdrawal, and the membership of which is not known, and is indeterminate, is held void for uncertainty; Miller v. Ahrens, 150 Fed. 644. In jurisdictions in which the statute of Elizabeth is not a part of the existing laws, only incorporated bodies can take charitable bequests; Mount v. Tuttle, 183 N. Y. 358, 76 N. E. 873, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 428; Kain v. Gibboney, 101 U. S. 362, 25 L. Ed. 813 (where the opinion was also by Strong, J., then a member of that court); Fifield v. Van Wyck, 94 Va. 557, 27 S. E. 446, 64 Am. St. Rep. 745; Lane v. Eaton, 69 Minn. 141, 71 N. W. 1031, 38 L. R. A. 669, 65 Am. St. Rep. 559; Rhodes v. Rhodes, 88 Tenn. 637, 13 S. W. 590.

Where the association is not charitable, the gift is void within the doctrine of Morice v. Bishop of Durham, 9 Ves. 399: "There can be no trust over the exercise of which this court will not assume a control; for an uncontrollable power of disposition would be ownership, not trust. If there be a clear trust, but for uncertain objects, the property that is the subject of the trust is undisposed of; and the benefit of such trust must result to those to whom the law gives the ownership in default of disposition by the owner. But this doctrine does not hold good with regard to trusts for charity. Every other trust must have a definite object. There must be somebody in whose favor the court can decree a performance." This doctrine was applied where the gift was for the use and benefit of a convent, not charitable but religious; 11 L. R. Ir. 236; to an individual with the condition that he spend his time in retirement and constant devotion; L. R. 12 Eq. 574.

Where a statute declares void a gift by will to a charity if made within less than 30 days of the death, a gift to a trust company to take effect if a legacy to charities should be void under the act, was held void because it was clearly made to carry out the bequest to the charities designated in the will; In re Stirk's Estate, 232 Pa. 98, 81 Atl. 187.

Usually a charitable corporation is not liable in damages for personal injuries resulting from the torts of its officers and agents; Abston v. Academy, 118 Tenn. 24, 102 S. W. 351, 11 L. R. A. (N. But a public charitable reformatory is held liable to one whom it imprisons against her consent and without lawful authority; Gallon v. House of Good Shepherd, 158 Mich. 361, 122 N. W. 631, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 286, 133 Am. St. Rep. 387; a hospital is not exempt from liability for negligent injury to an employee merely because it was founded by property given for charitable purposes; Hewett v. Hospital, 73 N. H. 556, 64 Atl. 190, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496. So a hospital which is an adjunct to a medical school and conducted for profit is liable for negligent injury to an employee; University of Louisville v. Hammock, 127 Ky. 564, 106 S. W. 219, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 784, 128 Am. St. Rep. 355; as is one maintained by a railroad company for its employees to which they are obliged to contribute; Phillips v. R. Co., 211 Mo. 419, 111 S. W. 109, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.)

1167, 124 Am. St. Rep. 786, 14 Ann. Cas. 742; and a religious corporation is liable to one injured in repairing its property, through the negligence of its servants in furnishing unsafe scaffolding; Bruce v. Central M. E. Church, 147 Mich. 230, 110 N. W. 951, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 74, 11 Ann. Cas. 150. Its property cannot be sold under execution on a judgment rendered for the nonfeasance, misfeasance or malfeasance of its agents or trustees; Fordyce v. Ass'n, 79 Ark. 550, 96 S. W. 155, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 485.

A religious or charitable corporation is not exempt from liability for negligent injury to one coming upon its premises to perform service for it; Hordern v. Salvation Army, 199 N. Y. 233, 92 N. E. 626, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 62, 139 Am. St. Rep. 889; Kellogg v. Church Charity Foundation, 203 N. Y. 191, 96 N. E. 406, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 481, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 883; *Mulchey v. A. 372; but such corporation is not liable for the negligent injury to a beneficiary by one of its servants; Gable v. Sisters of St. Francis, 227 Pa. 254, 75 Atl. 1087, 136 Am. St. Rep. 879; Parks v. Northwestern University, 218 Ill. 381, 75 N. E. 991, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 556, 4 Ann. Cas. 103; McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. A. 372; though the beneficiary be a patient in a hospital paying for the treatment received; nor will an inmate of a reform school be permitted to recover from the institution; Corbett v. Industrial School, 177 N. Y. 16, 68 N. E. 997; nor is such corporation liable where an inmate who partly pays for his care by work is killed in the course of it while directed by a competent servant; Cunningham v. Sheltering Arms, 61 Misc. 501, 115 N. Y. Supp. 576.

See FOREIGN CHARITIES; CY PRES; PERPETUITIES.

CHARTA. A charter or deed in writing. Any signal or token by which an estate was held.

CHARTA CHYROGRAPHATA. An indenture. The two parts were written on the same sheet, and the word chyrograph written between them in such a manner as to divide the word in the separation of the two parts of the indenture.

CHARTA COMMUNIS. An indenture.

CHARTA PARTITA. A charter-party.

CHARTA DE UNA PARTE. A deed poll. A deed of one part.

Formerly this phrase was used to distinguish a deed poll—which is an agreement made by one party only; that is, only one of the parties does any act which is binding upon him—from a deed inter partes. Co. Litt. 229. See DEED POLL.

CHARTA DE FORESTA (written Carta de Foresta). A collection of the laws of the forest, made in the reign of Hen. III.

The charta de foresta was called the Great Charter of the woodland population, nobles, barons, freemen, and slaves, loyally granted by Henry III. early in his reign (A. D. 1217). Inderwick, King's Peace 159; Stubb's Charters 847. There is a difference of opinion as to the original charter of the forest similar to that which exists respecting the true and original Magna Carta (q. v.), and for the same reason, viz., that both required repeated confirmation by the kings, despite their supposed inviolability. This justifies the remark of recent historians as to the great charter that "this theoretical sanctity and this practical insecurity are shared with 'the Great Charter of Liberties' by the Charter of the Forest which was issued in 1217." 1 Poll. & Matl. 158. It is asserted with great positiveness by Inderwick that no forest charter was ever granted by King John, but that Henry III. issued the charter of 1217 (which he puts in the third year of the reign, which, however, only commenced Oct. 28, 1216), in pursuance of the promises of his father; and Lord Coke, referring to it as a charter on which the lives and liberties of the woodland population depended, says that it was confirmed at least thirty times between the death of John and that of Henry V.; 4 Co. Inst. 303.

Webster, under the title Magna Charta, says that the name is applied to the charter granted in the 9th Hen. III. and confirmed by Edw. I. Prof. Maitland, in speaking of Magna Carta, refers to "the sister-charter which defined the forest law" as one of the four documents which, at the death of Henry III., comprised the written law of England. 1 Soc. England 410. Edward I. in 1297 confirmed "the charter made by the common consent of all the realm in the time of Henry III. to be kept in every point without breach." Inderwick, King's Peace 160; Stubb's Charters 486. The Century Dictionary refers to this latter charter of Edw. I. as the Charter of the Forest; but it was, as already shown, only a confirmation of it, and a comparison of the authorities leaves little if any doubt that the date was as above stated and the history as here given. Its provisions may be found in Stubb's Charters and they are summarized by Inderwick, in his recent work above cited. See FOREST LAWS.

CHARTEL. A challenge to single combat. Used at the period when trial by single combat existed. Cowell.

CHARTER. A grant made by the sovereign either to the whole people or to a portion of them, securing to them the enjoyment of certain rights. 1 Story, Const. § 161; 1 Bla. Com. 108.

A charter differs from a constitution in this, that the former is granted by the sovereign, while the latter is established by the people themselves: both are the fundamental law of the land.

A deed. The written evidence of things done between man and man. Cowell. Any conveyance of lands. Any sealed instrument. Spelman. See Co. Litt. 6; 1 Co. 1; F. Moore 687.

An act of a legislature creating a corporation.

The charter of a corporation consists of its articles of incorporation taken in connection with the law under which it was organized; Chicago Open Board of Trade v. Bldg. Co., 136 Ill. App. 606.

The name is ordinarily applied to government grants of powers or privileges of a permanent or continuous nature, such as incorporation, territorial dominion or jurisdiction. Between private persons it is also loosely applied to deeds and instruments under seal for the conveyance of lands. Cent. Dict.

It is to be strictly construed; Rockland Water Co. v. Water Co., 80 Me. 544, 15 Atl. 785, 1 L. R. A. 388; Oregon, R. & Nav. Co. v. Ry. Co., 130 U. S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 409, 32 L. Ed. 837; East Line & R. R. Ry. Co. v. Rushing, 69 Tex. 306, 6 S. W. 834. The reservation by the legislature of power to repeal a charter cannot give authority to take away or destroy property lawfully acquired or created under the charter; People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 18 N. E. 692, 2 L. R. A. 255, 7 Am. St. Rep. 684. A charter may be taken under the power of eminent domain; Appeal of Philadelphia & Gray's Ferry Pass. R. Co., 102 Pa. 123. See FORFEITURE.

As to the power of the state to alter, amend or repeal a charter, see IMPAIRING OBLIGATIONS OF A CONTRACT.

The early history of the genesis of the corporation, particularly of municipal corporations, is elaborated in a paper by A. M. Eaton in Am. Bar. Ass'n Rep. (1902) 292, 322, in which it is said: "The facts of history now known, and many of which were unknown to Coke, show that charters were granted by lords of manors, lay and spiritual, as well as by kings holding manors as of their own demesne and not acting in the exercise of any royal prerogative, to towns and boroughs confirming the continued enjoyment of 'liberties' in the future as they had already been long enjoyed in the past. Sometimes additional new 'liberties' were added, and afterwards similar brand-new charters were granted, relating only to future enjoyment of such 'liberties' similar to those already long enjoyed by the old towns and boroughs. In return for these grants the townspeople agreed at first, each one severally, to render his feudal dues (or rent in place thereof); then a group of the principal townsmen or burghers became responsible for the whole sum, and finally the town itself became thus liable for the fee-farm rent. There was no intention on either part to form a corporation, indeed neither knew what a corporation was; for the name did not exist, but the thing itself was being gradually evolved."

BLANK CHARTER. A document given to the agents of the crown in the reign of Richard II., with power to fill up as they pleased.

CHARTER OF PARDON. In English Law. An instrument under the great seal by which a pardon is granted to a man for a felony or other offence. Black, L. Dict.

See FRANCHISE.

CHARTER-LAND. In English Law. Land formerly held by deed under certain rents and free services. It differed in nothing from free socage land; and it was also called bookland. 2 Bla. Com. 90.

CHARTER-PARTY. A contract of affreightment, by which the owner of a ship or other vessel lets the whole or a part of her to a merchant or other person for the conveyance of goods, on a particular voyage, in consideration of the payment of freight.

The term is derived from the fact that the contract which bears this name was formerly written on a card (charta-partita), and afterwards the card was cut into two parts from top to bottom and one part was delivered to each of the parties, which was produced when required, and by this means counterfeits were prevented. Abb. Ship. 175; Pothier, Traité de Charte-partie, gives this explanation taken from Boerlus: "It was formerly usual in England and Aquitaine to reduce contracts into writing on a chart, divided afterwards into two parts from top to bottom, of which each of the contracting parties took one, which they placed together and compared when they had occasion to know the terms of their contract."

It is in writing not generally under seal, in modern usage; 1 Pars. Adm. & Sh. 270; In re Cloherty, 2 Wash. 145, 27 Pac. 1064; Brown v. Ralston, 4 Rand. (Va.) 504; but may be by parol; Ben. Adm. 287; Taggard v. Loring, 16 Mass. 336, 8 Am. Dec. 140; Muggridge v. Eveleth, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 233; The Phebe, Ware 263, Fed. Cas. No. 11,064; The Tribune, 3 Sumn. 144, Fed. Cas. No. 14,171. It should contain, first, the name and tonnage of the vessel; see Johnson v. Miln, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 195; Ashburner v. Balchen, 7 N. Y. 262; second, the name of the captain; 2 B. & Ald. 421; third, the names of the vessel-owner and the freighter; fourth, the place and time agreed upon for the loading and discharge; fifth, the price of the freight; Kleine v. Catara, 2 Gall. 61, Fed. Cas. No. 7,869; sixth, the demurrage or indemnity in case of delay; 9 C. & P. 709; Clendaniel v. Tuckerman, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 189; Lacombe v. Waln, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 299; Brown v. Ralston, 9 Leigh (Va.) 532; Towle v. Kettell, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 18; seventh, such other conditions as the parties may agree upon; 13 East 343; Bee 124. The owner who signs a charter-party impliedly warrants that the vessel is commanded by competent officers; Tebo v. Jordan, 67 Hun 392, 22 N. Y. Supp. 156. One of the conditions implied in a charter-party is that the vessel will commence the voyage with reasonable diligence; waiting four months violates the contract; Olsen v. Hunter-Benn & Co., 54 Fed. 530.

It may either provide that the charterer hires the whole capacity and burden of the vessel,—in which case it is in its nature a contract whereby the owner agrees to carry a cargo which the charterer agrees to provide,—or it may provide for an entire surrender of the vessel to the charterer, who then hires her as one hires a house, and takes possession in such a manner as to have the rights and incur the liabilities which grow out of possession. See 8 Ad. & E. 835; Palmer v. Gracie, 4 Wash. C. C. 110, Fed. Cas. No. 10,692; Hooe v. Groverman, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 214, 2 L. Ed. 86; Lyman v. Redman, 23 Me. 289; Clarkson v. Edes, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 470; The Volunteer, 1 Sumn. 551, Fed. Cas. No. 16,991; Ruggles v. Bucknor, 1 Paine 358, Fed. Cas. No. 12,115. If the object sought can be conveniently accomplished without a transfer of the vessel, the courts will not be inclined to consider the contract as a demise of the vessel; U. S. v. Ed. 220; Work v. Leathers, 97 U. S. 379, 24 L. Ed. 1012.

When a ship is chartered, this instrument serves to authenticate many of the facts on which the proof of her neutrality must rest, and should therefore be always found on board chartered ships; 1 Marsh. Ins. 407.

Unqualified charter-parties are to be construed liberally as mercantile contracts, and one who has thereby charged himself with an obligation must make it good unless prevented by the act of God, the law, or the other party; The B. F. Bruce, 50 Fed. 118. A charter-party controls a bill of lading in case of conflict between them; Ardan S. S. Co. v. Theband, 35 Fed. 620. In construing a charter-party, matter expunged from a printed form may be considered in determining the intention of the parties; One Thousand Bags of Sugar v. Harrison, 53 Fed. 828, 4 C. C. A. 34. See INTERPRETATION. Quarantine regulations which interfere with the charter engagements of a vessel are fairly within the clause excepting liability for results caused by restraints of successor; The Progreso, 50 Fed. 835, 2 C. C. A. 45.

CHARTERED ACCOUNTANT. See AUDITOR.

CHARTIS REDDENDIS (Lat. for returning charters). A writ which lay against one who had charters of feoffment intrusted to his keeping, which he refused to deliver. Reg. Orig. 159. It is now obsolete.

CHASE. The liberty or franchise of hunting, oneself, and keeping protected against all other persons, beasts of the chase within a specified district, without regard to the ownership of the land. 2 Bla. Com. 414.

The district within which such privilege is to be exercised.

A chase is a franchise granted to a subject, and hence is not subject to the forest laws; 2 Bla. Com. 38. It differs from a park, because it may be another's ground, and is not enclosed. It is said by some to be smaller than a forest and larger than a park. Termes de la Ley. But this seems to be a customary incident, and not an essential quality.

The act of acquiring possession of animals feræ naturæ by force, cunning, or address.

The hunter acquires a right to such animals by occupancy, and they become his property; 4 Toulhier, n. 7. No man has a right to enter on the lands of another for the purpose of hunting, without his consent; 14 East 249; Pothier, Propriété, pt. 1, c. 2, a. 2.

CHASTE. In the seduction statutes it means actual virtue in conduct and principle. One who falls from virtue and afterwards reforms is chaste within the meaning of the statutes; Wood v. State, 48 Ga. 288, 15 Am. Rep. 664; Andre v. State, 5 Ia. 389, 68 Am. Dec. 708; Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 603; Boyce v. People, 55 N. Y. 644; Wilson v. State, 73 Ala. 527.

CHASTITY. That virtue which prevents the unlawful commerce of the sexes.

A woman may defend her chastity by killing her assailant. See SELF-DEFENCE.

Sending a letter to a married woman soliciting her to commit adultery is an indictable offence; State v. Avery, 7 Conn. 266, 18 Am. Dec. 105. See Shannon v. Com., 14 Pa. 226. In England, and perhaps elsewhere, the mere solicitation of chastity is not indictable; 2 Chit. Pr. 478. Words charging a woman with a violation of chastity are actionable in themselves, because they charge her with a crime punishable by law, and of a character to degrade and disgrace her, and exclude her from society; Frisbie v. Fowler, 2 Conn. 707; Brown v. Nickerson, 5 Gray (Mass.) 2; Heard, Lib. & Sl. § 36; Brooker v. Coffin, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 190, 4 Am. Dec. 337; Gosling v. Morgan, 32 Pa. 275; but not so in the District of Columbia; Pollard v. Lyon, 91 U. S. 225, 23 L. Ed. 308. See LIBEL; PROMISE OF MARRIAGE.

CHATTEL (Norm. Fr. goods, of any kind). Every species of property, movable or immovable, which is less than a freehold.

In the Grand Coutumier of Normandy it is described as a mere movable, but is set in opposition to a fief or feud; so that not only goods, but whatever was not a feud or fee, were accounted chattels; and it is in this latter sense that our law adopts it. 2 Bla. Com. 235.

Real chattels are interests which are annexed to or concern real estate: as, a lease for years of land. And the duration of the lease is immaterial, whether it be for one or a thousand years, provided there be a certainty about it and a reversion or remainder in some other person. A lease to continue until a certain sum of money can be raised out of the rents is of the same description; and so in fact will be found to be any other interest in real estate whose duration is limited to a time certain beyond which it cannot subsist, and which is, therefore, something less than a freehold. A lease giving the exclusive privilege for a term of years of boring and digging for oil and other minerals is also a chattel; Brown v. Beecher, 120 Pa. 590, 15 Atl. 608.

Personal chattels are properly things movable, which may be carried about by the owner; such as animals, household stuff, money, jewels, corn, garments, and everything else that can be put in motion and transferred from one place to another; 2 Kent 340; Co. Litt. 48 a; 4 Co. 6; In re Gay, 5 Mass. 419; Brewster v. Hill, 1 N. H. 350.

Chattels, whether real or personal, are treated as personal property in every respect, and, in case of the death of the owner, usually belong to the executor or administrator, and not to the heir at law. There are some chattels, however, which, as Chancellor Kent observes, though they be movable, yet are necessarily attached to the freehold: contributing to its value and enjoyment, they go along with it in the same path of descent or alienation. This is the case with seeds, and other papers which constitute the muniments of title to the inheritance; the shelves and family pictures in a house; and the posts and rails of an enclosure. It is also understood that pigeons in a pigeon-house, deer in a park, and fish in an artificial pond go with the inheritance, as heirlooms to the heir at law. But fixtures, or such things of a personal nature as are attached to the realty, whether for a temporary purpose or otherwise, become chattels, or not, according to circumstances; Mitch. R. P. 21. See FIXTURES; 2 Kent 342; Co. Litt. 20 a, 118; 12 Price 163; 11 Co. 50 b; Bacon, Abr. Baron, etc. C, 2; Dane, Abr. Index; Com. Dig. Biens, A.

CHATTEL INTEREST. An interest in corporeal hereditaments less than a freehold. 2 Kent 342.

There may be a chattel interest in real property, as in case of a lease; Stearns, Real Act. 115. A term for years, no matter of how long duration, is but a chattel interest, unless declared otherwise by statute. The subject is treated in 1 Washburn, R. P. 310.

CHATTEL MORTGAGE. A transfer of personal property as security for a debt or obligation in such form that upon failure of the mortgagor to comply with the terms of the contract, the title to the property will be in the mortgagee. Thomas, Mort. 427.

An absolute pledge, to become an absolute interest if not redeemed at a fixed time. Cortelyou v. Lansing, 2 Caines, Cas. (N. Y.) 200, per Kent, Ch.

Strictly speaking, a conditional sale of a chattel as security for the payment of a debt or the performance of some other obligation. Jones, Chat. Mort. § 1. The condition is that the sale shall be void upon the performance of the condition named. If the condition be not performed, the chattel is irredeemable at law; but it may be otherwise in equity or by statute; id. The title is fully vested in the mortgagee and can be defeated only by the due performance of the condition; upon a breach, the mortgagee may take possession and treat the chattel as his own; id.; Porter v. Parmly, 34 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 398. See Flanders v. Thomas, 12 Wis. 413.

At common law a chattel mortgage may be made without writing; it is valid as between the parties; Bank of Rochester v. Jones, 4 N. Y. 497, 55 Am. Dec. 290. A verbal chattel mortgage is valid between the parties; Gilbert v. Vail, 60 Vt. 261, 14 Atl. 542; Stearns v. Gafford, 56 Ala. 544; Bardwell v. Roberts, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 433; Bates v. Wiggins, 37 Kan. 44, 14 Pac. 442, 1 Am. St. Rep. 234; Carroll Exch. Bank v. Bank, 50 Mo. App. 92; and as to third parties with notice; Sparks v. Wilson, 22 Neb. 112, 34 N. W. 111; contra, Lazarus v. Bank, 72 Tex. 359, 10 S. W. 252; Knox v. Wilson, 77 Ala. 309; and even as against third parties if accompanied by possession in the mortgagee; Bardwell v. Roberts, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 433; but delivery is not essential in all cases to the validity of a chattel mortgage; Morrow v. Turney's Adm'r, 35 Ala. 131; but see Bardwell v. Roberts, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 433. It differs from a pledge in that in case of a mortgage the title is vested in the mortgagee, subject to defeasance upon the performance of the condition; while in the case of a pledge, the title remains in the pledgor, and the pledgee holds the possession for the purposes of the bailment; White v. Cole, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 116; Conner v. Carpenter, 28 Vt. 237; Day v. Swift, 48 Me. 368; Heyland v. Badger, 35 Cal. 404; Badlam v. Tucker, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 389, 11 Am. Dec. 202; Sims v. Canfield, 2 Ala. 555. By a mortgage the title is transferred; by a pledge, the possession; Jones, Mort. § 4.

Upon default, in cases of pledge, the pledgor may recover the chattel upon tendering the amount of the debt secured; but in case of a mortgage, upon default the chattel, at law, belongs to the mortgagee; Porter v. Parmly, 43 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 445. In equity he may be held liable to an account; Stoddard v. Denison, 38 id. 296. Apart from statutes, no special form is required for the creation of a chattel mortgage. A bill of sale absolute in form, with a separate agreement of defeasance, constitute together a mortgage, as between the parties; Carpenter v. Snelling, 97 Mass. 452; Taber v. Hamlin, 97 Mass. 489, 93 Am. Dec. 113; Davis v. Hubbard, 38 Ala. 185; Polhemus v. Trainer, 30 Cal. 685; Soell v. Hadden, 85 Tex. 182, 19 S. W. 1087; State v. Bell, 2 Mo. App. 102; or a note with an endorsement on the back that at any time the maker agreed to make a chattel mortgage; Riddle v. Norris, 46 Mo. App. 512. And in equity, the defeasance may be subsequently executed; Locke's Ex'r v. Palmer, 26 Ala. 312. A parol defeasance is not good in law; Harper v. Ross, 10 Allen (Mass.) 332; Bryant v. Crosby, 36 Me. 562, 58 Am. Dec. 767; Montany v. Rock, 10 Mo. 506; contra, Fuller v. Parrish, 3 Mich. 211; but it is in equity; Coe v. Cassidy, 72 N. Y. 133; Laeber v. Langhor, 45 Md. 477; Stokes v. Hollis, 43 Ga. 262; National Ins. Co. v. Webster, 83 Ill. 470; Bartel v. Lope, 6 Or. 321; Hurford v. Harned, 6 Or. 363; even as to third parties with notice; Omaha Book Co. v. Sutherland, 10 Neb. 334, 6 N. W. 367. See Conway v. Iron Co., 33 Neb. 454, 50 N. W. 326. The question whether a bill of sale was intended as a chattel mortgage is for the jury; King v. Greaves, 51 Mo. App. 534.

In a conditional sale, the purchaser has merely a right to purchase, and no debt or obligation exists on the part of the vendor; this distinguishes such a sale from a mortgage; Weathersly v. Weathersly, 40 Miss. 462, 90 Am. Dec. 344; Gomez v. Kamping, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 77.

Where there is an absolute sale and a simultaneous agreement of resale, the tendency is to consider the transaction a mortgage; Barnes v. Holcomb, 12 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 306; Fowler v. Stoneum, 11 Tex. 478, 62 Am. Dec. 490; Folsom v. Fowler, 15 Ark. 280; but not when the intention of the parties is clearly otherwise; Forkner v. Stuart, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 197; Bracken v. Chaffin, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 575.

It is not necessary that a written chattel mortgage should be under seal; Gerrey v. White, 47 Me. 504; Sherman v. Fitch, 98 Mass. 59; Ping. Chat. Mort. 45; Gibson v. Warden, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 244, 20 L. Ed. 797; Sweetzer v. Mead, 5 Mich. 107.

A chattel mortgage of a crop must designate the land; W. L. Hurley & Sons v. Ray, 160 N. C. 376, 76 S. E. 234.

At common law a mortgage can be given only of chattels actually in existence, and belonging to the mortgagor actually or potentially; Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. H. 484; Roy v. Goings, 6 Ill. App. 162; Looker v. Peckwell, 38 N. J. L. 253; Williams v. Briggs, 11 R. I. 476, 23 Am. Rep. 518; Cook v. Corthell, 11 R. I. 482, 23 Am. Rep. 518; Bouton v. Haggart, 6 Dak. 32, 50 N. W. 197; and even though the mortgagor may afterwards acquire title, the mortgage is bad against subsequent purchasers and creditors; but it is otherwise between the parties; Ludwig v. Kipp, 20 Hun (N. Y.) 265; claims for money not yet earned may be the subject of a chattel mortgage; Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Robinson, 83 Ia. 567, 49 N. W. 1031, 14 L. R. A. 126, and an elaborate note thereto.

In equity the rule is different; the mortgage, though not good as a conveyance, is valid as an executory agreement; the mortgagor is considered as a trustee for the mortgagee; Williams v. Briggs, 11 R. I. 476, 23 Am. Rep. 518; 10 H. L. Cas. 191; Mitchell v. Winslow, 2 Sto. 630, Fed. Cas. No. 9,673; Beall v. White, 94 U. S. 382, 24 L. Ed. 173; Schuelenburg & Boeckler v. Martin, 2

Fed. 747; Ellett v. Butt, 1 Woods, 214, Fed. Cas. No. 4384; Perry v. White, 111 N. C. 197, 16 S. E. 172. But see Moody v. Wright, 13 Mete. (Mass.) 17, 46 Am. Dec. 706; Hunter v. Rosworth, 43 Wis. 583. Under this principle all sorts of future interests in chattels may be mortgaged; Jones, Chat. Mort. § 174.

The crops of specified land or the future young of animals could at one time be sold or mortgaged on the ground that seller had potential possession and passed legal title; 110b. 132, but the English Sale of Goods Act, § 5, provides that where by a contract of sale the seller purports to effect a present sale of future goods, the contract operates as an agreement to sell goods. No exception is made in favor of property which at common law was the subject of potential possession. This seems to change the rule in England. The mere agreement to mortgage personally subsequently to be acquired gave the mortgagee a lien upon the property; 10 H. L. Cas. 191; [1903] 2 K. B. 367. It is essential that the mortgagee shall have actually advanced his money; 13 App. Cas. 523.

Mortgages of future acquired chattels where the mortgagor is in possession are held invalid against an attachment or levy by creditors; American Surety Co. v. Mfg. Co., 100 Fed. 40; Tatman v. Humphrey, 184 Mass. 361, 68 N. E. 844, 63 L. R. A. 738, 100 Am. St. Rep. 562; Francisco v. Ryan, 54 Ohio St. 307, 43 N. E. 1045, 56 Am. St. Rep. 711; Girard Trust Co. v. Mellor, 156 Pa. 579, 27 Atl. 662; contra, Riddle v. Dow, 98 Ia. 7, 66 N. W. 1066, 32 L. R. A. 811; Cunningham v. Woolen Mills, 69 N. J. Eq. 710, 61 Atl. 372. The general rule is that a chattel mortgagee has title, and so a mortgage on animals covers the increase, though not mentioned in the mortgage on the property, partus sequitur ventrem; Northwestern Nat. Bank v. Freeman, 171 U. S. 620, 19 Sup. Ct. 36, 43 L. Ed. 307; but in those states where such a mortgage gives only a lien, then it is limited to the property actually described; Demers v. Graham, 36 Mont. 402, 93 Pac. 268, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 431, 122 Am. St. Rep. 384, 13 Ann. Cas. 97; contra, First Nat. Bank v. Investment Co., 86 Tex. 636, 26 S. W. 488. See 19 Harv. L. Rev. 557, by Samuel Williston.

A chattel mortgage on growing crops, given as security for a note and for future advances and merchandise sold, is valid; Souza v. Lucas (Cal.) 100 Pac. 115.

The registration statutes simply provide a substitute for change of possession. Between the parties, a change of possession is unnecessary; if there is a change of possession, registration is not required; Morrow v. Reed, 30 Wis. 81; Janvrin v. Fogg, 49 N. H. 340; Fordice v. Gibson, 129 Ind. 7, 28 N. E. 303. At common law an unrecorded chattel mortgage is prima facie fraudulent and void as to creditors, where there is no change of possession, but such presumption may be rebutted; Pyeatt v. Powell, 51 Fed. 551, 2 C. C. A. 367; Frankhouser v. Worrall, 51 Kan. 404, 32 Pac. 1097; See Frost v. Mott, 34 N. Y. 253; Kleine v. Katzenberger, 20 Ohio St. 110, 5 Am. Rep. 630.

Possession by the mortgagee cures defects in the form of the mortgage, or its execution; Springer v. Lipsis, 209 Ill. 261, 70 N. E. 641; Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Orme, 5 Ariz. 304, 52 Pac. 473; so of defects in acknowledgment when possession is taken before a third party's lien attaches; Garner v. Wright, 52 Ark. 385, 12 S. W. 785, 6 L. R. A. 715; and so as to the affidavit accompanying the mortgage; Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. O'Marr, 18 Mont. 568, 46 Pac. 809, 47 Pac. 4; and as to any insufficiency in the description of the chattels; Frost v. Bank, 68 Wis. 234, 32 N. W. 110; Kelley v. Andrews, 102 Ia. 119, 71 N. W. 251. But if the mortgage is not recorded and is thereby invalid, it is not validated by the mortgagee's possession as to the mortgagor's creditors whose debts were created or whose rights attached after execution and before possession taken; In re Bothe, 173 Fed. 597, 97 C. C. A. 547; Stephens v. Perrine, 143 N. Y. 476, 39 N. E. 11. Where the mortgagee takes contemporaneous possession and retains it, recording is not essential; Fordice v. Gibson, 129 Ind. 7, 28 N. E. 303; Brockway v. Abbott, 37 Wash. 263, 79 Pac. 924; and, though not recorded, a chattel mortgage is good against all the world if, after condition broken, the mortgagee takes possession; Garrison v. Carpet Co., 21 Okl. 643, 97 Pac. 978, 129 Am. St. Rep. 799.

A mortgage not filed under the statute is good against a subsequent bill of sale made by the mortgagor after the mortgagee was in possession; Smith v. Connor (Tex.) 46 S. W. 267. So of a subsequent chattel mortgage made by the mortgagor; National Bank of Metropolis v. Sprague, 21 N. J. Eq. 530; and an attachment subsequently levied against the mortgagor; Baldwin v. Flash, 59 Miss. 61; Isenberg v. Fansler, 36 Kan. 402, 13 Pac. 573.

The English Bill of Sales Acts only required written chattel mortgages to be recorded, but they need not be written. The mortgage statutes on recording are collected in Jones, Chattel Mortgages, § 190 et seq. Some make the mortgagor's place of residence the place of record; others the place where the property is situated at the time; others require them to be refiled every year, and so on. In general, innocent third parties will prevail over the holder of a chattel mortgage or conditional bill of sale, unless the instrument has been recorded or the goods have been delivered; Funk v. Paul, 64 Wis. 35, 24 N. W. 419, 54 Am. Rep. 576. As a general rule, where a judgment is not a lien upon personal property, a mortgage recorded after judgment, but before execution, has priority; Jones, Chatt. Mortg. § 245d. It is held that where a mortgage is not recorded nor possession taken by the mortgagee, it is good as against general, but not judgment, creditors; Stephens v. Meriden Britannia Co., 160 N. Y. 180, 54 N. E. 781, 73 Am. St. Rep. 678. A mortgagee who has not taken possession or recorded his mortgage immediately cannot protect himself against the mortgagor's creditors; Roe v. Meding, 53 N. J. Eq. 350, 30 Atl. 587, 33 Atl. 394.

An unrecorded chattel mortgage is valid against a general assignment by the mortgagor for his creditors; Jones, Chatt. Mortg. § 244; but is invalid as to a receiver of the mortgagor because he represents creditors; In re Wilcox & Howe Co., 70 Conn. 220, 39 Atl. 163; Fidelity Trust Co. v. Clay Co., 70 N. J. Eq. 550, 67 Atl. 1078 (there being creditors whose debts are a lien upon the chattels); contra; Berlinc Machine Works v. Trust Co., 60 Minn. 161, 61 N. W. 1131; Ryder v. Ryder, 19 R. I. 188, 32 Atl. 919.

Where statutes provide that a mortgage of chattels shall be void unless the mortgage is filed or there shall be an actual and continued change of possession, it is essential that such provisions be strictly complied with; Buckstaff Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Snyder, 54 Neb. 538, 74 N. W. 863; McInggart v. Rose, 14 Ind. 230. See Mower v. McCarthy, 79 Vt. 142, 64 Atl. 578, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418, 118 Am. St. Rep. 942.

The removal of the mortgaged chattels from the county where the mortgage on them was recorded does not require it to be recorded in the new place; Jones, Chatt. Mortg. § 260; National Bank of Commerce v. Jones, 18 Okl. 555, 91 Pac. 191, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 311, 11 Ann. Cas. 1041.

Statutes regulating chattel mortgages exist in all of the states except Louisiana.

Under the old Bankrupt Act it was held that a bankrupt assignee took only the debtor's title to goods in the case of an unrecorded mortgage; Stewart v. Platt, 101 U. S. 731, 25 L. Ed. 816; and so in England; 12 M. & W. 855. The rule was generally otherwise in insolvency; Jones, Chatt. Mortg. § 242. The present Bankrupt Act (§ 67a) provides that liens which are invalid against creditors shall be invalid against the trustee. See Knapp v. Trust Co., 216 U. S. 545, 30 Sup. Ct. 412, 54 L. Ed. 610. It leaves open to the individual states to allow the acquisition of a lien by the mortgagee by taking possession at any time before actual bankruptcy, and it is immaterial that possession is taken with the mortgagor's consent; Humphrey v. Tatman, 198 U. S. 91, 25 Sup. Ct. 567, 49 L. Ed. 956; Thompson v. Fairbanks, 196 U. S. 516, 25 Sup. Ct. 306, 49 L. Ed. 577.

A chattel mortgage void by a state statute as to creditors of the mortgagor, for want of change of possession, is invalid as to his trustees in bankruptcy.

A chattel mortgage with power of sale and a deed of trust are practically one and the same instrument, as understood in the District of Columbia; Hunt v. Ins. Co., 196 U. S. 47, 25 Sup. Ct. 179, 49 L. Ed. 381.

No mortgage of a vessel is valid against third parties without notice, unless recorded in the office of the collector of customs of the port where the vessel is enrolled; Rev. Stat. § 4192, etc. As between parties and those who have notice, registration is not required; Moore v. Simonds, 100 U. S. 145, 25 L. Ed. 590; Best v. Staple, 61 N. Y. 71; The John T. Moore, 3 Wood 61, Fed. Cas. No. 7,430. As to Extraterritoriality of Chattel Mortgages, see CONFLICT OF LAWS.

See MORTGAGE.

CHAUD-MEDLEY (Fr. chaud, hot). The killing of a person in the heat of an affray.

It is distinguished by Blackstone from chance-medley, an accidental homicide. 4 Bla. Com. 184. The distinction is said to be, however, of no great importance. 1 Russ. Cr. 660. Chance-medley is said to be the killing in self-defence, such as happens on a sudden encounter, as distinguished from an accidental homicide. Id.

CHEAT. "Deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavoring to defraud another of his known right, by some wilful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty." Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 2, c. 23, § 1.

The fraudulent obtaining the property of another by any deceitful and illegal practice or token (short of felony) which affects or may affect the public.

In order to constitute a cheat or indictable fraud, there must be a prejudice received; and such injury must affect the public welfare, or have a tendency so to do; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 817; 1 Deacon, Cr. Law 225.

It seems to be a fair result of the cases, that a cheat, in order to be indictable at common law, must have been public in its nature, by being calculated to defraud numbers, or to deceive or injure the public in general, or by affecting the public trade or revenue, the public health, or being in fraud of public justice, etc. And the other cases to be found in the books, of cheats apparently private which have been yet held to be indictable at common law, will, upon examination, appear to involve considerations of a public nature also, or else to be founded in conspiracy or forgery. Thus, it is not indictable for a man to obtain goods by false verbal representations of his credit in society, and of his ability to pay for them; Com. v. Warren, 6 Mass. 72; or to violate his contract, however fraudulently it be broken; Com. v. Hearsey, 1 Mass. 137; or fraudulently to deliver a less quantity of amber than was contracted for and represented; 2 Burr. 1125; 1 W. Bla. 273; or to receive good barley to grind, and to return instead a musty mixture of barley and oatmeal; 4 Maule & S. 214. See 2 East, Pl. Cr. 816; People v. Babcock, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 201, 5 Am. Dec. 256; Com. v. Morse, 2 Mass. 138; Cross v. Peters, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 387, 10 Am. Dec. 78; Hill v. State, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 76, 24 Am. Dec. 441; Republica v. Powell, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 47, 1 L. Ed. 31; 1 B. & H. L. Cr. Cas. 1. Refusing to return a promissory note obtained for the purpose of examination is merely a private fraud; People v. Miller, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 371.

To cheat a man of his money or goods, by using false weights or false measures, has been indictable at common law from time immemorial; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 86; Com. v. Warren, 6 Mass. 72. See Republica v. Powell, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 47, 1 L. Ed. 31. In addition to this, the statute 33 Hen. VIII. 1, which has been adopted and considered as a part of the common law in some of the United States, and the provisions of which have been either recognized as common law or expressly enacted in nearly all of them, was directed, as appears from its title and preamble, against such persons as received money or goods by means of counterfeit letters or privy tokens in other men's names; Com. v. Warren, 6 Mass. 72; People v. Johnson, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 292; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 86; 2 Bish. Cr. L. 145. A "privy token," within the meaning of this statute, was held to denote some real visible mark or thing, as a key, a ring, etc., and not a mere affirmation or promise. And though writings, generally speaking, may be considered as tokens, yet to be within this statute they must be such as were made in the names of third persons, whereby some additional credit and confidence might be gained to the party using them; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 826, 827.

The word "cheat" is not actionable, unless spoken of the plaintiff in relation to his profession or business; Odiorne v. Bacon, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 185; 2 Chit. Rep. 657; Rush v. Cavanaugh, 2 Pa. 187; 20 Up. Can. Q. B. 382; Ostrom v. Calkins, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 263; Stevenson v. Hayden, 2 Mass. 406; Lucas v. Flinn, 35 Ia. 9. See DECEIT; FRAUD; FALSE PRETENSES; TOKEN; ILLITERATE.

CHECK. A written order or request, addressed to a bank or persons carrying on the business of banking, by a party having money in their hands, desiring them to pay, on presentment, to a person therein named or bearer, or to such person or order, a named sum of money. 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. 528; Blair v. Wilson, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 170; Deener v. Brown, 1 MacArth. (D. C.) 350; In re Brown, 2 Sto. 502, Fed. Cas. No. 1,985. See Chapman v. White, 6 N. Y. 412, 57 Am. Dec. 464.

A check is a bill of exchange drawn on a bank, payable on demand. Neg. Instr. Act § 186.

The chief differences between checks and bills of exchange are: First, a check is not due until presented, and, consequently, it can be negotiated any time before presentment, and yet not subject the holder to any equities existing between the previous parties; Cruger v. Armstrong, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 6, 9, 2 Am. Dec. 126; 9 B. & C. 383; Chit. Bills (8th ed.) 546. Secondly, the drawer of a check is not discharged for want of immediate presentment with due diligence; while the drawer of a bill of exchange is. The drawer of a check is only discharged by such neglect when he sustains actual damage by it, and then only pro tanto; Murray v. Judah, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 484; Mohawk Bank v. Broderick, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 306; Little v. Bank, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 425. See Case v. Morris, 31 Pa. 100. Thirdly, the death of the drawer of a check rescinds the authority of the banker to pay it; while the death of the drawer of a bill of exchange does not alter the relations of the parties; 3 M. & G. 571-573. Fourthly, checks, unlike bills of exchange, are always payable without grace; Woodruff v. Bank, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 673; Merchants' Bank of New York v. Woodruff, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 174. See a discussion of this subject, 4 Kent (Lacey's ed.) note on p. 571 of the index, commenting upon opinion of Cowen, J., in Harker v. Anderson, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 372.

Checks are in use only between banks and bankers and their customers, and are designed to facilitate banking operations. It is of their very essence to be payable on demand, because the contract between the banker and customer is that the money is payable on demand; Harker v. Anderson, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 372; In re Brown, 2 Sto. 502, Fed. Cas. No. 1,985; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Bank, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 647, 19 L. Ed. 1008; Wood River Bank v. Bank, 36 Neb. 744, 55 N. W. 239.

As between the holder of a check and the indorser it is required that due diligence be used in presenting them; Lewis, Hubbard & Co. v. Supply Co., 59 W. Va. 75, 52 S. E. 1017, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 132; Start v. Tupper, 81 Vt. 19, 69 Atl. 151, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 213, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1015; and it should be protested in order to fix the liability of indorsers; 3 Kent (Lacey's ed.) 88; but it is not necessary to use diligence in presenting an ordinary check, in order to charge the drawer, unless he has received damage by the delay; Buckner v. Finley, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 586, 7 L. Ed. 528; Little v. Bank, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 425; Daniels v. Kyle, 1 Ga. 304; 2 M. & R. 401; Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. v. Collins, 57 N. Y. 641; Purcell v. Allemon, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 743; Taylor v. Sip, 30 N. J. L. 284; Stewart v. Smith, 17 Ohio St. 82; Morrison v. McCartney, 30 Mo. 183; Cork v. Bacon, 45 Wis. 192, 30 Am. Rep. 712; Montellus v. Charles, 76 Ill. 303. If not presented for payment within a reasonable time after issue, the drawer will be discharged from liability thereon to the extent of the loss caused by the delay; Neg. Instr. Act § 186. Where one deposits a check in his bank and it is collected and credited, it is equivalent to payment to him in the ordinary course as though presented to another bank and paid over the counter; American Nat. Bank of Nashville, Tenn., v. Miller, 229 U. S. 517, 33 Sup. Ct. 883, 57 L. Ed. —.

In common with other kinds of negotiable paper, they must contain an order to pay money, and words of negotiability. This enables a bona fide holder for value to collect the money without regard to the previous history of the paper; Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 10 L. Ed. 865; Coddington v. Bay, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 637, 11 Am. Dec. 342; Bank of Mobile v. Brown, 42 Ala. 108.

They must be properly signed by the person or firm keeping the account at the banker's, as it is part of the implied contract of the banker that only checks so signed shall be paid. The words "Agt. Glass Buildings" added to the signature of a check used for paying an individual debt of the agent, are enough to put the person receiving it on inquiry as to his authority to use the fund for such purpose; Gerard v. McCormick, 130 N. Y. 261, 29 N. E. 115, 14 L. R. A. 234, and note reviewing cases.

Post-dated checks are payable on the day of their date, although negotiated beforehand. See Taylor v. Sip, 30 N. J. L. 284; Mohawk Bank v. Broderick, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 304; In re Brown, 2 Sto. 502, Fed. Cas. No. 1,985. Where all the parties to a check reside in the same place, the holder has until the day following its date or receipt by him in which to present it.

A check, of itself, does not operate as an assignment of any part of the funds to the credit of the drawer with the bank, and the bank is not liable to the holder unless and until it accepts or certifies the check; Neg. Instr. Act § 189; Doherty v. Watson, 29 W. N. C. (Pa.) 32.

CERTIFIED CHECKS. Checks are not to be accepted, but presented at once for payment. There is a practice, however, of marking checks "good," by the banker, which fixes his responsibility to pay that particular check when presented, and amounts, in fact, to an acceptance; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Bank, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 648, 19 L. Ed. 1008. Such a marking is called certifying; and checks so marked are called certified checks. See Meads v. Bank, 25 N. Y. 143, 82 Am. Dec. 331; Seventh Nat. Bank v. Cook, 73 Pa. 483, 13 Am. Rep. 751. The bank thereby becomes the principal debtor; First Nat. Bank of Jersey City v. Leach, 52 N. Y. 350, 11 Am. Rep. 708; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Bank, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 648, 19 L. Ed. 1008; Morse, Banks & Banking 414; to the holder, not the drawer; Girard Bank v. Bank, 39 Pa. 92, 80 Am. Dec. 507; Metropolitan Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Jones, 137 Ill. 634, 27 N. E. 533, 12 L. R. A. 492, 31 Am. St. Rep. 403; Minot v. Russ, 156 Mass. 458, 31 N. E. 489, 16 L. R. A. 510, 32 Am. St. Rep. 472; First Nat. Bank v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 343, 24 L. Ed. 229; and the statute of limitation does not run until demand made; Girard Bank v. Bank, 39 Pa. 92, 80 Am. Dec. 507; and the certifying after delivery at payee's instance takes the amount thereof out of the hands of the maker, and any loss by the insolvency of the bank falls on the payee; Continental Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Cornhouser & Co., 37 Ill. App. 475; Minot v. Russ, 156 Mass.

458, 31 N. E. 489, 16 L. R. A. 510, 32 Am. St. Rep. 472; where the holder of a check procures it to be accepted or certified, the drawer and all endorsers are discharged from liability thereon; Neg. Instr. Act § 188; but where certified to at maker's request he is not discharged from liability; Born v. Bank, 123 Ind. 78, 24 N. E. 173, 7 L. R. A. 442, 18 Am. St. Rep. 312; Bickford v. Bank, 42 Ill. 238, 89 Am. Dec. 436; Mutual Nat. Bank v. Rotgé, 28 La. Ann. 933, 26 Am. Rep. 126; Randolph Nat. Bank v. Hornblower, 160 Mass. 401, 35 N. E. 850.

The bank cannot refuse to pay because notified not to pay by the drawer; Freund v. Bank, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 537; even where it had been stolen and the holder acquired it three years after certification; id.; nor generally can it set up that the check was forged, or that the drawer has no funds; Espy v. Bank, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 621, 21 L. Ed. 947. In New York, it is held that certifying a check warrants only the signature, and not the terms of the check; Security Bank of New York v. Bank, 67 N. Y. 458, 23 Am. Rep. 129. See First Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Bank, 40 Ill. App. 640; contra, Louisiana Nat. Bank v. Bank, 28 La. Ann. 189, 26 Am. Rep. 92. The certification is in effect merely an acceptance, and creates no trust in favor of the holder of the check, and gives no lien on any particular portion of the assets of the bank; People v. Bank, 77 Hun 159, 28 N. Y. Supp. 407. It has, however, been held that a certified check operates as an assignment of the funds to meet it, and makes the bank liable to the holder; Blake v. Savings Bank Co., 79 Ohio 189, 87 N. E. 73, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 290, 128 Am. St. Rep. 684, 16 Ann. Cas. 210. See supra.

Certification is equivalent to an acceptance; Neg. Instr. Act § 187.

A statement by a bank officer that the drawer's check was "good," or "all right," will not constitute an acceptance of the check; Espy v. Bank, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 604, 21 L. Ed. 947; but a parol acceptance has been held sufficient; Pope v. Bank, 59 Barb. (N. Y.) 226. A bank is not bound to accept by telegram the checks or drafts of its depositors, although it be in possession of funds to pay; First Nat. Bank of Atchison v. Bank, 74 Kan. 606, 87 Pac. 746, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1148, 118 Am. St. Rep. 340, 11 Ann. Cas. 281. One relying on a telegram as an acceptance should see to it that the language used will, at least fairly, mean that; Myers v. Bank, 27 Ill. App. 254. See Bank of Springfield v. Bank, 30 Mo. App. 271, holding that a parol statement by a bank that a check is good is not equivalent to a certification; nor does it release the holder from the duty of proper diligence in presentment for payment. It binds the bank to nothing more than that the statement was true at the time when it was made. But where the inquiry was, "Will you pay

J. T.'s check on you for $22,000? Answer," and the answer was, "J. T. is good. Send on your paper." It was held an acceptance; North Atchison Bank v. Garretson, 51 Fed. 168, 2 C. C. A. 145. And, generally, where the party inquiring takes the check in reliance upon such statement and for a valuable consideration, the bank will be liable; Leach v. Hill, 106 Ia. 171, 76 N. W. 667; Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Dunbier, 32 Neb. 487, 49 N. W. 376; Henrietta Nat. Bank v. Bank, 80 Tex. 648, 16 S. W. 321, 26 Am. St. Rep. 773.

A bank receiving a check for collection is negligent in sending it to the drawee bank, although it is the only bank in the place; Winchester Mill Co. v. Bank, 120 Tenn. 225, 111 S. W. 248, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 441; Minneapolis S. & D. Co. v. Bank, 76 Minn. 136, 78 N. W. 980, 44 L. R. A. 504, 77 Am. St. Rep. 609; Bank of Rocky Mount v. Floyd, 142 N. C. 187, 55 S. E. 95; American Exchange Nat. Bank v. Bank, 71 Mo. App. 451; Wagner v. Crook, 167 Pa. 259, 31 Atl. 576, 46 Am. St. Rep. 672. But that such negligence on the part of the forwarding bank will not make it liable where there are no funds to the credit of the drawer, or where the drawee bank is insolvent, is held in some cases; Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co. v. Fincher, 129 Mich. 687, 89 N. W. 570, 95 Am. St. Rep. 449; First Nat. Bank v. Bank, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 318, 34 S. W. 458. In Farmer's Bank & Trust Co. v. Newland, 97 Ky. 465, 31 S. W. 38, it was said that when a customer deposits checks with a bank, for collection at a distant point, he must know the bank cannot send one of its agents to make the collection. He is presumed to know the method employed by banks in making such collections. He has made the bank his agent for that purpose, and he does it with the implied understanding that the bank will follow the customary method. And where it was shown to be a universal custom to send checks directly to the drawee bank for collection, the custom was held to amount to a good presentment for payment; Kershaw v. Ladd, 34 Or. 375, 56 Pac. 402, 44 L. R. A. 236; Wilson v. Bank, 187 Ill. 222, 58 N. E. 250, 52 L. R. A. 632. But such a custom was held unreasonable and bad; Farley Nat. Bank v. Pollock & Bernheimer, 145 Ala. 321, 39 South. 612, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 194, 117 Am. St. Rep. 44, 8 Ann. Cas. 370.

The rule is well settled that a drawee accepts or pays at his peril a forged bill in the hands of a holder in due course; 3 Burr. 1354; for the reason that as between two persons of equal equities, one of whom must suffer, the one having legal title should prevail; 4 H. L. R. 229; 16 id. 514; contra, First Nat. Bank of Lisbon v. Bank, 15 N. D. 299, 108 N. W. 546, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49, 125 Am. St. Rep. 588.

A bank which receives for deposit a check on which the payee's indorsement has been forged, and collects its amount and pays it over to the depositor, is liable to the payee; Farmer v. Bank, 100 Tenn. 187, 47 S. W. 234; Buckley v. Bank, 35 N. J. L. 400, 10 Am. Rep. 249.

An unrestricted indorsement of a draft is a representation that the signature of the drawer is genuine, upon which the drawee may rely, so that in case it proves to be a forgery he may recover back the money paid upon the draft to the indorser; Ford & Co. v. Bank, 74 S. C. 180, 54 S. E. 204, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 63, 114 Am. St. Rep. 986, 7 Ann. Cas. 744.

The depositor owes a duty to the bank to use due diligence in examining the returned pass books and vouchers. If he or his clerk intrusted with the examination uses such diligence, whether it results in the discovery of the forgery or not, the depositor can recover from the bank the sums paid out; Frank v. Bank, 84 N. Y. 213, 38 Am. Rep. 501. If, however, the examining clerk is the forger and conceals the result of the examination from the depositor, the bank will not be liable; First Nat. Bank of Birmingham v. Allen, 100 Ala. 476, 14 South. 335, 27 L. R. A. 426, 46 Am. St. Rep. 80; Leather Mfrs. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 6 Sup. Ct. 657, 29 L. Ed. 811; Dana v. Bank, 132 Mass. 156; Myers v. Bank, 193 Pa. 1, 44 Atl. 280, 74 Am. St. Rep. 672. When the depositor has knowledge that his forged check has been paid by the bank, he must promptly give notice to the bank in order to hold it liable for the loss; McNeely Co. v. Bank, 221 Pa. 588, 70 Atl. 588, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 79; Myers v. Bank, 193 Pa. 1, 44 Atl. 280, 74 Am. St. Rep. 672; Critten v. Bank, 171 N. Y. 228, 63 N. E. 969, 57 L. R. A. 529; U. S. v. Bank, 45 Fed. 163. But the depositor's delay is not a defence unless the bank shows some injury caused thereby; Murphy v. Bank, 191 Mass. 159, 77 N. E. 693, 114 Am. St. Rep. 595; Janin v. Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 27 Pac. 1100, 14 L. R. A. 320, 27 Am. St. Rep. 82; Third Nat. Bank of City of New York v. Bank, 76 Hun 475, 27 N. Y. Supp. 1070; contra, McNeely Co. v. Bank, 221 Pa. 588, 70 Atl. 891, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 79.

To entitle one who, by mistake, has paid out money on a forged endorsement of a check or other commercial paper, to recover back the same, notice must, within a reasonable time after discovery, be given to the party receiving such payment; National Exchange Bank v. U. S., 151 Fed. 402, 80 C. C. A. 632; 3 Kent 85, Holmes' note; but this does not apply to the payment to a bank of a pension check by the sub-treasury upon a forged endorsement; U. S. v. Bank, 214 U. S. 302, 29 Sup. Ct. 665, 53 L. Ed. 1006, 16 Ann. Cas. 1184.

CROSSED CHECKS. The practice of crossing checks originated at the clearing house, the clerks of the different bankers who did business there having been accustomed to write across the checks the names of their employers, so as to enable the clearing house clerks to make up their accounts. It afterwards became a common practice to cross checks which were not intended to go through the clearing house, with the name of a banker or with "& Co.," and a custom or usage grew up in regard to this also; 7 Exch. 389, which held the practice of crossing checks to be a safeguard to the owner and not to restrict their negotiability.

A check is said to be specially crossed when the name of a bank or banking firm is written across the face of the check (it is then payable only to the bank indicated), and it is said to be generally crossed when the words "and company" or any abbreviation thereof, usually "& Co.," between two parallel transverse lines are written across the check (it must then be paid only to some bank). Another form of the general crossing is recognized by the later English statutes which consists merely of two parallel transverse lines across the face of the checks without any words; Farmers' Bank v. Johnson, King & Co., 134 Ga. 486, 68 S. E. 85, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 697, 137 Am. St. Rep. 242.

Crossed checks in England are now governed by the Bill of Exchange Act of 1882, providing that where a banker in good faith and without negligence receives payment from a customer of a crossed check, and the customer has no title, or a defective title thereto, the banker shall not incur any liability to the true owner of the check by reason only of having received such payment; [1903] A. C. 240, affirming [1902] 1 K. B. 242; [1904] 2 K. B. 465.

The effect of crossing a check with the name of a banker means a direction to the drawee, by the owner, to pay it only through the banker; disregard of this direction would be evidence of negligence if payment were made to one who was not the lawful owner; 7 Exch. 389. By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 25, this custom was made statutory; 1 Q. B. Div. 31.

In the United States the system of "crossed checks," strictly so called, is unknown. But of late the germ of a similar custom has begun to manifest itself. Occasionally checks have stamped or written upon them some form of words which is intended to secure their payment exclusively through the Clearing House.

Where a check was stamped at the time it was drawn with the words "payable through (a named bank) at current rate," it was held a material part of the direction, and the drawee bank was not required to pay the check when not presented through the bank thus named; Farmers' Bank v. Johnson, King & Co., 134 Ga. 486, 68 S. E. 85, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 697, 137 Am. St. Rep. 242.

There is a practice of writing across checks "memorandum," or "mem." They are given thus, not as an ordinary check, but as a memorandum of indebtedness; and between the original parties this seems to be their only effect. In the hands of a third party, for value, they have, however, all the force of checks without such word of restriction; Franklin Bank v. Freeman, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 535; Dykens v. Bank, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 612; Story, Pr. Notes § 499. See INDORSEMENT.

Giving a check is not payment unless the check is paid; Cronwell v. Lovett, 1 Hall (N. Y.) 64; Franklin v. Vanderpool, 1 Hall (N. Y.) 88; L. R. 10 Ex. 153; Small v. Mining Co., 99 Mass. 277; Sweet v. Titus, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 639; Heartt v. Rhodes, 66 Ill. 351; Patton's Adm'rs v. Ash, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 116. But a tender was held good when made by a check contained in a letter, requesting a receipt in return, which the plaintiff sent back, demanding a larger sum, without objecting to the nature of the tender; and receiving a check marked "good" is payment; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. 559. See PAYMENT.

CHECK BOOK. A book containing blanks for checks.

These books are so arranged as to leave a margin, called by merchants a stump, or stubb, when the check is filled out and torn off. Upon these stumps a memorandum is made of the date of the check, the payee, and the amount; and this memorandum, in connection with the evidence of the party under oath, is evidence of the facts there recorded.

CHECK ROOM. The owner of property lost while in a railroad check room can recover without proof of negligence on the part of the railroad company; Terry v. Ry., 81 S. C. 279, 62 S. E. 249, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 295.

CHECQUE. See CHECK.

CHEMICAL ANALYSIS. The court takes judicial notice that to analyze a beverage requires not only learning and skill in chemistry, but instruments and appliances not in common use; State v. Powell, 141 N. C. 780, 53 S. E. 515, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477.

CHEMIN (Fr.). The road wherein every man goes; the king's highway. Called in law Latin via regia. Termes de la Ley; Cowell; Spelman, Gloss.

CHEMIST. See APOTHECARY; DRUGGIST.

CHEROKEE NATION. One of the Civilized Indian tribes. See INDIAN; INDIAN TRIBE.

CHEVAGE. A sum of money paid by vassals to their lords in acknowledgment of their villenage.

It was paid to the lord in token of his being chief or head. It was exacted for permission to marry, and also permission to remain without the dominion of the lord. When paid to the king, it was called subjection. Termes de la Ley; Co. Litt. 140 a; Spelman, Gloss.

CHEVANTIA. A loan, or advance of money on credit.

CHEVISANCE (Fr. agreement). A bargain or contract. An unlawful bargain or contract.

CHICKASAW NATION. One of the Civilized Indian tribes. See INDIAN; INDIAN TRIBE.

CHIEF. One who is put above the rest. Principal. The best of a number of things.

Declaration in chief is a declaration for the principal cause of action. 1 Tidd, Pr. 419.

Examination in chief is the first examination of a witness by the party who produces him. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 445.

Tenant in chief was one who held directly of the king. 1 Washb. R. P. *19.

CHIEF BARON. The title of the chief justice of the English court of exchequer. 3 Bla. Com. 44.

CHIEF JUDGE. In some states the presiding judge is thus styled, as in the New York Court of Appeals and the Maryland Court of Appeals. The term is also used in 1 Tyler (Vt.) with "assistant" judge for the puisne.

CHIEF JUSTICE. The presiding or principal judge of a court.

CHIEF JUSTICIAR. See JUSTICIAR.

CHIEF LORD. The immediate lord of the fee. Burton, R. P. 317.

CHIEF PLEDGE. The borsholder, or chief of the borough. Spelman, Gloss.

CHILD. The son or daughter, in relation to the father or mother.

Illegitimate children are bastards. Legitimate children are those born in lawful wedlock. Natural children are illegitimate children. Posthumous children are those born after the death of the father.

Children born in lawful wedlock, or within a competent time afterwards, are presumed to be the issue of the father, and follow his condition; but this presumption may be repelled by the proof of such facts tending to establish non-intercourse as may satisfy a jury to the contrary; Field, Inf. 40; 3 C. & P. 215, 427; 13 Ves. Ch. 58; Cross v. Cross, 3 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 139, 23 Am. Dec. 778; Com. v. Shepherd, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 286, 6 Am. Dec. 449; Barden v. Barden, 14 N. C. 548. See Blackburn v. Crawford, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 175, 18 L. Ed. 186. See ACCESS. Those born out of lawful wedlock follow the condition of the mother.

The term children does not, ordinarily and properly speaking, comprehend grandchildren, or issue generally; yet sometimes that meaning is given to it in cases of necessity; 6 Co. 16; 14 Ves. 576; Adams v. Law, 17 How. (U. S.) 417, 15 L. Ed. 149; McGuire v. Westmoreland, 36 Ala. 534; Thomson v. Ludlington, 104 Mass. 193. And it has been held to signify the same as issue, in cases where the testator, by using the terms children and issue indiscriminately, showed his intention to use the former term in the sense of issue, so as to entitle grandchildren, etc., to take under it; 1 Ves. Sen. Ch. 196; Mowatt v. Carow, 7 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 328, 32 Am. Dec. 641; Ruff v. Rutherford, 1 Bail. Eq. (S. C.) 7; Dickinson v. Lee, 4 Watts (Pa.) 82, 28 Am. Dec. 684; 3 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 213. See Walker v. Williamson, 25 Ga. 549; Appeal of Castner, 83 Pa. 478.

It is a rule of decision in England that the word "children" means legitimate children; 7 Ves. 458; 31 Ch. D. 542; L. R. 7 H. L. 568; and such is the general rule in this country; Gardner v. Heyer, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 11; Heater v. Van Auken, 14 N. J. Eq. 159; Thompson v. McDonald, 22 N. C. 463; Gates v. Seibert, 157 Mo. 254, 57 S. W. 1065, 80 Am. St. Rep. 625; In re Scholl's Will, 100 Wis. 650, 76 N. W. 616; Bealafeld v. Slaughterhaupt, 213 Pa. 565, 62 Atl. 1113; although illegitimate children may be considered as included by express designation or necessary implication; Stewart v. Stewart, 31 N. J. Eq. 398; Collins v. Hoxie, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 81; Bennett v. Toler, 15 Grat. (Va.) 588, 78 Am. Dec. 638; Morton's Estate v. Morton, 62 Neb. 420, 87 N. W. 182; and when the term is used in a will, there must be evidence to be collected from the will itself, or extrinsically, to show affirmatively that the testator intended that his illegitimate children should take, or they will not be included; 1 V. & B. 422; 4 Kent 346, 414, 419; 6 H. L. 265; Palmer v. Horn, 84 N. Y. 516. See BASTARD.

The question whether the term "child" can include "twins" is said not to have been raised in any English case, in 70 Alb. L. J. 2, where an interesting foreign case is noted, but no decision is stated. No American case on the point has been found.

Posthumous children inherit, in all cases, in like manner as if they had been born in the lifetime of the intestate and had survived him; 2 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 135; 4 Kent 412. See 2 Washb. R. P. 439, 699.

In Pennsylvania; act of 1836, p. 250; and in some other states; Rhode Island, Rev. Stat. tit. xxiv. c. 154, § 10; Bancroft v. Ives, 3 Gray (Mass.) 367; the will of their fathers or mothers in which no provision is made for them is revoked, as far as regards them, by operation of law; Coates v. Hughes, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 498; Barnes v. Barker, 5 Wash. 390, 31 Pac. 976. In Iowa a will is revoked by the birth of a child after its execution; Ware v. Wisner, 50 Fed. 310. See, as to the law of Virginia on this subject, Armistead v. Dangerfield, 3 Munf. (Va.) 20, 5 Am. Dec. 501.

An elaborate statute known as the Children's Act, 1908, was passed December 21, 1908, in England to consolidate and amend the law on that subject. It consists of 134 sections covering the divisions of infant life protection, prevention of cruelty to children, juvenile smoking, reformatory and industrial schools, juvenile offenders and miscellaneous and general provisions; L. R. 46 Stat. 453.

See AGE; IN VENTRE SA MERE. As to their competency as witnesses, see WITNESS. And see PARENT AND CHILD.

The courts construe these laws liberally as within the police powers of a state and they are generally upheld, the rule having been laid down that the courts will not interfere with the legislative action in regard to such regulations; In re Weber, 149 Cal. 392, 86 Pac. 809. Statutes have been held constitutional forbidding the employment of children under twelve years of age in factories; Starnes v. Mfg. Co., 147 N. C. 556, 61 S. E. 525, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 602, 15 Ann. Cas. 470; of children under fourteen years of age in factories; In re Spencer, 149 Cal. 396, 86 Pac. 896, 117 Am. St. Rep. 137, 9 Ann. Cas. 1105; Bryant v. Hardware Co., 76 N. J. L. 45, 69 Atl. 23; City of New York v. Chelsa Jute Mills, 43 Misc. 266, 88 N. Y. Supp. 1085; under sixteen years of age in factories; People v. Taylor, 124 App. Div. 434, 108 N. Y. Supp. 796; or in coal mines; Collett v. Scott, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 430; or the employment of minors under sixteen years of age over ten hours a day or over six days a week; State v. Shorey, 48 Or. 396, 86 Pac. 881, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1121; or girls under fourteen years of age as dancers or in theaters; People v. Ewer, 141 N. Y. 129, 36 N. E. 4, 25 L. R. A. 794, 38 Am. St. Rep. 788. Other cases in which statutes limit the hours which women and children may be employed are Stehle v. Mach. Co., 220 Pa. 617, 69 Atl. 1116, 14 Ann. Cas. 122; Com. v. Mfg. Co., 120 Mass. 383; and see generally as to the constitutionality of such laws; 65 L. R. A. 33, note, and 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1130, note.

The question has been much discussed whether one employing a child under the statutory age may set up contributory negligence or assumption of risk to defeat liability for personal injury. In New York, reversing the lower court, it was held error to exclude testimony on the question of contributory negligence, and to hold as a matter of law that the question could not be considered; Lee v. Mfg. Co., 115 App. Div. 589, 101 N. Y. Supp. 78. It is held that contributory negligence could not be set up; American Car & Foundry Co. v. Armentraut, 214 Ill. 509, 73 N. E. 766; Lenahan v. Min. Co., 218 Pa. 311, 67 Atl. 642, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 461, 120 Am. St. Rep. 885; Inland Steel Co. v. Yedinak, 172 Ind. 423, 87 N. E. 229, 139 Am. St. Rep. 389; Nairn v. Biscuit Co., 120 Mo. App. 144, 96 S. W. 679. In other cases, it is held that contributory negligence is a question for the jury, with due consideration of the tender age of the child; Queen v. Iron Co., 95 Tenn. 458, 32 S. W. 460, 30 L. R. A. 82, 49 Am. St. Rep. 935; Morris v.

Stanfield, 81 Ill. App. 264; Sterling v. Carbide Co., 142 Mich. 284, 105 N. W. 755. In Marino v. Lehmaier, 173 N. Y. 530, 66 N. E. 572, 61 L. R. A. 811, it was held that a child of a forbidden age was not, as a matter of law, chargeable with contributory negligence or with assumption of risk. In that case it was also decided that the fact that a penalty was prescribed by the act did not prevent the injured child from having an action for damages. The defense of contributory negligence was also allowed in the case of a child employed in violation of the statute where he was shown to be familiar with the construction of the machine by which he was injured; Borek v. Bolt & Nut Works, 111 Mich. 129, 69 N. W. 254; and in another case it was held error not to have withdrawn the case from the jury, although the plaintiff was employed in violation of the statute; Beghold v. Auto Body Co., 149 Mich. 14, 112 N. W. 691, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609.

In North Carolina, before the enactment of the statute, it was held that in an action by a child of nine years for injury the evidence as to the youth, inexperience and ignorance of the child, the failure of the company to instruct him was properly left to the jury on the question of the negligence of the company and the contributory negligence of the infant employé; Fitzgerald v. Furniture Co., 131 N. C. 637, 42 S. E. 946, where the legislation on the subject up to that time is summarized. After the passage of a state statute on the subject the employment of the child in violation of the statute was held to be evidence of negligence to be submitted to the jury, as also the question of contributory negligence; Rolin v. Tobacco Co., 141 N. C. 300, 53 S. E. 891, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335, 8 Ann. Cas. 638.

The violation of a statute forbidding the employment of children under a certain age, or at certain specified work, or specifying conditions to be complied with, is negligence per se, in an action by the child for injury; American Car & Foundry Co. v. Armentraut, 214 Ill. 509; Nickey v. Steuder, 164 Ind. 189, 73 N. E. 117; Brower v. Locke, 31 Ind. App. 353, 67 N. E. 1015; Queen v. Iron Co., 95 Tenn. 458, 32 S. W. 460, 30 L. R. A. 82, 49 Am. St. Rep. 935; Cooke v. Mfg. Co., 33 Hun (N. Y.) 351; Woolf v. Nauman Co., 128 Ia. 261, 103 N. W. 785; Sterling v. Carbide Co., 142 Mich. 284, 105 N. W. 755.

But in Perry v. Tozer, 90 Minn. 431, 97 N. W. 137, 101 Am. St. Rep. 416, it was held that while employment in violation of the statute was prima facie evidence of negligence, it might be rebutted by proof of due care or of contributory negligence, the violation of a statute merely shifting the burden of proof. In Breckenridge v. Reagan, 22 Ohio C. C. 71, the employment in violation of a statute was held "some evidence" of negligence.

CHILDWIT (Sax.). A power to take a fine from a bondwoman gotten with child without the lord's consent.

By custom in Essex county, England, every reputed father of a bastard child was obliged to pay a small fine to the lord. This custom is known as childwit. Cowell.

CHILTERN HUNDREDS. The offices of steward or bailiff of His Majesty's three Chiltern Hundreds of Stoke, Desborough, and Bonenharn; or the steward of the Manor of Northsted. These offices have sometimes been refused, but they are ordinarily given to any member of the House of Commons who applies for them as a means of ceasing to be a member of the House, an office which cannot be resigned; but which becomes vacant upon the acceptance of any other office by a member. The office is retained until the appointment is revoked to make way for the appointment of another holder. The practice began about 1750. The offices of steward of the Manor of East Hendred and Hempholme were last used for this purpose in 1840 and 1865 respectively. Chiltern Hundreds is an appointment under the hand and seal of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. In 1861, and since, the words "reposing especial trust and confidence," etc., were omitted. May, Parl. Pr. 642.

CHIMIN. See CHEMIN.

CHIMINAGE. A toll for passing on a way through a forest; called in the civil law pedagium. Cowell. See Co. Litt. 56 a; Spelman, Gloss.; Termes de la Ley; Baldwin's Ed. of Britton, 63.

CHIMINUS. The way by which the king and all his subjects and all under his protection have a right to pass, though the property of the soil of each side where the way lieth may belong to a private man. Cowell.

CHIMNEY MONEY. See HEARTH MONEY; FUMAGE.

CHINA. By Act of June 30, 1906, a "United States Court for China" is created to which is given the jurisdiction formerly exercised by consuls and ministers, except as mentioned in the title CONSULAR COURTS. It is held by one judge appointed by the President, with the consent of the Senate (salary $8000, term of office ten years). It sits at Shanghai, and, at stated periods, at Canton, Tientsin and Hankan. An appeal to it lies from all consular courts of China (and of Korea so long as the right of extraterritoriality shall obtain in favor of the United States). It has supervisory control over consuls and vice-consuls in respect of the estates of decedents in China.

Its procedure is in accordance, so far as practicable, with that prescribed by the Revised Statutes for consular courts in China, but it may modify and supplement such rules. Its jurisdiction is exercised in accordance with treaties and law of the United States, and where these are deficient or unsuitable, then in accordance with the common law and the law established by United States courts.

An appeal lies to the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit and appeals and writs of error may be taken thence to the Supreme Court in the same class of cases as those in which they are permitted in cases coming to the former court from the District Court.

See CHINESE.

CHINESE. Stringent laws for the entire exclusion of Chinese from the United States have been passed in the Pacific states, many of which have been decided to be unconstitutional; as is an ordinance that every male person imprisoned in the county jail should have his hair cut short; Ho Ah Kow v. Nunan, 5 Sawy. 552, Fed. Cas. No. 6,546. A statute forbidding the employment of Chinamen on public works, etc., is void, as contravening the Burlingame treaty and the 14th amendment; Baker v. Portland, 5 Sawy. 566, Fed. Cas. No. 777; In re Tiburcio Parrott, 1 Fed. 481. So is an act forbidding Chinamen to fish for the purpose of sale; In re Ah Chong, 2 Fed. 733. But a state law forbidding the exhumation of dead bodies and their removal, without a permit, is not invalid when applied to the removal of bodies of Chinamen who have been buried in California; it is a merely sanitary regulation; In re Wong Yung Quy, 2 Fed. 624.

The convention between the United States and China of 1894 provided that Chinese laborers or Chinese of any other class, either permanently or temporarily residing in the United States shall have for the protection of their persons and property all rights that are given by the laws of the United States to citizens of the most favored nation, excepting the right to become naturalized citizens; 28 Stat. L. 1211.

Teachers, officials, students, etc., have the privilege of coming to and residing in the United States on presentation of a certificate from their government, or the government where they last resided visé by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence they departed. Upon application for admission this certificate is prima facie evidence of the facts set forth therein. One cannot be deported unless there is evidence to overcome the legal effect of the certificate; Liu Hop Fong v. U. S., 209 U. S. 453, 28 Sup. Ct. 576, 52 L. Ed. 888.

The regulations of the treasury department of Dec. 8, 1900, governing the privilege of transit by Chinese laborers across the territory of the United States which require that evidence be produced which shall satisfy the collector of customs that a bona fide transit only was intended were authorized by the provision of the treaty with China of March 17, 1894 (28 Stat. L. 1211) that Chinese laborers shall continue to enjoy such privilege of transit, subject to such regulations by the government of the United States as may be necessary to prevent abuse of the privilege; Fok Yung Yo v. U. S., 185 U. S. 296, 22 Sup. Ct. 686, 46 L. Ed. 917; Lee Lung v. Patterson, 186 U. S. 168, 22 Sup. Ct. 795, 46 L. Ed. 1108.

Chinese persons born out of the United States, remaining subjects of China, are entitled to the protection of and owe allegiance to the United States so long as they are permitted by the United States to reside here, and are subject to the jurisdiction thereof in the same sense as all other aliens residing in the United States; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220; Lau Ou Bew v. U. S., 144 U. S. 47, 12 Sup. Ct. 517, 36 L. Ed. 340; Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905; Lem Moon Sing v. U. S., 158 U. S. 538, 15 Sup. Ct. 967, 39 L. Ed. 1082; Wong Wing v. U. S., 163 U. S. 228, 16 Sup. Ct. 977, 41 L. Ed. 140; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890.

The failure of a Chinese laborer to register, as required by act of Congress, May 5, 1892, is held not to be excused by the fact that after the commencement of the time allowed for registration, but before its expiration, he was convicted and imprisoned for crime; U. S. v. Ah Poing, 69 Fed. 972.

Act of Nov. 3, 1893 (exclusion act), applies to Chinese persons who, having left the country before its passage, afterwards sought to return; Lew Jim v. U. S., 66 Fed. 953, 14 C. C. A. 281. A Chinaman, who during half his time is engaged in cutting and sewing garments for sale by a firm of which he is a member, is not a merchant within the exclusion act; Lai Moy v. U. S., 66 Fed. 955, 14 C. C. A. 283.

The Chinese exclusion acts cannot control the meaning or impair the effect of the constitutional amendment but must be construed and executed in subordination to its provisions; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890; and the right of the United States as exercised by and under these acts, to exclude or expel from the country persons of the Chinese race, born in China and continuing to be subjects thereof, though having acquired a commercial domicile in the United States, has been upheld, for reasons applicable to all aliens alike, and inapplicable to citizens of whatever race or color; Chae Chan Ping v. U. S., 130 U. S. 581, 9 Sup. Ct. 623, 32 L. Ed. 1068; Nishimura Ekiu v. U. S., 142 U. S. 651, 12 Sup. Ct. 336, 35 L. Ed. 1146; Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905; Lem Moon Sing v. U. S., 158 U. S. 538, 15 Sup. Ct. 967, 39 L. Ed. 1082; Wong Wing v. U. S., 163 U. S. 228, 16 Sup. Ct. 977, 41 L. Ed. 140. A Chinaman, within the United States who resists deportation on the ground that he is an American born citizen may not be deported until the right to do so has been ascertained; Moy Suey v. U. S., 147 Fed. 697, 78 C. C. A. 85. It was considered that the case was radically different from that of a Chinese citizen who left the United States and was excluded on his return, in which case it was held that the decision of the immigration officers was final unless reversed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and was not reviewable by the federal courts; U. S. v. Ju Toy, 198 U. S. 253, 25 Sup. Ct. 644, 49 L. Ed. 1040.

The constitutionality of the power of the Secretary, in cases where the alienage is admitted, is settled; Nishimura Ekiu v. U. S., 142 U. S. 651, 12 Sup. Ct. 336, 35 L. Ed. 1146; and also that one who claims citizenship cannot resort to the courts before prosecuting an appeal to the Secretary; U. S. v. Sing Tuck, 194 U. S. 161, 24 Sup. Ct. 621, 48 L. Ed. 917; as a citizen could not be excluded from the country except as a punishment for crime; In re Sing Tuck, 126 Fed. 386; Lee Sing Far v. U. S., 94 Fed. 834, 35 C. C. A. 327; it may reasonably be contended that the determination of this constitutional right is a judicial and not an executive function, and therefore it is a question whether the decision of an executive official upon it is due process of law; Japanese Immigrant Case, 189 U. S. 86, 23 Sup. Ct. 611, 47 L. Ed. 721.

By section 3 of the Geary Act the burden of proving affirmatively his right to remain in the country rests upon a Chinaman who has been arrested for being here illegally and the act raising this presumption of guilt is valid; U. S. v. Chun Hoy, 111 Fed. 899, 50 C. C. A. 57; the presumption, it is said, should be viewed under the rule of evidence as to facts peculiarly within the knowledge of the accused; 11 Y. L. J. 262; and its harshness arose mainly from the penalty imposed by section 4; In re Sing Lee, 54 Fed. 334; Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905, which section was held unconstitutional; U. S. v. Wong Dep Ken, 57 Fed. 206.

CHIPPINGAVEL. A toll for buying and selling. A tax imposed on goods brought for sale. Whishaw; Blount.

CHIRGEMOTE (spelled, also, Chirchgemote, Circgemote, Kirkmote; Sax. circegemote, from circ, ciric, or cyric, a church, and gemot, a meeting or assembly).

In Saxon Law. An ecclesiastical court or assembly (forum ecclesiasticum); a synod; a meeting in a church or vestry. Blount; Spelm. Gloss.; Hen. I. cc. 4, 8; Co. 4th Inst. 321; Cunningh. Law Dict.

CHIROGRAPH (Lat. chirographa). A deed or public instrument in writing.

Chirographs were anciently attested by the subscription and crosses of witnesses. Afterwards, to prevent frauds and concealments, deeds of mutual covenant were made in a script and rescript, or in a part and counter-part: and in the middle, between the two copies, they drew the capital letters of the alphabet, and then tallied, or cut asunder in an indented manner, the sheet or skin of parchment, one of which parts being delivered to each of the parties were proved authentic by matching with and answering to one another. Deeds thus made were denominated syngrapha by the canonists, because that word, instead of the letters of the alphabet or the word chirographum, was used. 2 Bla. Com. 296. This method of preventing counterfeiting, or of detecting counterfeits, is now used, by having some ornament or some word engraved or printed at one end of certificates of stocks, checks, and a variety of other instruments, which are bound up in a book, and, after they are executed, are cut asunder through such ornament or word. See SYNGRAPH; INDENT.

The last part of a fine of land.

It is called, more commonly, the foot of the fine. It is an instrument of writing, beginning with these words: "This is the final agreement," etc. It concludes the whole matter, reciting the parties, day, year, and place, and before whom the fine was acknowledged and levied. Cruise, Dig. t. 35, c. 2, s. 52.

In Civil and Canon Law. An instrument written out and subscribed by the hands of the king or prince. An instrument written out by the parties and signed by them.

The Normans, destroying these chirographa, called the instruments substituted in their place charta (charters), and declared that these charta should be verified by the seal of the signer with the attestation of three or four witnesses. Du Cange; Cowell.

CHIVALRY, COURT OF. See COURT OF CHIVALRY.

CHIVALRY, TENURE BY. Tenure by knight-service. Co. Litt.

CHOCTAW NATION. See INDIAN TRIBE.

CHOPS. The mouth of a harbor. Stats. of Mass. 1882, p. 1288.

CHOSE (Fr. thing). Personal property.

Choses in possession. Personal things of which one has possession.

Choses in action. See that title.

CHOSE IN ACTION. A right to receive or recover a debt, or money, or damages for breach of contract, or for a tort connected with contract, but which cannot be enforced without action. Comyns, Dig. Biens.

It is difficult to find out the exact meaning of the expression; the meaning attributed to it has been explained from time to time; 30 Ch. D. 282, 276, 277; 11 App. Cas. 439, where Lord Blackburn said that the phrase has been used "accurately or inaccurately, as including all personal chattels that are not in possession." It now includes all personal chattels which are not in possession; 11 App. Cas. 440. It includes an annuity; 3 Mer. 86, unless charged on land; 14 Sim. 76; consols; 1 Ves. Jun. 198; shares; 11 A. & E. 205; a ticket in a Derby sweepstakes; 8 Q. B. 134; all debts and all claims for damages for breach of contract; Bushnell v. Kennedy, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 387, 19 L. Ed. 736; open accounts or unliquidated accounts; Sere v. Pitot, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 332,

It is one of the qualities of a chose in action that at common law it is not assignable; 10 Co. 47; Gardner v. Adams, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 297; 1 Cra. (U. S.) 367. In Bracton's day it went to the heir, and he, not the executor, sued for the debts due to a dead man. This naturally led to difficulties, and the courts gradually yielded to the pressure of necessity and without a statute, so momentous a change was made as that, early in the time of Edward I., the chancery had framed and the king's court had upheld writs of debt for and against executors; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 344. It was Coke's idea that the origin of the rule against assignment of choses in action was the "wisdom and policy of the founders of our law," in discouraging maintenance and litigation, but Pollock thinks that there is no doubt that it was the logical consequence of the primitive view of a contract as creating a strictly personal obligation between creditor and debtor. See Wald, Poll. Torts 207, and note G. in App. supporting this view. In equity, from an early period, the courts have viewed the assignment of a chose in action for a valuable consideration as a contract by the assignor to permit the assignee to use his name for the purpose of recovery, and, consequently, enforce its specific performance, unless contrary to public policy; 1 P. Wms. Ch. 381; Hoppiss v. Eskridge, 37 N. C. 54; Dobyns v. McGovern, 15 Mo. 662. And now, at common law, the assignee is entitled to sue and recover in the name of the assignor, and the debtor will not be allowed, by way of defence to such suit, to avail himself of any payment to or release from the assignor, if made or obtained after notice of the assignment; 4 Term 340; Bartlett v. Pearson, 29 Me. 9; Webb v. Steele, 13 N. H. 230; Pitts v. Holmes, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 93; Blin v. Pierce, 20 Vt. 25; Caldwell v. Meshew, 44 Ark. 564. If, after notice of the assignment, the debtor expressly promise the assignee to pay him the debt, the assignee will then be entitled to sue in his own name; Crocker v. Whitney, 10 Mass. 316; Tiernan v. Jackson, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 597, 8 L. Ed. 234; Clarke v. Thompson, 2 R. I. 146; Barger v. Collins, 7 Harr. & J. (Md.) 213; Ford v. Adams, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 349; Geer v. Archer, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 420; Thompson v. Emery, 27 N. H. 269; but without such express promise the assignee, except under peculiar circumstances, must proceed, even in equity in the name of the assignor; Ontario Bank v. Mumford, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 596; Carter v. Ins. Co., 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 463; Adair v. Winchester, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 114; Lenox v. Roberts, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 373, 4 L. Ed. 264; or by agreement he can sue in his own name and pay over the proceeds of the sale to the assignor, in which case he becomes a trustee; Dean v. Chandler, 44 Mo. App. 338.

The English Judicature Act of 1873 provides to a certain extent for assignments of choses in action; but not every equitable assignment is within the statute [1902] 2 K. B. 196. A partial assignment of choses in action is good in equity, although the legal title remains with the assignor; Texas W. R. Co. v. Gentry, 69 Tex. 625, 8 S. W. 98.

But courts of equity will not, any more than courts of law, give effect to such assignments when they contravene any rule of law or of public policy. Thus, they will not give effect to the assignment of the half pay or full pay of an officer in the army; 1 Ball & B. 389; or of a right of entry or action for land held adversely; Hoppiss v. Eskridge, 37 N. C. 54; or of a part of a right in controversy, in consideration of money or services to enforce it; Wilhite v. Roberts, 4 Dana (Ky.) 173. Neither do the courts, either of law or of equity, give effect to the assignment of mere personal actions which die with the person; Jabriskie v. Smith, 13 N. Y. 322, 64 Am. Dec. 551; Oliver v. Walsh, 6 Cal. 456; Smith v. Sherman, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 408. A cause of action for deceit is assignable; Dean v. Chandler, 44 Mo. App. 338; but not for slander; Miller v. Newell, 20 S. C. 123, 47 Am. Rep. 833. But a claim of damages to property, though arising ex delicto, which on the death of the party would survive to his executors or administrators as assets, may be assigned; Bisp. Eq. 166; McKee v. Judd, 12 N. Y. 622, 64 Am. Dec. 515; Webber v. Quaw, 46 Wis. 118, 49 N. W. 830. The transfer of a bill of lading will pass the claim for the conversion of the goods represented by it; Dickson v. Elevator Co., 44 Mo. App. 498; Haas v. R. Co., 81 Ga. 792, 7 S. E. 629. See Smith v. Thompson, 94 Mich. 381, 54 N. W. 163. The right of vendor to bring a second suit in trespass to try title is assignable and passes to the vendee; Williams v. Bennett, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 498, 20 S. W. 856.

The assignee of a chose in action, unless it be a negotiable promissory note or bill of exchange, without notice, in general takes it subject to all the equities which subsist against the assignor; 1 P. Wms. 496; 4 Price 161; Brashear v. West, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 608, 8 L. Ed. 801; Cornish v. Bryan, 10 N. J. Eq. 146; Bishop v. Holcomb, 10 Conn. 444; Bush v. Lathrop, 22 N. Y. 535; Martin v.

Richardson, 68 N. C. 255; Boardman v. Hayne, 29 Ia. 339; Lane v. Smith, 103 Pa. 415; Williams v. Neely, 134 Fed. 1, 67 C. C. A. 171, 69 L. R. A. 232; Kleeman v. Frisbie, 63 Ill. 482. But it is not subject to the equities of third persons of which he had no notice; Himrod v. Bolton, 44 Ill. App. 516. And a payment made by the debtor, even after the assignment of the debt, if before notice thereof, will be effectual; Woodbridge v. Perkins, 3 Day (Conn.) 364; Bishop v. Holcomb, 10 Conn. 444; U. S. v. Vaughan, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 394, 5 Am. Dec. 375; Warren v. Copelin, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 594.

In Pennsylvania by statute a bond is assignable and suit can be brought on it by the assignee if there are two witnesses to the assignment and in Delaware under a similar statute but one witness is now required.

To constitute an assignment, no writing or particular form of words is necessary, if the consideration be proved and the meaning of the parties apparent; Dunn v. Snell, 15 Mass. 485; Dawson v. Coles, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 51; Kessel v. Albetis, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 362; Shannon v. Mayor, etc., of City of Hoboken, 37 N. J. Eq. 123; Garnsey v. Gardner, 49 Me. 167; Patten v. Wilson, 34 Pa. 299; 13 Sim. Ch. 469; and therefore the mere delivery of the written evidence of debt; Cannaday v. Shepard, 55 N. C. 224; Boeka v. Nuella, 28 Mo. 180; Jones v. Witter, 13 Mass. 304; Titcomb v. Thomas, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 282; Prescott v. Hull, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 284; the delivery being essential to the assignment; Lewis v. Mason's Adm'r, 84 Va. 731, 10 S. E. 529; Shannon v. Mayor, etc., of City of Hoboken, 37 N. J. Eq. 123; Noyes v. Brown, 33 Vt. 431; or the giving of a power of attorney to collect a debt, may operate as an equitable transfer thereof, if such be the intention of the parties; 7 Ves. Ch. 28; Bergen v. Bennett, 1 Caines Cas. (N. Y.) 18, 2 Am. Dec. 281; People v. Tioga Common Pleas, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 73. See ASSIGNMENT.

Bills of exchange and promissory notes, in exception to the general rule, are by the law merchant transferable, and the legal as well as equitable right passes to the transferee. See BILL OF EXCHANGE; NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS. In some states, by statutory provisions, bonds, mortgages, and other documents may be assigned, and the assignee receives the whole title, both legal and equitable; 2 Bouvier, Inst. 192. In New York, the code enables an assignee to maintain an action in his own name in those cases in which the right was assignable in law or in equity before the code was adopted; Purple v. R. Co., 4 Duer (N. Y.) 74.

A distinction must be made between the security or the evidence of the debt, and the thing due. A deed, a bill of exchange or a promissory note may be in the possession of the owner, but the money or damages due on them are no less choses in action. This distinction is to be kept in view. The chose in action is the money, damages or thing owing. The bond or note is but the evidence of it. There can in the nature of things be no present possession of a thing which lies merely in action; 1 Bouv. Inst. p. 191; First Nat. Bank v. Holland, 99 Va. 495, 39 S. E. 126, 55 L. R. A. 155, 86 Am. St. Rep. 898.

In the absence of fraudulent transfer or such other fraud as would positively impede an action at law and proceeding in garnishment, equity will not subject the choses in action of the debtor to the payment of his debts; Hall v. Imp. Co., 143 Ala. 464, 39 South. 285, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 130, 5 Ann. Cas. 363.

CHOSEN FREEHOLDERS. See BOARD OF FREEHOLDERS.

CHRISTIAN. One who believes in or assents to the truth of the doctrines of Christianity, as taught by Jesus Christ in the New Testament. It does not include Mohammedans, Jews, Pagans, or infidels; Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 9, 16 Am. Rep. 82.

CHRISTIAN NAME. The baptismal name as distinct from the surname. A Christian name may consist of a single letter. Wharton. See NAME.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE. In Pennsylvania a charter was refused to an organization of Christian Scientists on the ground that to recognize their doctrines was against the public policy of the state; In re First Church of Christ, Scientist, 205 Pa. 543, 55 Atl. 536, 63 L. R. A. 411, 97 Am. St. Rep. 753; but in Illinois they have been incorporated; People v. Gordon, 194 Ill. 560, 62 N. E. 858, 88 Am. St. Rep. 165.

The consent of a patient to be treated by a Christian Scientist healer will preclude holding him liable in damages for failure to effect a cure, although that method of treatment is illegal by state law; Spead v. Tomlinson, 73 N. H. 46, 59 Atl. 376, 68 L. R. A. 432. In Maine, a Christian Scientist was held entitled to recover for his services. The defense set up that it was delusion and charlatanry being considered immaterial, as defendant had chosen the treatment and promised to pay for it; Wheeler v. Sawyer (Me.) 15 Atl. 67.

While the practice of Christian Science is not a practice of medicine as usually and generally understood, yet being a treatment for mental and bodily ailments, such practice is a violation of the state laws for the protection of the public health; State v. Buswell, 40 Neb. 158, 58 N. W. 728, 24 L. R. A. 68; contra, State v. Mylod, 20 R. I. 632, 40 Atl. 753, 41 L. R. A. 428. It has been held that to give treatments for a fee is practicing medicine; State v. Marble, 72 Ohio St. 21, 73 N. E. 1063, 70 L. R. A. 835, 106 Am. St. Rep. 570, 2 Ann. Cas. 898, where an act regulating such practice is considered a valid exercise of the police power and not void as discriminating against Christian Science in not making special provision for those who wish to practice it.

Under a municipal ordinance imposing a penalty on physicians for not reporting contagious diseases, the evidence must show that a Christian Scientist who attended the person knew that he was afflicted with such disease; Kansas City v. Baird, 92 Mo. App. 204.

A belief in Christian Science, ascribing to it certain miraculous powers of curing disease, is not sufficient evidence of insane delusions to avoid a will; In re Brush, 35 Misc. 689, 72 N. Y. Supp. 421.

A conviction of a father for wilfully omitting, without lawful excuse, to furnish medical attendance for his minor son, was upheld; Owens v. State, 6 Okl. Cr. 110, 116 Pac. 345, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 633, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1218.

CHRISTIANITY. The religion established by Jesus Christ.

Christianity has been judicially declared to be a part of the common law of Pennsylvania; Updegraph v. Com., 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 394; Guardians of the Poor v. Greene, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 555; (cited in U. S. v. Laws, 163 U. S. 263, 16 Sup. Ct. 998, 41 L. Ed. 151); see Zeisweiss v. James, 63 Pa. 465, 3 Am. Rep. 558; of New York, People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns. 291, 5 Am. Dec. 335; of Connecticut, 2 Swift, System 321; of Delaware, State v. Chandler, 2 Harr. 553; of Massachusetts, 7 Dane, Abr. c. 219, a. 2, 19. See Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 206. To write or speak contemptuously and maliciously against it is an indictable offence; Ogd. Lib. & Sl. 450; Cooper, Libel 59, 114. See 5 Jur. 529; People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 290, 5 Am. Dec. 335; Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 206. "This is a religious people, not Christianity with an established church and tithes and spiritual courts; but Christianity with liberty of conscience to all men." U. S. v. Laws, 163 U. S. 263, 16 Sup. Ct. 998, 41 L. Ed. 151.

Archbishop Whately, in his preface to the Elements of Rhetoric, says, "It has been declared, by the highest legal authorities, that 'Christianity is part of the law of the land,' and, consequently, any one who impugns it is liable to prosecution. What is the precise meaning of the above legal maxim I do not profess to determine, having never met with any one who could explain it to me; but evidently the mere circumstance that we have religion by law established does not of itself imply the illegality of arguing against that religion." It seems difficult, says an accomplished writer (Townsend, St. Tr. vol. II. p. 389), to render more intelligible a maxim which has perplexed so learned a critic. Christianity was pronounced to be part of the common law, in contradistinction to the ecclesiastical law, for the purpose of proving that the temporal courts, as well as the courts spiritual, had jurisdiction over offences against it. Blasphemies against God and religion are properly cognizable by the law of the land, as they disturb the foundations on which the peace and good order of society rest, root up the principle of positive laws and penal restraints, and remove the chief sanction for truth, without which no question of property could be decided and no criminal brought to justice. Christianity is part of the common law, as its root and branch, its majesty and pillar—as much a component part of that law as the government and maintenance of social order. The inference of the learned archbishop seems scarcely accurate, that all who impugn this part of the law must be prosecuted. It does not follow, because Christianity is part of the law of England, that every one who impugns it is liable to prosecution. The manner of and motives for the assault are the true tests and criteria. Scoffing, flippant, railing comments, not serious arguments, are considered offences at common law, and justly punished, because they shock the pious no less than deprave the ignorant and young. The meaning of Chief Justice Hale cannot be expressed more plainly than in his own words. An information was exhibited against one Taylor, for uttering blasphemous expressions too horrible to repeat. Hale, C. J., observed that "such kind of wicked, blasphemous words were not only an offence to God and religion, but a crime against the laws, state, and government, and therefore punishable in the court of King's Bench. For, to say religion is a cheat, is to subvert all those obligations whereby civil society is preserved; that Christianity is part of the laws of England, and to reproach the Christian religion is to speak in subversion of the law." Ventr. 293. To remove all possibility of further doubt, the English commissioners on criminal law, in their sixth report, p. 83 (1841), have thus clearly explained their sense of the celebrated passage: "The meaning of the expression used by Lord Hale, that 'Christianity was parcel of the laws of England,' though often cited in subsequent cases, has, we think, been much misunderstood. It appears to us that the expression can only mean either that, as a great part of the securities of our legal system consist of judicial and official oaths sworn upon the Gospels, Christianity is closely interwoven with our municipal law, or that the laws of England, like all municipal laws of a Christian country, must, upon principles of general jurisprudence, be subservient to the positive rules of Christianity. In this sense, Christianity may justly be said to be incorporated with the law of England, so as to form parcel of it; and it was probably in this sense that Lord Hale intended the expression should be understood. At all events, in whatever sense the expression is to be understood, it does not appear to us to supply any reason in favor of the rule that arguments may not be used against it; for it is not criminal to speak or write either against the common law of England, generally, or against particular portions of it, provided it be not done in such a manner as to endanger the public peace by exciting forcible resistance; so that the statement that Christianity is parcel of the law of England, which has been so often urged in justification of laws against blasphemy, however true it may be as a general proposition, certainly furnishes no additional argument for the propriety of such laws." If blasphemy mean a railing accusation, then it is, and ought to be, forbidden; Heard, Lib. & Sl. § 338. See *Vidal v. Girard, 2 How. (U. S.) 127, 197, 11 L. Ed. 205; Updegraph v. Com., 11 S. & R. CHURCH OF ENGLAND. The act of 26 Henry VIII. recognized the king as being the only supreme head on earth of the Church of England, having the power to correct all errors, heresies, abuses, offences, contempts and enormities.

In 1531, Henry was acknowledged by Convocation as "Protector and Supreme Head of the English Church and Clergy," "so far as the law of Christ allowed."

The Church of England is governed internally by means of its Convocation of bishops and clergy; there is one for each province, Canterbury and York. Each consists of two houses: the upper, composed of archbishops and bishops; the lower, composed of deans of every cathedral, the archdeacons with proctors elected from every chapter and two or more elected by the clergy of the diocese of the province of Canterbury, and by every archdeacon in the province of York.

The name Convocation is specifically given to the assembly of the spirituality of the realm of England. It is summoned by the metropolitan archbishops of Canterbury and of York, respectively, within their ecclesiastical provinces, pursuant to a royal writ, whenever the Parliament of the realm is summoned, and is continued or discharged, as the case may be, whenever the Parliament is prorogued or dissolved.

The present constitution of the Convocation of the Prelates and Clergy of the province of Canterbury was recognized as early as 1283 as its normal constitution, and in extorting recognition from the crown, which the clergy accomplished by refusing to attend unless summoned in lawful manner (debito modo) through their metropolitan, the clergy of the province of Canterbury taught the laity the possibility of maintaining the freedom of the nation against the encroachments of the royal power.

The form of the royal writ, which it is customary to issue in the present day to the metropolitan of each province, is identical in its purport with the writ issued by the crown in 1283 to the metropolitan of the province of Canterbury. The existing constitution of the Convocation of the province of Canterbury—and the same is true of the province of York—in respect of its comprising representatives of the chapters and of the beneficed clergy, in addition to the bishops and other dignitaries of the church, would thus appear to be of even more ancient date than the existing constitution of the Parliament of the realm.

It was decreed during the time of Henry VI. that the prelates and other clergy, with their servants and attendants, when called to the Convocation pursuant to the king's writ, should enjoy the same liberties and defence as when summoned to the king's Parliament.

In 1717, in pursuance of a royal writ, Convocation was prorogued and no license from the crown was granted to Convocation to proceed to business until 1861.

In 1872 Convocation was empowered by the crown to frame resolutions on the subject of public worship, which resolutions were afterwards incorporated in the Act of Uniformity Amendment Act.

To Convocation in later years has been added the House of Laymen, for both provinces, which, to a certain extent, secured the co-operation of the lay element. It is elected for every new Parliament, by Diocesan Conferences, who are in turn elected by the laity. In 1896, joint sessions of both Convocations, in conjunction with the Houses of Laymen, for consultative purposes, were held. This body is now termed the Representative Church Council and has adopted a constitution; all formal business is however, transacted in the separate Convocations.

The crown has the right to nominate to vacant sees. In cases of sees of old foundation, this is done by means of a congé d'élire; in that of all others, by letters patent. The usual selection of bishops is in the hands of the Prime Minister, but it is usual now to select those approved by public opinion.

Bishops hold their temporalities as barons, and are spiritual members of Parliament. Only twenty-six have the right to seats in the House of Lords, of which five, the two archbishops and the bishops of London, Durham and Winchester, always sit, the others taking their seats in order of seniority of confirmation. See Encycl. Brit.

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is the highest court of appeal in ecclesiastical cases.

The Church of Ireland was by the Act of Union, 1800, united with the Church of England. By the disestablishment act of 1869, this union was severed, and on January 1, 1871, the Church of Ireland became independent. The supreme governing board of the Church of Ireland is the church Synod, which meets annually. There are also twenty-three dioceses and Synods which are constituted by similar elective bodies called diocesan councils. The bishop of the diocese is chosen by the clerical and lay members of the diocesan Synod. The Primate is chosen by the House of Bishops from among their own number.

CHURCH RATE. A tribute by which the expenses of the church are to be defrayed. They are to be laid by the parishioners, in England, and may be recovered before two justices, or in the ecclesiastical court. Wharton, Dict.

CHURCH-WARDEN. An officer whose duty it is to take care of or guard the church.

They are taken to be a kind of corporation in favor of the church for some purposes: they may have, in that name, property in goods and chattels, and bring actions for them for the use and benefit of the church, but may not waste the church property, and are liable to be called to account; 3 Steph. Com. 90; 1 Bla. Com. 394; Cowell.

These officers are created in some ecclesiastical corporations by the charter, and their rights and duties are definitely explained. In England, it is said, their principal duties are to take care of the church or building, the utensils and furniture, the church-yard, certain matters of good order concerning the church and church-yard, the endowments of the church; Bacon, Abr. By the common law, the capacity of church-wardens to hold property for the church is limited to personal property; Terrett v. Taylor, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 43, 3 L. Ed. 650.

CINQUE PORTS. The five ports of England which lie towards France.

These ports, on account of their importance as defences to the kingdom, early had certain privileges granted them, and in recompense were bound to furnish a certain number of ships and men to serve on the king's summons once in each year. "The service that the barons of the Cinque Ports acknowledge to owe; upon the king's summons, if it shall happen, to attend with their ships fifteen days at their own cost and charges, and so long as the king pleases, at his own charge;" Cowell, Quinque Portus. The Cinque Ports, under the ordinance of Henry III. in 1229, were Hastings, Dover, Sandwich, Hythe and Romney, to which were added Winchelsea and Rye; 1 Social England 412. The two latter are sometimes reckoned ports of Sandwich; and the other of the Cinque Ports have ports appended to them in like manner. The Cinque Ports had a Lord Warden, who had a peculiar jurisdiction, sending out writs in his own name. This office is still maintained.

The first admiralty jurisdiction in somewhat modern form appears to have been committed to the Lord Warden and Bailiffs of the Cinque Ports. The constitution of these ports into a confederacy for the supply and maintenance of the navy was due to Edward the Confessor. Edward I. confirmed their charter. The last charter was in 1668. Their courts had civil, criminal, equity, and admiralty jurisdiction and were not subject to the courts at Westminster. See the charters in Jeakes' Charters of the Cinque Ports. See Inderwick's King's Peace; Les Cinque Ports, by Benoist-Lucy; COURT OF THE CINQUE PORTS.

The representatives in parliament and the inhabitants of the Cinque Ports were termed barons; Brande; Cowell; Termes de la Ley. And see Round, Feudal England 563.

CIPHER. See TELEGRAPH.

CIRCUIT. A division of the country in England appointed for a particular judge to visit for the trial of causes. See 3 Bla. Com. 58.

Courts are held in each of these circuits, at stated periods, by judges assigned for that purpose; 3 Steph. Com. 321. The United States is divided into nine circuits; 1 Kent 301.

The term is often applied, perhaps, to the periodical journeys of the judges through their various circuits. The judges, or, in England, commissioners of assize nisi prius, are said to make their circuit; 3 Bla. Com. 57. The custom is of ancient origin. In A. D. 1170, justices in eyre were appointed, with delegated powers from the Curia Regis, being held members of that court, and directed to make the circuit of the kingdom once in seven years. See Inderwick's King's Peace 60.

Under COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS will be found a list of English circuits.

CIRCUIT COURTS. Courts whose jurisdiction extends over several counties or districts, and of which terms are held in the various counties or districts to which their jurisdiction extends.

The term was applied distinctively to a class of the federal courts of the United States, of which terms are held in two or more places successively in the various circuits into which the whole country is divided for this purpose. The name was changed to district court by the Judiciary Act of March 3, 1911, in effect January 1, 1912. See UNITED STATES COURTS. In some states it applies to courts of general jurisdiction of which terms are held in the various counties or districts of the state. Such courts sit in some instances as courts of nisi prius, in others, either at nisi prius or in banc. They may have an equity as well as a common-law jurisdiction, and may be both civil and criminal courts. The systems of the various states are widely different in these respects; and reference must be had to the articles on the different states for an explanation of the system adopted in each. The term is unknown in the classification of English courts, and conveys a different idea in the various states in which it is adopted as the designation of a court or class of courts, although the constitution of such courts, in many instances, is quite analogous to that of the English courts of assize and nisi prius.

CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

CIRCUIT JUSTICE. A justice of the Supreme Court of the United States allotted to any circuit. Act of March 3, 1911.

CIRCUITY OF ACTION. Indirectly obtaining, by means of a subsequent action, a result which may be reached in an action already pending.

This is particularly obnoxious to the law, as tending to multiply suits; Fellows v. Fellows, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 682, 15 Am. Dec. 412.

CIRCUMSPECTE AGATIS. A royal writ (1285) dealing with lay and ecclesiastical jurisdiction which perhaps technically acquired the force of a statute. Its authenticity was doubtful. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 246. See ARTICULI CLERI.

CIRCUMSTANCES. The particulars which accompany an act. The surroundings at the commission of an act.

The facts proved are either possible or impossible, ordinary and probable or extraordinary and improbable, recent or ancient; they may have happened near us, or afar off; they are public or private, permanent or transitory, clear and simple or complicated; they are always accompanied by circumstances which more or less influence the mind in forming a judgment. And in some instances these circumstances assume the character of irresistible evidence: where, for example, a woman was found dead in a room, with every mark of having met with a violent death, the presence of another person at the scene of action was made manifest by the bloody mark of a left hand visible on her left arm; 14 How. St. Tr. 1324; Greenl. Ev. 13 a. These points ought to be carefully examined, in order to form a correct opinion. The first question ought to be, is the fact possible? If so, are there any circumstances which render it impossible? If the facts are impossible, the witness ought not to be credited. If, for example, a man should swear that he saw the deceased shoot himself with his own pistol, and, upon an examination of the ball which killed him, it should be found too large to enter into the pistol, the witness ought not to be credited;

1 Stark. Ev. 505; or if one should swear that another had been guilty of an impossible crime.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE. See EVIDENCE.

CIRCUMSTANTIBUS. See TALES.

CITACION. In Spanish Law. The order of a legal tribunal directing an individual against whom a suit has been instituted to appear and defend it within a given time. It is synonymous with the term emplazamiento in the old Spanish law, and the in jus vocatio of the Roman law.

CITATIO AD REASSUMENDAM CAUSAM. In Civil Law. The name of a citation, which issued when a party died pending a suit, against the heir of the defendant, or, when the plaintiff died, for the heir of the plaintiff. Our bill of revivor is probably borrowed from this proceeding.

CITATION. A writ issued out of a court of competent jurisdiction, commanding a person therein named to appear on a day named and do something therein mentioned, or show cause why he should not. Proctor, Pract.

The act by which a person is so summoned or cited.

In the ecclesiastical law, the citation is the beginning and foundation of the whole cause, and is said to have six requisites, namely: the insertion of the name of the judge, of the promover, of the impugnant, of the cause of suit, of the place, and of the time of appearance; to which may be added the affixing the seal of the court, and the name of the register or his deputy. 1 Brown, Civ. Law 453, 454; Ayliffe, Parerg. xliii. 175; Hall, Adm. Pr. 6; Merlin, Rép.

The process issued in courts of probate and admiralty courts. It is usually the original process in any proceeding where used, and is in that respect analogous to the writ of capias or summons at law, and the subpœna in chancery.

CITATION OF AUTHORITIES. The production of or reference to the text of acts of legislatures, treatises, or cases of similar nature decided by the courts, in order to support propositions advanced.

As the knowledge of the law is to a great degree a knowledge of precedents, it follows that there must be necessarily a frequent reference to these preceding decisions to obtain support for propositions advanced as being statements of what the law is. Constant reference to the law as it is enacted is, of course, necessary. References to the works of legal writers are also desirable for elucidation and explanation of doubtful points of law.

The civilians on the continent of Europe, in referring to the Institutes, Code, and Pandects or Digest, usually give the number, not of the book, but of the law, and the first word of the title to which it belongs; and, as there are more than a thousand of these, it is no easy task for one not thoroughly acquainted with those collections to find the place to which reference is made. The American writers generally follow the natural mode of reference, by putting down the name of the collection, and then the number of the book, title, law, and section. For example, Inst. 4. 15. 2. signifies Institutes, book 4, title 15, and section 2; Dig. 41. 9. 1. 3. means Digest, book 41, title 9, law 1, section 3; Dig. pro dote, or ff pro dote, signifies section 3, law 1, of the book and title of the Digest or Pandects entitled pro dote. It is proper to remark that Dig. and ff are equivalent: the former signifies Digest, and the latter—which is a careless mode of writing the Greek letter  $\pi$ , the first letter of the word πανάκται—signifies Pandects; and the Digest and Pandects are different names for one and the same thing. The Code is cited in the same way. The Novels are cited by their number, with that of the chapter and paragraph: for example, Nov. 185. 2. 4. for Novella Justiniani 185, capite 2, paragrapho 4. Novels are also quoted by the collation, the title, chapter, and paragraph, as follows: In Authentico, Collatione 1, titulo 1, cap. 281. The Authentics are quoted by their first words, after which is set down the title of the Code under which they are placed: for example, Authentica, cum testator. Codice ad legem fascidium. See Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 65; Domat, Civ. Law, Cush. ed. Appendix; DECRETALES GREGORII NONI.

Statutes of the states are here cited by giving the number of the volume (where there are more volumes than one), the name of the state (using the common geographical abbreviation), the designation of the code, and the page where the statute or provision in consideration is found: thus, 1 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 4th ed. 63. To this it is desirable to add, when regard for space allows, the chapter and section of the statute referred to.

United States statutes, and statutes of the states not included in the codified collection of the state, are cited as statutes of the year in which they were enacted, or by the proper section of the Revised Statutes.

English statutes are referred to by indicating the year of the reign in which they were enacted, the chapter and section: thus, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 96, § 2, or the date or year of the act. Recent English authors are coming to give the date or the year in the text and perhaps the regnal year in a foot note.

Text-books are referred to by giving the number of the volume (if more than one), and the name of the author, with an abbreviation of the title of the work sufficiently extended to distinguish it from other works by the same author, and to indicate the class of subjects of which it treats: thus, 2 Story, Const.

Where an edition is referred to which has been prepared by other persons than the authors, or where an edition subsequent to the first is referred to, this fact is sometimes indicated, and the page, section, or paragraph of the edition cited is given: thus, Angell & A. Corp., Lothrop ed. 96; Smith, Lead. Cas., 5th Hare & W. ed. 173. The various editions of Blackstone's Commentaries, however, have the editor's name preceding the title of the book: thus Sharswood, Bla. Com.; Coleridge, Bla. Com.; wherever the reference is to a note by the editor cited; otherwise the reference is merely to Blackstone.

The earlier reports of the Federal courts of the United States, and of the English, Irish, and Scotch courts, are cited by the names of the reporters: thus, 3 Cra. 96; 5 East 241. In a few instances, common usage has given a distinctive name to a series; and wherever this is the case such name has been adopted; as, Term; C. B.; Exch.

The reports of the state courts are cited by the name of the state, wherever a series of such reports has been recognized as existing: thus, 5 Ill. 63; 21 Pa. 96; and the same rule applies to citations of the reports of provincial courts: thus, 6 Low. C. 167. The later volumes of reports of the supreme court of the United States are cited by their serial number: thus, 161 U. S.

Otherwise, the reporter's name is used; thus, 5 Rawle 23, or an abbreviation of it; as 11 Pick. 23. This rule extends also to the provincial reports; and the principle is applied to the decisions of Scotch and Irish cases, except in later cases, when the official method is adopted.

Where the same reporter reports decisions in courts both of law and equity, an additional abbreviation, usually to equity reports and sometimes to law reports, indicates which series is meant: thus, 3 Ired. Eq. 87; 14 N. J. L. 42.

As to the usual mode of citing English, Scotch and Irish Reports, see Tables etc. of All Reports of Cases etc. by the Council of Law Reporting (1895); REPORTS.

For a list of abbreviations as used in this book, and as commonly used in legal books, see ABBREVIATIONS.

CITE. To summon; to command the presence of a person; to notify a person of legal proceedings against him and require his appearance thereto. See CITATION.

CITIZEN. In English Law. An inhabitant of a city. 1 Rolle, Abr. 138; 18 L. Q. Rev. 49. The representative of a city, in parliament. 1 Bla. Com. 174.

At common law a natural-born subject included every child born in England of alien parents except the child of an ambassador or diplomatic agent or of an alien enemy in hostile occupation of the place where the child was born; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890. It made no difference whether the parents were permanently or only temporarily residing in England; Cockb. Nat. 7.

In Roman Law. Under Roman law there were four methods of acquiring citizenship: 1. Every man was a citizen whose father was such before him. 2. A slave when he became a free man followed the condition of his former master. 3. Certain privileged classes by statutes could by their own acts become citizens, as by service for three years in the Roman armies, or the erection of a house in Rome worth at least 100,000 sesterces, or building a ship and for six years carrying corn to Rome. 4. By legislation such aliens as were thought fit were received into citizenship. This would now be termed naturalization.

Citizenship might be lost by reduction into slavery, capture in war, banishment and voluntary expatriation.

The net result of citizenship was that by it alone one became entitled to the protection of the laws—the jus civile. It was exclusive and personal, not territorial. For a discussion of the subject, see 17 L. Q. Rev. 270.

See JUS CIVITATIS.

The term citizen was used in Rome to indicate the possession of private civil rights, including those accruing under the Roman family and inheritance law and the Roman contract and property law. All other subjects were peregrines. But in the beginning of the 3d century the distinction was abolished and all subjects were citizens; 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 578.

By the Roman law the citizenship of the child followed that of the parent. The Code Napoléon changed the law of France, which until then (1807) had followed the feudal rule that citizenship was determined by birth, to the rule of the descent of blood, the jus sanguinis of the civil law. It has been contended that this is the true principle of international law; Vattel, b. 1, c. 19, § 212; Bar, Int. L. § 31; dissenting opinion in U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890. But the last case settled the law of the United States that mere birth within the country confers citizenship, following the rule of the English common law and denying the existence of a settled and definite rule of international law inconsistent therewith.

In American Law. One who, under the constitution and laws of the United States, has a right to vote for representatives in congress, and other public officers, and who is qualified to fill offices in the gift of the people.

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside; 14th Amendment, U. S. Const.

One of the sovereign people. A constituent member of the sovereignty, synonymous with the people. Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. (U. S.) 404, 15 L. Ed. 691.

A member of the civil state entitled to all its privileges. Cooley, Const. Lim. 77. See U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 162, 22 L. Ed. 627; Web. Cit. 48.

The provisions of the U. S. R. S. in relation to citizens are as follows:

Sec. 1992. All persons born in the United States and not subject to any foreign power, excluding Indians not taxed, are declared to be citizens of the United States.

Sec. 1993. All children heretofore born or hereafter born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose fathers were or may be at the time of their birth citizens thereof, are declared to be citizens of the United States; but the rights of citizenship shall not descend to children whose fathers never resided in the United States.

Sec. 1994. Any woman who is now or may hereafter be married to a citizen of the United States, and who might herself be lawfully naturalized, shall be deemed a citizen.

The term natural-born citizen used in the federal constitution is not therein defined.

Its meaning must be gathered from the common law; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890.

Citizens are either native-born or naturalized. Native citizens may fill any office; naturalized citizens may be elected or appointed to any office under the constitution of the United States, except the offices of president and vice-president.

The right of citizenship never descends in the legal sense, either by the common law, or under the common naturalization acts. It is incident to birth in the country, or it is given personally by statute; Pamphlet by Mr. Binney on the Alienigenæ of the United States (1853), partly published in 2 Am. L. Reg. 193 (1854). See sub-tit. In Roman Law, supra.

Generally it is presumed, at least until the contrary is shown, that every person is a citizen of the country in which he resides; Shelton v. Tiffin, 6 How. (U. S.) 163, 12 L. Ed. 387; Molyneaux v. Seymour, 30 Ga. 440, 76 Am. Dec. 662; State v. Haynes, 54 Ia. 109, 6 N. W. 156; Moore v. Wilson's Adm'rs, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 406; Quinby v. Duncan, 4 Harr. (Del.) 383. Where it is shown that a person was once a citizen of a foreign country even though residing in another, the presumption is, until the contrary appears, that he still remains such; Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 25 L. Ed. 628; Ehrlich v. Weber, 114 Tenn. 711, 88 S. W. 188; Bode v. Trimmer, 82 Cal. 513, 23 Pac. 187; Charles Green's Son v. Salas, 31 Fed. 106. Evidence of foreign birth overcomes the presumption of citizenship raised by residence and raises the presumption of citizenship of the country of birth; State v. Jackson, 79 Vt. 504, 65 Atl. 657, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1245.

The first clause of section 1 of the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution for the first time recognizes and defines citizenship of the United States and makes those who are entitled to it citizens of the state in which they reside. This amendment changed the origin and character of American citizenship, or at least removed all doubt. Instead of a man's being a citizen of one of the states, he was now made a citizen of any state in which he might choose to reside because he was antecedently a citizen of the United States. Blaine, Twenty Years of Congress, vol. 2, p. 189. There is therefore a twofold citizenship under our system—federal citizenship and state citizenship; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588; Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 29 Sup. Ct. 14, 53 L. Ed. 97. One may be a citizen of the United States without being a citizen of a state, and an important element is necessary to convert the former into the latter. He must reside within the state to make him a citizen thereof, but it is only necessary that he should be born or naturalized in the United States to make him a citizen of the Union; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 73, 21 L. Ed. 394; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890.

The object of the amendment in respect to citizenship was to preserve equality of rights and prevent discrimination between citizens, but not radically to change the whole theory of state and federal governments and the relation of both to the people or to each other; McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 13 Sup. Ct. 3, 36 L. Ed. 869. It declares that persons may be citizens of the United States without regard to their citizenship of a particular state and makes "all persons born within the United States and subject to its jurisdiction citizens of the United States." This language is intended to except children of "ministers, consuls, and citizens or subjects of foreign states born within the United States." In order to make a citizen of the United States also a citizen of a state, he must reside within it. This distinction becomes important in connection with the question, hereafter noted, as to what are the privileges and immunities guaranteed by the amendment; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 72, 21 L. Ed. 394.

The object of the clause is to protect from the hostile legislation of the states the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States; U. S. v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 1 Sup. Ct. 601, 27 L. Ed. 290. It applies, so far as state citizenship is concerned, only to citizens removing from one state to another; In re Hobbs, 1 Woods, 542, Fed. Cas. No. 6,550; Live Stock Dealers' & Butchers' Ass'n v. Slaughter-House Co., 1 Abb. U. S. 397, Fed. Cas. No. 8,408. The constitution had already provided in art. IV, § 2, that "the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states." As to the scope and meaning of these words, see PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES.

The 14th Amendment was not intended to impose any new restrictions upon citizenship or to prevent any persons from becoming citizens by the fact of birth within the United States, who would thereby have become citizens according to the law existing before its adoption. It is declaratory in form and enabling and extending in effect. Its main purpose was to establish the citizenship of free negroes and to put it beyond doubt that all blacks as well as whites born or naturalized within the jurisdiction of the United States are citizens thereof; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394; Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 25 L. Ed. 664; In re Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 676; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. Ed. 567; Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U. S. 94, 5 Sup. Ct. 41, 28 L. Ed. 643; Benny v. O'Brien, 58 N. J. L. 36, 32 Atl. 696; Van Valkenburg v. Brown, 43 Cal. 43, 13 Am. Rep. 136.

The Civil Rights Act of 1866 used language very similar to that of the 14th Amendment, and Harlan, J., in a dissenting opinion quoted from the veto message of President Johnson his interpretation of its meaning: It "comprehends the Chinese of the Pacific states, Indians subject to taxation, the people called gypsies, as well as the entire race designated as blacks, persons of color, negroes, mulattoes, and persons of African blood. Every individual of those races born in the United States is made a citizen thereof;" Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U. S. 94, 114, 5 Sup. Ct. 41, 28 L. Ed. 643; see also In re Gee Hop, 71 Fed. 274.

"No white person born within the limits of the United States and subject to their jurisdiction, or born without those limits and subsequently naturalized under their laws, owes his status of citizenship to the recent amendments to the federal constitution;" Van Valkenburg v. Brown, 43 Cal. 43, 13 Am. Rep. 136.

The amendment does not give to congress power to protect by legislation the rights of state and national citizenship; Smoot v. Ry. Co., 13 Fed. 337; but it distinguishes between the two; Fraser v. State, 3 Tex. App. 263, 30 Am. Rep. 131. A person may be a citizen of the United States without being a citizen of any state; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 74, 21 L. Ed. 394; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 1 Woods, 308, Fed. Cas. No. 14,897; Cully v. R. Co., 1 Hughes, 536, Fed. Cas. No. 3,466. The term citizen is analogous to subject at common law; U. S. v. Rhodes, 1 Abb. U. S. 39, Fed. Cas. No. 16,151; Sampson v. Burgwin, 20 N. C. 21; McKay v. Campbell, 2 Sawy. 129, Fed. Cas. No. 8,840. The amendment does not confer citizenship on persons of foreign birth; Van Valkenburg v. Brown, 43 Cal. 43, 13 Am. Rep. 136. Neither Chinese nor Japanese can become citizens; In re Ah Yup, 5 Sawy. 155, Fed. Cas. No. 104; In re Look Tin Sing, 21 Fed. 905; In re Saito, 62 Fed. 126; In re Gee Hop, 71 Fed. 274; State v. Ah Chew, 16 Nev. 51, 40 Am. Rep. 488; unless born in this country of resident parents not engaged in the diplomatic service; In re Look Tin Sing, 10 Sawy. 353, 21 Fed. 905; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890.

Indians are not citizens; McKay v. Campbell, 2 Sawy. 129, Fed. Cas. No. 8,840; Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U. S. 94, 5 Sup. Ct. 41, 28 L. Ed. 643; but an Indian if taxed, after tribal relations are dissolved, is a citizen; U. S. v. Elm, 23 Int. Rev. Rec. 419, Fed. Cas. No. 15,048; and the child of a member of one of the Indian tribes within the United States is not a citizen, though born in the United States; McKay v. Campbell, 2 Sawy. 118, Fed. Cas. No. 8,840; and although the parents have given up their tribal relations they cannot become citizens until they are first naturalized; Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U. S. 94, 103, 5 Sup. Ct. 41, 28 L. Ed. 643.

Free persons of color, born in the United States, were always entitled to be regarded as citizens; U. S. v. Rhodes, 1 Abb. U. S. 28, Fed. Cas. No. 16,151; but see Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. (U. S.) 393, 15 L. Ed. 691. Negroes born within the United States are citizens; U. S. v. Canter, 2 Bond 389, Fed. Cas. No. 14,719; In re Turner, Chase's Dec. 157, Fed. Cas. No. 14,247 (but not before the 14th Amendment; Dred Scott v. Sandford, 9 How. (U. S.) 393, 15 L. Ed. 691; Marshall v. Donovan, 10 Bush (Ky.) 681); but not an escaped slave residing in Canada or his children; People v. Board, 26 Mich. 51, 12 Am. Rep. 297.

A woman is a citizen; Bradwell v. Illinois, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 130, 21 L. Ed. 442; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 162, 22 L. Ed. 627; but the amendment does not confer upon her the right to vote; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 1 Woods, 308, Fed. Cas. No. 14,897; U. S. v. Anthony, 11 Blatchf. 200, Fed. Cas. No. 14,459; Spencer v. Board, 1 McArthur (D. C.) 169, 29 Am. Rep. 582; Van Valkenburg v. Brown, 43 Cal. 43, 13 Am. Rep. 136; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 162, 22 L. Ed. 627; or to practice law; Bradwell v. Illinois, supra.

Children born in a foreign country of American parents, who, though residing there, still claim citizenship, are citizens of the United States; Ware v. Wisner, 50 Fed. 310; so if the father only is a citizen; R. S. § 1993. The children of ambassadors and ministers at foreign courts, however, are citizens; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890; Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbor, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 155, 7 L. Ed. 617. A person born in this country of alien parents who were domiciled, but not naturalized here, is a citizen; Benny v. O'Brien, 58 N. J. L. 36, 32 Atl. 696; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890. The child of American parents born in a foreign country, on board an American ship of which his father was captain is a citizen of the United States; U. S. v. Gordon, 5 Blatchf. 18, Fed. Cas. No. 15,231. All children born out of the United States, who are citizens thereof and who continue to reside out of the United States, shall, in order to receive the protection of the government, be required, upon reaching the age of eighteen, to record at an American consulate their intention to become residents and remain citizens of the United States, and shall be further required to take the oath of allegiance to the United States upon attaining their majority; Act March 2, 1907. It is said that formerly a man might from the circumstances of his birth be a subject of two states at once. A child of French parents born in England owed allegiance to the King of England. If he went to France he carried with him that allegiance. It was the distinction between the jus soli and the jus sanguinis. But by the act of 1870 the reception of a British subject into the allegiance of a foreign state extinguishes his British nationality ipso jure; no alien naturalized in England is to be deemed a British subject while in the country of his original allegiance so long as by the law of that country he remains a subject of it, and a man who is a British subject by the jus soli and a foreigner by the jus sanguinis may make his election between these two conditions; 18 L. Q. Rev. 47.

The act of March 2, 1907, provides that any American woman who marries a foreigner shall take the nationality of her husband. At his death, she may resume her American citizenship if abroad, by registering as an American citizen within one year with a consul of the United States or by returning to reside in the United States, or, if then residing in the United States, by continuing to reside there.

Any alien woman who acquires American citizenship by marriage to an American shall be assumed to retain the same after his death, if she continue to reside in the United States, unless she makes formal renunciation thereof before a court having jurisdiction to naturalize aliens, or if she resides abroad, she may retain her citizenship by registering as such before a United States consul within one year.

In Comitis v. Parkerson, 56 Fed. 556, it is said: "Four attorney-generals of the United States have given opinions as to the effect of a female citizen marrying an alien husband. Two have held that she became an alien; two that she remained a citizen." That case held that she did not become an alien merely by her marriage, for both husband and wife intended to reside in this country.

A French woman, who has become naturalized under the statute by a marriage with an American citizen, will again become an alien, by a second marriage to a French citizen residing in this country; Pequignot v. Detroit, 16 Fed. 211. The common law did not recognize marriage as affecting in any way the nationality of the parties. An alien woman who married a British subject remained an alien, and a woman who was a British subject could not put off her allegiance by becoming the wife of an alien. This is changed by the naturalization act of 1870; 18 L. Q. R. 49.

The child born of alien parents in the United States is held to be a citizen thereof, and to be subject to duties with regard to this country which do not attach to the father; and when children of American fathers are born without the jurisdiction of the United States the country within whose jurisdiction they are born may claim them as citizens; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S.

649, 691, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890. Such children are said to be born to a double character; the citizenship of the father is that of the child, so far as the laws of the country of which the father is a citizen are concerned, and within the jurisdiction of that country, but the child may owe another fealty besides that which attaches to the father. Opinions of the Executive Departments on Naturalization, Expatriation, and Allegiance (1873) 17, 18; U. S. For. Rel. 1873-74, 1191, 1192. The conclusions in the opinion above cited by Attorney-General Hoar were quoted and adopted by Secretary Bayard in 1886, when a son born of American parents in France made an application for a passport; U. S. For. Rel. 1886, 303.

It is said that the children of our citizens born abroad, and the children of foreigners born in the United States, have the right, on arriving at full age, to elect one allegiance and repudiate the other; Whart. Conf. L. §§ 10, 12. The objection has been taken that as our law provides no right of election by or for a child, as do the continental codes, the resulting dual citizenship is contrary to the theory of citizenship. But the difficulty is said to be rather apparent than real. When a child is born in America of Chinese parents, China claims him by the jus sanguinis; America by the jus soli. It is not a question whether he is an American or a Chinaman. He is both. The municipal laws being thus in conflict, his citizenship at any time will depend upon whether he is subject to the jurisdiction of the one or of the other country. The duality of citizenship is a fact, only in a third country. In China he is a Chinaman; in America, an American; 12 Harv. L. Rev. 55. See DOMICIL; RESIDENCE; NATURALIZATION; ALIEN.

Where a foreigner takes the oath declaring his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States, his minor sons thereby acquire an inchoate status as citizens, and if they attain majority before their father completes his naturalization, they are capable of becoming citizens by other means than the direct application provided for by the naturalization laws; Boyd v. Thayer, 143 U. S. 135, 12 Sup. Ct. 375, 36 L. Ed. 103; where a resident alien woman marries a naturalized citizen, under R. S. § 2172, her children residing with her are citizens; U. S. v. Kellar, 11 Biss. 314, 13 Fed. 82; Kreitz v. Behrens-meyer, 125 Ill. 141, 17 N. E. 232, 8 Am. St. Rep. 349; For. Rel. 1900, 527.

Nationality is not inherited through women and an illegitimate child, born abroad of an American woman, is not a citizen of the United States; 3 Moore, Dig. Int. L. 285; but when the reputed father of an illegitimate child marries the mother and was afterwards naturalized, the child was a citizen of the United States; Dale v. Irwin, 78 Ill. 170. The fact that an unnaturalized person of foreign birth is enabled by a state statute to vote and hold office does not make him a citizen; Lanz v. Randall, 4 Dill. 425, Fed. Cas. No. 8,080.

The age of the person does not affect his citizenship, though it may his political rights; 1 Abb. L. Dict. 224; nor the sex; id.; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 162, 22 L. Ed. 627; U. S. v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. Ed. 563; the right to vote and the right to hold office are not necessary constituents of citizenship; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 162, 22 L. Ed. 627; Van Valkenburg v. Brown, 43 Cal. 43, 13 Am. Rep. 136.

All natives are not citizens of the United States: the descendants of the aborigines are not entitled to the rights of citizens; see supra; also Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U. S. 103, 5 Sup. Ct. 41, 28 L. Ed. 643. Anterior to the adoption of the constitution of the United States, each state had the right to make citizens of such persons as it pleased.

A citizen of the United States residing in any of the states is a citizen of that state; Gassies v. Ballou, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 761, 8 L. Ed. 573; Catlett v. Ins. Co., Paine 594, Fed. Cas. No. 2,517; Health v. Austin, 12 Blatch. 320, Fed. Cas. No. 6,305; Prentiss v. Barton, 1 Brock. 391, Fed. Cas. No. 11,384; Rogers v. Rogers, 1 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 183; Smith v. Moody, 26 Ind. 299.

A person may be a citizen for commercial purposes and not for political purposes; Field v. Adreon, 7 Md. 209.

Among the rights which belong to the citizen derived from the constitution and laws of the United States are the right to vote at a federal election; In re Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 651, 4 Sup. Ct. 152, 28 L. Ed. 274; the right to remain on a homestead entry for the purpose of perfecting the title; U. S. v. Waddell, 112 U. S. 76, 5 Sup. Ct. 35, 28 L. Ed. 673; the right to protection while in custody on a charge of crime of the officers of the United States; Logan v. U. S., 144 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 617, 36 L. But the constitution of the United States does not secure to any the right to work at a given occupation or a particular calling free from injury, oppression or interference by individual citizens; Hodges v. U. S., 203 U. S. 1, 27 Sup. Ct. 6, 51 L. Ed. 65.

All persons who deserted the naval or military service of the United States, and did not return thereto within sixty days after the issuance of the proclamation of the president, dated March 11, 1865, are deemed to have voluntarily relinquished and forfeited their rights of citizenship, and to be incapable of holding any office of trust or profit under the United States, or of exercising any rights of citizenship thereof; R. S. § 1996.

As to citizenship as acquired by naturalization, see ALLEGIANCE; NATURALIZATION; ALIEN.

Citizenship, not residence, confers the right to sue in the federal courts; Haskell v. Bailey, 63 Fed. 873, 11 C. C. A. 476. See Reno. Non-Residents, c. vii. Corporations are citizens of the state by which they are created, irrespective of the citizenship of their members; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 168, 19 L. Ed. 357; National S. S. Co. v. Tugman, 106 U. S. 118, 1 Sup. Ct. 58, 27 L. Ed. 87; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. James, 161 U. S. 545, 16 Sup. Ct. 621, 40 L. Ed. 802; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 19 Sup. Ct. 281, 43 L. Ed. 552. If two corporations created by different states, are consolidated each still retains its own citizenship for purposes of suit; Nashua & L. R. Corp. v. R. Co., 136 U. S. 356, 10 Sup. Ct. 1004, 34 L. Ed. 363; Williamson v. Krohn, 66 Fed. 655, 13 C. C. A. 668. See Reno. Non-Residents, § 104. See MERGER.

There is an indisputable legal presumption that a state corporation, when sued or suing in a circuit court of the United States, is composed of citizens of the state which created it; and this presumption accompanies it when it does business in another state, and it may sue or be sued in the federal courts in such other state as a citizen of the state of its original creation; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. James, 161 U. S. 545, 16 Sup. Ct. 621, 40 L. Ed. 802; Barrow S. S. Co. v. Kane, 170 U. S. 100, 18 Sup. Ct. 526, 42 L. Ed. 964.

A corporation is not a "citizen" within the meaning of the first clause of section 1 of the 14th Amendment; Insurance Co. v. New Orleans, 1 Woods 85, Fed. Cas. No. 7,052; Western Turf Ass'n v. Greenberg, 204 U. S. 359, 27 Sup. Ct. 384, 51 L. Ed. 520; Northwestern Nat. Life Ins. Co. v. Riggs, 203 U. S. 243, 27 Sup. Ct. 126, 51 L. Ed. 168, 7 Ann. Cas. 1104; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650; but it is a person (q. v.). In many cases a corporation is treated as a citizen for purposes of jurisdiction; U. S. v. Transp. Co., 164 U. S. 686, 17 Sup. Ct. 206, 41 L. Ed. 599. In order to accomplish this result a curious legal fiction was created which is discussed infra.

It may now be considered as fairly well settled that except as to the 14th Amendment as stated supra, corporations are recognized as citizens by all departments of the federal government. This was done by the Supreme Court in construing an act for payment of "claims for property of citizens of the United States" taken or destroyed by Indians. It was held that the word "citizen" included corporations; U. S. v. Transp.

Co., 164 U. S. 686, 17 Sup. Ct. 206, 41 L. Ed. 599. The word has also been frequently used by Congress to include corporations; id., where an instance is referred to in R. S. § 2319; the right to purchase mineral deposits in public lands is given to "citizens of the United States and those who have declared their intention to become such," and section 2321 in prescribing how citizenship shall be established, makes specific provision for the evidence required "in the case of a corporation organized under the laws of the United States or of any state or territory thereof." Again corporations are expressly recognized as citizens by the executive branch of the government in various treaties with Great Britain, Venezuela, Peru and Mexico, all referred to in the case last cited, 164 U. S. at page 689, 17 Sup. Ct. 206, 41 L. Ed. 599.

The doctrine that a corporation is a "citizen" was not accepted in the first instance, but it was treated as an association of individuals whose citizenship should control the question of federal jurisdiction; Bank of U. S. v. Deveaux, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 61, 3 L. Ed. 38, where Marshall, C. J., delivered the opinion. But this doctrine was speedily questioned and the Chief Justice regretted the decision and expressed his conviction that it was unsound in principle; Louisville, C. & C. R. Co. v. Letson, 2 How. (U. S.) 555, 11 L. Ed. 353. The case however was followed; Breithaupt v. Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 238, 7 L. Ed. 127; and not until after his death departed from. It was then first held that, "when a corporation exercises its powers in the state which chartered it, that is its residence, and such an averment is sufficient to give the circuit courts jurisdiction." Louisville, C. & C. R. Co. v. Letson, 2 How. (U. S.) 559, 11 L. Ed. 353. In that case the doctrine was decisively sustained that "a corporation created by and doing business in a particular state is to be deemed to all intents and purposes as a person, although an artificial person, an inhabitant of the same state, for the purposes of its incorporation, capable of being treated as a citizen of that state as much as a natural person. Like a citizen it makes contracts, and though in regard to what it may do in some particulars, it differs from a natural person, and in this especially, the manner in which it can sue and be sued, it is substantially, within the meaning of the law, a citizen of the state which created it and where its business is done, for all the purposes of suing and being sued."

A few years after, Daniels, J., in a dissenting opinion insisted that a corporation could be in no sense a citizen, and Catron, J., in one of the majority opinions in the same case, considered that the jurisdiction in cases of corporations depended upon the citizenship of the managing officers; Rundle v. Canal Co., 14 How. 101, 14 L. Ed. 335.

Very soon after this, against strong dissent, the doctrine of the conclusive presumption from the habitat of a corporation as to the residence or citizenship of those who used its name and exercised its faculties, was pronounced; Marshall v. R. Co., 16 How. 314, 14 L. Ed. 953. This presumption was reaffirmed and both parties held estopped with respect to it; Covington Drawbridge Co. v. Shepherd, 20 How. 227, 15 L. Ed. 896; and the presumption was held to be a "legal" one, which no averment or evidence might rebut; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Wheeler, 1 Black 286, 17 L. Ed. 130; and in Muller v. Dows, 94 U. S. 444, 24 L. Ed. 207, the court, by Strong, J., said, "A corporation itself can be a citizen of no state in the sense in which the word 'citizen' is used in the constitution of the United States," and then reiterates the doctrine of conclusive presumption as settled law. Thus the theory on which corporations were finally recognized as citizens was based upon what Baldwin, C. J., properly characterized as a legal fiction; 41 Am. L. Rev. 38. This fiction, as he says, was given definite, and as it was supposed final, shape by Taney, C. J., in Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Wheeler, 1 Black, 286, 17 L. Ed. 130, where not only was the doctrine of conclusive presumption sustained, but it was also said that "in such a suit it can make no difference whether plaintiffs sue in their own proper names or by the corporate name and style by which they are described."

The difficulties arising from the extension of corporate operations to different states necessarily caused some modification of the doctrine, and when the courts were asked to extend it so that a corporation of one state (conclusively presumed to be composed of citizens of that state) was authorized by the law of another state to do business therein, that it should be deemed to be composed of citizens of the second state with the same jurisdictional results, they said, "We are unwilling to sanction such an extension of the doctrine, which, as heretofore established, went to the very verge of judicial power," and having stated the doctrine as beginning with an assumption of fact that state corporations were composed of citizens of the state creating them and then the change of the presumption to one of law, said, "There we are content to leave it;" St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. James, 161 U. S. 545, 16 Sup. Ct. 621, 40 L. Ed. 802. Finally when a case arose in which the suit was brought against a corporation by a stockholder asserting the control of the corporation by antagonistic interests, it was held that there might be proof that the stockholder was not a citizen of the state which created the corporation, and that he had a constitutional right to bring his suit in the federal court. The court said: "It is one thing to give to a corporation a status, and another thing to take from a citizen the right given him by the constitution." Accordingly, it was considered that the presumption of citizenship of stockholders must give way to the actual fact proved that the complainant was a citizen of a different state, and that thereupon the jurisdiction attached. After quoting the phrase above cited from 161 U. S. 545, that the doctrine as then settled "went to the very verge of judicial power," it was added: "Against the further step urged by appellees we encounter the Constitution of the United States." Doctor v. Harrington, 196 U. S. 579, 25 Sup. Ct. 355, 49 L. Ed. 606. Thus in this case the court, as is said by Baldwin, C. J., in the article above cited, "marked the limits of the verge, but in such a way as practically to overrule many of their earlier decisions." The precise question decided in the last case had undoubtedly been determined differently long before, where citizens of Louisiana sued a Mississippi Bank and a plea to the jurisdiction, that two other citizens of Louisiana were among the shareholders, was sustained; Commercial & R. Bank v. Slocumb, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 60, 10 L. Ed. 354; the changed result is attributed, by Baldwin, C. J., to the fact, not that the written law had changed, but that "a new generation of judges gave it a new interpretation and twisted a new theory into an old shape," and the ease with which this was done he considers as striking evidence both of the strength of a written constitution and the futility of a written fiction.

CITY. In England. An incorporated town or borough which is or has been the see of a bishop. Co. Litt. 108; 1 Bla. Com. 114; Cowell. There is said, however, to be no necessary connection between a city and a see. Oxford Dict., citing Freeman.

A large town incorporated with certain privileges. The inhabitants of a city. The citizens. Worcester, Dict.

Although the first definition here given is sanctioned by such high authority, it is questionable if it is essential to its character as a city, even in England, that it has been at any time a see; and it certainly retains its character of a city after it has lost its ecclesiastical character; 1 Steph. Com. 115; 1 Bla. Com. 114; and in the United States it is clearly unnecessary that it should ever have possessed this character. Originally, this word did not signify a town, but a portion of mankind who lived under the same government—what the Romans called civitas, and the Greeks πόλις; whence the word politeia—civitas seu reipublicæ status et administratio. Toullier, Dr. Civ. Fr. l. 1, t. 1, n. 202; Henrion de Pansey, Pouvoir Municipal, pp. 36, 37.

By cities in the Middle Ages in Germany was meant fortified places in the enjoyment of market-jurisdiction. The German as well as the French cities are a creation of the Middle Ages; there was an organic connection with the Roman town-system. Schröder, Lehrbuch des Deutschen Rechtsgeschichte 588.

CIVIL. In contradistinction to barbarous or savage, indicates a state of society reduced to order and regular government: thus, we speak of civil life, civil society, civil government, and civil liberty. In contradistinction to criminal, to indicate the private rights and remedies of men, as members of the community, in contrast to those which are public and relate to the government: thus, we speak of civil process and criminal process, civil jurisdiction and criminal jurisdiction.

It is also used in contradistinction to military or ecclesiastical, to natural or foreign; thus, we speak of a civil station, as opposed to a military or an ecclesiastical station; a civil death, as opposed to a natural death; a civil war, as opposed to a foreign war; Story, Const. § 789; 1 Bla. Com. 6, 125, 251; Montesquieu, Sp. of Laws, b. 1, c. 3; Rutherford, Inst. b. 2, c. 2; id. c. 3; id. c. 8, p. 359; Heineccius, Elem. Jurisp. Nat. b. 2, ch. 6.

CIVIL ACTION. IN THE CIVIL LAW.—A personal action which is instituted to compel payment, or the doing some other thing which is purely civil. Pothier, Introd. Gen. aux Cont. 110.

AT COMMON LAW.—An action which has for its object the recovery of private or civil rights or compensation for their infraction. See ACTION.

CIVIL COMMOTION. An insurrection of the people for general purposes, though it may not amount to rebellion where there is an usurped power. 2 Marsh. 793.

In the printed proposals which are considered as making a part of the contract of insurance against fire, it is declared that the insurance company will not make good any loss happening by any civil commotion.

CIVIL CONTEMPT. See CONTEMPT.

CIVIL DAMAGE ACTS. Acts passed in many of the United States which provide an action for damages against a vender of intoxicating liquors, on behalf of the wife or family of a person who has sustained injuries by reason of his intoxication. Dice v. Sherberneau, 152 Mich. 601, 116 N. W. 416, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 765; Bistline v. Ney Bros., 134 Ia. 172, 111 N. W. 422, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1158, 13 Ann. Cas. 196.

Such an act, even if it allows an action against the owner of the property where the liquor was sold, without evidence that he authorized the sale, is constitutional; Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 30 Am. Rep. 323. See, also, Bedore v. Newton, 54 N. H. 117; Moran v. Goodwin, 130 Mass. 158, 39 Am. Rep. 443; Wightman v. Devere, 33 Wis. 570; Stanton v. Simpson, 48 Vt. 628. Where the owner of a building had no knowledge as to how his premises were used, he is nevertheless liable where his agent rents it for the sale of intoxicating liquors; Hall v. Germain, 131 N. Y. 536, 30 N. E. 591. See Keedy v. Howe, 72 Ill. 133. The act in New York creates a new right of action, viz., for injury to the "means of support;"

It is not necessary that the injury should be one remediable at common law; Volans v. Owen, 74 N. Y. 526, 30 Am. Rep. 337. Injury to means of support is not necessarily deprivation of the bare necessities of life, but any substantial subtraction from the maintenance suitable to the man's business and condition of life; Herring v. Ervin, 48 Ill. App. 369. The Indiana act is constitutional, even though the liquor-seller was licensed; Horning v. Wendell, 57 Ind. 171. So in Kebrig v. Peters, 41 Mich. 475, 2 N. W. 801. If the death of the husband can be traced to an intervening cause, the liquor-seller is not liable; Schmidt v. Mitchell, 81 Ill. 195, 25 Am. Rep. 446; Collier v. Early, 54 Ind. 559. Intoxication must be shown to have been the proximate cause of the injury; Beem v. Chestnut, 120 Ind. 390, 22 N. E. 303. Damages for injuries resulting in death cannot be recovered; Kirchner v. Myers, 35 Ohio St. 85, 35 Am. Rep. 598, 601; contra, Roose v. Perkins, 9 Neb. 304, 2 N. W. 715, 31 Am. Rep. 409; Hayes v. Phelan, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 733; Mead v. Stratton, 87 N. Y. 493, 41 Am. Rep. 386; Flynn v. Fogarty, 106 Ill. 263; Bedore v. Newton, 54 N. H. 117; Rafferty v. Buckman, 46 Ia. 195; but see Jackson v. Brookins, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 530; Davies v. McKnight, 146 Pa. 610, 23 Atl. 320. In some states exemplary damages can be recovered; Weitz v. Ewen, 50 Ia. 34; Gilmore v. Mathews, 67 Me. 517; Bean v. Green, 33 Ohio St. 444; contra, Ward v. Thompson, 48 Ia. 588. The fact that the wife had bought liquor from the defendant under compulsion, or in order to keep her husband at home, does not defeat her right; id.

CIVIL DEATH. That change of state of a person which is considered in the law as equivalent to death. See DEATH.

CIVIL LAW. This term is generally used to designate the Roman jurisprudence, jus civile Romanorum.

In its most extensive sense, the term Roman Law comprises all those legal rules and principles which were in force among the Romans, without reference to the time when they were adopted. But in a more restricted sense we understand by it the law compiled under the auspices of the Emperor Justinian, and which are still in force in many of the states of modern Europe, and to which all refer as authority or written reason.

The ancient leges curiatae are said to have been collected in the time of Tarquin, the last of the kings, by a pontifex maximus of the name of Sextus or Publius Papinius. This collection is known under the title of Jus Civile Papinianum; its existing fragments are few, and those of an apocryphal character. Mackelley § 21.

After a fierce and uninterrupted struggle between the patricians and plebeians, the latter extorted from the former the celebrated law of the Twelve Tables, in the year 300 of Rome. This law, framed by the decemvirs and adopted in the comitia centuriata, acquired great authority, and constituted the foundation of all the public and private laws of the Romans, subsequently, until the time of Justinian. It is called Lex Decemviralis. From this period the sources of the jus scriptum consisted in the leges, the plebiscita, the senatus consulta, and the constitutions of the emperors, constitutiones principium; and the jus non scriptum was found partly in the mores majorum, the consuetudo, and the res judicata, or auctoritas rerum perpetua similiter judicatorum. The edicts of the magistrates, or jus honorarium, also formed a part of the unwritten law; but by far the most prolific source of the jus non scriptum consisted in the opinions and writings of the lawyers—responsa prudentium.

The few fragments of the twelve tables that have come down to us are stamped with the harsh features of their aristocratic origin. But the jus honorarium established by the praetors and other magistrates, as well as that part of the customary law which was built up by the opinions and writings of the prudentes, are founded essentially on principles of natural justice.

Many collections of the imperial constitutions had been made before the advent of Justinian to the throne. He was the first after Theodosius who ordered a new compilation to be made. For this purpose he appointed a committee of ten lawyers, with very extensive powers; at their head was the ex-quaestor sacri palatii, Johannes, and among them the afterwards well-known Tribonian. His instructions were to select, in the most laconic form, all that was still of value in the existing collections, as well as in the later constitutions; to omit all obsolete matter; to introduce such alterations as were required by the times; and to divide the whole into appropriate titles. Within fourteen months the committee had finished their labors. Justinian confirmed this new code, which consisted of twelve books, by a special ordinance, and prohibited the use of the older collections of rescripts and edicts. This code of Justinian, which is now called Codex vetus, has been entirely lost.

After the completion of this code, Justinian, in 530, ordered Tribonian, who was now invested with the dignity of quaestor sacri palatii, and sixteen other jurists, to select all the most valuable passages from the writings of the old jurists which were regarded as authoritative, and to arrange them, according to their subjects, under suitable heads. These commissioners also enjoyed very extensive powers; they had the privilege, at their discretion, to abbreviate, to add, and to make such other alterations as they might consider adapted to the times; and they were especially ordered to remove all the contradictions of the old jurists, to avoid all repetitions, and to omit all that had become entirely obsolete. The natural consequence of this was, that the extracts did not always truly represent the originals, but were often interpolated and amended in conformity with the existing law. Alterations, modifications, and additions of this kind are now usually called emblemata Triboniani. This great work is called the Pandects, or Digest, and was completed by the commissioners in three years. Within that short space of time, they had extracted from the writings of no less than thirty-nine jurists all that they considered valuable for the purpose of this compilation. It was divided into fifty books, and was entitled Digesta sive Pandectae juris enucleati ex omni vetere jure collecti. The Pandects were published on the 16th of December, 533, but they did not go into operation until the 30th of that month. In confirming the Pandects, Justinian prohibited further reference to the old jurists; and, in order to prevent legal science from becoming again so diffuse, indefinite, and uncertain as it had previously been, he forbade the writing of commentaries upon the new compilation, and permitted only the making of literal translations into Greek.

In preparing the Pandects, the compilers met very frequently with controversies in the writings of the jurists. Such questions, to the number of thirty-four, had been already determined by Justinian before the commencement of the collection of the Pandects, and before its completion the decisions of this kind were increased to fifty, and were known as the fifty decisions of Justinian. These decisions were at first collected separately, and afterward embodied in the new code.

For the purpose of facilitating the study of the law, Justinian ordered Tribonian, with the assistance of Theophilus and Dorotheus, to prepare a brief system of law under the title of Institutes.

which should contain the elements of legal science. This work was founded on, and to a great extent copied from, the commentaries of Gaius, which, after having been lost for many centuries, were discovered by the great historian Niebuhr, in 1816, in a palimpsest, or re-written manuscript, of some of the homilies of St. Jerome, in the Chapter Library of Verona. What had become obsolete in the commentaries was omitted in the Institutes, and references were made to the new constitutions of Justinian so far as they had been issued at the time. Justinian published his Institutes on the 21st November, 529, and they obtained the force of law at the same time with the Pandects, December 30, 529. Theophilus, one of the editors, delivered lectures on the Institutes in the Greek language, and from these lectures originated the valuable commentaries known under the Latin title, Theophili Antecessoris Paraphrasis Græca Institutionum Cæsarearum. The Institutes consist of four books, each of which contains several titles.

After the publication of the Pandects and the Institutes, Justinian ordered a revision of the Code, which had been promulgated in the year 529. This became necessary on account of the great number of new constitutions which he had issued, and of the fifty decisions not included in the Old Code, and by which the law had been altered, amended, or modified. He therefore directed Tribonian, with the assistance of Dorotheus, Menna, Constantinus, and Johannes, to revise the Old Code and to incorporate the new constitutions into it. This revision was completed in the same year; and the new edition of the Code, Codex repetitæ prælectionis, was confirmed on the 16th November, 534, and the Old Code abolished. The Code contains twelve books subdivided into appropriate titles.

During the interval between the publication of the Codex repetitæ prælectionis, in 535, to the end of his reign, in 565, Justinian issued, at different times, a great number of new constitutions, by which the law on many subjects was entirely changed. The greater part of these constitutions were written in Greek, in obscure and pompous language, and published under the name of Novellæ Constitutiones, which are known to us as the Novels of Justinian. Soon after his death, a collection of one hundred and sixty-eight Novels was made, one hundred and fifty-four of which had been issued by Justinian, and the others by his successors.

Justinian's collections were, in ancient times, always copied separately, and afterwards they were printed in the same way. When taken together, they were indeed called, at an early period, the Corpus Juris Civilis; but this was not introduced as the regular title comprehending the whole body; each volume had its own title until Dionysius Gothofredus gave this general title in the second edition of his glossed Corpus Juris Civilis, in 1604. Since that time this title has been used in all the editions of Justinian's collections.

It is generally believed that the laws of Justinian were entirely lost and forgotten in the Western Empire from the middle of the eighth century until the alleged discovery of a copy of the Pandects at the storming and pillage of Amalfi, in 1135. This is one of those popular errors which had been handed down from generation to generation without question or inquiry, but which has now been completely exploded by the learned discussion, supported by conclusive evidence, of Savigny, in his History of the Roman Law during the Middle Ages. Indeed, several years before the sack of Amalfi the celebrated Irnerius delivered lectures on the Pandects in the University of Bologna. The pretended discovery of a copy of the Digest at Amalfi, and its being given by Lothaire II. to his allies the Pisans as a reward for their services, is an absurd fable. No doubt, during the five or six centuries when the human intellect was in a complete state of torpor, the study of the Roman Law, like that of every other branch of knowledge, was neglected; but on the first dawn of the revival of learning the science of Roman jurisprudence was one of the first to attract the attention of mankind; and it was taught with such brilliant success as to immortalize the name of Irnerius, its great professor.

Even at the present time the Roman Law, as a complete system, exercises dominion in every state in Europe except England (though not all of Continental law comes from it. Poll. & Maitl. xxxvi). The countrymen of Lycurgus and Solon are governed by it, and in the vast empire of Russia it furnishes the rule of civil conduct. In America, it is the foundation of the law of Louisiana, Canada, Mexico, and all the republics of South America. As to its influence on the common law of England there is great diversity of opinion. The subject is too large to be considered here. It has recently been treated in detail by Holdsworth (Hist. of Engl. Law).

See CODE; DIGESTS; INSTITUTES; NOVELS; BASILICA.

CIVIL LIST. An annual sum granted by the English parliament at the commencement of each reign, for the expenses of the royal household and establishment as distinguished from the general exigencies of the state. It is the provision for the crown made out of the taxes in lieu of its proper patrimony and in consideration of the assignment of that patrimony to the public use. Wharton, Dict.

CIVIL OBLIGATION. One which binds in law, and which may be enforced in a court of justice. Pothier, Obl. 173, 191.

CIVIL OFFICER. Any officer of the United States who holds his appointment under the national government, whether his duties are executive or judicial, in the highest or the lowest departments of the government, with the exception of officers of the army and navy. Rawle, Const. 213; 1 Story, Const. § 790.

The term occurs in the constitution of the United States, art. 2, sec. 4, which provides that the president, vice-president, and civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for, and conviction of, treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors. It has been decided that a senator of the United States is not a civil officer within the meaning of this clause of the constitution. Senate Journals, 10th January, 1799; 4 Tucker, Bla. Com. App. 57, 58; Rawle, Const. 213; Sergeant, Const. Law 376; Story, Const. § 791.

CIVIL REMEDY. The remedy which the party injured by the commission of a tortious act has by action against the party committing it, as distinguished from the proceeding by indictment, by which the wrongdoer is made to expiate the injury done to society.

In cases of treason, felony, and some other of the graver offences, this private remedy is suspended, on grounds of public policy, until after the prosecution of the wrongdoer for the public wrong; 4 Bla. Com. 363; 12 East 409; Bell's Adm'r v. Troy, 35 Ala. 184. The law is otherwise in Massachusetts, except, perhaps, in case of felonies punishable with death; Boardman v. Gore, 15 Mass. 333; North Carolina, Smith v. Weaver, 1 N. C. 141; Ohio, Story v. Hammond, 4 Ohio 377; South Carolina, Robinson v. Culp, 3 Brev. 302; Mississippi, Newell v. Cowan, 30 Miss. 492; Tennessee, Ballew v. Alexander, 6 Humph. 433; Maine, Belknap v. Milliken, 23 Me. 381; and Virginia. At common law, in cases of homicide the civil remedy is merged in the public punishment; 1 Chit. Pr. 10. See INJURIES; MERGER; Msh. Cr. L. § 267.

CIVIL RIGHTS. A term applied to certain rights secured to citizens of the United States by the 13th and 14th Amendments to the constitution, and by various acts of congress made in pursuance thereof.

The act of April 9, 1866 ("ordinarily called the 'Civil Rights Bill'"; Bradley, J., in U. S. v. Stanley, 109 U. S. 3, 16, 3 Sup. Ct. 18, 27 L. Ed. 835), provided that all persons born in the United States, and not subject to any foreign power, excluding Indians not taxed, are citizens of the United States; that such citizens of every race and color shall have the same right in every state and territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, etc., and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of person and property, as is enjoyed by white citizens, and be subject to like punishment, etc., and none other. This act was said by Swayne, J., to be not a penal statute but a remedial one to be construed liberally; U. S. v. Rhodes, 1 Abb. U. S. 28, Fed. Cas. No. 16,151.

This legislation was substantially replaced by the 14th Amendment which was broader in its scope, manifestly intended to vindicate those rights against individual aggression; Kentucky v. Powers, 201 U. S. 1, 26 Sup. Ct. 387, 50 L. Ed. 633, 5 Ann. Cas. 692. This amendment was finally promulgated as adopted in July, 1868 (see FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT) and thereafter Congress enacted several laws intended to enforce its provisions. The first was the act of May 31, 1870, known as the Enforcement Act (supplemented by an amending act of February 28, 1871). The purpose was to protect negro voters by requiring in sections 1 and 2 that all citizens should be accorded equal facilities without distinction of race or color; in sections 3, 4 and 5 for the punishment through federal courts of persons who violated the act; and in section 6 for punishment in like manner of conspiracies to defeat the elective franchise. There was also provided an elaborate scheme of supervision of all elections, which included members of Congress, through the federal courts, which became R. S. §§ 2011, 2012, 2016, 2017, 2021, 2022, 5515 and 5522. The power of Congress to impose this system of supervision was upheld in Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 371, 25 L. Ed. 717; U. S. v. Gale, 109 U. S. 65, 3 Sup. Ct. 1, 27 L. Ed. 857; and sections 3 and 4 of the Enforcement Act were held unconstitutional; U. S. v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. Ed. 563; while section 6 was, in effect, held unenforceable, as not providing for the punishment of any act punishable under the constitution and laws of the United States; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588.

The next act in the series was that of April 20, 1871, known as the "Ku Klux Act." It was an effort to create both civil and criminal liability for the action of individuals against individuals; and also gave authority to the President to employ the army and navy in cases of domestic disturbance within a state and to suspend the writ of habeas corpus, and disqualified for jury service all persons involved. It also contained a remarkable section (6) making any person liable who could, by reasonable diligence, have prevented any other person from depriving individuals of the equal protection of the laws, and failed to do so. This act was practically rendered ineffective by the construction given by the Supreme Court to the power of Congress to enforce the 14th Amendment by legislation. Cases in which various provisions of it were held to be unenforceable in the cases in which it was resorted to are: U. S. v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 1 Sup. Ct. 601, 27 L. Ed. 290; Carter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 317, 5 Sup. Ct. 928, 962, 29 L. Ed. 202; Bowman v. Ry. Co., 115 U. S. 611, 6 Sup. Ct. 192, 29 L. Ed. 502; Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S. 678, 7 Sup. Ct. 656, 763, 30 L. Ed. 766; Holt v. Mfg. Co., 176 U. S. 68, 20 Sup. Ct. 272, 44 L. Ed. 374; Giles v. Harris, 189 U. S. 475, 23 Sup. Ct. 639, 47 L. Ed. 909.

The last act of the series was that of March 1, 1875, which was pre-eminently known as the "Civil Rights Act" and consisted of five sections. Section 1 provided that all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States should be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, etc., of inns, public conveyances on land or water, theatres, and other places of public amusement; subject only to the conditions and limitations established by law and applicable alike to all citizens of whatever race or color, regardless of any previous condition of servitude. Section 2 provided for the punishment of any person who should violate the foregoing section, both criminally and by a suit for a penalty. Section 3 gave jurisdiction to the federal courts exclusively of all offenses against the act, and of suits for a penalty. Section 4 provided that no person should be excluded from service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States or any state, on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude. Section 5 gave to the Supreme Court a right of review of all cases arising under the act.

Section 4 was declared constitutional in Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 676. Sections 1 and 2 were held unconstitutional and void in the Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3, 3 Sup. Ct. 18, 27 L. Ed. 835, as not being authorized by either the 13th or 14th Amendments. And having been so declared unconstitutional, they were not separable as to their operation in such places as are under the exclusive jurisdiction of the national government and the statute was therefore unconstitutional in its entirety; Butts v. Merchants & Miners Transp. Co.,

The 13th Amendment denounces a status or condition irrespective of the manner or authority by which it is created. The prohibitions of the 14th and 15th Amendments are largely upon the acts of the states; but the 13th Amendment names no party or authority, but simply forbids slavery and involuntary servitude and grants to Congress power to enforce this prohibition by appropriate legislation; Clyatt v. U. S., 197 U. S. 207, 25 Sup. Ct. 429, 49 L. Ed. 726. Such legislation may be primary and direct in its character; id.

In the Civil Rights Cases the court held that although the constitution and statutes of a state may not be repugnant to the 13th Amendment, Congress, by legislation of a direct and primary character, may, in order to enforce the amendment, reach and punish individuals whose acts are in hostility to rights and privileges derived from and secured by or dependent upon that amendment; Clyatt v. U. S., 197 U. S. 207, 25 Sup. Ct. 429, 49 L. Ed. 726. The power, duty and responsibility to enforce the rights of citizens under any of the constitutional amendments rests with the state and not with the United States government; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. Ed. 567. But in Hodges v. U. S., 203 U. S. 1, 27 Sup. Ct. 6, 51 L. Ed. 65, the 13th Amendment was held not to empower Congress to protect against individual interference (where a conspiracy was alleged to exclude negroes from making contracts to labor).

Prohibiting intermarriage between white persons and negroes is not interference with civil rights; State v. Gibson, 36 Ind. 389, 10 Am. Rep. 42; Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 537, 16 Sup. Ct. 1138, 41 L. Ed. 256; nor requiring separate schools; State v. McCann, 21 Ohio St. 210; Ward v. Flood, 48 Cal. 36, 17 Am. Rep. 405; People v. Gallagher, 93 N. Y. 438, 45 Am. Rep. 232; nor requiring separate accommodations on railroad trains within the state; Louisville, N. O. & T. Ry. Co. v. State, 66 Miss. 662, 6 South. 203, 5 L. R. A. 132, 14 Am. St. Rep. 599; id., 133 U. S. 587, 10 Sup. Ct. 348, 33 L. Ed. 784; Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 537, 16 Sup. Ct. 1138, 41 L. Ed. 256; nor is the refusal of an innkeeper or keeper of a place of public amusement or proprietor of a public conveyance to accept certain classes of patrons such an interference with the civil rights of such excluded persons as to call for their constitutional protection; U. S. v. Stanley, 109 U. S. 3, 3 Sup. Ct. 18, 27 L. Ed. 835; Miller v. Texas, 153 U. S. 537, 14 Sup. Ct. 874, 38 L. Ed. 812; nor are civil rights denied to a negro because the grand jury which indicted him for murder was purposely composed of white men; Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 565, 16 Sup. Ct. 904, 40 L. Ed. 1075; Smith v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 592, 16 Sup.

Ct. 900, 40 L. Ed. 1082. But see Rogers v. Alabama, 192 U. S. 226, 24 Sup. Ct. 257, 48 L. Ed. 417, where such discrimination on account of race was held a denial of rights under the 14th Amendment, the objection having been taken in the state court by motion to quash the indictment.

Congressional inaction is equivalent to a declaration that a carrier may by its regulations separate white and negro interstate passengers; Chiles v. Ry. Co., 218 U. S. 71, 30 Sup. Ct. 667, 54 L. Ed. 936, 20 Ann. Cas. 980.

Within the meaning of Civil Rights Acts, federal or state, a barber shop is not a place of public accommodation; Faulkner v. Solazzi, 79 Conn. 541, 65 Atl. 947, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 601, 9 Ann. Cas. 67; nor a bootblack stand; Burks v. Bosso, 180 N. Y. 341, 73 N. E. 58, 105 Am. St. Rep. 762; nor a drug store containing a soda fountain; Cecil v. Green, 161 Ill. 265, 43 N. E. 1105, 32 L. R. A. 566; nor a saloon; Kellar v. Koerber, 61 Ohio St. 388, 55 N. E. 1002; Rhone v. Loomis, 74 Minn. 200, 77 N. W. 31, changed by statute Gen. St. Minn. 1913, § 6082; nor a billiard room; Com. v. Sylvester, 13 Allen (Mass.) 247; but a barber shop cannot discriminate against a negro; Messenger v. State, 25 Neb. 674, 41 N. W. 638. A skating rink has been held a place of amusement within such a state law; People v. King, 110 N. Y. 418, 18 N. E. 245, 1 L. R. A. 293, 6 Am. St. Rep. 359; otherwise as to one carried on by the owner of the building without state or municipal license; Bowlin v. Lyon, 67 Ia. 536, 25 N. W. 766, 56 Am. Rep. 355. A race meeting is not; Grannan v. Racing Ass'n, 153 N. Y. 449, 47 N. E. 896; but a bowling alley is; Johnson v. Pop Corn Co., 24 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 135.

The Civil Rights Act is in derogation of the common law and must be strictly construed; Grace v. Moseley, 112 Ill. App. 100; and the provision that any "person" who violates its provisions shall be amenable thereto is not restricted to natural persons, but includes corporations; Johnson v. Pop Corn Co., 24 Ohio Cir. Ct. 135.

A person operating a place of public resort, who claims the right to exclude persons indicated by conduct, dress, or demeanor to be members of a disreputable class, is liable for a mistake made in the exercise of that right; Davis v. Power Co., 35 Wash. 203, 77 Pac. 209, 66 L. R. A. 802.

U. S. R. S. § 641, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 520, 521, authorizes the removal of a criminal prosecution from a state to a federal court, wherever the accused is denied or cannot enforce in the state courts any right secured to him by any law providing for equal civil rights of citizens of the United States or of all persons within the jurisdiction. But the denial in summoning or impaneling jurors of any equal civil right secured by the federal constitution or laws does not, unless authorized by the state constitution or laws as interpreted by its highest courts, give a right to such removal; Kentucky v. Powers, 201 U. S. 1, 26 Sup. Ct. 387, 50 L. Ed. 633, 5 Ann. Cas. 692, where there was a deliberate exclusion of Republicans from a jury selected to try the accused for the murder of a Democrat. In that case it was held that, while the decisions of the United States Supreme Court construing this section had reference to discrimination against negroes because of their race, the decisions were not intended to confine the operation of that section or of the 14th Amendment to negroes alone, but the rules announced apply equally where discrimination exists as to the white race; id.

Section 641, U. S. R. S., was repealed by section 297 of the Judicial Code of March 3, 1911, and is re-enacted in the same words (except the substitution of district court for circuit court) in section 31 of that code.

See EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAW; PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES; FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT; DUE PROCESS OF LAW; REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

CIVIL SERVICE. The Civil Service Act of Congress, Jan. 16, 1883, does not delegate legislative power to the President and Civil Service Commissioners; Butler v. White, 83 Fed. 578. Under it neither the Civil Service Commission nor the President, nor both combined, can make any regulations having the effect of law; nor will courts of equity enforce them. The President can enforce such regulations by the exercise of the power of removal, and if he does not do so, courts of equity will not interfere; Flemming v. Stahl, 83 Fed. 940; nor will it enjoin the removal of government officers; White v. Berry, 171 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. 917, 43 L. Ed. 199; Morgan v. Nunn, 84 Fed. 551; Jaedicke v. U. S., 85 Fed. 373, 29 C. C. A. 199; though it may be unjustly or improperly made; nor decide the right of a party to remain in office; Marshall v. Board of Managers, 201 Ill. 9, 66 N. E. 314. The power of removal is incident to the power of appointment; Flemming v. Stahl, 83 Fed. 940. A provision in a civil service law for the removal of one who is a veteran volunteer fireman only after a hearing, which is not required in the case of one not a veteran, does not contravene the 14th Amendment; People v. Folks, 89 App. Div. 171, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1100. See OFFICER.

CIVILIAN. A doctor, professor, or student of the civil law.

CIVILITER. Civilly: opposed to criminaliter, or criminally.

When a person does an unlawful act injurious to another, whether with or without an intention to commit a tort, he is responsible civiliter. In order to make him liable criminaliter, he must have intended to do the wrong; for it is a maxim, actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea. 2 East 104.

CIVILITER MORTUUS. Civilly dead. In a state of civil death.

In New York one sentenced to life imprisonment in the state prison is civiliter mortuus; Troup v. Wood, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 228; Platner v. Sherwood, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 118.

CIVITAS. A term in the Anglo-Saxon land books, commonly applied to Worcester, Canterbury and other such places, which are both bishop's sees and the head places of large districts. Maitland, Domesday and Beyond 183. See 17 L. Q. R. 274. It was applied by the Romans to the independent tribes or states of Gaul, and then to the chief towns of those tribes. Oxford Dict. s. v. City.

See CITY.

CLAIM. A challenge of the ownership of a thing which is wrongfully withheld from the possession of the claimant. Plowd. 359. See Cummings v. Lynn, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 444, 1 L. Ed. 215; Willing v. Peters, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 177.

In a popular sense, claim is a right to claim; a just title to something in the possession or at the disposal of another. Steele v. State, 159 Ala. 9, 48 South. 673.

The owner of property proceeded against in admiralty by a suit in rem must present a claim to such property, verified by oath or affirmation, stating that the claimant by whom or on whose behalf the claim is made, and no other person, is the true and bona fide owner thereof, as a necessary preliminary to his making defence; 2 Conkl. Adm. 201-210.

A demand entered of record of a mechanic or material man for work done or material furnished in the erection of a building, in Pennsylvania and some other states.

The assertion of a liability to the party making it to do some service or pay a sum of money. See Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 539, 10 L. Ed. 1060.

The possession of a settler upon the wild lands of the government of the United States; the lands which such a settler holds possession of. The land must be so marked out as to distinguish it from adjacent lands; Sargeant v. Kellogg, 5 Gilman (Ill.) 273. Such claims are considered as personalty in the administration of decedents' estates; Stewart v. Chadwick, 8 Ia. 463; are proper subjects of sale and transfer; Hill v. Smith, Morris (Ia.) 70; Freeman v. Holliday, Morris (Ia.) 80; Wilson v. Webster, Morris (Ia.) 312, 41 Am. Dec. 230; Stewart v. Chadwick, 8 Ia. 463; Turney v. Saunders, 4 Scam. (Ill.) 531; the possessor being required to deduce a regular title from the first occupant to maintain ejectment; Turney v. Saunders, 4 Scam. (Ill.) 531; and a sale furnishing sufficient consideration for a promissory note; Freeman v. Holliday, Morris (Ia.) 80; Starr v. Wilson, Morris (Ia.) 438; Piereson v. David, 1 Ia. 23. An express promise to pay for improvements made by "claimants" is good, and the proper amount to be paid may be determined by the jury; Johnson v. Moulton, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 532.

CLAIM OF CONUSANCE. An intervention by a third person demanding jurisdiction of a cause which the plaintiff has commenced out of the claimant's court. Now obsolete. 3 Bla. Com. 298. See COGNIZANCE.

CLAIM PROPERTY BOND. A bond filed by a defendant in cases of replevin and of execution. Upon filing such bond in replevin the defendant is entitled to a return of the goods by the sheriff. Its use is said to have been long sanctioned by usage in Pennsylvania; Snyder v. Frankenfield, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 767. It has taken the place in replevin of the writ de proprietate probanda; Weaver v. Lawrence, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 156, 1 L. Ed. 79. Upon giving such bond defendant's title to the goods becomes indefeasible and the plaintiff can only look to the security for the damages which he may recover; 1 Dall. U. S. (4th Ed. by Brightly) 156, 157, note.

In the case of an execution, if a third party files such bond, the sheriff may at his peril withdraw his levy.

CLAIMANT. In Admiralty Practice. A person authorized and admitted to defend a libel brought in rem against property; thus, Thirty Hogsheads of Sugar, Bentzon, Claimant v. Boyle, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 191, 3 L. Ed. 701.

CLAMOR (Lat.). A suit or demand; a complaint. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.

In Civil Law. A claimant. A debt; any thing claimed from another. A proclamation; an accusation. Du Cange.

CLARENDON, ASSIZE OF. A statute (1166) the principal feature of which was an improvement of judicial procedure in the case of criminals. It was a part of the same scheme of reform as the Constitution of Clarendon. See James C. Carter, The Law, etc., 65.

CLARENDON, CONSTITUTIONS OF. Certain statutes made in the reign of Henry II. at a parliament held at Clarendon (A. D. 1164) by which the king checked the power of the pope and his clergy and greatly narrowed the exemption they claimed from secular jurisdiction.

Previous to this time, there had been an entire separation between the clergy and laity, as members of the same commonwealth. The clergy, having emancipated themselves from the laws administered by the courts of law, had assumed powers and exemptions quite inconsistent with the good government of the country.

This state of things led to the enactment referred to. By this enactment all controversies arising out of ecclesiastical matters were required to be determined in the civil courts, and all appeals in spiritual causes were to be carried from the bishops to the primate, and from him to the king, but no further without the king's consent. The archbishops and bishops were to be regarded as barons of the realm, possessing the privileges and subject to the burdens belonging to that rank, and bound to attend the king in his councils. The revenues of vacant sees were to belong to the king, and goods forfeited to him by law were no longer to be protected in churches or church-yards. Nor were the clergy to pretend to the right of enforcing the payment of debts in cases where they had been accustomed to do so, but should leave all lawsuits to the determination of the civil courts. The rigid enforcement of these statutes by the king was unhappily stopped, for a season, by the fatal event of his disputes with Archbishop Becket. Fitz Stephen 27; 2 Lingard 59; 1 Hume 382; Wilkins 321; 4 Bla. Com. 422; 1 Poll. & M. 430-440, 461; 2 id. 196.

CLASS. A number of persons or things ranked together for some common purpose or as possessing some attribute in common.

The term is used of legatees; Swinton v. Legare, 2 McCord Eq. (S. C.) 440; of obligees in a bond; Justices of Cumberland v. Armstrong, 14 N. C. 284; and of other collections of persons; White v. Delavan, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 52; Ellis v. Kimball, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 132; Wheeler v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 338; 1 Ld. Raym. 708.

CLASSIFICATION IN STATUTES. As to what is proper classification of the subjects of statutes, see EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAW; POLICE POWERS.

CLAUSE. A part of a treaty; of a legislative act; of a deed; of a will, or other written instrument. A part of a sentence.

CLAUSULA DEROGATIVA. A clause in a will which provides that no will subsequently made is to be valid. The latter would still be valid, but there would be ground for suspecting undue influence. Grotius.

CLAUSUM. In Old English Law. Close. Closed.

A writ was either clausum (close) or apertum (open). Grants were said to be by littera patente (open grant) or littera clausa (close grant); 2 Bla. Com. 346.

A close. An enclosure.

Occurring in the phrase quare clausum fregit (Rucker v. McNeely, 4 Blackf. [Ind.] 181), it denotes in this sense only realty in which the plaintiff has some exclusive interest, whether for a limited or unlimited time or for special or for general purposes; 1 Chit. Pl. 174; Austin v. Sawyer, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 39; 6 East 606.

CLAUSUM FREGIT. See QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT; TRESPASS.

CLEAN HANDS. It is said that a party seeking the aid of a court of equity must come into court with clean hands. It refers only to wrongful conduct in the particular acts or transactions which raise the equity he seeks to enforce; Trice v. Comstock, 121 Fed. 620, 57 C. C. A. 646, 61 L. R. A. 176; West v. Washburn, 153 App. Div. 460, 138 N. Y. Supp. 230.

CLEAR. Free from indistinctness or uncertainty; easily understood; perspicuous, plain; free from impediment, embarrassment or accusation. Webster.

For a clear deed, see Rohr v. Kindt, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 563, 39 Am. Dec. 53; clear title; Roberts v. Bassett, 105 Mass. 409; clear of expense; 2 Ves. & B. 341; clear of assessments; Peart v. Phipps, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 386; clear days; 14 M. & W. 120; 3 B. & Ald. 581.

CLEARANCE. A certificate given by the collector of a port, in which it is stated that the master or commander (naming him) of a ship or vessel named and described, bound for a port named (and having on board goods described, in case the master requires the particulars of his cargo to be stated in such clearance), has entered and cleared his ship or vessel according to law.

This certificate, or clearance, evidences the right of the vessel to depart on her voyage; and clearance has therefore been properly defined as a permission to sail. The same term is also used to signify the act of clearing. Worcester, Dict.

By U. S. R. S. § 4197, the master of any vessel bound to a foreign port shall deliver to the collector of the district from which he sails a sworn manifest of his cargo and its value. To sail without a clearance is punishable by a fine of $500.

By R. S. § 4200, before a clearance can be granted to any foreign-bound vessel the owners, shippers or consignors of the cargo shall deliver to the collector sworn manifests of their parts of the cargo, specify the kind of goods shipped and their value, and the master of the vessel and the owners, etc., of the cargo shall subscribe an oath as to the foreign place in which such cargo is intended truly to be landed.

The collector of the port cannot refuse clearance because a ship contains contraband; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Trading Co., 195 U. S. 439, 25 Sup. Ct. 84, 49 L. Ed. 269.

According to Boulay-Paty, Dr. Com. t. 2, p. 19, the clearance is imperatively demanded for the safety of the vessel; for if a vessel should be found without it at sea it may be legally taken and brought into some court for adjudication on a charge of piracy. See SHIP'S PAPERS.

CLEARANCE CARD. A letter given to an employé by a railroad company, at the time of his discharge or end of service, showing the cause of such discharge or voluntary quittance, the length of time of service, his capacity, and such other facts as would give to those concerned information of his former employment. Such a card is in no sense a letter of recommendation and in many cases might be of a form and character which the holder would hesitate and decline to present to any person to whom he was making application for employment; Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Jenkins, 174 Ill. 398, 51 N. E. 811, 62 L. R. A. 922, 66 Am. St. Rep. 296; with a full note on the question of the duty of employers to give recommendations to employées either discharged or voluntarily quitting. See BLACKLIST.

CLEARING-HOUSE. An office where bankers settle daily with each other the balance of their accounts.

The origin of the system is said to have been in Edinburgh; at least the bankers of that city so claim; but the earliest record of one (and that is not clear as to date) is that of London, founded in 1775, or possibly earlier. It was started in the ale-house of those times, the general resort of proprietors of new enterprises. The system, however, increased in usefulness so much as to require rooms, which were procured in Lombard Street, and a system was rapidly developed of exchanging checks and other securities to reduce the amount of actual money required for settlements. In this country such associations were established in New York in 1853, Boston in 1856, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Cleveland in 1858, Worcester in 1861, Chicago in 1865, and since that date the system has extended to most of the cities in which there are several banks. They also exist in the continental countries of Europe. Most of these associations are unincorporated, but in Minnesota there is an act (March 4, 1893) for their incorporation. The Clearing-House Association of New York consists of all the incorporated banks—private bankers not being admitted, as in London. Two clerks from each bank attend at the clearing-house every morning, where one takes a position inside of a counter at a desk bearing the number of his bank, the other standing outside the counter and holding in his hand parcels containing the checks on each of the other banks received the previous day. At the sound of a bell, the outside men begin to move, and at each desk they deposit the proper parcel, with an account of its contents—until, having walked around, they find themselves at their own desk again. At the end of this process the representative of each bank has handed to the representatives of every other bank the demands against them, and received from each of the other banks their demands on his bank. A comparison of the amounts tells him at once whether he is to pay into or receive from the clearing-house a balance in money. Balances are settled daily. In London the practice of presenting checks at the clearing-house has been held a good presentment to the banker at law. It is not usual to examine the checks until they are taken to the bank, and if any are then found not good they are returned to the bank which presented them, which settles for such returned checks. In this country when a check is returned not good through the clearing-house, it is usually again presented at the bank.

To accomplish this purpose of settling daily balances was the original and still is the principal object of a clearing-house, whatever differences of method or detail may be found in different cities. The mode of proceeding in Philadelphia is described in Crane v. Clearing-House, 32 W. N. C. (Pa.) 358, and Philler v. Yardley, 62 Fed. 645, 10 C. C. A. 562, 25 L. R. A. 824; and that of London in 5 Mann. & G. 348, 6 Scott, N. R. 1, 12 L. J. C. P. 113.

The original purpose of a clearing-house—the exchange of paper payable by the several banks and the settlement of the daily balances between them—has undergone a gradual but very extensive expansion. In the larger cities they have become to some extent financial regulators and the medium through which in times of financial disturbance there is attained concerted action by the banks of a city. In the panic of 1893, the New York clearing-house issued "clearing-house certificates" representing the deposit of securities; these could be used by the banks to settle clearing-house balances.

Such certificates are held valid, and suit may be brought by the clearing-house committee upon notes included in the collateral deposited by a bank for the purpose of taking out certificates; Philler v. Woodfall, 32 W. N. C. (Pa.) 183; Philler v. Field, 29 W. N. C. (Pa.) 139; Philler v. Esler, 29 W. N. C. (Pa.) 258. A clearing-house due bill is an ordinary due bill from a bank "to Banks," and usually stipulates that it is good when both signed and countersigned by duly authorized officers, and to be payable only through the clearing-house on the day after its issue. During the financial difficulties above referred to such due bills were used by the banks in payment of checks whenever practicable, being as available as cash for deposit in another bank of the same city. They are held not to be certificates of deposit but negotiable, and requiring indemnity to recover the amount due on them if lost or stolen; Dutton v. Bank, 16 Phila. (Pa.) 94.

A clearing-house association is properly sued in the names of the committee who have the entire control of its securities and business funds; Yardley v. Philler, 58 Fed. 746.

The tendency of the decisions upon the rights and liabilities of clearing-houses is to treat them with respect to the customs of the banks as merely instruments of making the exchanges, and not as liable to individual depositors or holders of paper for funds which have passed through the clearing-house in the process of exchange between banks. They are not responsible for anything except the proper distribution of money paid to settle balances, their purpose being to provide a convenient place where checks may be presented and balances adjusted; German Nat. Bank v. Bank, 118 Pa. 294, 12 Atl. 303. When a bank suspended after the morning exchanges but before the payment of the general balance due from it, which was made good by the other banks and applied by the clearing-house to the indebtedness of the suspended bank, it was held that the clearing-house was not liable to the holder of a draft on one of the other banks deposited in the suspended bank, because the draft was never in the hands of the clearing-house for collection, nor did its manager hold the proceeds thereof with knowledge of the plaintiff's rights or of the existence of the draft until demand was made upon it; Crane v. Clearing-House, 32 W. N. C. (Pa.) 358.

The rules of a clearing-house have the binding effect of law as between the banks; People v. Bank, 77 Hun 159, 28 N. Y. Supp. 407; German Nat. Bank v. Bank, 118 Pa. 294, 12 Atl. 303; Overman v. Bank, 31 N. J. L. 563; Blaffer v. Bank, 35 La. Ann. 251; but do not affect the relations between the payee of a check presented through the clearing-house for payment, and the bank on which the check is drawn; People v. Bank, 77 Hun 159, 28 N. Y. Supp. 407.

The course of business of a clearing-house is based upon the idea that the members are principals (and trusted by each other as such), and not agents of parties not members, and this renders possible the volume of business transacted; Overman v. Bank, 31 N. J. L. 563.

With respect to the effect of presentment at the clearing-house or failure to demand payment there, it has been held that presentation to the banker's clerk at the clearing-house was a presentation at the place of payment designated in a bill of exchange; 2 Campb. 596; that the failure to present a check at the clearing-house in violation of an imperative custom to do so does not discharge the drawer of the check as between the bankers and their customer; 1 Nev. & M. 541; and such failure to present is not material if presented in the ordinary way, even if the check was to have been paid if presented at the clearing-house, the latter being merely a substitute for ordinary presentation, authorized by custom but not required except as a substitute for the regular mode if that is omitted; Kleekamp v. Meyer, 5 Mo. App. 444. Sending notes to a bank through the clearing-house is but leaving them there for payment during banking hours and not a demand at the bank for immediate payment; National Exchange Bank v. Bank, 132 Mass. 147.

The right of return of paper found not good secured by the rules of the clearing-house is a special provision in compensation for payment without inspection, with an opportunity for future inspection and recall of the payment. When the opportunity is had and not availed of, the general principles of law intervene to regulate the rights and liabilities of the paying bank; National Bank of North America of Boston v. Bangs, 106 Mass. 441, 8 Am. Rep. 349. The return of such paper after its receipt through the clearing-house is not prevented by its having been marked cancelled by mistake; 1 Campb. 426; 5 Mann. & G. 348; nor by putting it on a file and entering it in the journal; German Nat. Bank v. Bank, 118 Pa. 294, 12 Atl. 303; nor by failure to return by the time fixed by rule whether caused by mistake of fact; Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Thompson, 129 Mass. 438, 37 Am. Rep. 376; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Bank, 101 Mass. 281, 100 Am. Dec. 120; or not; Boylston Nat. Bank v. Richardson, 101 Mass. 287; nor in such case if the bank had through mistake given credit to the depositor; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Bank, 139 Mass. 513, 2 N. E. 89; but a rule of the Chicago clearing-house limiting the time of return was held to constitute a binding contract, and the right to recover back a payment made by mistake and discovered within fifteen minutes was denied and the Massachusetts rule criticised; Preston v. Bank, 23 Fed. 179.

When there is no rule and no uniform custom, payment at the clearing-house is provisional, to become complete when payment is made in the ordinary course of business, and if not so made to be treated as payment under a mistake of fact, and with the same rights of reclamation as if made without a clearing-house; National Exchange Bank v. Bank, 132 Mass. 147. The rules may be waived; Stuyvesant Bank v. Banking Ass'n, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 197.

A bank not a member, in sending checks through the clearing-house, is bound by its action under its rules in returning payment made by mistake: id.; but a bank not a member is not bound by the clearing-house rules as to the time of returning checks not good, in case of a check sent by it through a bank which was a member; such a case is governed by the ordinary principles applicable to it and not by the clearing-house rules; Overman v. Bank, 31 N. J. L. 563.

When the drawee bank received a forged check through the clearing-house as genuine and failed to return it or to discover the forgery for several days, the bank which took the check and sent it to the clearing-house could not be held liable for negligence in receiving it from a stranger and sending it through the clearing-house without notice; Commercial & Farmers' Nat. Bank of Baltimore v. Bank, 30 Md. 11, 96 Am. Dec. 554.

In London there is also a railway clearing-house.

See National City Bank v. Bank, 101 N. Y. 595, 5 N. E. 463; 25 L. R. A. 824, note.

See INSOLVENT.

CLEMENTINES. The collection of decretals or constitutions of Pope Clement V., which was published, by order of John XXII., his successor, in 1317.

The death of Clement V., in 1314, prevented him from publishing this collection, which is properly a compilation as well of the epistles and constitutions of this pope as of the decrees of the council of Vienna, over which he presided. The Clementines are divided into five books, in which the matter is distributed nearly upon the same plan as the decretals of Gregory IX. See Dupin, Bibliothèque.

CLERGY. The name applicable to ecclesiastical ministers as a class.

Clergymen were exempted by the emperor Constantine from all civil burdens. Baronius, ad ann. 319, § 30. Lord Coke says, 2 Inst. 3, ecclesiastical persons have more and greater liberties than other of the king's subjects, wherein to set down all would take up a whole volume of itself. In the United States the clergy is not established by law.

CLERGY, BENEFIT OF. See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

CLERGYABLE. Allowing of, or entitled to, the benefit of clergy (privilegium clericale). Used of persons or crimes. 4 Bla. Com. 371. See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

CLERICAL ERROR. An error made by a clerk in transcribing or otherwise. This is always readily corrected by the court. An error, for example, in the teste of a fi. fa.; Baker v. Smith, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 185; Berthon v. Keeley, id. 205; or in the teste and return of a vend. exp.; or in a certificate of a notary; Schwarz v. Baird, 100 Ala. 154, 13 South. 947; or where an action is begun by one plaintiff and is afterwards amended by adding additional parties, the entering of judgment in favor of "the plaintiff" instead of "the plaintiffs" is a clerical error and amendable on appeal; Shoemaker v. Knorr, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 197, 1 L. Ed. 97; or in writing Dowell for McDowell; Peddle v. Hollinshead, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 284. See 8 Co. 162 a; Citizens' Bank v. Farwell, 56 Fed. 570, 6 C. C. A. 24; Storke v. Storke, 99 Cal. 621, 34 Pac. 339. An error is amendable where there is something to amend by, and this even in a criminal case; Benner v. Frey, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 367; 12 Ad. & E. 217; for the party ought not to be harmed by the omission of the clerk; Jack v. Eales, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 102; even of his signature, if he affixes the seal; McCormick v. Meason, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 97. Where a clerical error has crept into a decree, the court will rectify it, though the decree has been passed and entered; Hovey v. McDonald, 109 U. S. 157, 3 Sup. Ct. 136, 27 L. Ed. 888; but not after the term without notice, especially where the condition of the parties has changed; Wetmore v. Karrick, 205 U. S. 141, 27 Sup. Ct. 434, 51 L. Ed. 745.

CLERICI DE CURSU. See CURSITOR.

CLERICUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Any one who has taken orders in church, of whatever rank; monks. A general term including bishops, subdeacons, readers, and cantors. Du Cange. Used, also, of those who were given up to the pursuit of letters, and who were learned therein. Also of the amanuenses of the judges or courts of the king. Du Cange.

In English Law. A secular priest, in opposition to a regular one. Kennett, Paroch. Ant. 171. A clergyman or priest; one in orders. Nullus clericus nisi causidicus (no clerk but what is a pleader). 1 Bla. Com. 17. A freeman, generally. One who was charged with various duties in the king's household. Du Cange.

CLERICUS MERCATI HOSPITII REGIS. The clerk of the market at the king's gate. An honorable office pertinent to the ancient custom of holding markets in the suburbs of the king's court. In early times he witnessed the parties' verbal contracts. At a later date he adjudicated in its prices of commodities; he inquired as to all weights and measures; he measured land; and had the power to send bakers and others to the pillory. Inderwick, The King's Peace.

CLERK. In Commercial Law. A person in the employ of a merchant, who attends only to a part of his business, while the merchant himself superintends the whole. He differs from a factor in this, that the latter wholly supplies the place of his principal in respect to the property consigned to him. Pardessus, Droit Comm. n. 38; 1 Chit. Pr. 80.

In Ecclesiastical Law. Any individual who is attached to the ecclesiastical state and has submitted to the tonsure. One who has been ordained. 1 Bla. Com. 388. A clergyman. 4 Bla. Com. 367.

In Offices. A person employed in an office, public or private, for keeping records or accounts.

His business is to write or register, in proper form, the transactions of the tribunal or body to which he belongs. Some clerks, however, have little or no writing to do in their offices: as the clerk of the market, whose duties are confined chiefly to superintending the markets. This is a common use of the word at the present day, and is also a very ancient signification, being derived, probably, from the office of the clericus, who attended, amongst other duties, to the provisioning the king's household. See Du Cange.

A person serving a practising solicitor under binding articles in England, for the purpose of being admitted to practice as a solicitor. See CLERKSHIP.

In New England, used to designate a corporation official who performs some of the duties of a secretary.

CLERK OF THE CROWN. An officer whose duty it is to issue writs for election for members of Parliament, upon the warrant of the Lord Chancellor and to deliver to the House of Commons the list of members returned (elected); to certify the election of Scotch and Irish peers; and to perform duties formerly performed by the Clerk of the Hanaper. He is Permanent Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Office, House of Lords.

CLERK OF THE PEACE. An officer of Courts of Quarter Sessions in England.

CLERK OF THE TABLE. An official of the British House of Commons who advises the speaker on all questions of order.

CLERKSHIP. The period which must be spent by a law-student in the office of a practising attorney before admission to the bar. 1 Tidd, Pr. 61. Under the present rules he must serve as a clerk to a practising solicitor under binding articles for from three to five years; Odgers, C. L. 1431. For the earlier history of clerkships at law, see Report of Amer. Bar Assoc., 1911 (Section of Leg. Educ.).

CLIENT. In Practice. One who employs and retains an attorney or counsellor to manage or defend a suit or action to which he is a party, or to advise him about some legal matters. See ATTORNEY-AT-LAW.

CLOGGING THE EQUITY OF REDEMPTION. SEE EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

CLOSE. An interest in the soil. Doctor & Stud. 30; 6 East 154; 1 Burr. 133; or in trees or growing crops. Clap v. Draper, 4 Mass. 266, 3 Am. Dec. 215; Stewart v. Doughty, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 113.

In every case where one man has a right to exclude another from his land, the law encircles it, if not already inclosed, with an imaginary fence, and entitles him to a compensation in damages for the injury he sustains by the act of another passing through his boundary—denominating the injurious act a breach of the inclosure; Hamm. N. P.

151; Doctor & Stud. dial. 1, c. 8, p. 30; Worrall v. Rhoads, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 430, 30 Am. Dec. 274.

In considering the cases in which trespass might be supported for an injury to land (for breaking the close) it is laid down that the term close, being technical, signifies the interest in the soil, and not merely an inclosure in the common acceptance of that term. It lies, however temporary the tenant's interest, and though it be merely in the profits of the soil as vestura terræ or herbagii pasturæ; Co. Litt. 4 b; 5 East 480; 6 id. 606; 5 T. R. 535; prima tonsura; 7 East 200; chase for warren, etc.; 2 Salk. 637; if it be in exclusion of others; 2 Bla. Rep. 1150; 8 M. & S. 499. So it lies by one having a right to take off grass; 6 East 602; or after a tenancy expires, a right to emblements; Stewart v. Doughty, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 108; or by one having the right to cut timber trees; Clap v. Draper, 4 Mass. 266, 3 Am. Dec. 215.

Ejectment will not lie for a close; 11 Co. 55; Cro. Eliz. 235; Ad. Ej. 24. See CLAUSUM.

CLOSE COPIES. Copies which might be written with any number of words on a sheet. Office copies were to contain only a prescribed number of words on each sheet.

CLOSE HAULED. The arrangement of a vessel's sails when she endeavors to make progress in the nearest direction possible towards that point of the compass from which the wind blows. 6 El. & Bl. 771; Black, L. Dict.

CLOSE ROLLS. Rolls containing the record of the close writs (literæ clausæ) and grants of the king, kept with the public records. 2 Bla. Com. 346. See LETTERS CLOSE; ROLLS.

CLOSE SEASON. A time of the year when the taking of game is prohibited by statute. See FENCE MONTH.

CLOSE WRITS. Writs directed to the sheriff instead of to the lord. 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 45. Writs containing grants from the crown to particular persons and for particular purposes, which, not being intended for public inspection, are closed up and sealed on the outside, instead of being open and having the seal appended by a strip of parchment. 2 Bla. Com. 346; Sewall, Sher. 372.

CLOSED COURT. A term sometimes used to designate the Common Pleas Court of England when only serjeants could argue cases, which practice persisted until 1833.

CLOSING A CONTRACT. An expression used in New York to indicate the settlement or carrying out of a contract.

CLOTURE (Fr.). The procedure in deliberative assemblies whereby debate is closed. Introduced in the English parliament in the session of 1882. Wharton. It is generally effected by moving the previous question. See Roberts, Rules of Order §§ 20, 58 a. This motion is not recognized in the senate of the United States.

CLOUD ON TITLE. See BILL TO QUIET POSSESSION AND TITLE.

CLUB. An incorporated or unincorporated association of persons for purposes of a social, literary, or political nature or the like. The latter is not a partnership; 2 M. & W. 172; 87 L. T. 571. No member becomes liable as such to pay to the society or any one else any money except the amount required by the rules; id.; [1903] A. C. 139.

The by-laws of a club constitute a contract between the members and the club. A member's resignation, to be effectual, must comply with the by-laws; Boston Club v. Potter, 212 Mass. 23, 98 N. E. 614, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 397.

A club organized for various sports voted, by a majority, to abolish pigeon shooting; held, that it was within its power; [1906] 1 Ch. 480.

See RESIGNATION; AMOTION; LIQUOR LAWS.

CO-ADMINISTRATOR. One who is administrator with one or more others. See ADMINISTRATOR.

CO-ASSIGNEE. One who is assignee with one or more others. See ASSIGNMENT.

CO-EXECUTOR. One who is executor with one or more others. See EXECUTOR.

CO-RESPONDENT. Any person called upon to answer a petition or other proceeding, but now chiefly applied to a person charged with adultery with the husband or wife, in a suit for divorce, and made jointly a respondent to the suit. See DIVORCE.

COADJUTOR. The assistant of a bishop. An assistant.

COADUNATIO. A conspiracy. 9 Coke 56.

COAL NOTE. A species of promissory note authorized by 3 Geo. II. c. 26, §§ 7, 8, which, having these words expressed therein, namely, "value received in coals," is to be protected and noted as an inland bill of exchange.

COAST. The margin of a country bounded by the sea. This term includes the natural appendages of the territory which rise out of the water, although they are not of sufficient firmness to be inhabited or fortified. Shoals perpetually covered with water are not, however, comprehended under the name of coast. The small islands situate at the mouth of the Mississippi, composed of earth and trees drifted down by the river, which are not of consistency enough for supporting life, and are uninhabited, though resorted to for shooting birds, form a part of the coast.

COCKET. A seal appertaining to the king's custom-house. Reg. Orig. 192. A scroll or parchment sealed and delivered by the officers of the custom-house to merchants as an evidence that their wares are customed. Cowell; Spelman, Gloss. See 7 Low. C. 116. The entry office in the custom-house itself. A kind of bread said by Cowell to be hard-baked; sea-biscuit; a measure. See WASTEL.

CODE (Lat. Codez, the stock or stem of a tree—originally the board covered with wax, on which the ancients originally wrote). A body of law established by the legislative authority of the state, and designed to regulate completely, so far as a statute may, the subject to which it relates.

From the rude beginning, expressed in the derivation of the word, there developed the somewhat diversified signification which it has acquired in jurisprudence. It has been used to describe a collection of pre-existing laws arranged and classified into a logical system, or one intended to be such, without the interpolation of new matter, and also a declaration of the law composed partly of such materials as might be at hand from all sources,—statutes, adjudications, customs,—supplemented by such amendments, alterations, and additions as seemed to the lawgivers to be required to constitute a complete system and adapt it to the purpose of its adoption, or promulgation.

This mixed character, it may probably be asserted with confidence, is essential to the existence of a code as the term is now understood, and has entered more or less into the composition of every body of laws known as such in history.

The idea of a code involves that of the exercise of the legislative power in its promulgation; but the name has been loosely applied also to private compilations of statutes.

The subject of codes and the kindred topics of legal reform have received great attention from the jurists and statesmen of the present century. Probably no subject in the domain of law has been the occasion of more extended and earnest discussion than the relative merits of the Code system as it is understood by jurists, and that which is considered and treated on both sides of the controversy as its antithesis, a body of law partly written and partly unwritten, finding its beginnings in customs gradually ripening into customary law; seeking later expression in statutes and passing through a period of judicial interpretation and modification by being fitted, as it were, into successive cases, with sufficiently varying facts to produce that flexibility which is needed for final crystallization into a body of rules and principles sufficiently well settled as to have attained the dignity of a well ordered system. Of the one the Roman Law is the illustration unrivalled in history, as is the English Common Law of the other. While, however, these do represent two distinct and well defined systems of the development of law, the thoughtful and impartial reader of what is written by the ardent advocates of each, assuming as many of them do that the adoption of the one is the exclusion of the other, may find himself inclining to the conclusion that in dealing with this as with most juridical questions, an entirely one-sided view will leave much to be desired. It may be permissible to question whether these two systems are essentially distinct and antagonistic types, or different methods employed in and essential to the evolution of municipal law as a whole, and of the science of jurisprudence in its widest sense. It is true that there are recorded in history proposals to form a code of laws de novo having relation only to the future and disregarding the past, but this has been properly regarded as the visionary dream of the enthusiast rather than the matured conclusion of a judicious lawgiver. It is hardly to be questioned that no code has ever taken its place as an instrument of legal administration into which there did not enter as a substantial constituent a body of existing common law, and that every body of unwritten law on a given subject is tending towards ultimately finding its expression in what is tantamount to a code, whethere called by that name or not. Indeed, if dry technicalities of definition be avoided, it is hardly an exaggeration to say that there are single decisions of English or American judges, such, for example, as Coggs v. Bernard, which may not be inaptly termed a code or codification of the law on the subject to which they relate, and which come to be recognized as such with authority which could hardly be increased by legislative affirmation. The difficulty of making a hard and fast line between the two systems is quite well shown by all the attempts to define precisely the word code. A judicious writer, after a review of the historical codes, concludes that substantially they are of three kinds; and his classification is not only satisfactory in itself but admirably illustrates what has been said.

"First.—The classification of statutes of force systematically arranged, according to subject-matter, without amendment, alteration, or interpolation of new law, the only change being in the correction of errors of expression, repetitions, superfluities, and contradictions, compressed into as small a space as possible, which, when done, will leave the laws in letter and in spirit just as they were.

"Second.—The same as the first in form, but going further and making such amendments as are deemed necessary to harmonize and perfect the existing system.

"Third.—To take a yet greater latitude, and, without changing the existing system of laws, to add new laws, and to repeal old laws, both in harmony with it, so that the code will meet present exigencies, and so far as possible provide for the future; and this is real codification." To these statements the writer adds a fourth, "wholly impracticable and even visionary," which is "to disregard at will existing laws, and make a system substantially new," such as the author deems best and wisest. Paper of Judge Clark, Rep't Ga. St. Bar Ass'n, 1890.

There is unquestionably a strong tendency towards codification in a general sense, which manifests itself in the tendency to general revisions of federal and state statutes, the adoption of codes of procedure by name in several of them, and in fact though not in name in many others, the codes of India, and not the least in the growing interest in an active discussion of the subject. If this interest leads to action wisely tempered with a due regard for the proper functions of written and unwritten law, and freedom from extreme views and the effort to accomplish the impossible task of reducing all law to the unyielding forms of statutory enactment, it will undoubtedly be fruitful of good results.

When it is considered how rapidly statutes accumulate as time passes, it is obvious that great convenience will be found in having the statute law in a systematic body, arranged according to subject-matter, instead of leaving it unorganized, scattered through the volumes in which it was from year to year promulgated. Revision to this extent is very frequent, and is what is usually accomplished in the Revised Statutes of many states which are inartificially termed codes. Of this general character were the Revised Statutes of the United States; infra. When the transposition of the statutes from a chronological to a scientific order is undertaken, more radical changes immediately propose themselves. These are of two classes: first, amendments for the purpose of harmonizing the inconsistencies which such an arrangement brings to notice, and supplying defects; second, the introduction into the system of all other rules which are recognized as the unwritten or common law of the state. The object of the latter class of changes is to embody in one systematic enactment all that is thenceforth to be regarded as the law of the land. It is this attempt which is usually intended by the distinctive term codification.

The first two of the questions thus indicated may be deemed as settled, by general concurrence, in favor of the expediency of such changes; and the process of the collection of the statute law in one general code, or in a number of partial codes or systematic statutes, accompanied by the amendments which such a revision invites, is a process which for some years has been renovating the laws of England and the United States. Although at the same time something has been done, especially in this country, towards embodying in these statutes principles which before rested in the common or report law, yet the feasibility of doing this completely, or even to any great extent, must be deemed an open question. It has been discussed with great ability by Bentham, Savigny, Thibaut, and others. It is undeniable that, however successfully a code might be supposed to embody all existing and declared law, so as to supersede previous sources, it cannot be expected to provide prospectively for all the innumerable cases which the diversity of affairs rapidly engenders, and there must soon come a time when it must be studied in the light of numerous explanatory decisions.

Real codification involves the most intimate and exhaustive knowledge not only of the statute law to be included, but also of the judicial interpretation and construction of it, and from the moment of the adoption of a code it begins to be the subject of a new series of decisions which are required to interpret, modify, and explain it and adapt it to modern conditions and the facts of cases of new impression, as is and always has been the case with respect to the adaptation of the ancient rules of the common law to modern conditions. In doing this the necessity for and opportunity of judicial legislation are infinite, and with the multiplicity of courts and jurisdictions the difficulties of preserving a system founded on reason are far greater than they were even a very few years ago. And this consideration is strongly urged in favor of the code system. On the other hand, that the law of master and servant, which was founded on such relations as the coachman and the blacksmith's striker, should have been applied with so little friction to the railroad and the factory, is hardly less wonderful than the development of the common carrier of the post road and van to the telephone company, and these rapid transformations may serve as the basis of an argument that no civil code can be framed with sufficient wisdom to provide for the constantly changing conditions of life and business.

In addition to the considerations herein mentioned as bearing upon the subject, Lord Chief Justice Russell, in his address before the American Bar Association (Report 1896), in disapproving of the proposal to codify international law, mentions and illustrates a very fundamental objection to the codification of branches of the law not yet definitely reduced to fixed rules. His observations approach very nearly the suggestion of a striking and effective limitation of the extent to which codification should go beyond the scientific revision of statute law, and in the direction of including law settled by decision and not by statute. Some branches of the law are admirably adapted to complete codification, some others are not yet, and others again by their nature never can or will be.

Judge Redfield points out clearly the well known objections to codification: "This is one of the great excellencies of the unwritten law above a written code. The general principles of the former are allowed to embrace new cases as they arise, without regard to the enumerations already made under it; while the latter having been reduced to formal definitions, necessarily excludes all cases not anticipated at the time these definitions were made." 12 Amer. L. Reg. N. S. 185. On the other hand it is said that the opposition thereto of many English lawyers "is supported, if not justified, by the fear that the courts would put a narrow construction on the articles of a Code." 14 L. Q. R. 9.

"However much we may codify the law into a series of seemingly self-sufficient propositions, those propositions will be but a phase in a continuous growth. To understand their growth fully, to know how they will be dealt with by judges trained in the past which the law embodies, we must ourselves know something of that past. The history of what the law has been is necessary to the knowledge of what the law is." O. W. Holmes, The Common Law, 27.

See 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist., by Charles M. Hepburn, on the Historical Development of Code Pleading (1897).

The discussions on this subject have called attention to a subject formerly little considered, but which is of fundamental importance to the successful preparation of a code—the matter of statutory expression. There is no species of composition which demands more care and precision than that of drafting a statute. The writer needs not only to make his language intelligible, he must make it incapable of misconstruction. When it has passed to a law, it is no longer his intent that is to be considered, but the intent of the words which he has used; and that intent is to be ascertained under the strong pressure of an attempt of the advocate to win whatever possible construction may be most favorable to his cause. The true safeguard is found not in the old method of accumulating synonyms and by an enumeration of particulars, but rather—as is shown by those American codes of which the Revised Statutes of New York and the revision of Massachusetts are admirable specimens—by concise but complete statement of the full principle in the fewest possible words, and the elimination of description and paraphrase by the separate statement of necessary definitions. One of the rules to which the New York revisers generally adhered, and which they found of very great importance, was to confine each section to a single proposition. In this way the intricacy and obscurity of the old statutes were largely avoided. The reader who wishes to pursue this interesting subject will find much that is admirable in Coope's treatise on Legislative Expression (Lond. 1845) (reprinted in Brightly's Purdon's Digest, Penna.). The larger work of Gael (Legal Composition, Lond. 1840) is more especially adapted to the wants of the English profession.

GREAT BRITAIN. There has not been in England any general codification in the modern sense.

There were some early English so-called codes which were of the former character. The first code in England appears to have been about the year 600 by Athelbert, king of the Kentings. His laws have come down to us only in a copy made after the Norman Conquest. They consist of ninety brief sentences. In the end of the 7th century the west Saxons had written laws,—the laws of Ine. The next legislator is Alfred the Great, about two centuries later. Later came the code of Cnut. 1 Social England 165.

These are merely of historical interest. But in recent years there has been in England as elsewhere an interest in the subject of the arrangement, classification, and simplification of the law which found expression not only in words but in legislative action. The necessity for some reform, and the conditions which have forced the subject upon the attention of the English Bar and Parliament, are well expressed by Mr.

Crackanthorpe in his address before the Amer. Bar Assoc. (1896):

"We have in our libraries a number of monographs, dealing with the subheads of Law in the most minute detail—books on Torts and Contracts, on Settlements and Wills, on Purchases and Sales, on Specific Performance, on Negotiable Instruments, and so forth. We have also many valuable compendia, or institutional treatises, dealing with the Law as a whole. Each and all of these, however, bear witness to the disjointed character of our Jurisprudence. The numerous monographs overlap and jostle each other, like so many rudderless boats tossing at random on the surface of a wind-swept lake, while the institutional treatises, in their endeavor to be exhaustive, fall in point of logical arrangement, just as a vessel overlaid with a mixed cargo falls to get it properly stowed away in the hold. Some day, perhaps, we shall produce a Corpus Juris which will reduce our legal wilderness to order, and, by grubbing up the decayed trees, enable us to discern the living forest. We have already digested with success portions of our civil law, notably that relating to bills of exchange and a part of that relating to partnership and trusts. These experiments are likely to be renewed from time to time, and I doubt not that ultimately we shall have a civil code as complete as that which has just been promulgated in Germany. At present we have not even a criminal code such as you have in the State of New York and as is to be found in most continental countries, all that has been done in that direction being to pass five consolidating statutes dealing with larceny and a few other common offences."

In addition to those mentioned the partial codes thus far adopted in England include the Bills of Sale Act, the Employers' Liability Act, and others, and the India code is the result of a very successful effort to codify specific titles of the common law, and it is now constantly referred to in common-law jurisdictions as the best considered expression of the rules of the common law on subjects covered by it at the time of its adoption. In addition to the partial or special English codes referred to, the course which the discussion upon codification has taken in that country has led to the systematic collection and revision of statutes upon particular subjects. Under the direction of Lord Cairns, the statutes of England from 1 Henry III. have been systematically revised by a committee, and published as the "Revised Statutes."

In other British dependencies there have been movements in the direction of codification more pronounced in some instances than those in England. In Hong Kong and at the Straits Settlements codes of civil procedure were adopted on the lines of the New York code, which was also utilized in the Indian code.

The English Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1875 accomplished many of the reforms in the line of simplification. Its chief merit was the fusion of law and equity.

UNITED STATES. In this country the subject has received no less attention and has presented obstacles of less magnitude. Codes and revisions have been enacted as follows:

The Revision of Federal Statutes in 1873, which went into effect June 22, 1874, was by act of congress declared to constitute the law of the land; the pre-existing laws were thereby repealed, and ceased to be of effect. By subsequent acts of congress, certain errors in this revision were corrected. A new edition of the Revision of 1873 was authorized by acts of March 2, 1877, and March 9, 1878; this is not a new enactment, but merely a new publication; it contains a copy of the Revision of 1873, with certain specific alterations and amendments made by subsequent enactments of the 43d and 44th congresses, incorporated according to the judgment and discretion of the editor, under the authority of the acts providing for his appointment. These alterations, or amendments, were merely indicated by italics and brackets. The act of March 9, 1878, provides that the edition of 1878 shall be legal evidence of the laws therein contained in all the courts of the United States, and of the several states and territories, "but shall not preclude reference to, nor control, in case of any discrepancy, the effect of any original act as passed by congress since the first day of December, 1873."

The supplement of 1881 is official to a limited extent. The provisions in regard to it are as follows: "The publication herein authorized shall be taken to be prima facie evidence of the laws therein contained in all the courts of the United States, and of the several states and territories therein; but shall not preclude reference to, nor control, in case of any discrepancy, the effect of any original act as passed by congress: Provided, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to change or alter any existing law;" 21 Stat. L. 388. See Wright v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 80, where the subject is explained by Richardson, J., one of the compilers. Volume I, Supplement to the Revised Statutes, contains all the permanent general laws enacted from the passage of the Revised Statutes in 1874, to and including the fifty-first congress, which expired in 1891, and supersedes Vol. I., prepared under resolution of June 7, 1880. The publication is prima facie evidence of the laws therein contained in all of the courts of the United States. Vol. II. of the Supplement contains the general laws of the fifty-second and subsequent congresses.

The laws of the United States relating to the judiciary were enacted into the Judicial Code, March 3, 1911, and went into effect January 1, 1912; those relating to crimes were enacted into the Criminal Code, March 4, 1909, and went into effect January 1, 1910.

COLONIAL CODES. Of these there were several adopted in the colonies prior to the Revolution.

In 1665 a code prepared by Lord Chancellor Clarendon, called the "Duke's Laws," was promulgated and went into operation at Long Island and West Chester, New York. Afterwards its provisions slowly made their way in New York and the other provinces.

It was an attempt to state the law relating to the rights of persons and property, and of procedure both civil and criminal.

The Massachusetts colony, in March, 1634, appointed a committee to revise the law. Other committees were appointed in 1635 and 1637. Maryland adopted a code in 1639. In Massachusetts in 1641, a code of laws was adopted which was called "The Liberties of the Massachusetts Colony in New England." Connecticut adopted a code in 1650, chiefly copied from the Massachusetts code. Virginia appears to have adopted a body of laws in 1611, and in 1656 their laws were reduced into one volume.

STATE CODES. New York is the pioneer in the work of codification. In that state the first act relating to procedure after the organization of state government was passed March 16, 1778. Various other acts were passed between 1801 and 1813. In 1813 there was a general revision of the law, and the subject of practice of the law. In 1828 the revisers collected into one act the various provisions relating to practice in all the courts which was made a part of the Revised Statutes. It is said that this part of the Revised Statutes constituted the first code of civil procedure in New York. It embraced nearly all the practice in all the courts and has been the basis of subsequent code revision. In 1848 the "Code of Procedure" was adopted. David Dudley Field, the eminent writer on this subject, had begun his work on law reform in 1839. In 1848 a commission of which he was chairman produced the "Code of Procedure," containing 391 sections, which was adopted in that year. This code was largely amended in 1849, and has received frequent amendments at various times since that year.

The laws of Pennsylvania were extensively revised in 1833-1836, upon the Report of Commissioners appointed by the legislature, William Rawle, Joel Jones and Thomas I. Wharton.

Codification has proceeded in many states, especially in procedure. The list of states cannot be given here.

The enactment of uniform laws on special branches of the law, in many states and in England, is a movement towards codification upon proper lines. The act on Negotiable Instruments has been passed in nearly all the states; the Warehouse Receipt Act, the Sales Act, Bills of Lading Act and the Stock Transfer Act have been passed in many states.

In Louisiana, the civil law prevails and there are complete codes framed thereunder. One feature of the Louisiana code should be carefully noted. Art. 21 declares that "in all civil matters where there is no express law, the judge is bound to proceed and decide according to equity. To decide equitably an appeal is to be made to natural law and reason, or received usages, where positive law is silent." This code was adopted in 1824 and took effect in 1825, the revision of 1870 being the same code, with the slavery provisions omitted, and with such amendments as had previously been made. It is said that the power above quoted has never been exercised except to furnish a remedy or mode of procedure.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES. On the continent of Europe the systems of law are generally founded upon the civil law, and each country has its own code, which is usually an adaptation in whole or in part of Roman Law. These codes are different in character, falling within sometimes one and sometimes another of the classes above enumerated, as they were intended to be scientific collections and classifications of existing law or to exclude new legislation.

The modern codes of Europe were preceded by periods of codification, such as that which Maine designates the "era of codes," in which, throughout the world, so far as the sphere of Roman and Hellenic influence extended, there appeared codes of the class of which The Twelve Tables is the conspicuous example; Maine, Anc. L. 2, 13; and the many codes of the Middle Ages based upon Roman law modified by local customs. There were also a great number of codes of maritime law, which in its nature was, and still is, well adapted to this exact form of expression, many of which are collected in the Black Book of the Admiralty, which has been said to contain all maritime codes known at the time. Below are briefly referred to the best known codes, ancient and modern.

AMALPHITAN TABLE. Amalphi, on the Adriatic Sea, is said to have had a Maritime Court in the 10th century presided over by the consuls of the sea. A manuscript containing the ordinances of the Maritime Court of Amalphi was discovered in the Imperial Library at Vienna in 1843. And has been called by that name. Its date is the 11th century. Printed in Black Book of the Admiralty, Vol. IV. See The Scotia, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 170, 20 L. Ed. 822.

AUSTRIAN. The Civil Code was promulgated July 7, 1810. The first part of it was published and submitted to the Universities and the courts of justice, and some parts having been found wholly unsuited to the purpose, were by his successor abrogated. It is founded in a great degree upon the Prussian. The Penal Code (1852) is said to adopt to some extent the characteristics of the French Penal Code.

The civil code originated in an ordinance issued by Maria Theresa in 1753, the avowed objects being to provide for uniformity of the law in the provinces and digest the existing law. The result was unsatisfactory and another commission authorized Counsellor Harten to construct a code, of which the conditions prescribed are quite worthy of repetition. They were: 1. To abstain from doctrinal development. 2. To have in view contestations of the most frequent occurrence. 3. To be clear in expression. 4. To be governed by natural equity rather than the principles of the Roman Law. 5. To simplify the laws and to refrain from too much subtlety in details.

BURGUNDIAN. The Lex Romana Burgundionum seems to be the law-book that Gundobad promised to his Roman subjects. He died in 516. They were East Germans scattered among the Roman provincials. Rules in it were taken from the three Roman codes, from the current abridgments of imperial constitutions and from the works of Gaius and Paulus. Little that is good has been said of it. Maitland, in 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 14.

CONSOLATO DEL MARE. A code of maritime law of high antiquity and great celebrity.

A collection of the customs of the sea observed in the Consular Court of Barcelona. It received many additions and acquired the name of the "Consulate" early in the 15th century. The Book of the Consulate was printed at Barcelona in the Catalan tongue in 1494 and was drawn up by the notary of the Consular Court for the use of the Consuls of the sea at Barcelona. It dates back to the 14th century. T. C. Mears in Roscoe, Adm. Jur. (3d ed.); Sir Travers Twiss, in 2 Black Book of Adm. Lord Mansfield quotes from it as containing a valuable body of maritime law; 2 Burr. 889. Lord Stowell refers to it in 1 C. Rob. 43, and 1 Dods. 116. The edition of Pardessus, in his Collection de Lois Maritimes (vol. 2), is deemed the best. There is also a French translation by Boucher, Paris, 1808. See also, Reddie, Hist. of Mar. Com. 171; Marvin's Leg. Bibl.; J. Duer, Ins.; 7 N. A. Rev. 330.

CHINA. Ta Ching Lu Li (literally, Statute Laws and Usages of the Great Ching Dynasty), generally known as the Penal Code. Compiled in 1647. A remarkable collection of imperial proclamations, philosophical dissertations, positive laws and procedure both civil and penal from remotest times. There is an English translation by G. T. Staunton, 1810, London.

EGYPT. Code of International Tribunals of "Mixed Courts." See MIXED TRIBUNALS. These are codes of substantive law and procedure in civil and criminal matters closely following the Code Napoléon. See "The Law Affecting Foreigners in Egypt" by J. H. Scott, 1907, London; Hertslet, Commercial Treaties, vol. XIV, p. 303.

FRENCH CODES. The chief French codes of the present day are five in number, sometimes known as Les Cinq Codes. They were in great part the work of Napoleon, and the first in order bears his name. They are all frequently printed in one duodecimo volume. These codes do not embody the whole French law, but minor codes and a number of scattered statutes must also be resorted to upon special subjects.

Code Civil, or Code Napoléon, is composed of thirty-six laws, the first of which was passed in 1803 and the last in 1804, which united them all in one body, under the name of Code Civil des Français.

The first steps towards its preparation were taken in 1793, but it was not prepared till some years subsequently, and was finally thoroughly discussed in all its details by the Court of Cassation, of which Napoleon was president and in the discussions of which he took an active part throughout. In 1807 a new edition was promulgated, the title Code Napoléon being substituted. In the third edition (1816) the old title was restored; but in 1852 (the Second Empire) it was again displaced by that of Napoleon and after the Republic came in, in 1870, it again became the Code Civil.

Under Napoleon's reign it became the law of Holland, of the Confederation of the Rhine, Westphalia, Bavaria, Italy, Naples, Spain, etc. It has undergone great amendment by laws enacted since it was established. It is divided into three books. Book 1, Of Persons and the enjoyment and privation of civil rights. Book 2, Property and its different modifications. Book 3, Different ways of acquiring property. Prefixed to it is a preliminary title, Of the Publication, Effects, and Application of Laws in General.

One of the most perspicuous and able commentators on this code is Toullier, frequently cited in this work.

There is an English translation by Cachard and a later one by Wright.

Writing from the standpoint of a common-law lawyer, James C. Carter (the Law, etc., 303) refers to the Code Napoléon, so far as establishing a system of law certain, easy to be learned and easy to be administered, as a failure, citing Amos, An English Code, as holding the same view. For a history of it, see 40 Amer. L. Rev. 833, by U. M. Rose; 49 Amer. L. Reg. (o. s.) 127, by W. W. Smithers.

Code de Procédure Civil. That part of the code which regulates civil proceedings.

It is divided into two parts. Part First consists of five books: the first of which treats of justices of the peace; the second, of inferior tribunals; the third, of royal (or appellate) courts; the fourth, of extraordinary means of proceeding; the fifth, of the execution of judgments. Part Second is divided into three books, treating of various matters and proceedings special in their nature.

Code de Commerce. The code for the regulation of commerce.

This code was enacted in 1807. Book 1 is entitled, Of Commerce in General. Book 2, Maritime Commerce. The whole law of this subject is not embodied in this book. Book 3, Failures and Bankruptcy. This book was very largely amended by the law of 28th May, 1838. Book 4, Of Commercial Jurisdiction,—the organization, jurisdiction and proceedings of commercial tribunals. This code is, in one sense, a supplement to the Code Napoléon, applying the principle of the latter to the various subjects of commercial law. Sundry laws amending it have been enacted since 1807. Pardessus is one of the most able of its expositors. See Gouraud, Code of Commerce.

Code d'Instruction Criminelle. The code regulating procedure in criminal cases, taking that phrase in a broad sense.

Book 1 treats of the police; Book 2, of the administration of criminal justice. It was enacted in 1808 to take effect with the Penal Code in 1811.

Code Pénal. The penal or criminal code.

Enacted in 1810. Book 1 treats of penalties in criminal and correctional cases, and their effects; Book 2, of crimes and misdemeanors, and their punishment; Book 3, offences against the police regulations, and their punishment. Important amendments of this code have been made by subsequent legislation.

CODE MILITAIRE. The military code, substantive and procedural, for the army. Promulgated in 1857.

There is also a Code Forestier; and the name code has been inaptly given to some private compilations on other subjects.

GENTOO CODE. A translation of the laws of the Hindus made during the administration of Warren Hastings as Governor-General of India, and prior to the translation of the Institutes of Manu.

The formulation of Hindu law in those institutes (q. v. supra) had the same effect in India as had always resulted from the written expression of the law. There was gradually formed a new body of law consisting of decisions and opinions of learned men upon the construction of written law closely resembling the body of law which was engrafted upon the Institutes of Justinian. The translation of those laws in the Gentoo code was followed by a further digest under the authority of the English government, so that a very complete body of Hindu law grew up, which discloses a system of procedure resembling in a marked degree that of the present day, comprising,—a complaint, a summons or citation, an appearance, a hearing of both parties, the presence of attorneys, and a law of evidence and method of examining witnesses.

There seems also to have been in India in very early times a system of natural arbitration by neighbors, probably the earliest effort at an administration of justice and resembling the ancient county court of the Saxons. See Manu, infra.

GERMAN CODE. In the current which swept over Europe during the sixteenth century, substituting, as Professor Sohm phrases it, "the revived spirit of antiquity for mediæval conceptions and ideas," Germany participated in the changes which took place in all departments of science. Then the Roman law was "received" in that country, and from that time it has been a controlling factor in the jurisprudence of the countries which form the German Empire. In certain territorial limits over which the Prussian Landrecht (see PRUSSIAN CODE) held sway "the formal validity of the Corpus Juris Civilis has been expressly set aside," but even there "the force of Roman principles of law has nevertheless remained substantially unimpaired within large departments of German jurisprudence." Particularly is the science of the Roman private law imbedded in the German jurisprudence, and indeed the existence of law as a science in Germany dates from the introduction of the Roman law. There were no preconceived ideas with which to conflict, and it was accepted by a national intellect unprejudiced by any preconceived ideas. See Prussian Code, infra.

The completion of twenty-five years of the life of the Empire has been made the occasion of the construction and promulgation of a new German code which has been in the course of preparation for several years. It is an example for the most part of antecedent laws, though of an arrangement novel in various respects. The civil code, having passed the Reichstag and received the approval of the emperor, was duly promulgated August 19, 1896, to go into effect January 1, 1900, at the same time with other special codes, including those of Civil Procedure (1877), Insolvency, Assignments, Arbitrations, and the like. See Guide to Law of Germany, published by the Library of Congress (1912).

There is an English translation of "The Civil Code of the German Empire" by Walter Loewy, published by a Joint Committee of Pennsylvania Bar Association and University of Pennsylvania, 1909.

F. W. Maitland said of the Civil Code: "Never yet, I think, has so much first-rate brain power been put into any actual legislation." 3 Collected Papers 474.

GRIGORIAN. An unofficial compilation of the rescripts of the Roman emperors. It is said to have been made in the Orient perhaps about A. D. 295. Maitland in 14 L. Q. R. 15. It is not now extant.

The Theodosian Code, which was promulgated nearly a century afterwards, was a continuation of this and of the collection of Hermogenes. The chief interest of all these collections is in their relation to their great successor the Justinian Code.

GUIDON DE LA MER. A collection of sea laws drawn up towards the close of the 16th century, probably at the instance of the merchants of Rouen.

HAMMURABI, CODE OF. A collection of decisions in the civil courts and adapted to general use in Babylonia, about 2250 B. C. It was discovered in the Acropolis of Susa. A translation by C. H. W. Jones was published in 1903.

HANSE TOWNS, LAWS OF THE. A code of maritime law established by the Hanseatic towns. See HANSEATIC LEAGUE.

It was first published in German, at Lubec, in 1597. In an assembly of deputies from the several towns, held at Lubec, May 23, 1614, it was revised and enlarged. The text, with a Latin translation, was published with a commentary by Kuricke; and a French translation has been given by Cleirac in Us et Coutumes de la Mer. An English version may be found in 1 Peters, Adm. xciii, and in 30 Fed. Cas. 1197.

HENRI (French). The best-known of several collections of ordinances made during the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries, the number of which in part both formed the necessity and furnished the material for the Code Napoléon.

HENRI (Haytien). A very judicious adaptation from the Code Napoléon for the Haytiens. It was promulgated in 1812 by Christophe (Henri I.).

HERMOGENIAN. An unofficial compilation made in the fourth century, supplementary to the code of Gregorius. It is not now extant. It is said to have been made in the Orient, perhaps between A. D. 314 and 324, but these dates are uncertain. Maitland in 14 L. Q. R. 15.

JAPAN. In 1880 a Penal Code and a Code of Penal Procedure were adopted, in 1890 a Commercial Code (revised in 1899), and in 1893 a Civil Code, became effective. There is an English translation of the Civil Code by L. H. Loenholt, Tokio, 1906, 3d ed., and another with annotations by J. E. de Becker, London, 1910. There is an English translation of the Commercial Code by Yang Yin Hang published in 1911 by the University of Pennsylvania. The principles are derived from German and French sources, with the former predominating in the Commercial, and the latter in the Civil, Code.

JUSTINIAN CODE. A collection of imperial ordinances compiled by order of the emperor Justinian.

All the judicial wisdom of the Roman civilization which is of importance to the American lawyer is embodied in the compilations to which Justinian gave his name, and from which that name has received its lustre. Of these, first in contemporary importance, if not first in magnitude and present interest, was the Code. In the first year of his reign he commanded Tribonian, a statesman of his court, to revise the imperial ordinances. The first result, now known as the Codex Vetus, is not extant. It was superseded a few years after its promulgation by a new and more complete edition. Although it is this alone which is now known as the Code of Justinian, yet the Pandects and the Institutes which followed it are a part of the same system, declared by the same authority; and the three together form one codification of the law of the Empire. The first of these works occupied Tribonian and nine associates fourteen months. It is comprised in twelve divisions or books, and embodies all that was deemed worthy of preservation of the imperial statutes from the time of Hadrian down. The Institutes is an elementary treatise prepared by Tribonian and two associates upon the basis of a similar work by Gaius, a lawyer of the second century.

The Pandects, which were made public about a month after the Institutes, were an abridgment of the treatises and the commentaries of the lawyers. They were presented in fifty books. Tribonian and the sixteen associates who aided him in this part of his labors accomplished this abridgment in three years. It has been thought to bear obvious marks of the haste with which it was compiled; but it is the chief embodiment of the Roman law, though not the most convenient resort for the modern student of that law.

Tribonian found the law, which for fourteen centuries had been accumulating, comprised in two thousand books, or—stated according to the Roman method of computation—in three million sentences. It is probable that this matter, if printed in law volumes such as are now used, would fill from three to five hundred volumes. The comparison, to be more exact, should take into account treatises and digests, which would add to the bulk of the collection more than to the substance of the material. The commissioners were instructed to extract a series of plain and concise laws, in which there should be no two laws contradictory or alike. In revising the imperial ordinances, they were empowered to amend in substance as well as in form.

The codification being completed, the emperor decreed that no resort should be had to the earlier writings, nor any comparison be made with them. Commentators were forbidden to disfigure the new with explanations, and lawyers were forbidden to cite the old. The imperial authority was sufficient to sink into oblivion nearly all the previously existing sources of law; but the new statutes which the emperor himself found it necessary to establish, in order to explain, complete, and amend the law, rapidly accumulated throughout his long reign. These are known as the "Novels." The Code, the Institutes, the Pandects, and the Novels, with some subsequent additions, constitute the Corpus Juris Civilis. See CIVIL LAW.

Among English translations of the Institutes are that by Cooper (Phila. 1812; N. Y. 1841)—which is regarded as a very good one—and that by Sanders (Lond. 1853), which contains the original text also, and copious references to the Digests and Code. Among the modern French commentators are Ortolan and Pasquiere.

LIVINGSTON'S CODE. Edward Livingston, one of the commissioners who prepared the Louisiana Code, prepared and presented to congress a draft of a penal code for the United States; which, though it was never adopted, is not unfrequently referred to in the books as stating principles of criminal law.

MARINE ORDINANCES OF LOUIS XIV. See ORDONNANCE DE LA MARINE, infra.

MANU, INSTITUTES OF. A code of Hindu law, of great antiquity, which still forms the basis of Hindu jurisprudence (Elphinstone's Hist. of India, p. 83), and is said also to be the basis of the laws of the Burmese and of the Laos. Buckle, Hist. of Civilization, vol. 1, p. 54, note, 70. "It undoubtedly enshrines many genuine observances of the Hindu race, but the opinion of the best contemporary orientalists is that it does not, as a whole, represent a set of rules ever actually administered in Hindustan. It is, in great part, an ideal picture of that which, in the view of the Brahmins, ought to be the law." Maine, Anc. Law 16.

This code contains simple rules for regulating the trial of ordinary actions; the number and competency of witnesses and sufficiency of evidence; methods of procedure in court and the judgment and its enforcement. There is no indication of such an office as the attorney, as the judge is required to examine witnesses and parties; there is also a summary of the customary law.

The institutes of Manu are, in point of the relative progress of Hindu jurisprudence, a recent production; Maine, Anc. Law 17; though ascribed to the ninth century B. C. A translation will be found in the third volume of Sir William Jones's Works. See, also, Gentoo Code, supra; HINDU LAW.

MOSAIC CODE. The code proclaimed by Moses for the government of the Jews, B. C. 1491.

One of the peculiar characteristics of this code is the fact that, whilst all that has ever been successfully attempted in other cases has been to change details without reversing or ignoring the general principles which form the basis of the previous law, that which was chiefly done here was the assertion of great and fundamental principles in part contrary and in part perhaps entirely new to the customs and usages of the people. These principles have given the Mosaic Code vast influence in the subsequent legislation of other nations than the Hebrews. The topics on which it is most frequently referred to as an authority in our law are those of marriage and divorce, and questions of affinity and of the punishment of murder and seduction.

ORDONNANCE DE LA MARINE. A code of maritime law promulgated by Louis XIV.

It was promulgated in 1681, and with great completeness embodied all existing rules of maritime law, including insurance. Kent pronounces it a monument of the wisdom of the reign of Louis "far more durable and more glorious than all the military trophies won by the valor of his armies." Its compilers are unknown. An English translation is found in 2 Peter's Adm. Dec., appendix; also in 30 Fed. Cas. 1203. The ordinance has been at once illustrated and eclipsed by Valin's commentaries upon it.

OLERON, LAWS OR ROLLS OF. The chief code of maritime law of the Middle Ages, which takes its name from the island of Oleron.

Both the French and the English claim the honor of having originated this code,—the former attributing its compilation to the command of Queen Eleanor, Duchess of Guienne, near which province the island of Oleron lies; the latter ascribing its promulgation to her son, Richard I. An English writer considers that the greater part of it is probably of older date, and was merely confirmed by Richard; 1 Soc. Eng. 313. He, without doubt, caused it to be improved, if he did not originate it, and he introduced it into England. He did at Chinon, in 1190, issue ordinances for the government of the navy which have been fairly described as the basis of our modern articles of war, and what they did for the navy, the code of Oleron, to which they were allied, did for the merchant service. After much learned discussion all are agreed now that the home of these judgments was Southern France; Studer, Oak Book of Southampton, Vol. II. Twiss considers that they were judgments of the Mayor's Court of Oleron. Other writers hold the view that they were a compilation of customs. Some additions were made to this Code by King John. It was promulgated anew in the reign of Henry III., and again confirmed in the reign of Edward III., at which time they had acquired the status of laws. There is a translation in 1 Pet. Adm. Dec. The text will be found in the Black Book of the Admiralty. The French version, with Cleirac's commentary, is contained in Us et Coutumes de la Mer. Studer's work, supra, discusses the subject at length, giving the various extant MSS. together with a critical translation of the text with variorum notes. The subjects upon which it is now valuable are much the same as those of the Consolato del Mare.

OSTROGOTHIC. The code promulgated by Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, at Rome, A. D. 500. It was founded on the Roman law.

PRUSSIAN CODE. Allgemeines Landrecht. The former code of 1751 was not successful, and the Grand Chancellor de Cocceji was charged by Frederick II. with the duty of codifying the law of Prussia; he died in 1735, and afterwards the work was arrested by the seven years' war, but was resumed in 1780, under Frederic II., and a project was prepared by Dr. Carmer and Dr. Volmar, which was submitted to the savans of Europe and to the royal courts. After long and thorough discussion, the present code was finally promulgated and put in force June 1, 1794, by Frederick William, and then for the first time all Europe was united under one system of law. It is known also as the Code Frederic. See German code, supra.

RHODIAN LAWS. A maritime code adopted by the people of Rhodes, and in force among the nations upon the Mediterranean nine or ten centuries before Christ. There is reason to suppose that the collection under this title in Vinnius is spurious, and, if so, the code is not extant. See Marsh. on Ins. b. 1, c. 4, p. 15.

SPAIN. This country, even more than France, has developed the Roman Law to its modern state in which it now divides the world with the English Common Law. The earliest codification, Fuero Juzgo or Forum Judicum, known to us as the Visigothic Code, appeared about 650 and embraced the Visigothic traditions that were first reduced to writing by Euric, in the latter half of the fifth century, the original of which is lost, and also much of the Breviarium Alaricianum, composed largely of the Justinian and Theodosian Codes and promulgated early in the sixth century by Alaric II. The Com-

Comparative Law Bureau of the American Bar Association in 1910 published a translation by S. P. Scott who says in the preface that it is "the most remarkable monument of legislation which ever emanated from a semi-barbarian people and the only essential memorial of greatness or crudition bequeathed by the Goths to posterity."

Fuero Real or Fuero de las Leyes, a collection of laws and usages of the Castilian monarchy as well as Roman doctrines was promulgated by Alfonso X, the Wise, in 1255, and is considered an important monument of Spanish jurisprudence. It is in course of translation by S. P. Scott for the Comparative Law Bureau.

Las Siete Partidas (The Seven Parts) was also the product of Alfonso X, having been begun in 1256 and published in 1263, as Libro de las Leyes. The final popular title was not officially given to it until 1347, by Alfonso XI. Embracing the laws and customs contained in former codes, this was also a work of wisdom and philosophy and the most complete treatise of jurisprudence that had been published up to that time. It is still the authority of last resort wherever Spanish law once dominated. A translation has been made by S. P. Scott for the Comparative Law Bureau and is about to be published.

In 1507, under Phillip II, La Nueva Recopilacion was sanctioned and La Novisima Recopilacion was decreed in force on July 15, 1805, and while collections of laws, they were clearly utilitarian measures to create order in a vast mass of systemless legislation conflicting with the older but controlling codes.

The modern Civil Code had its origin in the Constitutional Cortes of Cadiz which in 1810, by special commission, undertook to codify the most important branches of the law; after many idle intervals it was completed and promulgated in Spain July 24, 1889. By decree of July 31, 1889, it was extended to Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. It has been translated by the War Department of the United States and also by Clifford S. Walton in his work "Civil Law in Spain and Spanish America," 1900. In its conciseness, scientific classification and underlying doctrines it shows the influence of the Romans, the Visigoths and the Moors.

Other modern codes and the years of their adoption are as follows: Civil Procedure, 1881; Criminal Code, 1870; Criminal Procedure, 1882; Commercial Code, 1885, and Military Code, 1890.

SPANISH AMERICA. While all these countries rest their jurisprudence on Las Siete Partidas; see LAS PARTIDAS; each one has its Civil and Commercial Codes; the countries, codes and dates of adoption are as follows: Argentine Republic, Commercial Code, 1890; Civil Code, effective 1871 (there is an English translation by Frank L. Joannini, published by the Comparative Law Bureau of the American Bar Association, 1914); Bolivia, Commercial Code, 1891; Brazil, Commercial Code 1850, Civil Code 1891; Colombia, Civil Code effective 1893, Commercial Code 1886-87; Chili, Civil Code 1857, Commercial Code 1865; Costa Rica, Commercial Code 1853, Civil Code effective 1888; Ecuador, Civil Code 1887, Commercial Code, 1878; Guatemala, Civil Code 1877, Commercial Code 1877; Honduras, Civil Code, effective 1899; Mexico, Civil Code 1884, Commercial Code 1889; Peru, Civil Code, effective 1852 (English translation by Frank L. Joannini, published by the Comparative Law Bureau of the American Bar Association, 1914); Salvador, Civil Code 1880, Commercial Code 1880, effective 1882; Uruguay, Civil Code 1895; Venezuela, Civil Code, effective 1896.

SWITZERLAND. On January 1, 1912, a Civil Code became effective and is the latest and most scientific work of its kind. It was drawn by Dr. Eugene Huber and was promulgated officially in French, German and Italian. An English translation by Robert P. Shick and Charles Wetherill is published by the Comparative Law Bureau of the American Bar Association (1914).

THEODOSIAN. A code compiled by a commission of eight under the direction of Theodosius the Younger.

It comprises the edicts and rescripts of sixteen emperors, embracing a period of one hundred and twenty-six years. It was promulgated in the Eastern Empire in 438, and quickly adopted, also, in the Western Empire. The great modern expounder of this code is Gothofredus (Godefroi). The results of modern researches regarding this code are well stated in the Foreign Quar. Rev. vol. 9, 374.

TRANI, ORDINANCES AND CUSTOMS OF THE SEA OF. Published in 1063, and said to be the most ancient body of maritime laws in existence. Its 32 articles consist of a series of decisions made by the maritime consuls of the guild of navigators at Trani, a city on the Adriatic Sea, in the 11th century. Printed in Black Book of the Admiralty, Vol. IV. "It was no 'code' in our modern sense of that term. It was only a more or less methodic collection of modern statutes." Maitland, 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 12 (14 L. Q. R. 16).

TWELVE TABLES. Laws of ancient Rome.

They arose out of the discontent of the plebs; after a long struggle decemvirs were appointed to draft a body of general laws (B. C. 449-451). Their draft was enacted into a statute. It was neither a code, nor, in the main, new law, but rather a concise and precise statement of the most important among the ancient customs of the people. It was the germ of the Roman law, and as late as Cicero boys learned it by heart. See Bryce, Rome & England (1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 333). See fragment of the law of the Twelve Tables, in Cooper's Justinian 656; Gibbon's Rome c. 44; Maine, Anc. Law 2.

VISIGOTHIC. Lex Romana Visigothorum. See supra, sub-title SPAIN.

WISBY, LAWS OF. A concise but comprehensive code of maritime law, established by the "merchants and masters of the magnificent city of Wisby."

The port of Wisby, now in ruins, was situated on the northwestern coast of Gottland, on the Baltic sea. It was the capital of the island, and the seat of an extensive commerce, of which the chief relic and the most significant record is this code. It is a mooted point whether this code was derived from the laws of Oleron, or that from this; but the similarity of the two leaves no doubt that one was the offspring of the other. It was of great authority in the northern parts of Europe. "Lex Rhodia navalis," says Grotius, "pro jure gentium in illo mare Mediterraneo vigebat; sicut apud Gallum leges Oleronis, et apud omnes transrhenanos leges Wisbuenses." De Jure B. lib. 2, c. 3. It is still referred to on subjects of maritime law. An English translation will be found in 1 Pet. Adm. Dec.; also in the Black Book of the Admiralty and 30 Fed. Cas. 1189.

The main additions to the above title, referring to recent codes or publication of new editions of the older codes, have been prepared for this work by William W. Smithers, of the Philadelphia Bar, Secretary of the Comparative Law Bureau of the American Bar Association (organized August 28, 1907), of which Simeon E. Baldwin, Founder of the American Bar Association, was also a Founder and has been the Director. The work of the Bureau has been of great public value and promises even greater results.

Publishers announce the publication of "The Commercial Laws of the World" in thirty-five volumes.

In a learned address before the American Bar Association (Annual Report, 1886), upon "Codification, the Natural Result of the Evolution of the Law," Mr. Semmes, one of the most earnest advocates of the merits of the civil law and the code system, sketches the history of the codes of Europe and the relation of the civil to the common law and in conclusion says:

"The history of codification teaches that the task of preparing a code of laws is difficult, that its proper execution is a work of years, to be entrusted, not to a deciduous committee of fugitive legislators, but to a permanent commission of the most enlightened and cultivated jurists, whose project, prior to adoption, should be subjected to rigid and universal criticism."

CODEX (Lat.). A volume or roll. The code of Justinian. See CODE.

CODICIL. Some addition to, or qualification of, a last will and testament.

This term is derived from the Latin codicillus, which is a diminutive of codex, and in strictness imports a little code or writing,—a little will. In the Roman Civil Law, codicil was defined as an act which contains dispositions of property in prospect of death, without the institution of an heir or executor. Domat, Civil Law, p. ii. b. iv. tit. i. s. 1; Just. De Codic. art. i. s. 2. So, also, the early English writers upon wills define a codicil in much the same way. "A codicil is a just sentence of our will touching that which any would have done after their death, without the appointing of an executor." Swinb. Wills, pt. i. s. 5, pl. 2. But the present definition of the term is that first given. 1 Wills, Exrs. 8; Swinb. Wills, pt. i. s. v. pl. 5.

Under the Roman Civil Law, and also by the early English law, as well as the canon law, all of which very nearly coincided in regard to this subject, it was considered that no one could make a valid will or testament unless he did name an executor, as that was of the essence of the act. This was attended with great formality and solemnity, in the presence of seven Roman citizens as witnesses, omni exceptione majores. Hence a codicil is there termed an unofficious, or unsolemn, testament. Swinb. Wills, pt. i. s. v. pl. 4; Godolph, pt. i. c. 1, s. 2; id. pt. i. c. 6, s. 2; Plowd. 185; where it is said by the judges, that "without an executor a will is null and void," which has not been regarded as law, in England, for the last two hundred years, probably.

The office of a codicil under the civil law seems to have been to enable the party to dispose of his property, in the near prospect of death, without the requisite formalities of executing a will (or testament, as it was then called). Codicils were strictly confined to the disposition of property; whereas a testament had reference to the institution of an heir or executor, and contained trusts and confidences to be carried into effect after the decease of the testator. Domat, b. iv. tit. i.

In the Roman Law there were two kinds of codicils: the one, where no testament existed, and which was designed to supply its place as to the disposition of property, and which more nearly resembled our donatio causa mortis than anything else now in use; the other, where a testament did exist, had relation to the testament, and formed a part of it and was to be construed in connection with it. Domat, p. ii. b. iv. tit. i. s. i. art. v. It is in this last sense that the term is now universally used in the English law, and in the American states where the common law prevails.

Codicils owe their origin to the following circumstance. Lucius Lentulus, dying in Africa, left codicils, confirmed by anticipation in a will of former date, and in those codicils requested the Emperor Augustus, by way of fidei commissum, or trust, to do something therein expressed. The emperor carried this will into effect, and the daughter of Lentulus paid legacies which she would not otherwise have been legally bound to pay. Other persons made similar fidei commissa, and then the emperor, by the advice of learned men whom he consulted, sanctioned the making of codicils, and thus they became clothed with legal authority. Inst. 2. 25; Bowy. Com. 155.

All codicils are part of the will, and are to be so construed; 17 Sim. 108; 16 Beav. 510, 2 Ves. Sen. Ch. 242; 4 Y. & C. Ch. 160; Wilkes v. Harper, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 11; 4 Kent 531. See Gelbke v. Gelbke, 88 Ala. 427, 6 South. 834; Burhans v. Haswell, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 424; and executed with the same formalities; Schoul. Wills 359; 4 Kent 531; Tilden v. Tilden, 13 Gray (Mass.) 103.

A codicil properly executed to pass real and personal estate, and in conformity with the statute of frauds, and upon the same piece of paper with the will, operates as a republication of the will, so as to have it speak from that date; Coale v. Smith, 4 Pa. 376; Armstrong v. Armstrong, 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 333; Brimmer v. Sohler, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 118; 3 M. & C. 359. So also it has been held that it is not requisite that the codicil should be on the same piece of paper in order that it should operate as a republication of the will; Kip v. Van Cortland, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 346; Den v. Snowhill, 23 N. J. L. 447; 1 Ves. Sen. 442; Harvy v. Chouteau, 14 Mo. 587, 55 Am. Dec. 120; but where it is on the same piece of paper, not signed, only the will proper which was signed should be admitted to probate; Smith's Estate, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 333; but see Brown's Ex'r v. Tilden, 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 371.

A codicil duly executed, and attached or referring to a paper defectively executed as a will, has the effect to give operation to the whole, as one instrument; Schoul. Wills 448; Beall v. Cunningham, 3 B. Monr. (Ky.) 390, 39 Am. Dec. 469; Ilaven v. Foster, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 543; 16 Ves. Ch. 167; 1 Ad. & E. 423; Matter of Hardenburg's Will, 85 Hun 580, 33 N. Y. Supp. 150. See numerous cases cited in 7 Ves. Ch. (Sumner ed.) 98; 1 Cr. & M. 42.

There may be numerous codicils to the same will. In such cases, the later ones operate to revive and republish the earlier ones; 3 Bingh. 614; 12 J. B. Moore 2. See Johns Hopkins University v. Pinckney, 55 Md. 365.

In order to set up an informally executed paper by means of one subsequently executed in due form, referring to such informal paper, the reference must be such as clearly to identify the paper; Tonnele v. Hall, 4 N. Y. 140.

A codicil which depends on the will for interpretation or execution falls, if the will be revoked; 1 Tucker 436; Jouse v. Forman, 5 Bush (Ky.) 337.

It is not competent to provide by will for the disposition of property to such persons as shall be named in a subsequent codicil, not executed according to the prescribed formalities in regard to wills; since all papers of that character, in whatever form, if intended to operate only in the disposition of one's property after death, are of a testamentary character, and must be so treated; 2 Ves. Ch. 204; 2 M. & K. 765.

So much of the will as is inconsistent with the codicil is revoked; Bosley v. Wyatt, 14 How. (U. S.) 390, 14 L. Ed. 468.

A codicil whose only provision is the appointment of an executor who had died, cannot be admitted to probate apart from the will; Pepper's Estate, 148 Pa. 5, 23 Atl. 1039. A testator executed a codicil which was described as "a codicil to my will executed some years ago," and after his death the will could not be found, but probate of the codicil was granted; [1892] Prob. 254. See WILLS.

COEMPTIO. In Civil Law. The ceremony of celebrating marriage by solemnities.

The parties met and gave each other a small sum of money. They then questioned each other in turn. The man asked the woman if she wished to be his mater-familias. She replied that she so wished. The woman then asked the man if he wished to be her pater-familias. He replied that he so wished. They then joined hands; and these were called nuptials by coemptio. Boethius, Coemptio; Calvinus, Lex; Taylor, Law Gloss.

COERCION. Constraint; compulsion; force.

Direct or positive coercion takes place when a man is by physical force compelled to do an act contrary to his will: for example, when a man falls into the hands of the enemies of his country, and they compel him, by a just fear of death, to fight against it. See Grossmeyer v. U. S., 4 Ct. Cls. (U. S.) 1; Miller v. U. S., 4 Ct. Cls. (U. S.) 288; Padelford v. U. S., 4 Ct. Cls. (U. S.) 317.

Implied coercion exists where a person is legally under subjection to another, and is induced, in consequence of such subjection, to do an act contrary to his will.

As will is necessary to the commission of a crime or the making of a contract, a person actually coerced into either has no will on the subject, and is not responsible; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 225; 5 Q. B. 279; Griffith v. Sitgreaves, 90 Pa. 161. The command of a superior to an inferior; United States v. Jones, 3 Wash. C. C. 209, 220, Fed. Cas. No. 15,494; Com. v. Blodgett, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 56; Harmony v. Mitchell, 1 Blatchf. 549, Fed. Cas. No. 6,082; Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How. (U. S.) 115, 14 L. Ed. 75; of a parent to a child; Broom, Max. 11; of a master to his servant, or a principal to his agent; Hays v. State, 13 Mo. 246; Com. v. Drew, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 279; Kilfield v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 304; State v. Bugbee, 22 Vt. 32; do not amount to coercion.

As to persons acting under the constraint of superior power, and, therefore, not criminally amenable, the principal case is that of married women, with respect to whom the law recognizes certain presumptions. Thus, if a wife commits a felony, other than treason or homicide, or, perhaps, highway robbery, in company with her husband, the law presumes that she acted under his coercion, and, consequently, without any guilty intent, unless the fact of non-coercion is distinctly proved; Clarke, Cr. L. 77. See Com. v. Egan, 103 Mass. 71; State v. Williams, 65 N. C. 398. This presumption appears on some occasions to have been considered conclusive, and is still practically regarded in no very different light, especially when the crime is of a flagrant character; but the better opinion seems to be that in every case the presumption may now be rebutted by positive proof that the woman acted as a free agent; and in one case that was much discussed, the Irish judges appear to have considered that such positive proof was not required, but that the question was always one to be determined by the jury on the evidence submitted to them; Jebb 93; 1 Mood. 143. It seems that a married woman cannot be convicted under any circumstances as a receiver of stolen goods, when the property has been taken by her husband and given to her by him; 1 Dears. 184.

Husband and wife were jointly charged with felonious wounding with intent to disfigure and to do grievous bodily harm. The jury found that the wife acted under the coercion of the husband, and that she did not personally inflict any violence on the prosecutor. On this finding, the wife was held entitled to an acquittal; 1 Dears. & B. 553.

Whether the doctrine of coercion extends to any misdemeanor may admit of some doubt; but the better opinion seems to be that, provided the misdemeanor is of a serious nature, as, for instance, the uttering of base coin, the wife will be protected in like manner as in cases of felony; although it has been distinctly held that the protection does not extend to assaults and batteries or the offence of keeping a brothel; Russ. Cr. 38; 2 Lew. 229; 8 C. & P. 19, 541; Com. v. Lewis, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 151; Com. v. Neal, 10 Mass. 152, 6 Am. Dec. 105. Indeed, it is probable that in all inferior misdemeanors this presumption, if admitted at all, would be held liable to be defeated by far less stringent evidence of the wife's active co-operation than would suffice in cases of felony; 8 C. & P. 541; 2 Mood. 53.

There is coercion only when the husband is present; it does not extend to treason, murder and grave felonies; 2 C. & K. 903; it extends to the lesser felonies and most misdemeanors, and even in these the circumstances may repel the presumption of coercion; 8 C. & P. 554. If it appear that she took the leading part, his presence will not protect her; 12 Cox 45. If she acted in his absence, no presumption of coercion arises; she is a principal; Russ & Ry. 270.

A wife is not chargeable with guilt until the presumption of coercion has been removed; State v. Harvey, 130 Ia. 94, 106 N. W. 938; there is a presumption of coercion if the husband was present, but it may be rebutted; Com. v. Adams, 186 Mass. 101, 71 N. E. 78; her conduct alone at the time may suffice to overcome a presumption; id. Where the wife of a convicted murderer at his instigation shot the revolver, the offence was committed in the husband's presence and there was nothing to rebut the presumption of coercion; State v. Miller, 162 Mo. 253, 62 S. W. 692, 85 Am. St. Rep. 498. If it appears that the wife was not urged by the husband, but was the inciter, she is liable; People v. Ryland, 2 N. Y. Cr. R. 441. In the case of a disorderly house, they are both equally guilty; State v. Jones, 53 W. Va. 613, 45 S. E. 916.

The marriage need not be strictly proved; reputation is sufficient proof of marriage; but mere cohabitation is not; Odgers, C. L. 1347.

See 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 76; DURESS.

CO-EXECUTOR. One who is a joint executor with one or more others. See EXECUTOR.

COGNATI, COGNATES. In Civil Law. All those persons who can trace their blood to a single ancestor or ancestress.

The term is not used in the civil law as it now prevails in France. In the common law it has no technical sense; but as a word of discourse in English it signifies, generally, allied by blood, related in origin, of the same family.

Originally, the maternal relationship had no influence in the formation of the Roman family, nor in the right of inheritance. But the edict of the prætor established what was called the Prætorian succession, or the bonorum possessio, in favor of cognates in certain cases. Dig. 38. 8. See PATER-FAMILIAS; AGNATI.

COGNATION. In Civil Law. Signifies generally the kindred which exists between two persons who are united by ties of blood or family, or both.

Civil cognation is that which proceeds alone from the ties of families, as the kindred between the adopted father and the adopted child.

Mixed cognation is that which unites at the same time the ties of blood and family, as that which exists between brothers the issue of the same lawful marriage. Inst. 3. 6; Dig. 38. 10.

Natural cognation is that which is alone formed by ties of blood; such is the kindred of those who owe their origin to an illicit connection, either in relation to their ascendants or collaterals.

COGNISANCE. See COGNIZANCE.

COGNITIONIBUS ADMITTENDIS. A writ requiring a justice or other qualified person, who has taken a fine and neglects to certify it in the court of common pleas, to do so.

COGNIZANCE (Lat. cognitio, recognition, knowledge; spelled, also, Conusance and Cognisance). Acknowledgment; recognition; jurisdiction; judicial power; hearing a matter judicially. See 12 Ad. & El. 259.

Of Pleas. Jurisdiction of causes. A privilege granted by the king to a city or town to hold pleas within the same. Termes de la Ley. It is in frequent use among the older writers on English law in this latter sense, but is seldom used, if at all, in America, except in its more general meaning. The universities of Cambridge and Oxford possess this franchise; 11 East 543; 1 W. Bla. 454; 3 Bla. Com. 298.

Claim of Cognizance (or of Conusance). An intervention by a third person, demanding judicature in the cause against the plaintiff, who has chosen to commence his action out of claimant's court. 2 Wils. 409; 2 Bla. Com. 350, n.

It is a question of jurisdiction between the two courts; Fortesc. 157; 5 Viner, Abr. 588; and not between the plaintiff and defendant, as in the case of plea to the jurisdiction, and must be demanded by the party entitled to conusance, or his representative, and not by the defendant or his attorney; 1 Chit. Pl. 403.

There are three sorts of conusance. Tenere placita, which does not oust another court of its jurisdiction, but only creates a concurrent one. Cognitio placitorum, when the plea is commenced in one court, of which cognisance belongs to another. A cognisance of exclusive jurisdiction: as, that no other court shall hold plea, etc. Hardr. 509; Bac. Abr. Courts, D.

In Pleading. The answer of the defendant in an action of replevin who is not entitled to the distress or goods which are the subject of the action—acknowledging the taking, and justifying it as having been done by the command of one who is so entitled. Lawes, Pl. 35. An acknowledgment made by the deforciant, in levying a fine, that the lands in question are the right of the complainant. 2 Bla. Com. 350. See Inhabitants of Sturbridge v. Winslow, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 87; Noble v. Holmes, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 194.

COGNOMEN (Lat.). A family name.

The prænomen among the Romans distinguished the person, the nomen the gens, or all the kindred descended from a remote common stock through males, while the cognomen denoted the particular family. The agnomen was added on account of some particular event, as a further distinction. Thus, in the designation Publius Cornelius Scipio Africanus, Publius is the prænomen, Cornelius is the nomen, Scipio the cognomen, and Africanus the agnomen. Vicat. See Cas. temp. Hardw. 286; § Co. 65.

COGNOVIT ACTIONEM (Lat. he has confessed the cause of action. Cognovit alone is in common use with the same significance).

A written confession of a cause of action by a defendant, subscribed, but not sealed, and authorizing the plaintiff to sign judgment and issue execution, usually for a sum named.

COHABIT (Lat. con and habere). To live together in the same house, claiming to be married.

The word does not include in its signification, necessarily, occupying the same bed; 1 Hagg. Cons. 144; Dunn v. Dunn, 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 425; though the word is popularly, and sometimes in statutes, used in this latter sense; State v. Byron, 20 Mo. 210; Bish. Marr. & Div. § 506, n.; Jackson v. State, 116 Ind. 464, 19 N. E. 330; Pruner v. Com., 82 Va. 115; Com. v. Dill, 159 Mass. 61, 34 N. E. 84; Cannon v. U. S., 116 U. S. 65, 6 Sup. Ct. 278, 29 L. Ed. 561.

COHABITATION. It does not necessarily mean living together under the same roof; a man may be absent on business, or two married domestic servants may live with different employers, and yet be cohabiting in the broader sense; [1904] P. 389.

To live together in the same house.

Used without reference to the relation of the parties to each other as husband and wife, or otherwise. Used of sisters or other members of the same family, or of persons not members of the same family, occupying the same house; 2 Vern. 323; Bish. Marr. & Div. § 506, n. See In re Yardley's Estate, 75 Pa. 207; Sullivan v. State, 32 Ark. 187.

See LASCIVIOUS COHABITATION.

COIF. A head-dress.

In England there are certain serjeants at law who are called serjeants of the coif, from the white lawn coif they wear on their heads under their small black skull-cap of silk or velvet when they are admitted to that order. It was anciently worn as a distinguishing badge. When powdered wigs were introduced, a round patch of black silk edged with white was worn on the crown of the wig as a diminutive representation of the coif and cap. See Pulling, Order of the Coif.

COIN. A piece of metal stamped with certain marks and made current at a certain value. Strictly speaking, coin differs from money as the species differs from the genus. Money is any matter, whether metal, paper, beads, or shells, which has currency as a medium in commerce. Coin is a particular species, always made of metal, and struck according to a certain process called coining. Wharton.

To fashion pieces of metal into a prescribed shape, weight, and fineness, and stamp them with prescribed devices, by authority of government, that they may circulate as money. Thayer v. Hedges, 22 Ind. 306; Griswold v. Hepburn, 2 Duval (Ky.) 29.

Congress alone has the power to coin money; Const. U. S. Art. 1, § 7; but the states may pass laws to punish the circulation of false coin; Fox v. Ohio, 5 How. (U. S.) 410, 12 L. Ed. 213.

So long as a genuine silver coin is worn only by natural abrasion, is not appreciably diminished in weight, and retains the appearance of a coin duly issued from the mint, it is a legal tender for its original value; U. S. v. Lissner, 12 Fed. 840. See Jersey City & B. R. Co. v. Morgan, 160 U. S. 288, 16 Sup. Ct. 276, 40 L. Ed. 430.

COLD BLOOD. See COOL BLOOD.

COLIBERTUS. One who, holding in free socage, was obliged to do certain services for the lord. A middle class of tenants between servile and free, who held their freedom of tenure on condition of performing certain services. Said to be the same as the conditionales. Cowell.

COLLATERAL (Lat. con, with, latus, the side). That which is by the side, and not the direct line. That which is additional to or beyond a thing.

COLLATERAL ANCESTORS. Sometimes used to designate uncles and aunts and other collateral ancestors of the person spoken of, who are in fact not his ancestors. Banks v. Walker, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 446.

COLLATERAL ASSURANCE. That which is made over and above the deed itself.

COLLATERAL CONSANGUINITY. That relationship which subsists between persons who have the same ancestors but not the same descendants,—who do not descend one from the other. 2 Bla. Com. 203.

The essential fact of consanguinity (common ancestral blood) is the same in lineal and collateral consanguinity; but the relationship is aside from the direct line. Thus, father, son, and grandson are lineally related; uncle and nephew, collaterally.

COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL. The collateral determination of a question by a court having general jurisdiction of the subject. See Small v. Haskins, 26 Vt. 209.

COLLATERAL FACTS. Facts not directly connected with the issue or matter in dispute.

Such as are offered in evidence to establish the matters or facts in issue. Garwood v. Garwood, 29 Cal. 521; King v. Chase, 15 N. H. 16, 41 Am. Dec. 675. Facts offered in evidence at a trial to establish the issue, though not necessarily conclusive thereof. Freem. Judgm. § 258.

Such facts are inadmissible in evidence; but, as it is frequently difficult to ascertain a priori whether a particular fact offered in evidence will or will not clearly appear to be material in the progress of the cause, in such cases it is usual in practice for the court to give credit to the assertion of the counsel who tenders such evidence, that the facts will turn out to be material. But this is always within the sound discretion of the court. It is the duty of the counsel, however, to offer evidence, if possible, in such order that each part of it will appear to be pertinent and proper at the time it is offered; and it is expedient to do so, as this method tends to the success of a good cause.

When a witness is cross-examined as to collateral facts, the party cross-examining will be bound by the answer; and he cannot, in general, contradict him by another witness; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 139.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX. A tax levied upon the collateral devolution of property by will or under the intestate law. See Tax.

COLLATERAL ISSUE. An issue taken upon some matter aside from the general issue in the case.

Thus, for example, a plea by the criminal that he is not the person attainted when an interval exists between attainder and execution, a plea in abatement, and other such pleas, each raises a collateral issue. 4 Bla. Com. 338, 396.

COLLATERAL KINSMEN. Those who descend from one and the same common ancestor, but not from one another.

Thus brothers and sisters are collateral to each other; the uncle and the nephew are collateral kinsmen, and cousins are the same. All kinsmen are either lineal or collateral.

COLLATERAL LIMITATION. A limitation in the conveyance of an estate, giving an interest for a specified period, but making the right of enjoyment depend upon some collateral event; as an estate to A till B shall go to Rome. Park, Dow. 163; 4 Kent 128; 1 Washb. R. P. 215.

COLLATERAL SECURITY. A separate obligation attached to another contract to guaranty its performance. The transfer of property or of other contracts to insure the performance of a principal engagement. See Lochrane v. Solomon, 38 Ga. 292; Mervin v. Sherman, 9 Ia. 331.

The property or securities thus conveyed are also called collateral securities; 1 Pow. Mortg. 393; 2 id. 666, n. 871; 3 id. 944, 1001; Munn v. McDonald, 10 Watts (Pa.) 270. See PLEDGE; CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

COLLATERAL UNDERTAKING. A contract based upon a pre-existing debt, or other liability, and including a promise to pay, made by a third person, having immediate respect to and founded upon such debt or liability, without any new consideration moving to him. Elder v. Warfield, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 391.

COLLATERAL WARRANTY. Warranty as to an estate made by one who was ancestor to the heir thereof, either actually or by implication of law, in respect to other property, but who could not have been so in respect to the estate in question.

Warranty made where the heir's title to the land neither was nor could have been derived from the warranting ancestor. Termes de la Ley.

Collateral warranty is spoken of as "a mode of common assurance." The statute of Gloucester being silent as to a collateral warranty, a warranty of a collateral ancestor, whose heir the issue in tail might be descending upon the latter, would bind him without assets by force of the common law. Therefore, by getting a collateral relation, whose heir the issue in tail was to be, to concur in the alienation and bind himself and his heirs to warranty, the statute De Donis was successfully evaded.

Thus, if a tenant in tail should discontinue the tail, have issue and die, and the uncle of the issue should release to the discontinuee and die without issue, this is a collateral warranty to the issue in tail. Littleton § 709. The tenant in tail having discontinued as to his issue before his birth, the heir in tail was driven to his action to regain possession upon the death of his ancestor tenant in tail; and in this action the collateral warranty came in as an estoppel. 2 Washb. R. P. 670.

The heir was barred from ever claiming the land, and, in case he had assets from the warranting ancestor, was obliged to give the warrantee other lands in case of an eviction. 4 Cruise, Dig. 436.

By the statute of Gloucester, 6 Edw. I. c. 3, tenant by the curtesy was restrained from making such warranty as should bind the heir. By a favorable construction of the statute De Donis, and by the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, tenants in tail were deprived of the power of making collateral warranty. By 11 Hen. VII. c. 20, warranty by a tenant in dower, with or without the assent of her subsequent husband, was prevented; and finally 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, declares all warranties by a tenant for life void against the heir, unless such ancestor has an estate of inheritance in possession. See Co. Litt. 373, Butler's note [328]; Stearns, R. Act. 135, 372.

It is doubtful if the doctrine has ever prevailed to a great extent in the United States, and the statute of Anne has not been generally adopted in American statute law, although re-enacted in New York; 4 Kent *469; and in New Jersey; Den v. Crawford, 8 N. J. L. 106. It has been adopted and is in force in Rhode Island; Sisson v. Seabury, 1 Sumn. 235, Fed. Cas. No. 12,913; and in Delaware; Ford's Lessee v. Hays, 1 Harr. 50, 23 Am. Dec. 369. In Kentucky and Virginia, it seems that collateral warranty binds the heir to the extent of assets descended; Doe v. Moore, 1 Dana (Ky.) 59. In Pennsylvania, the statute of Gloucester is in force, but the statute of Anne is not, and a collateral warranty of the ancestor, with sufficient real assets descending to the heirs, bars them from recovering the lands warranted; Carson v. Cemetery Co., 104 Pa. 575. See 2 Bla. Com. 301; 2 Washb. R. P. 608. If the learning of collateral warranty has been called difficult, it is simply because the law of warranty came to be turned from the purpose of its introduction,—that of protection and defence,—and fashioned into a remedy to meet an entirely different purpose. Later, collateral warranty ceased to be used for the purpose of barring estates tail, and its use could never have been universal. Rawle, Cor. for Title, secs. 8, 9. See Litt. § 709; 12 Mod. 513; Year Book 12 Edw. IV. 19; Tudor, Lead. Cas. R. P. 695; Pig. Recov. 9.

COLLATERALES ET SOCI. The former title of masters in chancery.

COLLATIO BONORUM. A collation of goods.

COLLATION. In Civil Law. The supposed or real return to the mass of the succession which an heir makes of the property he received in advance of his share or otherwise, in order that such property may be divided together with the other effects of the succession. See Succession of Thompson, 9 La. Ann. 96.

As the object of collation is to equalize the heirs, it follows that those things are excluded from collation which the heir acquired by an onerous title from the ancestor; that is, where he gave a valuable consideration for them. And, upon the same principle, if a co-heir claims no share of the estate, he is not bound to collate. Qui non vult hereditatem non cogitur ad collationem. It corresponds to the common law hotchpot; 2 Bla. Com. 517.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The act by which the bishop who has the bestowing of a benefice gives it to an incumbent.

Where the ordinary and patron were the same person, presentation and institution to a benefice became one and the same act; and this was called collation. Collation rendered the living full except as against the king; 1 Bla. Com. 391. An advowson under such circumstances is termed collative; 2 Bla. Com. 22.

In Practice. The comparison of a copy with its original, in order to ascertain its correctness and conformity. The report of the officer who made the comparison is also called a collation.

COLLECTOR. One appointed to receive taxes or other impositions: as, collector of taxes, collector of militia fines, etc. A person appointed by a private person to collect the credits due him.

COLLECTOR OF THE CUSTOMS. An officer of the United States, appointed for the term of four years. Rev. Stat. U. S. § 2613. His general duties are defined in § 2621.

COLLEGA. In Civil Law. One invested with joint authority. A colleague; an associate. Black, L. Dict.

COLLEGE. An organized collection or assemblage of persons. A civil corporation, society, or company, having, in general, some literary object.

The assemblage of the cardinals at Rome is called a college. The body of presidential electors is called the electoral college, although the whole body never come together.

A qualified person is prima facie entitled to register as a student in a university; Gleason v. University, 104 Minn. 359, 116 N. W. 650; but in Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. Ed. 629, Marshall, C. J., said: "No individual youth has a vested interest in the institution which can be asserted in a court of justice." Refusal of an incorporated medical college to admit negro students does not deny them any constitutional privilege, for private institutions of learning, though incorporated, may select those whom they will receive, and may discriminate on account of sex, age, proficiency in learning or otherwise; Booker v. Medical College, 156 Mich. 95, 120 N. W. 589, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 447.

Mandamus was held the proper remedy to remove a professor after the professorship had been abolished; People v. Medical College, 10 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 122; or to prevent an application on behalf of a colored boy to be admitted; State v. Maryland Institute, 87 Md. 643, 41 Atl. 126; or to compel the admission of a woman as a student in a law college; Foltz v. Hoge, 54 Cal. 28; or to compel the admission of a doctor to the College of Physicians; 4 Burr. 2186. But it will not lie, on the relation of a medical college, to compel the State Board of Medical Examiners to recognize it as a medical institution in good standing; State v. Coleman, 64 Ohio St. 377, 60 N. E. 568, 55 L. R. A. 105.

A college cannot dismiss a student without cause; Booker v. College, 156 Mich. 95, 120 N. W. 589, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 447; mandamus to reinstate a student who has been expelled has generally been refused; Dunn's Case, 9 Pa. C. C. 417; a college may forbid its students to join a secret society, and a student who does so may be expelled; People v. College, 40 Ill. 186. Where a college degree was withheld from a student who had satisfactorily passed his examinations, mandamus was refused in State v. Medical College, 128 Wis. 7, 106 N. W. 116, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115, 116 Am. St. Rep. 21, 8 Ann. Cas. 407; People v. School, 68 Hun 118, 22 N. Y. Supp. 663; contra, People v. Medical College, 60 Hun 107, 14 N. Y. Supp. 490, affirmed in 128 N. Y. 621, 28 N. E. 253, it appearing that the refusal was merely arbitrary; and so in State v. Medical College, 81 Neb. 533, 116 N. W.

294, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 930. The reason for granting the writ is usually a so-called contractual relation arising between college and student on matriculation; but such relation was denied in 31 Law Jour. 119, where an action for breach of contract was brought. The better view is said in England to be that the sole jurisdiction to settle such questions rests in the visitor to the college or university, and not in the courts; 33 L. J. Rep. (Ch.) 625. Mandamus will not lie to compel a college to issue a diploma; State v. Medical College, 128 Wis. 7, 106 N. W. 116, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115, 116 Am. St. Rep. 21, 80 Ann. Cas. 407. A diploma is not necessary to granting of a degree, for a vote that a degree be conferred on a person invests him with such degree ipso facto; Wright v. Lanckton, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 288.

An instructor's relation with a school is ordinarily a purely contractual one; Butler v. Regents of University, 32 Wis. 124; Trustees of University v. Walden, 15 Ala. 655; Board of Regents v. Mudge, 21 Kan. 223.

In the absence of a statute providing the manner for the dissolution of a college corporation, it may dissolve itself by a voluntary surrender of its franchise; People v. College, 38 Cal. 166; and while a palpable misuse of the powers is ground for its dissolution; State v. College Co., 63 Ohio St. 341, 58 N. E. 799, 52 L. R. A. 365; a partial decay of one department, caused by students refusing to take that special course, would not be ground for forfeiture; State v. College, 32 Ohio St. 487. A statute providing that credit for certain purposes is not to be given to students who are minors attending a college, unless the assent of some officer of the college be obtained, is a proper exercise of legislative functions; Soper v. College, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 177, 11 Am. Dec. 159; Morse v. State, 6 Conn. 9; 18 Q. B. 647.

The board of regents of a state college cannot exact a fee of students to be used for maintenance of the Y. M. C. A. or Y. W. C. A.; Connell v. Gray, 33 Okl. 591, 127 Pac. 417; 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 336.

Notwithstanding the agreement of a university to educate five boys without cost, to be appointed annually by the mayor of a city, in consideration of exemption from taxes, it may charge a free student a laboratory fee to cover material actually used and destroyed by him in the laboratory courses; City of New Orleans v. Board of Adm'rs, 123 La. 550, 49 South. 171.

In a suit for injuries suffered at a university foot ball game by the collapse of the seats, the game being under the auspices of a university athletic association, it was held that it was a branch of the university; George v. Athletic Ass'n, 107 Minn. 424, 120 N. W. 750.

One who conducts a business college in Philadelphia without the authority to confer degrees will be restrained from describing his school as a university; it appearing that by the use of the name "University of Philadelphia" persons intending to correspond with the "University of Pennsylvania" were misled, the latter institution was entitled to protection against the use of the word "university"; Com. v. Banks, 198 Pa. 397, 48 Atl. 277. A business college is not entitled to exemption from taxation as a general educational institution; Parsons Business College v. City of Kalamazoo, 166 Mich. 305, 131 N. W. 553, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 921.

See DEGREE.

COLLEGE FRATERNITIES. Individual members of a college fraternity may enjoin the unauthorized withdrawal of the charter of the chapter to which they belong; the membership would remain to them in spite of the withdrawal. The fact that a college has not the proper material for the maintenance of a Greek letter fraternity is no ground for the withdrawal of its fraternity charter by the head council, where there is no provision in the constitution or by-laws authorizing such withdrawal, except for a violation of the rules and usages of the fraternity. A disclosure by charter members of the constitution of a Greek letter fraternity and of certain secrets relative to an attempt by the grand council to withdraw a charter was not such a violation of the constitution and by-laws as would authorize the fraternity to forfeit their charter, where such violation was rendered necessary by the fraternity itself. Heaton v. Hull, 51 App. Div. 126, 64 N. Y. Supp. 279. See 42 Am. L. Rev. 170.

COLLEGIUM (Lat. colligere, to collect). In Civil Law. A society or assemblage of those of the same rank or honor. An army. A company, in popular phrase. The whole order of bishops. Du Cange.

Collegium illicitum. One which abused its right, or assembled for any other purpose than that expressed in its charter.

Collegium licitum. An assemblage or society of men united for some useful purpose or business, with power to act like a single individual.

All collegia were illicita which were not ordained by a decree of the senate or of the emperor; 2 Kent 269.

A corporation.

COLLIERY, COALERY. A coal mine, coal pit, or place where coals are dug, with the engines and machinery used in discharging the water and raising the coal. Webster.

Colliery is a collective compound including many things, and is not limited to the lease and fixtures of a tunnel, drift, shaft, slope, or vein from which the coal is mined; Carey v. Bright, 58 Pa. 85.

COLLISION. The act of ships or vessels striking together, or of one vessel running against or foul of another.

It may happen without fault, no blame being imputable to those in charge of either vessel. In such case, in the English, American, and French courts, each party must bear his own loss; Pardessus, Droit Comm. p. 4, t. 2, c. 2, § 4; General Mutual Ins. Co. v. Sherwood, 14 How. (U. S.) 352, 14 L. Ed. 452; 1 Pars. Sh. & Adm. 525.

A collision by inevitable accident is when a collision is caused exclusively by natural causes, without any fault on the part of the owners or those in charge; The Sea Gull, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 169, 23 L. Ed. 90; Killam v. Eri, 3 Cliff. 456, Fed. Cas. No. 7,765; Sampson v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cl. 480. It must appear that neither vessel was in fault; Sterling v. The Jennie Cushman, 3 Cliff. 636, Fed. Cas. No. 13,375. Where the captain and crew, except the second mate, were taken sick, and a collision occurred, through the absence of a lookout, it was held to be inevitable accident; The Southern Home, 8 Reporter 389, Fed. Cas. No. 13,187. See also The F. W. Gifford, 7 Biss. 249, Fed. Cas. No. 5,166.

It may happen by mutual fault, that is, by the misconduct, fault, or negligence of those in charge of both vessels; The C. R. Stone, 49 Fed. 475; The Brinton, 50 Fed. 581; The T. B. Van Houten, 50 Fed. 590; The Riversdale, 53 Fed. 286; The Allen Green, 60 Fed. 459, 9 C. C. A. 73. In such case, neither party has relief at common law; 3 Kent 231; 3 C. & P. 528; Barnes v. Cole, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 188; Hartfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 615, 34 Am. Dec. 273; Brown v. Maxwell, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 592, 41 Am. Dec. 771; Parker v. Adams, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 415, 46 Am. Dec. 694 (though now otherwise in England by the Judicature Act 1873); but the maritime courts aggregate the damages to both vessels and their cargoes, and then divide the same equally between the two vessels; 3 Kent 232; The Teutonia, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 84, 23 L. Ed. 44; The Clara, 49 Fed. 765; The State of California, 49 Fed. 172, 1 C. C. A. 224; The Bolivia, 49 Fed. 169, 1 C. C. A. 221; Fristad v. The Premier, 51 Fed. 766; The Marion, 56 Fed. 271; The Manitoba, 122 U. S. 97, 7 Sup. Ct. 1158, 30 L. Ed. 1095. See 1 Swab. 60. Where two tugs and two scows in tow by one of them are all in fault, each is liable for an equal share of the damages, even though more than one be owned by the same person; The Eugene F. Moran, 212 U. S. 466, 29 Sup. Ct. 339, 53 L. Ed. 600. Where the collision is by intentional wrong of both parties, the libel will be dismissed; The R. L. Maybey, 4 Blatch. 88, Fed. Cas. No. 11,870.

It may happen by inscrutable fault, that is, by the fault of those in charge of one or both vessels and yet under such circumstances that it is impossible to determine who is in fault. In such case the American courts of admiralty and the European maritime courts formerly adopted the rule of an equal division of the aggregate damage; The Comet, 1 Abb. U. S. 451, Fed. Cas. No. 3,050; The Scioto, 2 Ware (Davels 365) 360, Fed. Cas. No. 12,508; Flanders, Mar. Law, 296. The English courts have refused a remedy in admiralty; 2 Hagg. Adm. 145; 6 Thornt. 240; and see The Kallisto, 2 Hugh. 128, Fed. Cas. No. 7,600; but it has now been decided by a vast preponderance of authority that there can be no recovery or partial recovery unless fault be affirmatively shown; The Jumna, 149 Fed. 173, 79 C. C. A. 119, following The Clara, 102 U. S. 200, 26 L. Ed. 145; The Sunnyside, 91 U. S. 208, 23 L. Ed. 302.

It may happen by the fault of those belonging to one of the colliding vessels, without any fault being imputable to the other vessel. In such case the owners of the vessel in fault must bear the damage which their own vessel has sustained, and are liable as well as their master to a claim for compensation from the owners of the other vessel for the damage done to her; 1 Swab. 23, 173, 200, 211; 3 W. Rob. 283; The Narragansett, 1 Blatchf. 211, Fed. Cas. No. 10,017; Vantine v. The Lake, 2 Wall. Jr. 52, Fed. Cas. No. 16,878; Smith v. Condry, 1 How. (U. S.) 28, 11 L. Ed. 35; Williamson v. Barrett, 13 How. (U. S.) 101, 14 L. Ed. 68; although wilfully committed by the master; Ralston v. State Rights, Crabbe 22, Fed. Cas. No. 11,540; Dusar v. Murgatroyd, 1 Wash. C. C. 13, Fed. Cas. No. 4,199; Dias v. The Revenge, 1 Wash. C. C. 262, Fed. Cas. No. 3,877. But see 1 W. Rob. 399; 2 id. 502; Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 343, 32 Am. Dec. 507.

Where one vessel, clearly shown to be guilty of a fault adequate in itself to have caused a collision, seeks to impugn the other vessel, there is a presumption in favor of the latter, which can only be rebutted by clear proof of a contributing fault, and this principle is peculiarly applicable to a vessel at anchor, complying with regulations concerning lights and receiving injuries, through the fault of a steamer in motion; The Oregon, 158 U. S. 186, 15 Sup. Ct. 804, 39 L. Ed. 943. If a cargo be damaged by collision between two vessels, the owner may pursue both vessels or either, or the owners or both, or either; and in case he proceeds against one only, and both are held in fault, he may recover his entire damages of the one sued; In re Eastern Dredging Co., 182 Fed. 179; The Beaconsfield, 158 U. S. 303, 15 Sup. Ct. 860, 39 L. Ed. 993.

These four classes of cases are noted in 2 Dods. 85, by Lord Stowell.

Full compensation is, in general, to be made in such cases for the loss and damage which the prosecuting party has sustained by the fault of the party proceeded against;

2 W. Rob. 279; including all damages which are fairly attributable exclusively to the act of the original wrong-doer, or which may be said to be the direct consequence of his wrongful act; 3 W. Rob. 7, 282; 11 M. & W. 228; 1 Swab. 200; The Narragansett, 1 Blatchf. 211, Fed. Cas. No. 10,017; Vantine v. The Lake, 2 Wall. Jr. 52, Fed. Cas. No. 16,878; Smith v. Condry, 1 How. (U. S.) 28, 11 L. Ed. 35; The Catharine, 17 How. (U. S.) 170, 15 L. Ed. 233; The Anna W., 201 Fed. 58, 119 C. C. A. 396.

As to limited liability of owners, see SHIP.

For the prevention of collisions, certain rules have been adopted (see NAVIGATION RULES) which are binding upon vessels approaching each other from the time the necessity for precaution begins, and continue to be applicable, as the vessels advance, so long as the means and opportunity to avoid the danger remain; New York & L. U. S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Rumball, 21 How. 372, 16 L. Ed. 144. But, whatever may be the rules of navigation in force at the place of collision, it is apparent that they must sometimes yield to extraordinary circumstances, and cannot be regarded as binding in all cases. Thus, if a vessel necessarily goes so near a rock, or the land, that by following the ordinary rules she would inevitably go upon the rock, or get on shore or aground, no rule should prevail over the preservation of property and life; 1 W. Rob. 478, 485; 4 J. B. Moore 314; The Maggie J. Smith, 123 U. S. 349, 8 Sup. Ct. 159, 31 L. Ed. 175; Belden v. Chase, 150 U. S. 674, 14 Sup. Ct. 264, 37 L. Ed. 1218; but obedience to the rules is not a fault, even if a different course would have prevented a collision, and the necessity must be clear and the emergency sudden and alarming before an act of disobedience can be excused; Belden v. Chase, 150 U. S. 674, 14 Sup. Ct. 264, 37 L. Ed. 1218. No vessel should unnecessarily incur the probability of a collision by a pertinacious adherence to the rule of navigation; 1 W. Rob. 471, 478; Hawkins v. Steamboat Co., 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 452; and if it was clearly in the power of one of the vessels which came into collision to have avoided all danger by giving way, she will be held bound to do so, notwithstanding the rule of navigation; 6 Thornt. Adm. 600, 607; Lane v. The A. Denike, 3 Cliff. 117, Fed. Cas. No. 8,045.

All navigation rules pertinent to a given situation are to be construed together, and while each of two approaching vessels has the right to expect the other to navigate in accordance with the rules or a passing agreement, when it becomes evident that either is not doing so, it is the duty of the other to navigate accordingly and take such measures as may seem necessary to avoid a collision; U. S. v. Erie R. Co., 172 Fed. 50, 96 C. C. A. 538. But a vessel is not required to depart from the rule when she cannot do so without danger; Biggs v. Barry, 2 Curt. C. C. 363, Fed. Cas. No. 1,402; Crockett v. The Isaac Newton, 18 How. 581, 15 L. Ed. 492.

There must be a lookout properly stationed and kept; and under circumstances of special danger, two; The Oregon, 158 U. S. 186, 15 Sup. Ct. 804, 39 L. Ed. 943; and the absence of such a lookout is prima facie evidence of negligence; St. John v. Paine, 10 How. (U. S.) 557, 13 L. Ed. 537; Whitridge v. Dill, 23 How. (U. S.) 448, 16 L. Ed. 581; The Scioto, Davelis, 359, Fed. Cas. No. 12,508; The Coe F. Young, 49 Fed. 167, 1 C. C. A. 219; The Nellie Clark, 50 Fed. 585. The rule requiring a lookout admits of no exception on account of size in favor of any craft capable of committing injury; The Marion, 56 Fed. 271. The absence of a lookout is not material where the presence of one would not have availed to prevent a collision; The Blue Jacket, 144 U. S. 371, 12 Sup. Ct. 711, 36 L. Ed. 469. A sailing vessel is entitled to assume that a steam vessel approaching her is being navigated with a proper lookout; The Coe F. Young, 49 Fed. 167, 1 C. C. A. 219. By the International Code, rule 8, lights also must be kept; the rule was formerly otherwise in regard to vessels on the high seas; 2 W. Rob. 4; The Delaware v. The Osprey, 2 Wall. Jr. 268, Fed. Cas. No. 3,763. See NAVIGATION RULES; The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 12 How. (U. S.) 443, 13 L. Ed. 1058; Haney v. Packet Co., 23 How. (U. S.) 287, 16 L. Ed. 562; The Emily, 1 Blatchf. 236, Fed. Cas. No. 4,452; The Santa Claus, 1 Blatchf. 370, Fed. Cas. No. 12,326; Carsley v. White, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 254, 32 Am. Dec. 259; Simpson v. Hand, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 324, 36 Am. Dec. 231; The Havilah, 50 Fed. 331, 1 C. C. A. 519; The Oregon, 158 U. S. 186, 15 Sup. Ct. 804, 39 L. Ed. 943. Stu. Adm. Low. C. 222, 242; 1 Thornt. Adm. 592; 6 id. 176; 7 id. 507; 2 W. Rob. 377; 3 id. 7, 49, 190; 1 Swab. 20, 233.

The injury to an insured vessel occasioned by a collision is a loss within the ordinary policy of insurance; 4 Ad. & E. 420; 6 N. & M. 713; Peters v. Ins. Co., 14 Pet. (U. S.) 99, 10 L. Ed. 371; General Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sherwood, 14 How. (U. S.) 352, 14 L. Ed. 452; Nelson v. Ins. Co., 8 Cush. (Mass.) 477, 54 Am. Dec. 776; but when the collision is occasioned by the fault of the insured vessel, or the fault of both vessels, the insurer is not ordinarily liable for the amount of the injury done to the other vessel which may be decreed against the vessel insured; 4 Ad. & E. 420; 7 E. & B. 172; 40 E. L. & Eq. 54; Mathews v. Ins. Co., 11 N. Y. 9; General Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sherwood, 14 How. (U. S.) 352, 14 L. Ed. 452, and cases cited; but some policies now provide that the insurer shall be liable for such a loss; 40 E. L. & Eq. 54; 7 E. & B. 172.

Damage caused to one vessel by striking upon another vessel's anchor, is within a policy of marine insurance providing against collisions between vessels; [1901] 2 K. B. 792.

See Matsunami, Collisions between Warships and Merchant Vessels.

When the collision was without fault on either side, and occurred in a foreign country, where, in accordance with the local law, the damages were equally divided between the colliding vessels, the amount of the decree against the insured vessel for its share of the damages suffered by the other vessel was held recoverable under the ordinary policy; Peters v. Ins. Co., 14 Pet. (U. S.) 99, 10 L. Ed. 371.

The fact that the libellants in a collision case had received satisfaction from the insurers for the vessel destroyed, furnishes no ground of defence for the respondent; The Monticello v. Mollison, 17 How. (U. S.) 152, 15 L. Ed. 68.

Improper speed on the part of a steamer in a dark night, during thick weather, or in the crowded thoroughfares of commerce, will render such vessel liable for the damages occasioned by a collision; and it is no excuse for such dangerous speed that the steamer carries the mail and is under contract to convey it at a greater average speed than that complained of; 3 Hagg. Adm. 414; McCready v. Goldsmith, 18 How. (U. S.) 89, 15 L. Ed. 288; The New York v. Rea, 18 How. (U. S.) 223, 15 L. Ed. 359; Sampson v. United States, 12 Ct. Cls. (U. S.) 480; The Manistee, 7 Biss. 35, Fed. Cas. No. 9,028; The Majestic, 48 Fed. 730, 1 C. C. A. 78; Fabre v. Steamship Co., 53 Fed. 288, 3 C. C. A. 534; The Bolivia, 49 Fed. 169, 1 C. C. A. 221; The Laurence, 54 Fed. 542, 4 C. C. A. 501; The Fulda, 52 Fed. 400; The Trave, 55 Fed. 117; The Britannia, 153 U. S. 130, 14 Sup. Ct. 795, 38 L. Ed. 660; The Nacoochee, 137 U. S. 330, 11 Sup. Ct. 122, 34 L. Ed. 687.

As between a steamer and a sailing vessel, the former must keep out of the way of the latter; The Java, 14 Blatch. 524, Fed. Cas. No. 7,233; The Free State, 91 U. S. 200, 23 L. Ed. 299; The Blue Jacket, 144 U. S. 371, 12 Sup. Ct. 711, 36 L. Ed. 469; The Nacoochee, 137 U. S. 330, 11 Sup. Ct. 122, 34 L. Ed. 687; The Havana, 54 Fed. 411; The Robert Holland, 59 Fed. 200; as between a vessel in motion and one at anchor, with proper lights, the former is ordinarily liable for a collision; The Lady Franklin, 2 Low. 220, Fed. Cas. No. 7,984; The J. W. Everman, 2 Hugh. 17, Fed. Cas. No. 7,591. Where a vessel is moored for the night according to custom along a well-known dock and not projecting beyond the wharf, if run into by a steamer in the fog, she is not at fault because she had no light set and sounded no gongs; The Express, 48 Fed. 323. A vessel at anchor in a fairway must take precautions commensurate with the danger she presents to shipping; The Europe, 175 Fed. 596.

A sailing vessel beating in the vicinity of a steam vessel is not obliged to run out her tack, provided her going about is not calculated to mislead or embarrass the steam vessel; The Coe F. Young, 49 Fed. 167, 1 C. C. A. 219.

An inexperienced oarsman is guilty of negligence in attempting to cross the path of a steamboat but a short distance in front of it; Sekerak v. Jutte, 153 Pa. 117, 25 Atl. 994. As to collisions due to the fault of a pilot, see PILOTAGE.

A cause of collision, or collision and damage, as it is technically called, is a suit in rem in the admiralty.

In the United States courts it is commenced by the filing of a libel and the arrest of the vessel to the mismanagement or fault of which the injury is imputed. In the English admiralty the suit is commenced by the arrest of the vessel and the filing of a petition. In England, the judge is usually assisted at the hearing of the cause by two of the Masters or Elder Brethren of Trinity House, or other experienced shipmasters, whose opinions upon all questions of professional skill involved in the issue are usually adopted by the court; 1 W. Rob. 471; 2 id. 225; 2 Chit. Genl. Pr. 514.

In the American courts of admiralty, the judge usually decides without the aid or advice of experienced shipmasters acting as assessors or advisers of the court; but the evidence of such shipmasters, as experts, is sometimes received in reference to questions of professional skill or nautical usage. Such evidence is not, however, admissible to establish a usage in direct violation of those general rules of navigation which have been sanctioned and established by repeated decisions; Wheeler v. The Eastern State, 2 Curt. C. C. 141, Fed. Cas. No. 17,494; The Clement, 2 Curt. C. C. 363, Fed. Cas. No. 2,879.

When a party sets up circumstances as the basis of exceptions to the general rules of navigation, he is held to strict proof; 1 W. Rob. 157, 182, 478; 6 Thornt. 607; 5 id. 170; 3 Hagg. Adm. 321; and courts of admiralty lean against such exceptions; 11 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 353. The admissions of a master of one of the colliding vessels subsequently to the collision are admissible in evidence; 5 E. L. & Eq. 556; and the masters and crew are admissible as witnesses; 2 Dods. 83; 2 Hagg. Adm. 145; 3 id. 321, 325; 1 Conkl. 384.

The general rules in regard to costs in collision cases, in the admiralty courts, are that if only one party is to blame, he pays the costs of both; if neither is to blame, and the party prosecuting had apparent cause for proceeding, each party pays his own costs, but in the absence of apparent or probable cause the libel will be dismissed with costs; if both parties are to blame, the costs of both are equally divided, or, more generally, each party is left to pay his own costs. But costs in admiralty are always in the discretion of the court, and will be given or withheld in particular cases without regard to these general rules, if the equity of the case requires a departure from them; 2 W. Rob. 213, 244; 5 Jur. 1067; 2 Conkl. 438.

"In case of collision on the high seas between ships of different nationalities, the general maritime law, as understood and administered in the courts of the country in which the litigation is prosecuted, governs. The Belgenland, 114 U. S. 355, 5 Sup. Ct. 860, 29 L. Ed. 152; In re State Steamship Co., 60 Fed. 1018. This rule is subject to two qualifications: (1) Persons in charge of either ship would not be open to blame for following sailing directions and rules of navigation prescribed by their own government; The Scotia, 14 Wall. [U. S.] 170, 20 L. Ed. 822. (2) If the maritime law, as administered by the nations to which the ships respectively belong, is the same in respect of a particular matter, it will, if duly proved, be followed in respect of such matter, though it differ from the maritime law as understood in the country of the litigation; The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24, 26 L. Ed. 1001." Moore's notes to Dicey, Conflict of Laws, 670. See Meili, Internat. Civil and Comm. L. 524. See FOG; LIEN; NAVIGATION RULES.

COLLISTRIGIUM. The pillory.

COLLOCATION. In French Law. The act by which the creditors of an estate are arranged in the order in which they are to be paid according to law.

The order in which the creditors are placed is also called collocation. 2 Low. C. 9, 139.

COLLOQUIUM. A general averment in an action for slander connecting the whole publication with the previous statement. 1 Stark. Sl. 431; Heard, Lib. & Sl. 228; or stating that the whole publication applies to the plaintiff, and to the extrinsic matters alleged in his declaration. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 417.

An averment that the words were spoken "of or concerning" the plaintiff, where the words are actionable in themselves. 6 Term 162; Ellis v. Kimball, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 132; Cro. Jac. 674; or where the injurious meaning which the plaintiff assigns to the words results from some extrinsic matter, or of and concerning, or with reference to, such matter; Bloss v. Tobey, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 328; Carter v. Andrews, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 1; 11 M. & W. 287.

An averment that the words in question are spoken of or concerning some usage, report, or fact which gives to words otherwise indifferent the peculiar defamatory meaning assigned to them. Shaw, C. J., Carter v. Andrews, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 6.

Whenever words have the slanderous meaning alleged, not by their own intrinsic force, but by reason of the existence of some extraneous fact, this fact must be averred in a traversable form, which averment is called the inducement. There must then be a colloquium averring that the slanderous words were spoken of or concerning this fact. Then the word "meaning," or innuendo, is used to connect the matters thus introduced by averments and colloquia with the particular words laid, showing their identity and drawing what is then the legal inference from the whole declaration, that such was, under the circumstances thus set out, the meaning of the words used. Per Shaw, C. J., Carter v. Andrews, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 6. By the Com. L. Proc. Act (1852) in England the colloquium has been rendered unnecessary. See INNUEUDO; Odger, Lib. & Sl.

COLLUSION. An agreement between two or more persons to defraud a person of his rights by the forms of law, or to obtain an object forbidden by law.

Collusion and fraud of every kind vitiate all acts which are infected with them, and render them void. See 3 Hagg. Eccl. 130, 133; McKay v. Williams, 67 Mich. 547, 35 N. W. 159, 11 Am. St. Rep. 597; Winter v. Truax, 87 Mich. 324, 49 N. W. 604, 24 Am. St. Rep. 160; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 51; Bousquet, Dict. Abordage.

In Divorce Law. An agreement between a husband and wife that one of them will commit or appear to commit a breach of matrimonial duties in order that the other may obtain a remedy at law as for a real injury. 2 Wait, Act. & Def. 591; 2 Lev. & Tr. 302; L. R. 1 P. & M. 121. See Reed v. Reed, 86 Mich. 600, 49 N. W. 587; Belz v. Belz, 33 Ill. App. 105. Such an agreement is a fraud upon the court where the remedy is sought; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 39 Wis. 167; and will bar a divorce; L. R. 1 P. & M. 121; 2 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. 251.

"The authorities are uniform in holding that any contract between the parties, having for its object the dissolution of the marriage contract, or facilitating that result, such as an agreement by the defendant in the pending action for divorce to withdraw his or her opposition and to make no defense, is void as contra bonos mores, and any note given in consideration thereof is void." Adams v. Adams, 25 Minn. 72; Weeks v. Hill, 38 N. H. 199. This was quoted by Sulzberger, J., in Pietz v. Pietz, 20 Dist. R. (Pa.) 311. The fact that defendant voluntarily appears, without service, and makes no defense, is not of itself collusion, but the court will, in such case, narrowly examine the evidence; Lyon v. Lyon, 13 Dist. Rep. (Pa.) 623. A mere mutual desire to be divorced will not defeat the granting of the decree when there is no collusion between the parties for the purpose of making evidence; Taylor v. Taylor, 35 Pa. Co. Ct. 385. In Dunbar v. Dunbar, 190 U. S. 340, 23 Sup. Ct. 757, 47 L. Ed. 1084, while the husband and wife were living apart, the husband told the wife that if she would not contest divorce proceedings he would make provision for her support. The court, in holding that a bond for such provision was not discharged in bankruptcy, said that it might be considered as in the nature of an ordinary alimony decree.

COLONIAL LAWS. The laws of a colony.

In the United States the term is used to designate the body of law in force in the colonies of America at the time of the com-commencement of our independence, which was, in general, the common law of England, with such modifications as the colonial experience had introduced. The colonial law is thus a transition state through which our present law is derived from the English common law.

In England the term colonial law is used with reference to the present colonies of that realm. See COLONY.

COLONUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A serf attached to the soil and whose descendants so continued. Whilst the coloni were not really servi, and in many respects were held to be ingenui, they were not permitted to remove from the place on which they were born into this status. They paid rent to the owner of the land and generally in kind. Those who were coloni liberi had well-ascertained rights of property as against the owner of the land, and were subject to few other obligations; while another class, called censiti, had no property, and what they might acquire was acquired for the master. Howe, Civ. L. (2d ed.) 152.

It is thought by Spence not improbable that many of the coloni were descended from the coloni brought over by the Romans. The names of the coloni and their families were all recorded in the archives of the colony or district. Hence they were called adscriptitii. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 51.

COLONY. A union of citizens or subjects who have left their country to people another, and remain subject to the mother-country. U. S. v. The Nancy, 3 Wash. C. C. 287, Fed. Cas. No. 15,854.

A tract of territory subordinate to the inhabitants of a different tract of country, and ruled by authorities wholly or in part responsible to the main administration, instead of to the people of their own region. quoted by J. B. Thayer (Legal Essays 166) from Prof. Hart.

In conquered or ceded countries, their laws remain in force until changed, but where a colony is planted in an uninhabited country, the colonists carry with them all the English laws that are applicable to their condition; 1 Steph. Com. 62.

The country occupied by the colonists.

A colony differs from a possession or a dependency. See DEPENDENCY.

A province of Canada is not a British colony or dependency; [1911] 2 Ch. 58.

See Burge, Colonial Laws, by Renton & Phillimore.

COLOR. In Pleading. An apparent but legally insufficient ground of action admitted to subsist in the opposite party by the pleading of one of the parties to an action. 3 Bla. Com. 309; 4 B. & C. 547. To give color is to give the plaintiff credit for having an apparent or prima facie right of action, independent of the matter introduced to destroy it, in order to introduce new matter in avoidance of the declaration. It was necessary that all pleadings in confession and avoidance should give color. See 3 Bla. Com. 309, n.; 1 Chit. Pl. 531.

Express color is a feigned matter pleaded by the defendant, from which the plaintiff seems to have a good cause, whereas he has in truth only an appearance or color of cause. Bacon, Abr. Trespass, I, 4; 1 Chit. Pl. 530. It was not allowed in the plaintiff to traverse the colorable right thus given; and it thus became necessary to answer the plea on which the defendant intended to rely.

Implied color is that which arises from the nature of the defence; as where the defence consists of matter of law, the facts being admitted but their legal sufficiency denied by matters alleged in the plea. 1 Chit. Pl. 528; Steph. Pl. 206.

By giving color the defendant could remove the decision of the case from before a jury and introduce matter in a special plea, which would otherwise oblige him to plead the general issue; 3 Bla. Com. 309.

The colorable right must be plausible or afford a supposititious right such as might induce an unlearned person to imagine it sufficient, and yet it must be in legal strictness inadequate to defeat the defendant's title as shown in the plea; Comyns, Dig. Pleading; Keilw. 1036; 1 Chit. Pl. 531; 4 Dane, Abr. 552; Archb. Pl. 211.

COLOR OF OFFICE. A pretence of official right to do an act made by one who has no such right. 9 East 364. Such person must be at least a de facto officer; Burrall v. Acker, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 606, 35 Am. Dec. 582.

An act wrongfully done by an officer, under the pretended authority of his office, and grounded upon corruption, to which the office is a mere shadow of color. Griffiths v. Hardenbergh, 41 N. Y. 464.

COLOR OF TITLE. In Ejectment. An apparent title to land founded upon a written instrument, such as a deed, levy of execution, decree of court, or the like. 3 Wait, Act. & Def. 17; Brooks v. Bruyn, 35 Ill. 394; Torrey v. Forbes, 94 Ala. 135, 10 South. 320. Color of title, for the purpose of adverse possession under the statute of limitations, is that which has the semblance or appearance of title, legal or equitable, but which, in fact, is no title; Sharp v. Furnace Co., 100 Va. 27, 40 S. E. 103; that which is a title in appearance, but not in reality; Wood v. Conrad, 2 S. D. 334, 50 N. W. 95; Dickens v. Barnes, 79 N. C. 490; Cameron v. U. S., 148 U. S. 301, 13 Sup. Ct. 595, 37 L. Ed. 459; Lindt v. Uihlein, 116 Ia. 48, 89 N. W. 214; an apparent right; Newlin v. Rogers, 6 Kan. App. 910, 51 Pac. 315; a title prima facie good; Farley v. Smith, 39 Ala. 38; Converse v. R. Co., 195 Ill. 204, 62 N. E. 887.

A writing upon its face professing to pass title, but which does not do so, either from a want of title in the person making it, or from the defective conveyance used; a title that is imperfect, but not so obviously so that it would be apparent to one not skilled in the law; Williamson v. Tison, 99 Ga. 792, 26 S. E. 766; Head v. Phillips, 70 Ark. 432, 68 S. W. 878; Bloom v. Straus, 70 Ark. 483, 69 S. W. 549, 72 S. W. 563.

It has been held to be wholly immaterial how imperfect or defective the writing may be, considered as a deed; if it is in writing, and defines the extent of the claim, it is a sign, semblance or claim of title; Street v. Collier, 118 Ga. 470, 45 S. E. 294; Mullan's Adm'r v. Carper, 37 W. Va. 215, 16 S. E. 527; that strictly speaking it cannot rest in parol, see Armijo v. Armijo, 4 N. M. (Gild.) 57, 13 Pac. 92.

A state grant of land, included in an older grant, is color of title; Weaver v. Love, 146 N. C. 414, 59 S. E. 1041; so of a writing signed by the heirs of an owner of lands allotting them to two of their number and relinquishing their own right thereto; Henry v. Brown, 143 Ala. 446, 39 South. 325; and a patent, whether good against the sovereign or void; Bogardus v. Trinity Church, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 633; and a record of proceedings in partition; Lindsay v. Beaman, 128 N. C. 189, 38 S. E. 811.

Color of title and claim of right are not synonymous terms; Herbert v. Hanrick, 16 Ala. 581. "Claim of title" does not necessarily include "color of title"; Allen v. Mansfield, 108 Mo. 343, 18 S. W. 901. To constitute color of title, there must be a paper title; but claim of title may rest wholly in parol; Hamilton v. Wright, 30 Ia. 480. It has been held that, to give color of title, a conveyance must describe the property; Packard v. Moss, 68 Cal. 123, 8 Pac. 818; Wood v. Conrad, 2 S. D. 334, 50 N. W. 95; that it must designate a specified interest in the land; Etowah, etc., Mining Co. v. Parker, 73 Ga. 53; Wilson v. Johnson, 145 Ind. 40, 38 N. E. 38, 43 N. E. 930.

A tax deed, though void for failure to comply with the statutes, affords color of title; Lantry v. Parker, 37 Neb. 353, 55 N. W. 962; City of Chicago v. Middlebrooke, 143 Ill. 265, 32 N. E. 457; Van Gunden v. Iron Co., 52 Fed. 838, 3 C. C. A. 294. To give color, the conveyance, etc., must be good in form, and profess to convey the title and be duly executed; La Frombois v. Jackson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 589, 18 Am. Dec. 463; Latta v. Clifford, 47 Fed. 614; Irey v. Markey, 132 Ind. 546, 32 N. E. 309; but a deed to a tenant in possession from one who has no title to the land is insufficient as a basis for adverse possession; McRoberts v. Bergman, 132 N. Y. 73, 30 N. E. 261. A conveyance void on its face is not sufficient; Moore v. Brown, 11 How. (U. S.) 424, 13 L. Ed. 751; Marsh v. Weir, 21 Tex. 97. An entry is by color of title when it is made under a bonâ fide and not pretended claim of title existing in another; McCall v. Meely, 3 Watts (Pa.) 72. A quit-claim deed is sufficient color of title to support a plea of title by limitation; Parker v. Newberry, 83 Tex. 428, 18 S. W. 815. The deed, or color of title, under which a person takes possession of land, serves to define specifically the boundaries of his claims; Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 412, 9 L. Ed. 475. When a disseisor enters upon and cultivates part of a tract, he does not thereby hold possession of the whole tract constructively, unless this entry was by color of title by specific boundaries to the whole tract; color of title, is valuable only so far as it indicates the extent of the disseisor's claim; Ege v. Medlar, 82 Pa. 99. See Allen v. Mansfield, 108 Mo. 343, 18 S. W. 901; Sholl v. Coal Co., 139 Ill. 21, 28 N. E. 748. A person taking lands under a judicial sale, though void, has color of title; Irey v. Mater, 134 Ind. 238, 33 N. E. 1018; Mullan's Adm'r v. Carper, 37 W. Va. 215, 16 S. E. 527.

See 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1178, note; ADVERSE POSSESSION.

COLORADO. One of the United States of America, being the twenty-fifth state admitted into the Union.

The territory of which it is composed was ceded by the treaties with France in 1803, and Mexico in 1848. The enabling act was approved March 3, 1875, and the state was finally admitted August 1, 1876. The Constitution was adopted in Convention March 14, 1876, and ratified July 1, 1876. It was amended in 1902. See CALIFORNIA; LOUISIANA.

Jan. 22, 1913, article XXI added to the Constitution providing for recall from office of public officials, and section 1, article VI, amended by providing for the recall of decisions and section 6, article XX, amended by giving home rule to cities and towns.

COLORE OFFICII. By color of office.

COLORED PERSON. This term generally refers to one of the negro race.

There is no legal technical signification to this phrase which the courts are bound judicially to know; Pauska v. Daus, 31 Tex. 74. See NEGRO.

COLT. An animal of the horse species, whether male or female, not more than four years old. Russ. & R. 416.

COMBAT. The form of a forcible encounter between two or more persons or bodies of men; an engagement or battle. A duel.

COMBINATION. A union of men for the purpose of violating the law. See STRIKE; BOYCOTT; RESTRAINT OF TRADE; CONSPIRACY.

A union of different elements. A patent may be taken out for a new combination of existing machines; Moody v. Fiske, 2 Mas. 112, Fed. Cas. No. 9,745. See PATENTS.

COMBUSTIO DOMORUM. Arson. 4 Bla. Com. 272.

COMBUSTIO PECUNIÆ. Burning of money; the ancient method of testing mixed and corrupt money paid into the exchequer, by melting it down. Black, L. Dict.

COMES. In Pleading. A word used in a plea or answer which indicates the presence in court of the defendant.

In a plea, the defendant says, "And the said C. D. by E. F. his attorney, comes, and defends," etc. The word comes, venit, expresses the appearance of the defendant in court. It is taken from the style of the entry of the proceedings on the record, and formed no part of the viva voce pleading. It is, accordingly, not considered as, in strictness, constituting a part of the plea; 1 Chit. Pl. 411; Steph. Pl. 432.

COMES (Lat. comes, a companion). An earl. A companion, attendant, or follower.

By Spelman the word is said to have been first used to denote the companions or attendants of the Roman proconsuls when they went to their provinces. It came to have a very extended application, denoting a title of honor generally, always preserving this generic signification of companion of, or attendant on, one of superior rank.

Among the Germans the comites accompanied the kings on their journeys made for the purpose of hearing complaints and giving decisions. They acted in the character of assistant judges. Tacitus de Mor. Germ. cap. 11, 12; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 66; Spelman, Gloss. Among the Anglo-Saxons, the comites were the great vassals of the king, who attended, as well as those of inferior degree, at the great councils or courts of their kings. The term included also the vassals of those chiefs, 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 42. Comitatus, county, is derived from comes, the earl or ealdorman to whom the government of the district was intrusted. This authority he usually exercised through the vice-comes, or shire reeve (whence our sheriff). The comites of Chester, Durham, and Lancaster maintained an almost royal state and authority; and these counties have obtained the title of palatine; 1 Bla. Com. 116; COUNTY PALATINE. The title of earl or comes has now become a mere shadow, as all the authority is exercised by the sheriff (vice-comes); 1 Bla. Com. 398.

COMITAS (Lat.). Courtesy; comity. An indulgence or favor granted another nation, as a mere matter of indulgence, without any claim of right made.

COMITATUS (Lat. from comes). A county. A shire. The portion of the country under the government of a comes or count. 1 Bla. Com. 116.

An earldom. Earls and counts were originally the same as the comitates. 1 Ld. Raym. 13.

The county court, of great dignity among the Saxons. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 42, 66.

The retinue which accompanied a Roman proconsul to his province. Du Cange. A body of followers; a prince's retinue. Spelman, Gloss.

The comitatus was the personal following of professional warriors. Taylor, Jurispr. 216.

COMITES. Persons who are attached to a public minister. As to their privileges, see Respublica v. De Longchamps, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 117, 1 L. Ed. 59; U. S. v. Benner, Baldw. 240, Fed. Cas. No. 14,568; AMBASSADOR.

COMITIA (Lat.). The public assemblies of the Roman people at which all the most important business of the state was transacted, including in some cases even the trial of persons charged with the commission of crime. Anthon, Rom. Antiq. 51.

COMITIA CALATA. A session of the comitia curiata for the purpose of adrogation, the confirmation of wills, and the adoption by an heir of the sacred rites which followed the inheritance.

COMITIA CENTURIATA (called, also, comitia majora). An assemblage of the people voting by centuries. The people acting in this form elected their own officers, and exercised an extensive jurisdiction for the trial of crimes. Anthon, Rom. Antiq. 52.

COMITIA CURIATA. An assemblage of all adult male citizens. In these assemblies no one of the plebs could vote. They were held for the purpose of confirming matters acted on by the senate, for electing certain high officers, and for carrying out certain religious observances. A majority of the votes of the curiæ (see CURIA) determined the result after the roll of each curia had been determined by a majority of its members. Taylor, Jurispr. 56.

COMITIA TRIBUTA. Assemblies to create certain inferior magistrates, elect priests, make laws, and hold trials. Their power was increased very materially subsequently to their first creation, and the range of subjects acted on became much more extensive than at first. Anthon, Rom. Antiq. 62; 1 Kent 518.

COMITY. A term designating the practice by which one court follows the decision of another court on a like question, though not bound by the law of precedents to do so. The question most frequently arises among the federal courts of different circuits.

The importance of securing uniformity in the law as administered in the several circuits in patent cases is so great that a decision of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction should be followed by this court in every case where the question as presented can fairly be regarded as doubtful; Gormley & Jeffery Fire Co. v. U. S. Agency, 177 Fed. 691, 101 C. C. A. 479; Pratt v. Wright, 65 Fed. 99; Enterprise Mfg. Co. v. Deisler, 46 Fed. 855.

A decision of the circuit court and the circuit court of appeals, derived from the official reports upon the point in issue (profits in a patent case) would be of controlling weight in another circuit court of appeals both on the ground of comity and also as adjudications entitled to the greatest respect; Taft, C. J., in National Folding-Box & Paper Co. v. Novelty Co., 95 Fed. 996.

A circuit court should, in the orderly administration of the law, follow the ruling of a circuit court of appeals in another circuit; Coxe, J., in Hale v. Hilliker, 109 Fed. 273; but the courts of one circuit are not controlled by the views of a patent taken by the courts of another circuit, nor absolved from an independent examination of the questions involved; Archbald, J., in Cimiottl Unhairing Co. v. Fur Refining Co., 120 Fed. 672; the district court may decline to follow the weight of authority in the lower federal courts; McPherson, J., in U. S. v. Exp. Co., 119 Fed. 240.

The circuit court of appeals will follow the decision of another circuit court of appeals, unless under especially exceptional circumstances; Pittsburgh Rys. Co. v. Sullivan, 166 Fed. 750, 92 C. C. A. 429; U. S. v. F. A. Marsily & Co., 165 Fed. 186, 91 C. C. A. 220; In re Baird, 154 Fed. 215; Gill v. Austin, 157 Fed. 234, 84 C. C. A. 677.

"Comity is not a rule of law, but one of practice, convenience and expediency. It is something more than mere courtesy, which implies only deference to the opinion of others, since it has a substantial value in securing uniformity of decision, and discouraging repeated litigation of the same question. But its obligation is not imperative. . . . Comity persuades; but it does not command. It declares not how a case shall be decided, but how it may with propriety be decided. It recognizes the fact that the primary duty of every court is to dispose of cases according to the law and the facts; in a word, to decide them right. In doing so the judge is bound to determine them according to his own convictions. . . . It is only in cases where, in his own mind, there may be a doubt as to the soundness of his views that comity comes in play and suggests a uniformity of ruling to avoid confusion, until a higher court has settled the law." Mast, Foos & Co. v. Mfg. Co., 177 U. S. 485, 488, 20 Sup. Ct. 708, 44 L. Ed. 856.

Where questions on an important patent had been decided in two circuits, the Supreme Court felt itself "bound to defer somewhat to this unanimity of opinion on the part of so many learned and distinguished judges"; Hobbs v. Beach, 180 U. S. 389, 21 Sup. Ct. 409, 45 L. Ed. 586.

In the seventh circuit decisions in patent cases in other circuits will not be followed, but each case will stand on its own merits; Welshbach Light Co. v. Gaslight Co., 100 Fed. 648.

There is no statute or common law rule by which one court is bound to abide by the decisions of another court of equal rank. It does so simply for what may be called comity among judges. There is no common law or statutory rule to oblige a court to bow to its own decisions; it does so on the ground of judicial comity; (1884) 9 P. D. 98, per Brett, M. R.

The doctrine has no application to foreign corporations. It "was not established for the purpose of giving to any state an unlimited power to dispose of the franchise of acting in a corporate capacity in other states. To obtain a charter for the purpose of evading the laws of a foreign state, under cover of the rule of comity, would be a fraud upon the state granting the charter; and to attempt to act under such charter in a foreign state would be a fraud upon the latter;" National Lead Co. v. Paint Store Co., 80 Mo. App. 247, 271.

It would seem that the use of the term "comity" in connection with cases where a court of one state under the rule of the conflict of laws adjudicates a case upon the law of another state is not correct. When a case involves a transaction in another jurisdiction and is properly decided upon the law of that other jurisdiction, under well settled rules of the conflict of laws, the law of that other jurisdiction is applied as a matter of right, and not upon the ground of comity.

Of this use of the term Mr. Dicey says: "The term 'comity,' as already pointed out, is open to the charge of implying that the judge, when he applies foreign law to a particular case, does so as a matter of caprice or favor."

Cases such as the following may perhaps illustrate another class not included in either of the above classes: "A court of equity in one state may enjoin parties from proceeding in a court of law in another state; but on principles of courtesy, and perhaps of policy, this power should not be exercised where the court of law has a concurrent jurisdiction, which was first assumed and exercised over the subject matter, unless there should exist some peculiar equitable ground for so doing." Bank of Bellows Falls v. R. Co., 28 Vt. 470.

COMITY OF NATIONS. The most appropriate phrase to express the true foundation and extent of the obligation of the laws of one nation within the territories of another. It is derived altogether from the voluntary consent of the latter, and it is inadmissible when it is contrary to its known policy, or prejudicial to its interests. In the silence of any positive rule affirming or denying or restraining the operation of foreign laws, courts of justice presume the tacit adoption of them by their own government, unless repugnant to its policy, or prejudicial to its interests. It is not the comity of the courts, but the comity of the nation which is administered and ascertained in the same way and guided by the same reasoning by which all other principles of the municipal law are ascertained and guided. Story, Conf. L. § 38.

COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF. The president is made commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the United States and of the militia when in actual service, by art. ii. § 2 of the constitution.

COMMANDITE. In French Law. A partnership in which some furnish money, and others furnish their skill and labor in place of capital. A special or limited partnership.

Those who embark capital in such a partnership are bound only to the extent of the capital so invested; Guyot, Rép. Univ.

The business being carried on in the name of some of the partners only, it is said to be just that those who are unknown should lose only the capital which they have invested, from which alone they can receive an advantage. Under the name of limited partnerships, such arrangements are now allowed by many of the states; although no such partnerships are recognized at common law. Troubat, Lim. Partn. cc. 3, 4.

The term includes a partnership containing dormant rather than special partners. Story, Partn. § 109.

COMMENCEMENT OF A DECLARATION. That part of the declaration which follows the venue and precedes the circumstantial statement of the cause of action. It formerly contained a statement of the names of the parties, and the character in which they sue or are sued, if any other than their natural capacity; of the mode in which the defendant had been brought into court, and a brief statement of the form of action. In modern practice, however, in most cases, little else than the names and character of the parties is contained in the commencement.

COMMENDA. In French Law. The delivery of a benefice to one who cannot hold the legal title, to keep and manage it for a time limited and render an account of the proceeds. Guyot, Rép. Univ.

In Mercantile Law. An association in which the management of the property was intrusted to individuals. Troubat, Lim. Partn. c. 3, § 27.

COMMENDAM. In Ecclesiastical Law. The appointment of a suitable clerk to hold a void or vacant benefice or church living until a regular pastor be appointed. Hob. 144; Latch 236.

In Louisiana. A species of limited partnership.

It is formed by a contract, by which one person or partnership agrees to furnish another person or partnership a certain amount, either in property or money, to be employed by the person or partnership to whom it is furnished, in his or their own name or firm, on condition of receiving a share in the profits in the proportion determined by the contract, and of being liable to losses and expenses to the amount furnished, and no more. A similar partnership exists in France. Code de Comm. 26, 33; Sirey, 12, pt. 2, p. 25. He who makes this contract is called, in respect to those to whom he makes the advance of capital, a partner in commendam. La. Civ. Code, art. 2811.

See also Mitchell, in 3 Sel. Essays, Anglo-Amer. L. H. 182.

COMMENDATORS. In Ecclesiastical Law. Secular persons upon whom ecclesiastical benefices are bestowed. So called because they are commended and intrusted to their oversight. They are merely trustees.

COMMENDATORY LETTERS. In Ecclesiastical Law. Such as are written by one bishop to another on behalf of any of the clergy or others of his diocese travelling thither, that they may be received among the faithful; or that the clerk may be promoted; or necessities administered to others. Wharton.

COMMENDATUS. In Feudal Law. One who by voluntary homage puts himself under the protection of a superior lord. Cowell; Spelman, Gloss.

COMMERCE. The various agreements which have for their object facilitating the exchange of the products of the earth or the industry of man, with an intent to realize a profit. Pardessus, Dr. Com. n. 1. Any reciprocal agreements between two persons, by which one delivers to the other a thing, which the latter accepts, and for which he pays a consideration: if the consideration be money, it is called a sale; if any other thing than money, it is called exchange or barter. Domat, Dr. Pub. liv. 1, tit. 7, s. 1, n. 2.

"Commerce among the several states comprehends traffic, intercourse, trade, navigation, communication, the transit of persons and the transmission of messages by telegraph—indeed, every species of commercial intercourse among the several states, but not to that commerce 'completely internal, which is carried on between man and man, in a state, or between different parts of the same state, and which does not extend to or affect other states.'" Harlan, J., in Adair v. U. S., 208 U. S. 161, 177, 28 Sup. Ct. 277, 52 L. Ed. 436, 13 Ann. Cas. 764.

It has been frequently said by the Supreme Court that commerce includes intercourse, though usually the term is qualified as "commercial intercourse"; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 6 L. Ed. 23; U. S. v. E. C. Knight Co., 156 U. S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 249, 39 L. Ed. 325; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 280, 23 L. Ed. 347; Pensacola Telegraph Co. v. Western Telegraph Co., 96 U. S. 1, 9, 24 L. Ed. 708; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 702, 26 L. Ed. 238 (where the phrase is "intercourse and traffic"); Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. U. S., 175 U. S. 211, 241, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136; Lindsay & P. Co. v. Mullen, 176 U. S. 126, 20 Sup. Ct. 325, 44 L. Ed. 400; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 470, 14 Sup. Ct. 1125, 38 L. Ed. 1047; Lottery Case, 188 U. S. 321, 346, 23 Sup. Ct. 321, 47 L. Ed. 492. The first expression of this was by Marshall, C. J., in Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 6 L. Ed. 23; quoted by Fuller, C. J., in U. S. v. Knight Co., 156 U. S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 249, 39 L. Ed. 325; and characterized by White, J., as a "luminous definition" in Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 193 U. S. 197, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679, to the effect that commerce is something more than traffic; "it is intercourse; it describes the commercial intercourse between nations and parts of nations in all its branches, and is regulated by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse." This has been practically, if not literally, quoted in all the cases cited. There is nothing in the decisions to define or limit so broad a term as intercourse, except the word commercial, usually attached to it. As it is hardly likely that the courts intended to say that commerce is intercourse in the sense in which it is defined "communication between persons or places"; Cent. Dict.; it is probable that the word was not intended to be used to express more than such intercourse as is connected with traffic and transportation with foreign countries or between the states.

"The word 'commerce' is undoubtedly, in its usual sense, a larger word than 'trade,' in its usual sense. Sometimes 'commerce' is used to embrace less than 'trade' and sometimes 'trade' is used to embrace as much as 'commerce.' They are . . . in this statute (Sherman Act) synonymous;" U. S. v. Patterson, 55 Fed. 605, 639.

"The term 'commerce' comprehends more than a mere exchange of goods; it embraces commercial intercourse in all its branches, including transportation of passengers and property by common carriers, whether carried on by water or by land;" In re Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U. S. 1, 46, 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44; the "movement of persons as well as of property;" Hoke v. U. S., 227 U. S. 308, 33 Sup. Ct. 281, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 906.

"Transportation of passengers and freight from one state to another, or through more than one state to another, or through more than one state, whether by land or water, is commerce within the meaning of" the commerce clause, "and the words of the grant comprehend every species of commercial intercourse, and the power is complete in itself, and may be exercised to its utmost extent without limitations other than such as are prescribed in the Constitution;" Swcatt v. R. Co., 3 Cliff. (U. S.) 339, 350, Fed. Cas. No. 13,684.

It includes navigation and the control of all navigable waters of the United States; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 713, 724, 18 L. Ed. 96; quoted in Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 141, 21 Sup. Ct. 48, 45 L. Ed. 126, as well as the improvement of harbors, bays and rivers; id., quoting Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. Ed. 238.

Commerce is not a technical legal conception, but a practical one drawn from the course of business; Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 32 Sup. Ct. 715, 56 L. Ed. 1182.

"Nothing is more complex than commerce"; 6 Webster's Wks. 8.

Retail trade as well as wholesale is included in the idea of commerce; Guckenheimer v. Sellers, 81 Fed. 1000.

Commerce takes its character as interstate or foreign when it is actually shipped or started in the course of transportation to another state or to a foreign country; Railroad Commission of Louisiana v. Ry. Co., 229 U. S. 336, 33 Sup. Ct. 837, 57 L. Ed. —; Reid v. R. Co., 153 N. C. 490, 69 S. E. 618.

It does not end on the arrival of the train at the terminal, but the breaking up of the train and removal of goods to other trains is part of it; St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 33 Sup. Ct. 651, 57 L. Ed. —; it continues until the delivery to the consignee; Barrett v. New York, 183 Fed. 793; id., 189 Fed. 268, where in two hearings it was held that an express company taking goods from a steamer or railroad and transporting them through the street of the city to the consignee is still engaged in interstate commerce. The transportation to be effective under the commerce clause takes effect at the time when it "commences its final movement for transportation" out of the state; Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 6 Sup. Ct. 475, 29 L. Ed. 715; Diamond Match Co. v. Ontonagon, 188 U. S. 82, 23 Sup. Ct. 266, 47 L. Ed. 394; in both of which cases the property was to remain within the state of departure until it was convenient to transport it; but in Ogilvie v. Crawford County, 7 Fed. 745, where it was stored awaiting transportation it was protected from taxation; Ogilvie v. Crawford County, 7 Fed. 745; and to the same effect is Standard Oil Co. v. Bachelor, 89 Ind. 1.

The decisions in cases arising under the federal Employers' Liability Act involve interesting questions as to when a workman is engaged in interstate commerce, and the test is said to be—"is the work in question a part of the interstate commerce in which the carrier is engaged?" Pedersen v. R. Co., 229 U. S. 146, 33 Sup. Ct. 648, 57 L. Ed. —, citing many cases. In that case it was held that one carrying materials (bolts or rivets) to be used in repairing an instrumentality of interstate commerce (a bridge) was engaged in such commerce, although injured by an intrastate train; so also was an engineer while taking his engine from the roundhouse to the track on which were cars to be hauled by him in interstate commerce; Johnson v. Southern P. Co., 196 U. S. 1, 21, 25 Sup. Ct. 158, 49 L. Ed. 363; Lamphere v. R. & Nav. Co., 196 Fed. 336, 116 C. C. A. 156. See EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT.

Contracts generally seem not to be subject to the commerce clause. It is said by a text-writer on the subject that to bring them within its scope some other element must be involved such as "transportation of property or transmission of intelligence, as by telegraph"; Cooke, Com. Cl. § 6.

Insurance is not commerce; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 168, 19 L. Ed. 357; Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. New York, 119 U. S. 110, 7 Sup. Ct. 108, 30 L. Ed. 342; Noble v. Mitchell, 164 U. S. 367, 17 Sup. Ct. 110, 41 L. Ed. 472; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U. S. 389, 20 Sup. Ct. 962, 44 L. Ed. 1116; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Deer Lodge County, 231 U. S. —, 34 Sup. Ct. 167, 58 L. Ed. —, decided Dec. 15, 1913, but not yet officially reported; nor are contracts for personal services between persons in different states; Williams v. Fears, 179 U. S. 270, 21 Sup. Ct. 128, 45 L. Ed. 186; Smith v. Jackson, 103 Tenn. 673, 54 S. W. 981, 47 L. R. A. 416; though Boothe v. King, 71 Ala. 499, seems contra.

Congress has power by the constitution to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes; Const. U. S. Art. I, § 8; 1 Kent 431; Story, Const. § 1052.

The power conferred upon congress by the above clause is exclusive, so far as it relates to matters within its purview which are national in their character, and admit of a requisite uniformity of regulation affecting all the states. That clause was adopted in order to secure such uniformity against discriminating state legislation.

Such power is not restricted by state authority; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650; but a state statute, which conflicts with the actual exercise of the powers of congress, must give way to the supremacy of the national authority; Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 463, 8 Sup. Ct. 564, 31 L. Ed. 508.

The power to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes which is included in the commerce clause may cover sales and transportation entirely within a state; U. S. v. Holliday, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 407, 18 L. Ed. 182 (which was outside of any reservation); or by an Indian to another; U. S. v. Shaw-Mux, 2 Sawy. 364, Fed. Cas. 16,268; but not a sale to an Indian who had acquired citizenship; In re Heff, 197 U. S. 488, 25 Sup. Ct. 506, 49 L. Ed. 848; and see Farrell v. U. S., 110 Fed. 942, 49 C. C. A. 183, which must be considered as overruled by the Supreme Court case. Under the protection of this clause a state tax on goods of a trader with the Indians was void; Foster v. Board of County Com'rs, 7 Minn. 140 (Gil. 84); but a contract between a state and Indians was not; In re Narragansett Indians, 20 R. I. 715, 40 Atl. 347.

The Constitutional Power of Regulation. The power of congress to regulate foreign commerce is complete in itself and no individual has a vested right to trade with foreign nations otherwise than subject to the power of congress to determine what and on what terms articles may be imported; Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S. 470, 24 Sup. Ct. 349, 48 L. Ed. 525; while every instrumentality of domestic commerce is subject to state control, every instrumentality of interstate commerce may be reached and controlled by national authority, so far as to compel it to respect the rules for such commerce lawfully established by congress; Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 193 U. S. 350, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679.

The right to carry on interstate commerce is not derived from the state but is a constitutional right of every citizen of the United States, and congress alone can limit the right of corporations to engage in it; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 1, 30 Sup. Ct. 190, 54 L. Ed. 355; Ludwig v. Telegraph Co., 216 U. S. 146, 30 Sup. Ct. 280, 54 L. Ed. 423; Pullman Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 56, 30 Sup. Ct. 232, 54 L. Ed. 378, where it was also held that a company doing interstate business does not require permission of the state to enter it.

The power of congress over interstate commerce includes not only imposing regulations but insuring their efficiency; Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U. S. 1, 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44.

In the Second Employers' Liability Case, 223 U. S. 1, 46, 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44 (opinion by Van Devanter, J.), the court enunciated six distinct propositions as having become "so firmly settled as no longer to be open to dispute," with respect to the construction and enforcement of the federal power to regulate interstate commerce and to enact such legislation as might be necessary for that purpose:

"1. The term 'commerce' comprehends more than the mere exchange of goods. It embraces commercial intercourse in all its branches, including transportation of passengers and property by common carriers, whether carried on by water or by land.

"2. The phrase 'among the several states' marks the distinction, for the purpose of governmental regulation, between commerce which concerns two or more states and commerce which is confined to a single state and does not affect other states, the power to regulate the former being conferred upon congress and the regulation of the latter remaining with the states severally.

"3. 'To regulate,' in the sense intended, is to foster, protect, control and restrain, with appropriate regard for the welfare of those who are immediately concerned and of the public at large.

"4. This power over commerce among the states, so conferred upon congress, is complete in itself, extends incidentally to every instrument and agent by which such commerce is carried on, may be exerted to its utmost extent over every part of such commerce, and is subject to no limitations save such as are prescribed in the constitution. But, of course, it does not extend to any matter or thing which does not have a real or substantial relation to some part of such commerce.

"5. Among the instruments and agents to which the power extends are the railroads over which transportation from one state to another is conducted, the engines and cars by which such transportation is affected, and all who are in any wise engaged in such transportation, whether as common carriers or as their employes.

"6. The duties of common carriers in respect of the safety of their employes, while both are engaged in commerce among the states, and the liability of the former for injuries sustained by the latter, while both are so engaged, have a real or substantial relation to such commerce and therefore are within the range of this power."

In the Covington Bridge Case, Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S. 204, 14 Sup. Ct. 1087, 38 L. Ed. 962, the Supreme Court cases with respect to the power of the states over commerce have been divided into three classes, which division is repeated in Southern R. Co. v. Reid, 222 U. S. 424, 32 Sup. Ct. 140, 56 L. Ed. 257:

First, those in which the power of the state is exclusive. (Cases in which this power may be exercised by the states are enumerated infra under the subtitle "When the State Power is Exclusive.")

Second, those in which the states may act in the absence of legislation by congress. In the case cited, it is said that these cases embrace what may be termed "concurrent jurisdiction," but it does not appear that such jurisdiction ever exists, because the power of the states is terminated instantly by legislation of congress on the subject. (See infra, under subtitle "State Action Valid in Case of Non-Action by Congress.")

Third, cases in which the action of congress is exclusive and the states cannot act at all. (See infra, under subtitle "When the Power of Congress is Exclusive.")

Neither this, nor in fact any other, classification of cases is satisfactory, nor is there any one of them which has been uniformly adhered to by the Supreme Court.

It may probably be fairly stated as the result of the decisions on the commerce clause that while the states have exclusive jurisdiction of certain local matters, which are controlled by virtue of its reserved police power, and they have also exclusive control of intrastate commerce, the clause of the constitution under consideration gives to congress absolute control of interstate and foreign commerce, to become at its will exclusive of all other authority. Upon many subjects affecting this commerce, the states do legislate and their statutes are held valid, but this is solely because congress has not acted, and once it does so, the power of the state ends. State legislation is not forbidden in matters either local in their operation, or intended to be mere aids to commerce, for which special regulations can more effectually provide, such as harbors, pilotage, beacons, buoys, and other improvements of harbors, bays, and rivers within a state, if their free navigation be not thereby impaired; congress by its inaction in such matters virtually declares that till it deems best to act, they may be controlled by the states; County of Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 28 L. Ed. 238, per Field, J.

As to certain subjects the power of congress is exclusive, and the states cannot interfere in any case, and the line of distinction is plainly marked. The cases in which the state may act so long as congress does not, are those which relate to matters of local concern, and which do not require a general uniform regulation applying to the whole country; Rhea v. R. Co., 50 Fed. 16; Cardwell v. Bridge Co., 113 U. S. 205, 5 Sup. Ct. 423, 28 L. Ed. 959. On the other hand, as to all matters affecting interstate commerce, directly or indirectly, national in character and requiring a uniform system or regulation throughout the country, the power of congress to regulate them is exclusive. This in brief seems to be the result of the decisions, which will be found cited in this title under the various subdivisions of the subject. The distinction between cases where the state may or may not act in case of non-action by congress, is well expressed in Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct. 681, 34 L. Ed. 128, to this effect: The power to regulate it between the states is a unit, but the states may legislate with regard to it in view of local needs and circumstances where particular subjects within its operation do not require the application of a general or uniform system, but where the subject does require a uniform system, as between the states, the power is exclusively in congress and cannot be encroached upon by the states. In that very leading case it was held that the right of importation of intoxicating liquors from one state to another includes the right of sale in the original packages at the place where the importation terminates; so also; Lyng v. Michigan, 135 U. S. 161, 10 Sup. Ct. 725, 34 L. Ed. 150.

It is to be noted, however, in connection with this classification of the cases, that there are many instances in which congress does act upon that intrastate commerce which is primarily within the control of the states, particularly in the case of railroads. The operation of a purely intrastate train may be so bound up with the operation of interstate trains or instrumentalities of interstate commerce, that in substance their operation is one and the same thing, and necessarily the subject of one and the same source of regulation. Of such a character are, e. g. examination of eyesight of employes, character of switches, of rails, of interlocking devices, all of which, and the like, are so connected with the operation of the railroad as an entirety, that they constitute but a single subject of governmental regulation, which, as it cannot go to both state and general government, goes, of course, when it acts, to the latter; Wabash R. Co. v. U. S., 168 Fed. 1, 93 C. C. A. 393, where the Safety Appliance Act of March 2, 1903, is held constitutional and to apply to all carriers of interstate commerce, whether the cars and trains are operated between points in the same state, are empty, or the traffic carried is wholly intrastate. The movement of a car on a private switch used for transporting cars in interstate commerce is within the operation of that act; Gray v. R. Co., 197 Fed. 874; and so also is one used between points in the same state by a carrier engaged in interstate commerce; U. S. v. Ry. Co., 164 Fed. 347.

The commercial clause includes authority to regulate navigation in aid of commerce and to make improvements in navigable waters, such as building a lighthouse in the bed of a stream or requiring navigators of a stream to follow a prescribed course, or directing the water of a navigable stream from one channel to another; South Carolina v. Georgia, 93 U. S. 4, 23 L. Ed. 782. See also U. S. v. Duluth, 1 Dill. 469, Fed. Cas. No. 15,001.

Congress may construct or authorize the construction of railroads across the states and territories; California v. R. Co., 127 U. S. 1, 8 Sup. Ct. 1073, 32 L. Ed. 150; and highways, including canals, and outside of state lines; Wilson v. Shaw, 204 U. S. 24, 27 Sup. Ct. 233, 51 L. Ed. 351, where the power of congress to construct the Panama Canal was affirmed.

The powers conferred upon congress to regulate commerce among the several states, are not confined to the instrumentalities of commerce known or in use when the constitution was adopted, but keep pace with the progress of the country, and adapt themselves to new developments of time and circumstances. Accordingly, the power of regulation is applied to much subject-matter unknown at the date of the adoption of the constitution. In addition to those things commonly understood to be included in the definitions of commerce, supra, it has been extended to sleeping and parlor cars; Allen v. Pullman Co., 191 U. S. 171, 24 Sup. Ct. 39, 48 L. Ed. 134; refrigerator cars; Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Lynch, 177 U. S. 149, 20 Sup. Ct. 631, 44 L. Ed. 708; express companies; Osborne v. Florida, 164 U. S. 650, 17 Sup. Ct. 214, 41 L. Ed. 586; telegraph and telephone; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 8 Sup. Ct. 1383, 32 L. Ed. 311; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Missouri, 190 U. S. 412, 23 Sup. Ct. 730, 47 L. Ed. 1116; business correspondence schools; International Text Book Co. v. Pigg, 217 U. S. 91, 30 Sup. Ct. 481, 54 L. Ed. 678, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 493, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103; a herd of sheep driven from one state across another to a point in a third for shipment; Kelley v. Rhoads, 188 U. S. 1, 23 Sup. Ct. 259, 47 L. Ed. 359; natural gas, after severance from the ground; Haskell v. Gas Co., 224 U. S. 217, 32 Sup. Ct. 442, 56 L. Ed. 738; State v. Gas & Mining Co., 120 Ind. 575, 22 N. E. 778, 6 L. R. A. 579; the transmission of lottery tickets between states; Lottery Case, 188 U. S. 321, 23 Sup. Ct. 321, 47 L. Ed. 492. As to goods, intrastate carriage in transitu to another state, is interstate commerce; The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 557, 19 L. Ed. 999; the ultimate destination prevails; Houston Direct Nav. Co. v. Ins. Co., 89 Tex. 1, 32 S. W. 889, 30 L. R. A. 713, 59 Am. St. Rep. 17; if the shipment partially intrastate is bona fide it is not interstate, but otherwise if a mere subterfuge to benefit pro tanto by reduced state rates; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Texas, 204 U. S. 403, 27 Sup. Ct. 360, 51 L. Ed. 540.

Interstate commerce by sea is of a national character and within the exclusive power of congress; Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 7 Sup. Ct. 1118, 30 L. Ed. 1200; and so is transportation from a point in one state to or through another or other states, and it is commerce among the states even as to the part of the journey within the state; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 7 Sup. Ct. 4, 30 L. Ed. 244. Where the railroad runs for a few miles out of a state and back the carriage is interstate commerce; Hanley v. Ry. Co., 187 U. S. 617, 23 Sup. Ct. 214, 47 L. Ed. 333; so of a vessel between two ports of the same state passing more than a marine league from shore; Pacific Coast S. S. Co. v. R. Com'rs, 18 Fed. 10. Prior to the decision of the Supreme Court, the state courts were divided; Sternberger v. R. Co., 29 S. C. 510, 7 S. E. 836, 2 L. R. A. 105, agreeing with it, and State v. Telegraph Co., 113 N. C. 213, 18 S. E. 389, 22 L. R. A. 570, contra; it was, however, held that when a passenger (whose ultimate destination is to a place in another state) purchases a ticket to a point within the state and then another to his destination, his first purchase was intrastate commerce to which state rates apply; Kansas City S. R. Co. v. Brooks, 84 Ark. 233, 105 S. W. 93.

A grain elevator engaged in the business of storing grain in the course of interstate transportation is not engaged in interstate commerce; W. W. Cargill Co. v. Minnesota, 180 U. S. 452, 21 Sup. Ct. 423, 45 L. Ed. 619; People v. Miller, 84 App. Div. 174, 82 N. Y. Supp. 582, where Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 12 Sup. Ct. 468, 36 L. Ed. 247, and Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77, were cited with the comment that in each of them the point was a minor one and did not receive full consideration, and upon that point they had been much criticized. So it was held that coal mined in one state and sent into another to await shipment to purchasers was not exempt from state taxation as subject-matter of interstate commerce; Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Co. v. Borough of Junction, 75 N. J. L. 922, 68 Atl. 806, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 514.

The commodities clause of the Hepburn Act, q. v., is a regulation of commerce within the power of congress to enact, and its power to regulate interstate commerce does not require that the regulation should apply to all commodities alike, nor does an exception of one invalidate it; U. S. v. Delaware & H. Co., 213 U. S. 366, 29 Sup. Ct. 527, 53 L. Ed. 836.

The Employers' Liability Act of June 11, 1906, providing that every common carrier engaged in trade and commerce in the District of Columbia or in the territories or between the several states shall be liable for the death or injury of any of its employes which may result from the negligence of any of its officers, agents or employes was held to be a regulation of intrastate as well as of interstate commerce, and therefore one beyond the power of congress to enact; Employers' Liability Cases, 207 U. S. 463, 28 Sup. Ct. 141, 52 L. Ed. 297, four Justices dissenting. As to the case of the Second Employers' Liability Act of 1908, see supra.

Transportation in and out of the state is interstate commerce. A railroad entirely in a state, but a connecting link of interstate roads, is engaged in interstate commerce; Houston Direct Nav. Co. v. Ins. Co., 89 Tex. 1, 32 S. W. 889, 30 L. R. A. 713, 59 Am. St. Rep. 17; but an interstate shipment (in this case, of car load lots) on reaching the point designated in the original contract of transportation ceases to be an interstate shipment, and its further transportation to another point within the same state, on the order of the consignee, is controlled by the law of the state and not by the interstate commerce act; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Texas, 204 U. S. 403, 27 Sup. Ct. 360, 51 L. Ed. 540. Shipments of lumber on local bills of lading from one point in a state to another point in the same state destined from the beginning for export, are foreign and not intrastate commerce; De Bary & Co. v. Louisiana, 227 U. S. 108, 33 Sup. Ct. 239, 57 L. Ed. —; following Southern Pac. Terminal Co. v. Commerce Commission, 219 U. S. 498, 31 Sup. Ct. 279, 55 L. Ed. 310; Railroad Commission of Ohio v. R. Co., 225 U. S. 101, 32 Sup. Ct. 653, 56 L. Ed. 1004; distinguishing Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Texas, 204 U. S. 403, 27 Sup. Ct. 360, 51 L. Ed. 540.

When the Power of Congress is Exclusive. The power of congress over interstate commerce "is necessarily exclusive whenever the subject-matter is national in its character and properly admits of only one uniform system," and in such cases non-action by congress is equivalent to a declaration that it shall be free and untrammelled; Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 336, 7 Sup. Ct. 1118, 30 L. Ed. 1200; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 347; Robbins v. Taxing Dist., 120 U. S. 489, 498, 7 Sup. Ct. 592, 30 L. Ed. 694; where it was said that if selling goods by sample needs regulation, it must obviously be based on a uniform system applicable to the whole country, and congress alone can do it; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 5 Sup. Ct. 1091, 29 L. Ed. 257; Bowman v. R. Co., 125 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 689, 1062, 31 L. Ed. 700; Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 35, 18 L. Ed. 745, where it was held that the states have no right to tax interstate commerce although they may tax the instruments of such commerce in like manner as other property of the same description. Such a regulation, national in its nature, is the requirement of a bond of indemnity from passengers arriving from foreign ports; Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. Ed. 543; or the payment of a tax on each such passenger; Smith v. Turner, 7 How. (U. S.) 283, 12 L. Ed. 702 (but the requirement of a list of passengers, with ages, occupations, etc., is a police regulation within the power of the state; New York v. Miln, 11 Pet. [U. S.] 103, 9 L. Ed. 648); so also the transportation of persons or merchandise "is in its nature national, admitting of but one regulating power"; Lelsy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct. 681, 34 L. Ed. 128; Bowman v. R. Co., 125 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 689, 1062, 31 L. Ed. 700; Sloman v. Moebbs Co., 139 Mich. 334, 102 N. W. 854; Richter v. Poppenhausen, 42 N. Y. 374; Greek-American Sponge Co. v. Drug Co., 124 Wis. 469, 102 N. W. 888, 109 Am. St. Rep. 961; though the delivery is made by an agent, residing in the state, of the non-resident seller; Kehler v. Stewart, 197 U. S. 60, 25 Sup. Ct. 403, 49 L. Ed. 663; whether the sale is made directly to the customer or to a retailer; id.; imported goods in unbroken original packages are not subject to state taxation; In re Doane, 197 Ill. 376, 64 N. E. 377; State v. Board of Assessors, 46 La. Ann. 145, 15 South. 10, 49 Am. St. Rep. 318; but merchandise consigned by non-resident sellers to and stored by a warehouseman, awaiting future sale and delivery, is not protected from local assessment as interstate commerce; Merchants' Transfer Co. v. Board of Review, 128 Ia. 732, 105 N. W. 211, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 662, 5 Ann. Cas. 1016.

As to matters under the exclusive power of congress, national in their character and requiring general and not local rules of regulation, the fact that congress has not legislated does not make it lawful for the states to do so. Such inaction shows only that no restrictions are to be put upon commerce in that direction. The right to legislate is exclusively vested in congress; and when congress legislates on a subject within its exclusive power a state loses control of any right it may have had to apply the police power to it, even though the federal act is not to take effect until a future period; Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Washington, 222 U. S. 370, 32 Sup. Ct. 160, 56 L. Ed. 237.

The course of decisions, mainly in the United States Supreme Court, covers a great variety of subjects with which the state legislatures have attempted to deal in the enactment of statutes which have been held unconstitutional because they interfered with the exclusive power of congress conferred by the commerce clause of the constitution. Among the statutes which have thus fallen under the ban of the final authority on the subject is one imposing a burdensome condition upon a shipmaster as a prerequisite for landing his passengers, with the alternative of the payment of a small sum for each of them; Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. Ed. 543; one regulating the arrival of passengers from a foreign port and authorizing an executive officer to include passengers of certain classes at his discretion; Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 550; which the court considered as having been enacted mainly to exclude Chinese immigration, and to go far beyond the legitimate state action of excluding pauper or convict immigrants. See also In re Ah Fong, 3 Sawy. 144, Fed. Cas. No. 102. But a statute is not invalid where the detention is for the purpose of disinfection by the order of a state board of health; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 419, 6 L. Ed. 678; Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. v. Milner, 57 Fed. 276. So statutes are unconstitutional which require the payment of a license tax by commercial travellers selling goods manufactured in other states, but not by those selling goods manufactured in the state itself; Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 14 Sup. Ct. 829, 38 L. Ed. 719; Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 344, 26 L. Ed. 565; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 347; Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S. 129, 9 Sup. Ct. 1, 32 L. Ed. 368; Robbins v. Taxing Dist., 120 U. S. 489, 7 Sup. Ct. 592, 30 L. Ed. 694; McCall v. California, 136 U. S. 104, 10 Sup. Ct. 881, 34 L. Ed. 391; McClellan v. Pettigrew, 44 La. Ann. 356, 10 South. 853; Overton v. City of Vicksburg, 70 Miss. 558, 13 South. 226; Hurford v. State, 91 Tenn. 669, 20 S. W. 201 (but not when the same tax is levied upon peddlers selling goods made in or out of the state; Howe Mach. Co. v. Gage, 100 U. S. 676, 25 L. Ed. 754; or which were part of the mass of property in the state; Emert v. Missouri, 156 U. S. 296, 15 Sup. Ct. 367, 39 L. Ed. 430; and see Tiernan v. Rinker, 102 U. S. 123, 26 L. Ed. 103); so of an act requiring importers of foreign goods to take out a license in the exercise of a power of taxation; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 419, 6 L. Ed. 678; and a state law which requires a party to take out a license for carrying on interstate commerce; Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 11 Sup. Ct. 851, 35 L. Ed. 649; a city ordinance laying wharf fees upon vessels laden with products of other states, which are not exacted from vessels laden with products of the home state; Guy v. Baltimore, 100 U. S. 434, 25 L. Ed. 743; a state tonnage tax on foreign vessels; Cannon

v. New Orleans, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 577, 22 L. Ed. 417; levied to defray quarantine expenses; Peete v. Morgan, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 581, 22 L. Ed. 201; otherwise of a tax for city purposes levied upon a vessel owned by a resident of the city which is not imposed for the privilege of trading; Wheeling, P. & C. Transp. Co. v. Wheeling, 99 U. S. 273, 25 L. Ed. 412; The North Cape, 6 Biss. 505, Fed. Cas. No. 10,316; granting a telegraph company exclusive right to maintain telegraph lines in such state as contrary to the Act of July 24, 1866, which practically forbids the state to exclude from its borders a telegraph company building its lines in pursuance of this act of congress; Pensacola Telegraph Co. v. Telegraph Co., 96 U. S. 1, 24 L. Ed. 708; an attempt to regulate transmission of telegraphic messages into other states and their delivery; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347, 7 Sup. Ct. 1126, 30 L. Ed. 1187; as telegraphic communications carried on between different states are interstate commerce; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 8 Sup. Ct. 1383, 32 L. Ed. 311; a statute providing for inspection of sea-going vessels arriving at a port and of damaged goods found thereon by a state officer, with a view to furnishing official evidence to the parties immediately concerned, and when goods are damaged to provide for their sale; Foster v. Master & Wardens of New Orleans, 94 U. S. 246, 24 L. Ed. 122; and one prohibiting the driving of cattle from another state into the state during certain months; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. Ed. 527, one regulating the rates on interstate traffic; Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 7 Sup. Ct. 4, 30 L. Ed. 244.

A state law, requiring the master of every vessel in the foreign trade to pay a certain sum to a state officer for every passenger brought from a foreign country into the state, is void; Smith v. Turner, 7 How. (U. S.) 283, 12 L. Ed. 702. No state can grant an exclusive monopoly for the navigation of any portion of the waters within its limits upon which commerce is carried on under coasting licenses granted under the authority of congress; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 6 L. Ed. 23; the rights here in controversy were the exclusive right to navigate the Hudson river with steam vessels. See also, on this point, Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 713, 18 L. Ed. 96; The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 557, 19 L. Ed. 999; Craig v. Kline, 65 Pa. 399, 3 Am. Rep. 636. But a state law granting to an individual an exclusive right to navigate the upper waters of a stream which is wholly within the limits of a state, separated from tide waters by falls impassable for purposes of navigation, and not forming a part of a continuous track of navigation between two or more states, or with a foreign country, is not invalid; Veazie v. Moor, 14 How. (U. S.)

568, 14 L. Ed. 545; and see McReynolds v. Smallhouse, 8 Bush (Ky.) 447. A statute forbidding common carriers to bring intoxicating liquors into the state without being furnished with a certificate that the consignee was authorized to sell intoxicating liquors in the county is invalid; Bowman v. Ry. Co., 125 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 689, 1062, 31 L. Ed. 700. And so is an act taxing a corporation of another state, owning a railroad which is a link in an interstate line, for the privilege of keeping an office in the state; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Com., 136 U. S. 114, 10 Sup. Ct. 958, 34 L. Ed. 394. And a tax on persons and property received and landed within one state after being transported from another was held a tax upon interstate commerce and a regulation thereof upon a matter which is within the exclusive power of congress; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 29 L. Ed. 158.

When the State Power is Exclusive. The states may authorize the construction of highways, turnpikes, railways and canals between points in the same states and regulate the tolls thereof; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Maryland, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 456, 22 L. Ed. 678; the building of bridges over non-navigable streams and regulate the navigation of the strictly internal waters of the state, such as do not by themselves, or by connection with other waters, form a continuous highway over which commerce is or may be carried on with other states or foreign countries; Veazie v. Moor, 11 How. (U. S.) 568, 14 L. Ed. 545; The Montello, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 411, 20 L. Ed. 191; id., 20 Wall. (U. S.) 430, 22 L. Ed. 391; and this rule obtains even if goods or passengers, over such highways between points in the same state, may have an ultimate destination in other states, and, to a slight extent the state regulations may be said to interfere with interstate commerce; Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 7 Sup. Ct. 4, 30 L. Ed. 244; the states may also exact a bonus or even a portion of the earnings of such corporation as a condition to the grant of its charter; Society for Savings v. Coite, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 594, 18 L. Ed. 897; Provident Inst. for Savings v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 611, 18 L. Ed. 907; Hamilton Mfg. Co. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 632, 18 L. Ed. 904; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Maryland, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 456, 22 L. Ed. 678; Ashley v. Ryan, 153 U. S. 436, 14 Sup. Ct. 865, 38 L. Ed. 773. The power to enact police regulations relating exclusively to intrastate trade cannot be interfered with by congress; U. S. v. De Witt, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 41, 19 L. Ed. 593; Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, 24 L. Ed. 1115; State v. R. Co., 152 Wis. 341, 140 N. W. 70; U. S. v. Vassar, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 462, 470, 471, 18 L. Ed. 497. The remarks of Chase, C. J., in this case contain the substance of the whole doctrine:

"Over this (the internal) commerce and trade, congress has no power of regulation or any direct control. This power belongs exclusively to the states. No interference by congress with the business of citizens transacted within a state is warranted by the constitution, except such as is strictly incidental to the exercise of powers clearly granted to the legislature. The power to authorize a business within a state is plainly repugnant to the exclusive power of the state over the same subject."

Regulation of intrastate commerce belongs to the state subject to the condition that prescribed rates must not be so unreasonably low as to deprive the carrier of his property without due process of law; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 526, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819. See RATES.

It was at one time thought that the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States did not extend to contracts of affreightment between ports of the United States, though the voyage were performed upon navigable waters of the United States; Allen v. Newberry, 21 How. (U. S.) 244, 16 L. Ed. 110. But later adjudications have ignored this distinction as applied to those waters; The Belfast, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 624, 641, 19 L. Ed. 266; The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 558, 587, 22 L. Ed. 654; Lord v. Steamship Co., 102 U. S. 541, 26 L. Ed. 224.

Under this power the states may also prescribe the form of all commercial contracts, as well as the terms and conditions upon which the internal trade of the state may be carried on; United States v. Steffens, 100 U. S. 82, 25 L. Ed. 550.

State statutes affecting interstate commerce have been sustained as follows: One directed against color blindness; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 9 Sup. Ct. 28, 32 L. Ed. 352; requiring interstate locomotive engineers to obtain a license after a qualifying examination, and imposing a penalty for operating without such license; Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 564, 31 L. Ed. 508; forbidding a contract limiting liability for injury; Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Solan, 169 U. S. 133, 18 Sup. Ct. 289, 42 L. Ed. 688; Peirce v. Van Dusen, 78 Fed. 693, 24 C. C. A. 280, 69 L. R. A. 705; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hughes, 191 U. S. 477, 24 Sup. Ct. 132, 48 L. Ed. 268; requiring telegraph companies to receive dispatches and to transmit and deliver them with due diligence, as applied to messages from outside the state; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. James, 162 U. S. 650, 16 Sup. Ct. 934, 40 L. Ed. 1105; forbidding the running of freight trains on Sunday; Hennington v. Georgia, 163 U. S. 299, 16 Sup. Ct. 1086, 41 L. Ed. 166; requiring railroad companies to fix their rates annually for the transportation of passengers and freight and to post a printed copy of such rates at all their stations; Chicago

& N. W. Ry. Co. v. Fuller, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 560, 21 L. Ed. 710; forbidding the consolidation of parallel or competing lines of railways; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 40 L. Ed. 849; regulating the heating of passenger cars and directing guards and guard posts to be placed on railroad bridges and trestles and the approaches thereto; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. New York, 165 U. S. 628, 17 Sup. Ct. 418, 41 L. Ed. 853; requiring track connections and facilities for the interchange of cars and traffic at railroad intersections; Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 21 Sup. Ct. 115, 45 L. Ed. 194. A statute regulating receipts for deposits of money is not a burden on, or regulation of, interstate commerce, simply because such receipts are likely to be transmitted to other states or foreign countries; Engel v. O'Malley, 219 U. S. 128, 31 Sup. Ct. 190, 55 L. Ed. 128. The Arkansas "Full Crew" act is not unconstitutional under the commerce clause, congress not having acted in regard thereto; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Arkansas, 219 U. S. 453, 31 Sup. Ct. 275, 55 L. Ed. 290.

The line of distinction between an interference with commerce and a mere police regulation is sometimes exceedingly dim and shadowy. Undoubtedly, congress may go beyond the general regulations of commerce which comprise its exclusive jurisdiction and descend to minute directions which will exclude the exercise of state power as to matters covered by them. It may establish police regulations, as well as the states, as to matters of which it is given control by the constitution, but generally the police power being better exercised by the local authorities, and the power to arrest collision residing in the national courts, the regulations of congress seldom exclude the establishment of others by the state covering many particulars; Cooley, Const. Lim. 731. See Robbins v. Taxing Dist., 120 U. S. 489, 7 Sup. Ct. 592, 30 L. Ed. 694; Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 7 Sup. Ct. 1118, 30 L. Ed. 1200.

It was said by Strong, J., in Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 473, 24 L. Ed. 527, that "the police power of a state cannot obstruct foreign commerce or interstate commerce beyond the necessity for its exercise; and, under color of it, objects not within its scope cannot be secured at the expense of the protection afforded by the federal constitution, it is the duty of the courts to guard vigilantly against any needless intrusion." This language was quoted with approval by Matthews, J., in Bowman v. R. Co., 125 U. S. 465, 492, 8 Sup. Ct. 689, 1062, 31 L. Ed. 700.

The doing of interstate business by one engaged also in local commerce is not a bar to state regulation or taxation; Osborne v.

The commerce clause is not violated by a state statute prohibiting the manufacture and sale of adulterated goods; Crossman v. Lurman, 192 U. S. 189, 24 Sup. Ct. 234, 48 L. Ed. 401; nor by a state tax on cab service; New York v. Knight, 192 U. S. 21, 24 Sup. Ct. 202, 48 L. Ed. 325; nor by a tax on non-resident managers of meat packing houses, construed by the highest state court to apply only to selling to local customers from stock of original packages not as a mere incident of interstate commerce; Kehrer v. Stewart, 197 U. S. 60, 25 Sup. Ct. 403, 49 L. Ed. 663; nor a tax on foreign corporations engaged in carrying passengers or merchandise upon their gross receipts outside of the state; State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 284, 21 L. Ed. 164; Indiana v. Exp. Co., 7 Biss. 227, Fed. Cas. No. 7,021; nor by a shipment of buggies (by a foreign manufacturer) either complete or in packages of parts put together and peddled about the state by an agent who was held liable to an occupation tax; Saulsbury v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. R. 90, 63 S. W. 568, 96 Am. St. Rep. 837. A state may, in the absence of federal legislation on the subject, reasonably regulate the hours of labor of employes on interstate railroads; State v. R. Co., 36 Mont. 582, 93 Pac. 945, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 134, 13 Ann. Cas. 144. It may adopt regulations to prevent the spread of diseases among plants; Ex parte Hawley, 22 S. D. 23, 115 N. W. 93, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138.

The constitutional provision does not apply to regulations as to life-preservers, boiler inspections, etc., on steamboats which confine their business to ports wholly within a state; The Thomas Swan, 6 Ben. 42, Fed. Cas. No. 13,931; nor to any commerce entirely within a state; The Daniel Ball v. U. S., 10 Wall. (U. S.) 557, 19 L. Ed. 999; Lehigh Val. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 145 U. S. 192, 12 Sup. Ct. 806, 36 L. Ed. 672; Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Mississippi, 133 U. S. 587, 10 Sup. Ct. 348, 33 L. Ed. 784; nor to a condition in a railroad charter granted by a state that the company shall pay a part of its earnings to the state, from time to time, as a bonus; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Maryland, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 456, 22 L. Ed. 678; nor to a state law prescribing regulations for warehouses, carrying on business within the state exclusively, notwithstanding they are used as instruments of interstate traffic; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77; nor to a law of Virginia by which only such persons as are not citizens of that state are prohibited from planting oysters in a soil covered by her tide-waters. Subject to the paramount right of navigation, each state owns the beds of all tide-waters within its jurisdiction, and may appropriate them to be used by its own citizens; McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24

L. Ed. 248. It does not forbid a state from enacting, as a police regulation, a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. Ed. 989; nor the sale of oleomargarine brought from another state; Com. v. Paul, 148 Pa. 559, 24 Atl. 78; Com. v. Schollenberger, 156 Pa. 201, 27 Atl. 30, 22 L. R. A. 155, 36 Am. St. Rep. 32; Com. v. Huntley, 156 Mass. 236, 30 N. E. 1127, 15 L. R. A. 839; though in original packages; In re Scheitlin, 99 Fed. 272; or imposing a license tax upon travelling salesmen selling liquor in quantities of less than five gallons, the statute having been held by the highest court of the state to be a police regulation and not a taxing act; Delamater v. South Dakota, 205 U. S. 93, 27 Sup. Ct. 447, 51 L. Ed. 724 (where it was said that such an act is within the purview of, and not in conflict with, the Wilson Act); or a state act prescribing maximum rates of transportation within the state; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155, 24 L. Ed. 94; and see Peik v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 94 U. S. 164, 24 L. Ed. 97; Cooley, Const. L. 75. Nor is a city ordinance, exacting a license fee, for the maintenance of its office in the city, from an express company doing business beyond the limits of a state, invalid; Osborne v. Mobile, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 479, 21 L. Ed. 470; nor a tax on telegraph poles erected within a city; St. Louis v. Telegraph Co., 148 U. S. 92, 13 Sup. Ct. 485, 37 L. Ed. 380; Philadelphia v. Cable Co., 67 Hun 21, 21 N. Y. Supp. 556; nor a statute requiring locomotive engineers to be licensed after examination, it being a valid exercise of the police power; Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 564, 31 L. Ed. 508; see Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 9 Sup. Ct. 28, 32 L. Ed. 352; nor one forbidding dealing in futures on margins; State v. Beatty (Miss.) 60 South. 1016; nor prohibiting shipment or sale of unripe fruits; Sligh v. Kirkwood (Fla.) 61 South. 185; nor prescribing the effect of domestic indorsements on foreign bills of lading; Roland M. Baker Co. v. Brown, 214 Mass. 196, 100 N. E. 1025.

A city ordinance providing that only rock dressed within the state should be used in any city public works was held valid; Allen v. Labsap, 188 Mo. 692, 87 S. W. 926, 3 Ann. Cas. 306, considered as sound in 19 Harv. L. Rev. 70; and criticized in 61 Cent. L. J. 65. Railroad cars engaged in interstate commerce may be attached under an execution issued out of a state court; Davis v. Ry. Co., 217 U. S. 157, 30 Sup. Ct. 463, 54 L. Ed. 708, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 823, 18 Ann. Cas. 907. In Stone v. Trust Co., 116 U. S. 307, 6 Sup. Ct. 334, 388, 1191, 29 L. Ed. 636, it was held that the right of the state to limit charges of a railroad company could not be granted away by giving to the company the right from time to time to fix and regulate their charges, and that a state was not foreclosed of its right to act upon the reasonableness of the charges and to regulate them for business within the state. A state statute requiring a carrier to settle within a specified time claims for loss or damages is not, in the absence of legislation by congress, an unwarrantable interference with interstate commerce, and is constitutional; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Mazursky, 216 U. S. 122, 30 Sup. Ct. 378, 54 L. Ed. 411. See Morris v. Express Co., 146 N. C. 167, 59 S. E. 667, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 983. And so is one providing that a railroad is liable for damages from fire; McCandless v. R. Co., 38 S. C. 103, 16 S. E. 429, 18 L. R. A. 440. See FIRE. So also are municipal ordinances, in the exercise of police power, prohibiting the sale of a commodity, otherwise than in original packages, as intoxicating liquor; Duluth Brewing & Malting Co. v. Superior, 123 Fed. 353, 59 C. C. A. 481; or perishable market produce sold in railroad depots; State v. Davidson, 50 La. Ann. 1297, 24 South. 324, 69 Am. St. Rep. 478.

The principles regulating the police power of the states in its relation to the commerce clause are well defined in Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, 23 Sup. Ct. 92, 47 L. Ed. 108, where it was said in substance that the United States constitution gives no one a right to introduce into a state, against its will, live stock affected by a contagious disease. Congress not having assumed charge of the matter as involved in interstate commerce, a state may protect its people, but it must not go beyond the necessities of the case nor unreasonably burden the exercise of privileges secured by the constitution.

State Action Valid in Case of Non-Action by Congress. There is a class of cases in which the state may act so long as congress does not, as detailed in County of Mobile v. Kimball, supra. The question whether non-action by congress "is conclusive of its intention that the subject shall be free from all positive regulation, or that, until it positively interferes, such commerce may be left to be freely dealt with by the respective states," is to be determined in each case as it arises; Bowman v. Ry. Co., 125 U. S. 465, 483, 8 Sup. Ct. 689, 1062, 31 L. Ed. 700.

The state may authorize the building of dams and bridges over navigable waters, notwithstanding the fact that they may, to some extent, interfere with the navigation of the stream; Willson v. Black-Bird Creek Marsh Co., 2 Pet. (U. S.) 245, 7 L. Ed. 412; Cardwell v. Bridge Co., 113 U. S. 205, 5 Sup. Ct. 423, 28 L. Ed. 959; Pound v. Turck, 95 U. S. 459, 24 L. Ed. 525. If the stream is one over which the regulation of congress extends, the question arises whether the bridge will interfere with navigation or not; it is not necessarily unlawful if properly built, and if the general traffic of the country will be benefited rather than injured by its construction. There are many cases in which a bridge may be vastly more important than the navigation of the stream which it crosses. It may be said that a state may authorize such constructions, provided they do not constitute a material obstruction to navigation; and each case depends upon its own particular facts. The decision of the state legislature is not conclusive; the final decision rests with the federal courts, who may cause the structure to be abated if it be found to obstruct unnecessarily the traffic on the stream; Cooley, Const. Lim. 738, 739, 740; Pennsylvania v. Bridge Co., 13 How. (U. S.) 518, 14 L. Ed. 249; see also Columbus Ins. Co. v. Bridge Ass'n, 6 McLean 70, Fed. Cas. No. 3,046; Columbus Ins. Co. v. Curtenius, 6 McLean 209, Fed. Cas. No. 3,045; Jolly v. Draw-Bridge Co., 6 McLean 237, Fed. Cas. No. 7,441; Board of Com'rs of St. Joseph County v. Pidge, 5 Ind. 13; Rhea v. R. Co., 50 Fed. 16; State v. Leighton, 83 Me. 419, 22 Atl. 380; Luxton v. Bridge Co., 153 U. S. 525, 14 Sup. Ct. 891, 38 L. Ed. 808; Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S. 204, 14 Sup. Ct. 1087, 38 L. Ed. 962. See BRIDGE. The state has also the power to regulate the speed and general conduct of vessels navigating its waters, provided such regulations do not conflict with regulations prescribed by congress for foreign commerce, or commerce among the states; Cooley, Const. Lim. 740; People v. Jenkins, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 469, 470.

Of this class of cases, it was said by Mr. Justice Curtis in Cooley v. Board of Wardens, 12 How. (U. S.) 299, 318, [13 L. Ed. 996]: "If it were admitted that the existence of this power in congress, like the power of taxation, is compatible with the existence of a similar power in the states, then it would be in conformity with the contemporary exposition of the constitution (Federalist No. 32), and with the judicial construction given from time to time by this court, after the most deliberate consideration, to hold that the mere grant of such power to congress did not imply a prohibition on the states to exercise the same power; that it is not the mere existence of such a power, but its exercise by congress, which may be incompatible with the exercise of the same power by the states, and that the states may legislate in the absence of congressional regulations." See, also, Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122, 193, 4 L. Ed. 529. But even in the matter of building a bridge, if congress chooses to act, its action necessarily supersedes the action of the state; Pennsylvania v. Bridge Co., 13 How. (U. S.) 421, 15 L. Ed. 435. As a matter of fact, the building of bridges over waters dividing two states is now usually done by congressional sanction. See NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Under this power the state may also tax the instruments of interstate commerce as it taxes other similar property, provided such tax is not laid upon the commerce itself. Brown, J., in Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S. 204, 14 Sup. Ct. 1087, 38 L. Ed. 962.

But wherever such laws, instead of being of local nature and only affecting interstate commerce incidentally, are national in their character, the non-action of congress indicates its will that such commerce shall be free and untrammelled, and the case falls within the class wherein the jurisdiction of Congress is exclusive; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 5 Sup. Ct. 1091, 29 L. Ed. 257; Bowman v. Ry. Co., 125 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 689, 1062, 31 L. Ed. 700; Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S. 204, 14 Sup. Ct. 1087, 38 L. Ed. 962, and supra.

This contingent right of action by the states may sometimes be exercised by the courts as well as by legislatures, as where there has been no action by congress or the interstate commerce commission, a state court may by mandamus compel a railroad company doing interstate business to afford equal switching service to its shippers notwithstanding the cars in regard to which the service is claimed would eventually be engaged in interstate commerce; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Flour Mills Co., 211 U. S. 612, 29 Sup. Ct. 214, 53 L. Ed. 352.

The Wilson Act (see Liquor) provides that intoxicating liquors transported into any state or territory shall be subject to the laws thereof enacted under the police power "upon arrival in such state." In construing this act it has been held that the interstate commerce is not ended until the goods are moved from the station platform to the freight warehouse, if sent by express; Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S. 412, 18 Sup. Ct. 664, 42 L. Ed. 1088; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 102 Me. 206, 66 Atl. 393, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 550; that they are not subject to seizure while in the hands of the express company; Adams Exp. Co. v. Iowa, 196 U. S. 147, 25 Sup. Ct. 185, 49 L. Ed. 424; that delivery to the consignee is necessary to constitute arrival in the state; Heymann v. Ry. Co., 203 U. S. 270, 27 Sup. Ct. 104, 51 L. Ed. 178, 7 Ann. Cas. 1130; and that this phrase means actual, not implied, delivery; U. S. v. Building Co., 206 U. S. 120, 27 Sup. Ct. 676, 51 L. Ed. 983; Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 206 U. S. 138, 27 Sup. Ct. 608, 51 L. Ed. 992; that an agreement of the local express agent to hold for a few days a C. O. D. shipment to suit the convenience of the consignee in paying did not affect the transaction as interstate commerce; American Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 206 U. S. 139, 27 Sup. Ct. 609, 51 L. Ed. 993; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 101 Me. 430, 64 Atl. 812. In State v. Holleyman, 55 S. C. 207, 31 S. E. 362, 33 S. E. 366, 45 L. R. A. 567, before the United States Supreme Court decisions, it was held that liquor received in another state and taken to its destination in a buggy did not "arrive" until both buggy and liquor arrived with the purchaser at his home in the state. Cases which held otherwise, decided prior to the United States Supreme Court decisions and of course overruled by them, are In re Langford, 57 Fed. 570; Southern Exp. Co. v. State, 114 Ga. 226, 39 S. E. 899; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 95 Me. 140, 49 Atl. 670; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 96 Me. 415, 52 Atl. 911. An article in 22 Green Bag 10, on "Liquor in Interstate Relations" suggests that, to give effect to state laws, congress may either repeal all legislation recognizing liquors as the subject of interstate commerce, or explicitly recognize that, for the purpose of giving effect to state prohibitory legislation, they are not to be regarded as such.

State Action Held Invalid. Any "state legislation which seeks to impose a direct burden upon interstate commerce, or to interfere directly with its freedom does encroach upon the exclusive power of congress"; Rae v. Loan & Guaranty Co., 176 U. S. 126, 20 Sup. Ct. 341, 44 L. Ed. 398; Lindsay & P. Co. v. Mullen, 176 U. S. 147, 20 Sup. Ct. 325, 44 L. Ed. 400; quoting Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 7 Sup. Ct. 4, 30 L. Ed. 244, where it was held that a long and short haul clause in a state statute was invalid as applied to interstate commerce. The following are invalid: A state statute requiring carriers by water to give all persons, without distinction of race or color, equal rights and privileges in all parts of the vessel, it being in effect a regulation of conduct through the entire voyage while assuming to regulate it while passing through the state; Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485, 24 L. Ed. 547 (but not one which only applies to passengers carried within the state; Louisville R. Co. v. Mississippi, 133 U. S. 587, 10 Sup. Ct. 348, 33 L. Ed. 784); or any penal statute which interferes with commerce; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 10 Sup. Ct. 862, 34 L. Ed. 455; as an act requiring the license of a pedlar of tea, the growth of a foreign country. A statute is invalid which under pretense of protecting the public health imposes a direct burden on interstate commerce; Com. v. Moore, 214 Mass. 19, 100 N. E. 1071; and so is a statute, ostensibly a license tax, but in fact a regulation of commerce; Voight v. Wright, 141 U. S. 62, 11 Sup. Ct. 855, 35 L. Ed. 638 (where the provision that flour brought into a state and offered for sale should be reviewed and have the Virginia inspection mark on it, was held discriminating and unconstitutional, such inspection not being required for flour manufactured in the state); Brimmer v. Rebman, 138 U. S. 78, 11 Sup. Ct. 213, 34 L. Ed. 862 (where there was a license tax on the sale of western meat, accompanied by burdensome regulations not imposed on the sale of meat produced in the state); and a license tax on photographers, etc., does not affect the shipment from a corporation in another state of pictures and frames to be put together and delivered by its agent, who is free from license tax; Caldwell v. North Carolina, 187 U. S. 622, 23 Sup. Ct. 229, 47 L. Ed. 336.

A state statute penalizing shipments of liquor C. O. D. and making the place of delivery the place of sale is invalid; Adams Express Co. v. Kentucky, 206 U. S. 129, 27 Sup. Ct. 606, 51 L. Ed. 987. Liquor is a recognized article of commerce and a state law denying the right to send it from one state to another is unconstitutional; Vance v. Vandercook Co., 170 U. S. 438, 18 Sup. Ct. 674, 42 L. Ed. 1100, followed in Adams Express Co. v. Kentucky, 214 U. S. 218, 29 Sup. Ct. 633, 53 L. Ed. 972; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brewing Co., 223 U. S. 70, 32 Sup. Ct. 189, 56 L. Ed. 355; in both which cases it is also held that transportation is not completed until delivery to the consignee, and under the Wilson Act (q. v.) it is not subject to regulation under state laws until such delivery. See supra.

A burden imposed upon interstate commerce cannot be sustained simply because the statute imposing it applies to the people of all the states, including the enacting one; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 10 Sup. Ct. 862, 34 L. Ed. 455, where a statute requiring inspection within twenty-four hours before slaughtering of all animals killed for food, was held unconstitutional.

While a state may confer power on an administrative agency to make reasonable regulations as to the place, time and manner of the delivery of merchandise, any regulation which directly burdens interstate commerce is a regulation thereof and unconstitutional; McNeill v. R. Co., 202 U. S. 543, 26 Sup. Ct. 722, 50 L. Ed. 1142, where the regulation was an order requiring a railroad company to deliver cars from another state to the consignee on a private siding beyond its own right of way; but where congress and the interstate commerce commission have not acted, the state may compel a railroad company to give equal switching facilities to all customers, even if affecting cars to be used in interstate commerce; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Mills Co., 211 U. S. 612, 29 Sup. Ct. 214, 53 L. Ed. 352.

Other cases of invalid state action were: Assessment by a state for taxation of property in original packages before incorporation into the mass of property; May v. New Orleans, 178 U. S. 496, 20 Sup. Ct. 976, 44 L. Ed. 1165; and taxation of tea imported from a foreign country, and stored in a government warehouse in the original unbroken package; Siegfried v. Raymond, 190 Ill. 424, 60 N. E. 868.

A state has no power to interfere with an interstate commerce train if thereby a direct burden is imposed upon interstate commerce, as by a police regulation requiring the stoppage of a train at certain stations; Mississippi R. Co. v. R. Co., 203 U. S. 335, 27 Sup. Ct. 90, 51 L. Ed. 209; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Illinois, 177 U. S. 514, 20 Sup. Ct. 722, 44 L. Ed. 868; or regulations of master and servant, applicable to those actually engaged in the operation of interstate commerce after congress had acted upon the subject; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Wharton, 207 U. S. 328, 28 Sup. Ct. 121, 52 L. Ed. 230; Johnson v. Southern Co.,

The Minnesota Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 352, 38 Sup. Ct. 729, 57 L. Ed. 1511, have been reported since this title was prepared. It might be cited as an authority confirming almost every legal proposition above stated as established by the authorities, and the opinion of the court by Mr. Justice Hughes may be referred to as a thorough and exhaustive discussion of the whole subject of interstate commerce.

The special point decided arose out of the contention that, even admitting that the rates prescribed by the state were reasonable, as a regulation of intrastate commerce, as applied to cities on the state's boundary or to places within competitive districts crossed by the state line, nevertheless the rates disturbed the relation previously existing between interstate and intrastate rates, thus imposing a direct burden upon interstate commerce and creating discriminations as against localities in other states. In reply to this contention, it was held that the authority of the state to prescribe reasonable charges for intrastate transportation is statewide, unless limited by the exercise of the constitutional power of congress, which is not confined to a part of the state, but extends throughout its limits—to cities adjacent to its boundaries as well as to those in the interior; and a restriction of the authority of the state must be by virtue of the actual exercise of the federal control and not by reason of a dormant federal power that has not been exerted.

COMMERCE CLAUSE. See COMMERCE; ORIGINAL PACKAGE; CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

COMMERCE COURT. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

COMMERCE, DEPARTMENT OF. See DEPARTMENTS.

COMMERCIA BELLI. Agreements entered into by belligerents, either in time of peace to take effect in the event of war, or during the war itself, by which arrangement is made for non-hostile intercourse. They may take the form of armistices, truces, capitulations, cartels, passports, safe-conducts, safeguards. 1 Kent 159; 2 Opp. 274. See separate titles.

Contracts between citizens of one belligerent and those of another; or between citizens of one belligerent and the other belligerent. They may take the form of ransom bills (q. v.), bills of exchange drawn by prisoners of war, or receipts for requisitions. 1 Kent 104.

COMMERCIAL AGENCY. A person, firm, or corporation engaged in the business of collecting information as to the financial standing, ability, and credit of persons engaged in business and reporting the same to subscribers or to customers applying and paying therefor. "They have become vast and extensive factors in modern commercial transactions for furnishing information to retail jobbers as well as to wholesale merchants. The courts are bound to know judicially that no vendor of goods at wholesale can be regarded as a prudent business man if he sells to a retail dealer, upon a credit, without first informing himself through these mediums of information of the financial standing of the customer, and the credit to which he is fairly entitled;" Furry v. O'Connor, 1 Ind. App. 573, 28 N. E. 103. See also Eaton, Cole & Burnham Co. v. Avery, 83 N. Y. 31, 38 Am. Rep. 389; Holmes v. Harrington, 20 Mo. App. 661.

How far the agency may contract against its own negligence. An exception is made to some extent in favor of such agencies to the rule against stipulations by a person against liability for his own negligence. The agency usually contracts that their agents shall be considered as the agents of their patrons, and that they shall not be liable for the negligence of their agents. Where in an action upon such a contract the plaintiff contended that under it the agency was protected only against gross and not against ordinary negligence, it was held otherwise; Duncan v. Dun, 7 W. N. C. (Pa.) 246, Fed. Cas. No. 4,134.

Under a contract that the actual correctness of the information was in no manner guaranteed, the agency was not liable for loss occasioned to a subscriber by the wilful and fraudulent act of a sub-agent in furnishing false information; Dun v. Bank, 58 Fed. 174, 7 C. C. A. 152, 23 L. R. A. 687, reversing City Nat. Bank v. Dun, 51 Fed. 160. Where the inquiry was made concerning a grocer and the agency reported concerning the wrong person, who had the same name and was a grocer and saloon keeper, the plaintiff could not recover from the agency the value of goods sold on the strength of the report, the evidence being held to show that there was not such gross negligence as would render the agency liable; Xiques v. Bradstreet Co., 70 Hun 334, 24 N. Y. Supp. 48; but such a contract does not protect the agency from an error made in the publication of its books of reference giving the financial responsibility of merchants and others, and upon which a subscriber of the agency relied in selling goods and suffered a loss, and in such case it is unnecessary to thus establish the insolvency of the purchaser by suit before suing the agency; Crew v. Bradstreet Co., 134 Pa. 161, 19 Atl. 500, 7 L. R. A. 661, 19 Am. St. Rep. 681.

When reports are privileged and when libellous. Such an agency is a lawful business when lawfully conducted, but is not exempt from liability for false and defamatory publications when other citizens would not be exempt. Its communications to a person interested in the information are privileged even if false, if made in good faith and without malice, but if communicated to its subscribers generally they are not privileged; Bradstreet Co. v. Gill, 72 Tex. 115, 9 S. W. 753, 2 L. R. A. 405, 13 Am. St. Rep. 768; Kingsbury v. Bradstreet Co., 116 N. Y. 211, 22 N. E. 365; Woodruff v. Bradstreet Co., 116 N. Y. 217, 22 N. E. 354, 5 L. R. A. 553; Pollasky v. Minchener, 81 Mich. 280, 46 N. W. 5, 9 L. R. A. 102, 21 Am. St. Rep. 516; Mitchell v. Bradstreet Co., 116 Mo. 226, 22 S. W. 358, 724, 20 L. R. A. 138, 38 Am. St. Rep. 592; State v. Lonsdale, 48 Wis. 348, 4 N. W. 390; Trussell v. Scarlett, 18 Fed. 214; King v. Patterson, 49 N. J. L. 417, 9 Atl. 705, 60 Am. Rep. 622; Erber v. R. G. Dun & Co., 4 McCrary 160, 12 Fed. 526; Johnson v. Bradstreet Co., 77 Ga. 172, 4 Am. St. Rep. 77. See also 3 Montreal, Q. B. 83; 18 Can. S. C. 222. The contract of the agency to furnish information to all its subscribers, including those who have no special interest in it, is no defence to an action for libel; King v. Patterson, 49 N. J. L. 417, 9 Atl. 705, 60 Am. Rep. 622; nor was the fact that the information was given by printed signs of which each subscriber had the key; Sunderlin v. Bradstreet, 46 N. Y. 188, 7 Am. Rep. 322; the matter is privileged if communicated to the proper person by a clerk or agent as well as by the proprietor of the agency; King v. Patterson, 49 N. J. L. 417, 9 Atl. 705, 60 Am. Rep. 622; Erber v. R. G. Dun & Co., 12 Fed. 526; (but see Beardsley v. Tappan, 5 Blatchf. 497, Fed. Cas. No. 1,189, and Tappan v. Beardsley, 10 Wall. 427, 19 L. Ed. 974, criticised in the two cases just cited;) or if specially reported upon proper occasion to subscribers having special interest in them, though not applied for by such subscribers; Locke v. Bradstreet Co., 22 Fed. 771; but if a subscriber apply for special information from the agency, a false denunciation of the person inquired about, coupled with the report, is actionable; Brown v. Durham, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 244, 22 S. W. 808. So also are statements at first privileged but repeated and persisted in when known to be false, or, if otherwise privileged, made maliciously; Erber v. R. G. Dun & Co., 12 Fed. 526; or if made recklessly and without due care and caution in making inquiry; Locke v. Bradstreet Co., 22 Fed. 771; Bradstreet Co. v. Gill, 72 Tex. 115, 9 S. W. 753, 2 L. R. A. 405, 13 Am. St. Rep. 768; Lowry v. Vedder, 40 Minn. 475, 42 N. W. 542.

The publication and circulation to subscribers in daily reports of the execution of a chattel mortgage was not libellous; Newbold v. J. M. Bradstreet & Son, 57 Md. 38, 40 Am. Rep. 426; contra, King v. Patterson, 49 N. J. L. 417, 9 Atl. 705, 60 Am. Rep. 622; nor was that of a copy of a judgment, with a note that the judgment was paid the same day; 8 Ir. Rep. 349; but in a similar case when the judgment was so paid, but it was not so stated, the publication was held libellous; 16 Ir. Rep. C. L. 298; and so also is a false publication of a trader that a judgment had been rendered; 22 Q. B. 134. And where the action was for publishing that a judgment had been rendered when only a verdict had been returned, it was held proper to ask a witness to the effect of such statement, whether if he had known the actual fact his conduct would have been the same; Hessel v. Bradstreet Co., 141 Pa. 501, 21 Atl. 659.

The burden of proof is upon the agency to show privilege prima facie, and after its character is established the burden is on the plaintiff to show malice; Erber v. R. G. Dun & Co., 12 Fed. 526; Ormsby v. Douglass, 37 N. Y. 477; and it is matter of law for the court to determine whether the matter published is libellous per se; Woodruff v. Bradstreet Co., 35 Hun (N. Y.) 16.

An action for libel may be brought by a person whose name is published in a book containing a list of delinquent debtors, distributed to subscribers, manifestly for coercing the payment of claims, who is denied credit because of such publication, or by one to whom a letter is sent in an envelope on which is printed the name of an association and a statement that it is an organization for the purpose of collecting bad debts; Muetze v. Tuteur, 77 Wis. 236, 46 N. W. 123, 9 L. R. A. 86, 20 Am. St. Rep. 115.

A report of a mercantile agency, alleging that plaintiff had made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, is not privileged, where it appears that plaintiff had assigned only to secure the endorsement of a note; Douglass v. Daisley, 114 Fed. 628, 52 C. C. A. 324, 57 L. R. A. 475; but if the mistake could not have been avoided by reasonable care, the report is privileged, but if it was the result of carelessness, the privilege is lost; id. Communications though made in good faith by a commercial agency to a subscriber containing defamatory statements of plaintiff's character, are not privileged; [1908] A. C. 390. A complaint that a mercantile agency report alleging that plaintiff's account with the bank was "not classed as an entirely desirable one," and averred to be false and malicious, was held good on demurrer; Mower-Hobart Co. v. R. G. Dun & Co., 131 Fed. 812.

Effect of fraudulent representations by vendee to agency upon vendor who relies upon them. An action for deceit will lie against persons or corporations making false representations of pecuniary responsibility to an agency in order to obtain credit and defraud those who may rely upon the reports; Carroll Exchange Bank v. Bank, 50 Mo. App. 94; Eaton, Cole & Burnham Co. v. Avery, 83 N. Y. 31, 38 Am. Rep. 389; Tindle

v. Birkett, 171 N. Y. 520, 64 N. E. 210, 89 Am. St. Rep. 822, reversing 57 App. Div. 450, 67 N. Y. Supp. 1017; Eaton, Cole & Burnham Co. v. Avery, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 44; in such action the statements falsely made to the agency are admissible, if relied on by the vendee; Furry v. O'Connor, 1 Ind. App. 573, 28 N. E. 103; or if approved by him after being written out by the agency, but not if not known to the vendor until after the sale; Robinson v. Levi, 81 Ala. 134, 1 South. 554; Mooney v. Davis, 75 Mich. 188, 42 N. W. 802, 13 Am. St. Rep. 425. A contract for the sale of goods to the person making such representations, who proves to be insolvent at the time of making them and of the sale, may be rescinded and possession of the goods recovered; Mooney v. Davis, 75 Mich. 188, 42 N. W. 802, 13 Am. St. Rep. 425; Cook v. Harrington, 31 Mo. App. 199; Hinchman v. Weeks, 85 Mich. 535, 48 N. W. 790; Lindauer v. Hay, 61 Ia. 667, 17 N. W. 98; Gainesville Nat. Bank v. Bamberger, 77 Tex. 48, 13 S. W. 959, 19 Am. St. Rep. 738; In re Epstein, 109 Fed. 874; it is enough if he had not reasonable grounds for believing them to be true; In re Roalswick, 110 Fed. 639; but where there were no representations other than those obtained by the agency from the seller, a fraudulent intent on the part of the vendee to use the agency as an instrument of fraud must be clearly shown; Victor v. Henlien, 33 Hun (N. Y.) 549; Dieckerhoff v. Brown (Md.) 2 Atl. 723; Macullar v. McKinley, 99 N. Y. 353, 2 N. E. 9. The vendor may show that he refused to make the sale until he received the report of the agency, and the agent may show his business methods; Hinchman v. Weeks, 85 Mich. 535, 48 N. W. 790. The right to rescind the sale is not affected by a refusal of the vendee to give further statements of his condition, as the original one is presumed to continue if not recalled by the agency; Cladin v. Flack, 13 N. Y. Supp. 269; but if the vendee has made subsequent reports showing an impaired responsibility, the vendor must take all the reports into consideration, and not only on the original one; but the vendee is not required to make subsequent reports unless he actually becomes insolvent or knows that he will soon be; Cortland Mfg. Co. v. Platt, 83 Mich. 419, 47 N. W. 330; reports made six weeks before the sale may be relied on; 20 Mo. App. 173; but not those made from five to seven months before; Zucker v. Karpeles, 88 Mich. 413, 50 N. W. 373; Macullar v. McKinley, 99 N. Y. 353, 2 N. E. 9. A financial statement to a commercial agency is a continuing representation for a reasonable time that the facts therein stated are true; In re Kyte, 174 Fed. 867.

How affected by the statute of frauds. With respect to the liability of the agency for representations not made in writing when the liability was contested, on the ground that the contract was within the statute of frauds, there is not a satisfactory result to be found in decisions; but it has been held that the action was upon the original contract with the customer, which was by no statute required to be written; U. C. 39 Q. B. 551; (reversed on other points and doubted on this; 1 Ont. App. 153;) and also that the action was sustainable on the original contract to furnish accurate statements, in response to inquiry respecting any persons; Sprague v. Dun, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 310.

No remedy in equity against publication. An injunction will not be granted to restrain the agency from the publication of matter injurious to the standing of the plaintiff, there being no jurisdiction in equity unless there is a breach of trust or contract involved; Raymond v. Russell, 143 Mass. 295, 9 N. E. 544, 58 Am. Rep. 137; Burwell v. Jackson, 9 N. Y. 544.

See LIBEL; PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION.

COMMERCIAL COURT. A name commonly applied in English practice to the trial of commercial causes in London and Liverpool before judges of the High Court. It is said to be "a mere piece of convenience in the arrangement of business"; [1895] 2 Ch. 491.

COMMERCIAL LAW. A phrase employed to denote those branches of the law which relate to the rights of property and relations of persons engaged in commerce.

This term denotes more than the phrase "maritime law," which is sometimes used as synonymous, but which more strictly relates to shipping and its incidents.

As the subjects with which commercial law, even as administered in any one country, has to deal are dispersed throughout the globe, it results that commercial law is less local and more cosmopolitan in its character than any other great branch of municipal law; and the peculiar genius of the common law, in adapting recognized principles of right to new and ever-varying combinations of facts, has here found a field where its excellence has been most clearly shown. The various systems of commercial law have been well contrasted by Leone Levi in his collection entitled "Commercial Law, its Principles and Administration, or the Mercantile Law of Great Britain compared with the Codes and Laws of Commerce of all the Important Mercantile Countries of the Modern World, and with the Institutes of Justinian;" London, 1850-52; a work of great interest both as a contribution to the project of a mercantile code and as a manual of present use.

As to the rule in the federal courts, see Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 10 L. Ed. 865; Carpenter v. Ins. Co., 16 Pet. (U. S.) 511, 10 L. Ed. 1044; Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 33, 2 Sup. Ct. 10, 27 L. Ed. 359, where Bradley, J., says, "Where the law has not been settled, it is the right and duty of the federal courts to exercise their own judgment, as they also always do in reference to the doctrines of commercial law." See UNITED STATES COURTS.

COMMERCIAL PAPER. Negotiable paper given in due course of business, whether the element of negotiability be given it by the law merchant or by statute. In re Sykes, 5 Biss. 113, Fed. Cas. No. 13,708. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER. A travelling salesman who simply exhibits samples of goods kept for sale by his principal, and takes orders from purchasers for such goods, which goods are afterwards to be delivered by the principal to the purchasers, and payment for the goods is to be made by the purchaser to the principal on such delivery. City of Kansas v. Collins, 34 Kan. 436, 8 Pac. 865; State v. Miller, 93 N. C. 511, 53 Am. Rep. 469. An order solicited by and given to such salesman does not constitute a sale, either absolute or conditional, of the goods ordered, but is a mere proposal, to be accepted or not, as the principal may see fit; McKindly v. Dunham, 55 Wis. 515, 13 N. W. 485, 42 Am. Rep. 740; Clark v. Smith, 85 Ill. 298.

An agent who sells by sample and on credit, and is not intrusted with the possession of the goods to be sold, has no implied authority to receive payment, and payment to him will not discharge the purchaser; Butler v. Dorman, 68 Mo. 302, 30 Am. Rep. 795; Law v. Stokes, 32 N. J. L. 250, 90 Am. Dec. 655; Seiple v. Irwin, 30 Pa. 513; Kornemann v. Monaghan, 24 Mich. 36.

Even if he has power to collect accounts, receiving checks payable to his principal, no authority to endorse such checks will be implied; Jackson v. Bank, 92 Tenn. 154, 20 S. W. 802, 18 L. R. A. 663, 36 Am. St. Rep. 81; nor authority to bind his principals on a contract for advertising his business in a newspaper; Tarpey v. Bernheimer, 16 N. Y. Supp. 870.

It has been held that possession of the goods by a commercial traveller who sells them is evidence of authority to collect therefor; Bailey v. Pardridge, 134 Ill. 188, 27 N. E. 89; John Hutchinson Mfg. Co. v. Henry, 44 Mo. App. 263; Cross v. Haskins, 13 Vt. 536.

Where a drummer sold his samples and converted the proceeds, it was held, in the absence of evidence of the custom or usage of the drummer's disposition of samples, that the principals were not bound by the sale; Kohn v. Washer, 64 Tex. 131, 53 Am. Rep. 745; but where such sale is ratified, the payment to the agent is ratified also; Bailey v. Pardridge, 134 Ill. 188, 27 N. E. 89.

The drummer may hire a carriage upon the credit of his principals if necessary; Bentley v. Doggett, 51 Wis. 224, 8 N. W. 155, 37 Am. Rep. 827; Huntley v. Mathias, 90 N. C. 101, 47 Am. Rep. 516, where the principals were held liable for the drummer's tort in overdriving a horse.

COMMISSARIA LEX. A principle of the Roman law relative to the forfeiture of contracts. It is not unusual to restrict a sale upon credit, by a clause in the agreement that if the buyer should fail to make due payment the seller might rescind the sale. In the meantime, however, the property was the buyer's and at his risk. A debtor and his pledgee might also agree that if the debtor did not pay at the day fixed, the pledge should become the absolute property of the creditor. 2 Kent 583. This was abolished by a law of Constantine. Cod. 8. 35. 3.

COMMISSARY. An officer whose principal duties are to supply an army, or some portion thereof, with provisions.

The subsistence department of the army shall consist of one commissary-general of subsistence, with the rank of brigadier-general; two assistant commissaries-general of subsistence, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel of cavalry; eight commissaries of subsistence, with the rank of major of cavalry; and sixteen commissaries of subsistence, with the rank of captain of cavalry. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1140. Their duties are defined in the following sections.

An official to whom the bishop of a diocese sometimes delegated jurisdiction in his Consistory Court over certain parts of the diocese. 1 Holdsw. Hist. L. 369.

COMMISSION (Lat. commissio; from committere, to intrust to).

An undertaking without reward to do something for another, with respect to a thing bailed. Rutherford, Inst. 105.

A body of persons authorized to act in a certain matter. 5 B. & C. 850.

The act of perpetrating an offence.

An instrument issued by a court of justice, or other competent tribunal, to authorize a person to take depositions, or do any other act by authority of such court or tribunal, is called a commission.

Letters-patent granted by the government, under the public seal, to a person appointed to an office, giving him authority to perform the duties of his office. The commission is not the appointment, but only evidence of it, and, as soon as it is signed and sealed, vests the office in the appointee. Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 137, 2 L. Ed. 60; State v. Billy, 2 N. & McC. (S. C.) 357. See Talbot v. Simpson, 1 Pet. C. C. 194, Fed. Cas. No. 13,730; U. S. v. Vinton, 2 Sumn. 299, Fed. Cas. No. 16,624; Scofield v. Lounsbury, 8 Conn. 109. In this sense it is much used in Great Britain; the great seal is sometimes placed in commission by the crown in the hands of one or more persons; judges assigned to certain duties are appointed thereto by commission; the royal assent to bills in parliament is usually given by commissioners appointed for the purpose.

In Common Law. A sum allowed, usually a certain per cent. upon the value of the property involved, as compensation to a servant or agent for services performed. See COMMISSIONS.

COMMISSION GOVERNMENT. A method of municipal government in which the legislative power is in the hands of a few persons.

Constitutional provisions dividing government into legislative, executive and judicial departments are held to apply to state and not to local governments, and not to affect a law providing a commission plan of city government; State v. Ure, 91 Neb. 31, 135 N. W. 224. The legislature has the power to allow the electors of all cities in the same class to adopt or reject the commission plan of government; id.; such method is constitutional; State v. City of Mankato, 117 Minn. 458, 136 N. W. 264, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 111.

An act authorizing certain cities to adopt this form of government only becomes effective in cities which may adopt it by vote, and does not violate state constitutions prohibiting special or local legislation in matters affecting the incorporation of cities, etc.; People v. Edmands, 252 Ill. 108, 96 N. E. 914.

An act authorizing the government of certain cities by commission at their option is not violative of the constitution as an unwarranted delegation of legislative power; State v. Tausick, 64 Wash. 69, 116 Pac. 651, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 802; Eckerson v. Des Moines, 137 Ia. 452, 115 N. W. 177; City of Jackson v. State (Miss.) 59 South. 873. To the same effect, Bryan v. Voss, 143 Ky. 422, 136 S. W. 884.

COMMISSION MERCHANT. As this term is used, it is synonymous with the legal term "factor," and means one who receives goods, chattels, or merchandise, for sale, exchange, or other disposition, and who is to receive a compensation for his services, to be paid by the owner or derived from the sale of the goods. Perkins v. State, 50 Ala. 154. See AGENCY; FACTORS.

COMMISSION OF ASSIZE. In English Practice. A commission which formerly issued from the king, appointing certain persons as commissioners or judges of assize to hold the assizes in association with discreet knights during those years in which the justices in eyre did not come.

Other commissions were added to this, which has finally fallen into complete disuse. See COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS.

COMMISSION OF LUNACY. A writ issued out of chancery, or such court as may have jurisdiction of the case, directed to a proper officer, to inquire whether a person named therein is a lunatic or not. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 382.

COMMISSION OF REBELLION. In English Law. A writ formerly issued out of chancery to compel an attendance. It was abolished by the order of August 8, 1841.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER. A person in the United States military service of or above the rank of second lieutenant. Davis, Mil. L. 26.

COMMISSIONER. See COMMISSION.

COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS. The title given by law to the head of the patent office. Prior to 1836 the business of that office was under the immediate charge of a clerk in the state department, who was generally known as the superintendent of the patent office. He performed substantially the same duties which afterwards devolved upon the commissioner, except that he was not required to decide upon the patentability of any contrivance for which a patent was sought, inasmuch as the system of examinations had not then been introduced and the applicant was permitted to take out his patent at his own risk.

Under the existing acts he hears appeals from the examiners in chief, and an appeal lies from his decision, in interference cases to the Court of Appeals. Act of Feb. 9, 1893. See PATENTS; PATENT OFFICE, EXAMINERS IN.

COMMISSIONER, UNITED STATES. An officer appointed by the United States District Court in each district, in place of Commissioners of the Circuit Court. The court may appoint such number and in such districts as it deems best. They hold for four years, subject to removal by the court. No person can be both a District Court clerk (or deputy) and commissioner without the approval of the Attorney-General. Act of May 28, 1896. A commissioner in proceedings under R. S. § 1014, does not hold a "court"; Todd v. U. S., 158 U. S. 278, 15 Sup. Ct. 889, 39 L. Ed. 982; and he is in no constitutional sense a judge; Rice v. Ames, 180 U. S. 371, 378, 21 Sup. Ct. 406, 45 L. Ed. 577. He is a mere ministerial officer, who while acting as a committing magistrate in such proceedings exercises duties which are judicial in character; U. S. v. Jones, 134 U. S. 483, 10 Sup. Ct. 615, 33 L. Ed. 1007; U. S. v. Ewing, 140 U. S. 142, 11 Sup. Ct. 743, 35 L. Ed. 388; but he cannot punish for contempt committed in his presence; Ex parte Perkins, 29 Fed. 900; In re Mason, 43 Fed. 510.

COMMISSIONER OF WOODS AND FORESTS. An officer created by act of parliament of 1817, to whom was transferred the jurisdiction of the chief justices of the forest. Inderwick, The King's Peace.

COMMISSIONERS OF BAIL. Officers appointed by some courts to take recognizances of bail in civil cases.

COMMISSIONERS OF DEEDS. Officers appointed by the governors of many of the states, resident in another state or territory, empowered to take acknowledgments, administer oaths, etc., to be used in the state from which they derive their appointment. They have, for the most part, all the powers of a notary public, except that of protesting negotiable paper. Rap. & Lawr. Law Dict.

COMMISSIONERS OF HIGHWAYS. Officers having certain powers and duties concerning the highway, within the limits of their jurisdiction. They are usually three in number. In some of the states they are county officers, and their jurisdiction is co-extensive with the county. In others, as in New York, Michigan, Illinois, and Wisconsin, they are town or township officers. They have power to establish, alter, and vacate highways; and it is their duty to cause them to be kept in repair.

COMMISSIONERS OF SEWERS. A court of record of special jurisdiction in England.

It was a temporary tribunal, erected by virtue of a commission under the great seal, which formerly was granted pro re nata at the pleasure of the crown, but afterwards at the discretion and nomination of the lord chancellor, lord treasurer, and chief justices, pursuant to the statute of sewers. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 5.

Its jurisdiction was to overlook the repairs of the banks and walls of the sea-coast and navigable rivers and the streams communicating therewith, and was confined to such county or particular district as the commission should expressly name. The commissioners might take order for the removal of any annoyances or the safeguard and conservation of the sewers within their commission, either according to the laws and customs of Romney Marsh, or otherwise, at their own discretion. They were also to assess and collect taxes for such repairs and for the expenses of the commission. They might proceed with the aid of a jury or upon their own view; 3 Bla. Com. 73; Crabb, Hist. E. L. 469.

COMMISSIONS. Compensation allowed to agents, factors, executors, trustees, receivers, and other persons who manage the affairs of others, in recompense for their services.

The right to such allowance may either be the subject of a special contract, may rest upon an implied contract to pay quantum meruit, or may depend upon statutory provisions; 7 C. & P. 584; 9 id. 559.

The right does not generally accrue till the completion of the services; 4 C. & P. 289; 7 Bingham 99; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co., 83 N. Y. 378, 38 Am. Rep. 441; and see 10 B. & C. 438; and does not then exist unless proper care, skill, and perfect fidelity have been employed; 3 Campbell 451; 9 Bingham 287; Dodge v. Tileston, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 328; McDonald v. Maltz, 94 Mich. 172, 53 N. W. 1058, 34 Am. St. Rep. 331; Smith v. Tripis, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 267, 21 S. W. 722; and the services must not have been illegal nor against public policy; 3 B. & C. 639; Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 258, 6 L. Ed. 468.

Brokers. The broker is entitled to a fair and reasonable opportunity to perform his obligations, subject to the right of the seller to sell independently, but, that having been granted to him, the right of the principal to terminate his authority is unrestricted, except only that he may not do it in bad faith, and as a mere device to escape commissions; Sibbald v. Iron Co., 83 N. Y. 378, 38 Am. Rep. 441; Crowe v. Trickey, 204 U. S. 228, 27 Sup. Ct. 275, 51 L. Ed. 454 (where the death of the principal was held to terminate the broker's authority though he had found the purchaser, and the sale was afterwards completed by the administrator); Fulty v. Wimer, 34 Kan. 576, 9 Pac. 316; Wilson v. Sturgis, 71 Cal. 226, 16 Pac. 772; Ropes v. Rosenfeld's Sons, 145 Cal. 679, 79 Pac. 354; that the owner sold the property after the expiration of the contract period and that such sale was, to some extent, aided by the broker's efforts, does not give the broker a right to commissions; Donovan v. Weed, 182 N. Y. 43, 74 N. E. 563; Kelly v. Marshall, 172 Pa. 396, 33 Atl. 690.

Where the purchaser's refusal to complete the transaction is due to the fact that the seller's title is defective, the broker may nevertheless recover his commissions; Hammond v. Crawford, 66 Fed. 425, 14 C. C. A. 109; Phelps v. Prusch, 83 Cal. 626, 23 Pac. 1111; Davis v. Laurence, 52 Kan. 383, 34 Pac. 1051; Stange v. Gosse, 110 Mich. 153, 67 N. W. 1108; Yoder v. Randol, 16 Okl. 308, 83 Pac. 537, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 576; Gilder v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 504, 33 N. E. 599, 20 L. R. A. 398; Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566, 8 S. W. 391; Birmingham Land & Loan Co. v. Thompson, 86 Ala. 146, 5 South. 473; so he may recover where he has found a purchaser ready and willing to complete the contract, though the sale fails because the vendor has been mistaken in the identity of the lands he offered for sale; Arnold v. Bank, 126 Wis. 362, 105 N. W. 828, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 580.

Financial inability of the purchaser to perform his contract to purchase real estate does not deprive the broker of his commissions; Moore v. Irwin, 89 Ark. 289, 116 S. W. 662, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1168, 131 Am. St. Rep. 97; the broker's contract is to effect a bargain, and if he produces a responsible customer, ready to contract, his principal cannot defeat his right to commissions by capriciously refusing to make the contract. The proof of the responsibility of the intending purchaser is required, not because the broker contracts to guarantee responsibility, but to show that the failure to make the contract was not the fault of the broker; Alt v. Doscher, 186 N. Y. 566, 79 N. E. 1100; Leuschner v. Patrick (Tex.) 103 S. W. 664; Wray v. Carpenter, 16 Colo. 271, 27 Pac. 248, 25 Am. St. Rep. 265; Parker v. Estabrook, 68 N. H. 349, 44 Atl. 484; Stewart v. Fowler, 53 Kan. 537, 36 Pac. 1002; Jenkins v. Hollingsworth, 83 Ill. App. 139.

On the contrary, it is held in some cases that, to entitle a broker to his commissions, he must produce a party capable of becoming, and who ultimately becomes, the purchaser; that it is not sufficient that a contract of sale is executed between the parties and a portion of the price paid, where there is a forfeiture of the contract because of the financial inability of the purchaser; Riggs v. Turnbull, 105 Md. 135, 66 Atl. 13, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 824, 11 Ann. Cas. 783. Where a broker procures a purchaser of street railway bonds, who refuses to complete his contract because of their invalidity, he may not recover his commissions, if he knew such customer never intended to take and pay for them, but meant to negotiate their sale to other parties for a higher price; Berg v. R. Co. (Tex.) 49 S. W. 921.

Where he knows, or has reason to believe, that his purchaser is unable to complete his contract, the broker cannot recover commissions; Burnham v. Upton, 174 Mass. 408, 54 N. E. 873; Butler v. Baker, 17 R. I. 582, 23 Atl. 1019, 33 Am. St. Rep. 897; Boysen v. Frink, 80 Ark. 258, 96 S. W. 1056; Little v. Herzinger, 34 Utah, 337, 97 Pac. 639. Even though the broker did not have the exclusive agency, if he were in fact the procuring cause of the purchase, he is entitled to commissions, though a sale was made by the owner in ignorance of the broker's instrumentality in procuring the purchaser; Kiernan v. Bloom, 91 App. Div. 429, 86 N. Y. Supp. 899; Southwick v. Swavienski, 114 App. Div. 681, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1079; Craig v. Wead, 58 Neb. 782, 79 N. W. 718; Tyler v. Parr, 52 Mo. 249; Adams v. Decker, 34 Ill. App. 17; Graves v. Bains, 78 Tex. 92, 14 S. W. 256; but that under such circumstances no right to commissions is acquired is held in Quist v. Goodfellow, 99 Minn. 509, 110 N. W. 65, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 153, 9 Ann. Cas. 431; Anderson v. Smythe, 1 Colo. App. 253, 28 Pac. 478.

A broker is entitled to commission if up to a certain time he was the middleman, though the contract was afterwards completed without his instrumentality; 8 C. & P. 1; [1907] 2 Ir. R. K. B. 212.

The amount of such commissions is generally a percentage on the sums paid out or received. When there is a usage of trade at the particular place or in the particular business, the amount of commissions allowed to auctioneers, brokers, and factors is regulated by such usage, in the absence of special agreement; 10 B. & C. 438; Story, Ag. § 326; where there is no agreement and no custom, the jury may fix the commission on a quantum meruit; 9 C. & P. 620; Mangum v. Ball, 43 Miss. 288, 5 Am. Rep. 488.

The amount which executors, etc., are to receive is frequently fixed by statute, subject to modification in special cases by the proper tribunal; Van Buren v. Ins. Co., 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 671. In the absence of statutory provision, commissions cannot be allowed to executors for services in partitioning real estate, and allotting and transferring the same; Bruce v. Lorillard, 62 Hun 416, 16 N. Y. Supp. 900. Where the executor has failed to keep accounts and to make investments according to the directions in the will, and by his negligence has involved the estate in litigation, he will not be allowed commissions; Brewster v. Demarest, 48 N. J. Eq. 559, 23 Atl. 271. The entire commissions are not properly exigible before the administration is terminated; Succession of Sparrow, 40 La. Ann. 484, 4 South. 513. An executor is not entitled to commissions on his own indebtedness to the estate; In re Hoffer's Estate, 156 Pa. 473, 27 Atl. 11. In England, no commissions are allowed to executors or trustees; 1 Vern. Ch. 316; 4 Ves. Ch. 72, n.; 9 Cl. & F. 111; even where he carries on the testator's business by his direction; 6 Beav. 371. See the cases in all the states in 2 Perry, Trusts § 918, note.

In case the factor guarantees the payment of the debt, he is entitled to a larger compensation (called a del credere commission) than is ordinarily given for the transaction of similar business where no such guaranty is made; Paley, Ag. 88.

See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT; REAL ESTATE BROKERS.

COMMISSIONS FOR REGULATION OF CORPORATIONS. See PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

COMMITMENT. The warrant or order by which a court or magistrate directs a ministerial officer to take a person to prison.

The act of sending a person to prison by means of such a warrant or order. Skinner v. White, 9 N. H. 204.

A commitment should be in writing under the hand and seal of the magistrate, and should show his authority and the time and place of making it; Lough v. Millard, 2 R. I. 436; Somervell v. Hunt, 3 Harr. & McH. (Md.) 113; State v. Caswell, T. U. P. Charl. (Ga.) 280; In re Burford, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 448, 2 L. Ed. 495. It must be made in the name of the United States or of the commonwealth or people, as required by the constitution of the United States or of the several states.

It should be directed to the keeper of the prison, and not generally to carry the party to prison; 2 Stra. 934; 1 Ld. Raym. 424. It should describe the prisoner by his name and surname, or the name he gives as his.

It ought to state that the party has been charged on oath; People v. Miller, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 371; In re Burford, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 448, 2 L. Ed. 495; but see Com. v. Jackson, 2 Va. Cas. 504; State v. Killet, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 290; and should mention with convenient certainty the particular crime charged against the prisoner; In re Burford, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 448, 2 L. Ed. 495; 11 St. Tr. 304, 318; Day v. Day, 4 Md. 262; Young v. Com., 1 Rob. (Va.) 744; Ex parte Rohe, 5 Ark. 104; In re How- ard, 26 Vt. 205; but a defect in describing the offence is immaterial if it is sufficiently described in the order endorsed on the deposition; Ex parte Estrado, 88 Cal. 316, 26 Pac. 209. It should point out the place of imprisonment, and not merely direct that the party be taken to prison; 2 Stra. 934; 1 Ld. Raym. 424.

It may be for further examination, or final. If final, the command to the keeper of the prison should be to keep the prisoner "until he shall be discharged by due course of law," when the offence is not bailable; see Washburn v. Belknap, 3 Conn. 502; 29 E. L. & E. 134; when it is bailable, the gaoler should be directed to keep the prisoner in his "said custody for want of sureties, or until he shall be discharged by due course of law." When the commitment is not final, it is usual to commit the prisoner "for further hearing."

The word commit in a statute has a technical meaning, and a warrant which does not direct an officer to commit a party to prison but only to receive him into custody and safely keep him for further examination, is not a commitment; Gilbert v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cl. 218.

COMMITTEE. One or more members of a legislative body, to whom is specially referred some matter before that body, in order that they may examine into it and report to the body which delegated this authority to them.

The minority of a committee to which a corporate power has been delegated, cannot bind the majority, or do any valid act, in the absence of any special provision otherwise; Brown v. District of Columbia, 127 U. S. 579, 8 Sup. Ct. 1314, 32 L. Ed. 262.

A guardian appointed to take charge of the person or estate of one who has been found to be non compos mentis.

For committee of the person, the next of kin is usually selected; and, in case of the lunacy of a husband or wife, the one who is of sound mind is entitled, unless under very special circumstances, to be the committee of the other; Shelf. Lun. 137, 140. It is the duty of such a person to take care of the lunatic.

For committee of the estate, the heir at law is favored. Relations are preferred to strangers; but the latter may be appointed; Shelf. Lun. 144. It is the duty of such committee to administer the estate faithfully and to account for his administration. He cannot, in general, make contracts in relation to the estate of the lunatic, or bind it, without a special order of the court or authority that appointed him.

COMMITTING MAGISTRATE. See MAGISTRATE; JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

COMMITTITUR PIECE. In English Law. An instrument in writing, on paper or parchment, which charges a person already in prison, in execution at the suit of the person who arrested him.

COMMIXTION. In Civil Law. A term used to signify the act by which goods are mixed together.

The matters which are mixed are dry or liquid. In the commixtion of the former, the matter retains its substance and individuality; in the latter, the substance no longer remains distinct. The commixtion of liquid is called confusion (q. v.), and that of solids a mixture. Lec. Elém. du Dr. Rom. §§ 370, 371; Story, Bailm. § 40; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 506.

COMMODORE. In Scotch Law. A gratuitous loan for use. Erskine, Inst. b. 3, t. 1, § 20; 1 Bell, Com. 225. The implied contract of the borrower is to return the thing borrowed in the same condition as received.

Judge Story regrets that this term has not been adopted, as mandate has been from mandatum. Story, Bailm. § 221. Ayliffe, in his Pandects, has gone further and terms the bailor the commodant, and the bailee the commodatory, thus avoiding those circumlocutions which, in the common phraseology of our law, have become almost indispensable. Ayliffe, Pand. b. 4, t. 16, p. 517. Brown, in his Civil Law, vol. 1, 352, calls the property loaned "commodated property."

COMMODATO. In Spanish Law. A contract by which one person lends gratuitously to another some object not consumable, to be restored to him in kind at a given period.

COMMODATUM. A contract by which one of the parties binds himself to return to the other certain personal chattels which the latter delivers to him to be used by him without reward; loan for use. See BAILMENT.

COMMODITIES CLAUSE. The act of Congress, June 29, 1906, provides that it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to transport commodities (excepting timber and its manufactured products) manufactured, mined or produced by it, or under its authority, or which it may own in whole or in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary or intended for its use in its business; U. S. v. R. Co., 220 U. S. 257, 31 Sup. Ct. 387, 55 L. Ed. 458.

Stock ownership in a bona fide corporation, irrespective of the extent of such ownership, does not preclude the railroad company from transporting such commodities; U. S. v. Delaware & H. Co., 213 U. S. 366, 29 Sup. Ct. 527, 53 L. Ed. 836; unless it uses its power as a stockholder to obliterate all distinctions between the two corporations; U. S. v. R. Co., 220 U. S. 257, 31 Sup. Ct. 387, 55 L. Ed. 458.

See COMMERCE; COMMON CARRIERS; RAILROADS.

COMMODITY. Commodity is a broader term than merchandise, and may mean almost any description of article called movable or personal estate. Shuttleworth v. State, 35 Ala. 415; State v. Henke, 19 Mo. 225.

Labor is not a commodity; Rohlf v. Kase-meier, 140 Ia. 182, 118 N. W. 276, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1285.

COMMODORE. A grade in the United States navy, superior to a captain. Omitted from the active list. Act of March 3, 1899.

COMMON. An incorporeal hereditament, which consists in a profit which one man has in connection with one or more others in the land of another. Trustees of Western University of Pennsylvania v. Robinson, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 32; Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 647, 25 Am. Dec. 582; Livingston v. Ten Broeck, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 14, 8 Am. Dec. 287; Leyman v. Abeel, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 30; Thomas v. Inhabitants of Marshfield, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 364; 3 Kent 402.

Common of digging, or common in the soil, is the right to take for one's own use part of the soil or minerals in another's lands; the most usual subjects of the right are sand, gravel, stones and clay. It is of a very similar nature to common of estovers and of turbary. Elton, Com. 100; Black, L. Dict.

Common of estovers is the liberty of taking necessary wood, for the use of furniture of a house or farm, from another man's estate. This right is inseparably attached to the house or farm, and is not apportionable. If, therefore, a farm entitled to estovers be divided by the act of the party among several tenants, neither of them can take estovers, and the right is extinguished; 2 Bla. Com. 34; Plowd. 381; Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 639, 25 Am. Dec. 582. It is to be distinguished from the right to estovers which a tenant for life has in the estate which he occupies. See ESTOVERS.

Common of pasture is the right of feeding one's beast on another's land. It is either appendant, appurtenant, because of vicinage, or in gross.

Common of piscary is the liberty of fishing in another man's water. 2 Bla. Com. 34. See FISHERY.

Common of shack. The right of persons occupying lands, lying together in the same common field, to turn out their cattle after harvest, or where lands were fallow, to feed promiscuously in that field; Steph. Com., 623; 1 B. & Ald. 710.

Common of turbary is the liberty of digging turf in another man's ground. Common of turbary can only be appendant or appurtenant to a house, not to lands, because turves are to be spent in the house; 4 Co. 37; 3 Atk. 189; Noy 145; 7 East 127.

The taking seaweed from a beach is a commonable right in Rhode Island; Knowles v. Nichols, 2 Curt. C. C. 571, Fed. Cas. No. 7,897; Kenyon v. Nichols, 1 R. I. 106; Hall v. Lawrence, 2 R. I. 218, 57 Am. Dec. 715; In Virginia there are statutory provisions concerning the use of all unappropriated lands on the Chesapeake Bay, on the shore of the sea, or of any river or creek, and the bed of any river or creek in the eastern part of the commonwealth, ungranted and used as common; Va. Code, c. 62, § 1.

In most of the cities and towns in the United States, there are considerable tracts of land appropriated to public use. These commons were generally laid out with the cities or towns where they are found, either by the original proprietors or by the early inhabitants. See PARKS.

Where land thus appropriated has been accepted by the public, or where individuals have purchased lots adjoining land so appropriated, under the expectation excited by its proprietors that it should so remain, the proprietors cannot resume their exclusive ownership; Abbott v. Mills, 3 Vt. 521, 23 Am. Dec. 222; Emerson v. Wiley, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 310; Stiles v. Curtis, 4 Day (Conn.) 328; Proctor v. Ferebee, 36 N. C. 144, 36 Am. Dec. 34; Carr v. Wallace, 7 Watts (Pa.) 394. And see Mansfield v. Hawkes, 14 Mass. 440; Rogers v. Goodwin, 2 Mass. 475; White v. Smith, 37 Mich. 291; Emerson v. Thompson, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 475; Trustees of Western University v. Robinson, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 32; State v. Trask, 6 Vt. 355, 27 Am. Dec. 554.

COMMON APPENDANT. Common of pasture appendant is a right annexed to the possession of land, by which the owner thereof is entitled to feed his beasts on the wastes of the manor. It can only be claimed by prescription: so that it cannot be pleaded by way of custom; 1 Rolle, Abr. 396; 6 Coke 59. It is regularly annexed to arable land only, and can only be claimed for such cattle as are necessary to tillage, as horses and oxen to plough the land, and cows and sheep to manure it; 2 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 4, 5; Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 647, 25 Am. Dec. 582. Common appendant may by usage be limited to any certain number of cattle; but where there is no such usage, it is restrained to cattle levant and couchant upon the land to which it is appendant; Digb. R. P. 156; 2 M. & R. 205; 2 Dane, Abr. 611, § 12. It may be assigned; and by assigning the land to which it is appended, the right passes as a necessary incident to it. It may be apporportioned by granting over a parcel of the land to another, either for the whole or a part of the owner's estate; 4 Co. 36; 8 id. 78. It may be extinguished by a release of it to the owner of the land, by a severance of the right of common, by unity of possession of the land, or by the owner of the land, to which the right of common is annexed, becoming the owner of any part of the land subject to the right; Bell v. R. Co., 25 Pa. 161, 64 Am. Dec. 687; Livingston v. Ten Broeck, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 14, 8 Am. Dec. 287; Cro. Eliz. 592.

Common of estovers or of piscary, which may also be appendant, cannot be apporportioned; 8 Co. 78. But see Hall v. Lawrence, 2 R. I. 218, 57 Am. Dec. 715.

COMMON APPURTENANT. Common appurtenant differs from common appendant in the following particulars, viz.: it may be claimed by grant or prescription, whereas common appendant can only arise from prescription; it does not arise from any connection of tenure, nor is it confined to arable land, but may be claimed as annexed to any kind of land; it may be not only for beasts usually commonable, such as horses, oxen, and sheep, but likewise for goats, swine, etc.; it may be severed from the land to which it is appurtenant, it may be commenced by grant; and an interrupted usage for twenty years is evidence of a grant. In most other respects commons appendant and appurtenant agree; 2 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 5; 30 E. L. & Eq. 176; 15 East 108.

COMMON BECAUSE OF VICINAGE. The right which the inhabitants of two or more contiguous townships or vills have of intercommoning with each other. It ought to be claimed by prescription, and can only be used by cattle levant and couchant upon the lands to which the right is annexed; and cannot exist except between adjoining townships, where there is no intermediate land; Co. Litt. 122 a; 4 Co. 38 a; 7 id. 5; 10 Q. B. 581, 589, 604; Smith v. Floyd, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 523.

COMMON IN GROSS. A right of common which must be claimed by deed or prescription. It is a personal and not a predial right. It has no relation to land, but is annexed to a man's person, and may be for a certain or indefinite number of cattle. It cannot be aliened so as to give the entire right to several persons to be enjoyed by each in severalty. And where it comes to several persons by operation of law, as by descent, it is incapable of division among them, and must be enjoyed jointly. Common appurtenant for a limited number of cattle may be granted over, and by such grant becomes common in gross; Co. Litt. 122 a, 164 a; 5 Taunt. 244; Leyman v. Abceel, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 30; 2 Bla. Com. 34.

See Viner, Abr. Common; Bacon, Abr. Common; Com. Dig. Common; 2 Bla. Com. 34; 2 Washb. R. P.; Williams, Rights of Common (1880); 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 120.

COMMON APPEARANCE. Where the defendant in an action after due service of process on him has removed from the jurisdiction without having entered an appearance, or cannot be found, the plaintiff may file a common appearance and enter a rule on defendant to plead. This is by stat. 12 Geo. II., c. 29, and is the practice in Pennsylvania; 1 Troub. & Haly, Pr. 159; Bender v. Ryan, 9 W. N. C. (Pa.) 144; and in replevin under the act of 1901.

COMMON ASSURANCES. Deeds which make safe or assure to a man the title to his estate, whether they are deeds of conveyance or to charge or discharge.

COMMON BAIL. Fictitious sureties.

In the fictitious proceedings by which the King's Bench extended its jurisdiction of ordinary civil suits, if the defendant did not appear to the Bill of Middlesex or the Latitat, he was in contempt; this, too, was fictitious: the plaintiff was allowed to enter an appearance for the defendant, with John Doe and Richard Roe as sureties. This was "common bail." See BILL OF MIDDLESEX.

COMMON BAR. A plea to compel the plaintiff to assign the particular place where the trespass has been committed. Stepn. Pl. And. ed. 351. It is sometimes called a blank bar.

COMMON BARRATRY. See BARRATRY.

COMMON BENCH. The ancient name for the court of common pleas. See BENCH; BANCUS COMMUNIS.

COMMON CARRIERS. One whose business, occupation, or regular calling it is to carry chattels for all persons who may choose to employ and remunerate him. Dwight v. Brewster, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 50, 11 Am. Dec. 133; Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 353, 46 Am. Dec. 393; Schoul. Bailm. § 345; Naugatuck R. Co. v. Button Co., 24 Conn. 479.

The definition includes carriers by land and water. They are, on the one hand, stagecoach and omnibus proprietors, railroad and street railway companies; Spellman v. Transit Co., 36 Neb. 890, 55 N. W. 270, 20 L. R. A. 316, 38 Am. St. Rep. 753; truckmen, wagoners, and teamsters, carmen and porters; and express companies, whether such persons undertake to carry goods from one portion of the same town to another, or through the whole extent of the country, or even from one state or kingdom to another. And, on the other hand, this term includes the owners and masters of every kind of vessel or water-craft who set themselves before the public as the carriers of freight of any kind for all who choose to employ them, whether the extent of their navigation be from one continent to another or only in the coasting trade or in river or lake transportation, or whether employed in lading or unlading goods or in ferrying, with whatever mode of motive power they may adopt: Story, Bailm. § 494; 2 Kent 598, 599; Redf. Railw. § 124; 1 Salk. 249; Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 349, 46 Am. Dec. 393; Knox v. Rives, 14 Ala. 261, 48 Am. Dec. 97; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 9 Sup. Ct. 460, 32 L. Ed. 788; Robertson v. Kennedy, 2 Dana (Ky.) 431, 26 Am. Dec. 466; Dibble v. Brown, 12 Ga. 217, 56 Am. Dec. 460. An oil pipe line company is a common carrier;

General truckman are common carriers; Jackson Architectural Iron Works v. Hurlbut, 158 N. Y. 34, 52 N. E. 665, 70 Am. St. Rep. 432. Telegraph or telephone companies formerly were held not to be common carriers; Tyler v. Telegraph Co., 60 Ill. 421, 14 Am. Rep. 38; Leonard v. Telegraph Co., 41 N. Y. 544, 1 Am. Rep. 446; Passmore v. Telegraph Co., 78 Pa. 238; Breese v. Telegraph Co., 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 274; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Fontaine, 58 Ga. 433; but were subject to the rules governing common carriers and others engaged in like public employment; Delaware & A. Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Delaware, 50 Fed. 677, 2 C. C. A. 1; Primrose v. Telegraph Co., 154 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 1098, 38 L. Ed. 883.

The term "common carrier," as used in the Interstate Commerce Act and its amendments, includes express and sleeping car companies, telegraph, telephone and cable companies (both wire and wireless), and pipe lines. See TELEGRAPH COMPANIES; TELEPHONE COMPANIES.

The liability of the owner of a tug-boat to his tow is not that of a common carrier; Hays v. Millar, 77 Pa. 238, 18 Am. Rep. 445; Caton v. Rumney, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 387; The New Philadelphia, 1 Black (U. S.) 62, 17 L. Ed. 84; White v. The Mary Ann, 6 Cal. 462, 65 Am. Dec. 523.

And although the carrier receives the goods as a forwarder only, yet if his contract is to transport and to deliver them at a specified address, he is liable as a common carrier; Nashua Lock Co. v. R. Co., 48 N. H. 339, 2 Am. Rep. 242.

Common carriers are responsible for all loss or damage during transportation, from whatever cause, except the act of God or the public enemy; 2 Ld. Raym. 909, 918; 1 Salk. 18 and cases cited; 25 E. L. & Eq. 595; 2 Kent 597, 598; Turney v. Wilson, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 340, 27 Am. Dec. 515; Murphy v. Staton, 3 Munf. (Va.) 239; McArthur v. Sears, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 190; McCall v. Brock, 5 Strob. (S. C.) 119; Faulkner v. Wright, Rice (S. C.) 108; New Brunswick Steamboat Co. v. Tiers, 24 N. J. L. 697, 64 Am. Dec. 394; Harris v. Rand, 4 N. H. 259, 17 Am. Dec. 421; Christenson v. Express Co., 15 Minn. 279 (Gil. 208), 2 Am. Rep. 122; South & N. A. R. Co. v. Wood, 66 Ala. 167, 41 Am. Rep. 749; Inman & Co. v. R. Co., 159 Fed. 960. The act of God is held to extend only to such inevitable accidents as occur without the intervention of man's agency; McArthur v. Sears, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 190; which could not be avoided by the exercise of due skill and care; Hart v. Allen, 2 Watts (Pa.) 114; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Reeves, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 176, 19 L. Ed. 909; but where freight cars are stopped by a flood and the contents stolen, the loss is not due to inevitable accident, act of God.

or insurrection; Lang v. R. Co., 154 Pa. 342. See Act of God.

The carrier is not responsible for losses occurring from natural causes, such as frost, fermentation, evaporation, or natural decay of perishable articles, or the natural and necessary wear in the course of transportation, or the shipper's carelessness, provided the carrier exercises all reasonable care to have the loss or deterioration as little as practicable; Bull. N. P. 69; 2 Kent 299; Story, Bailm. § 492 a; Warden v. Greer, 6 Watts (Pa.) 424; Redf. Railw. § 141; Jordan v. Exp. Co., 86 Me. 225, 29 Atl. 980; The Guiding Star, 53 Fed. 936; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hynes, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 20, 21 S. W. 622; Goodman v. Nav. Co., 22 Or. 14, 28 Pac. 894. See Wabash St. L. & P. Ry. Co. v. Jaggerman, 115 Ill. 407, 4 N. E. 641; Fox v. R. Co., 148 Mass. 220, 19 N. E. 222, 1 L. R. A. 702. But a carrier which receives perishable goods for through transportation is bound to furnish cars adapted to preserve them during the journey, and cannot escape its duty by delegating to an independent contractor the task of furnishing and icing a refrigerator car; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Renfroe, 82 Ark. 143, 100 S. W. 889, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 317, 118 Am. St. Rep. 58; damp weather and delays incident to railway traffic are no excuse for failure properly to ice cars; C. C. Taft Co. v. Exp. Co., 133 Ia. 522, 110 N. W. 897.

In every contract for the carriage of goods by sea, unless otherwise expressly stipulated, there is a warranty on the part of the shipowner that the ship is seaworthy when she begins her voyage, and his undertaking is not discharged because the want of fitness is the result of latent defects; The Caledonia, 157 U. S. 124, 15 Sup. Ct. 537, 39 L. Ed. 644.

Carriers, both by land and water, when they undertake the general business of carrying every kind of goods, are bound to carry for all who offer; and if they refuse, without just excuse, they are liable to an action; Dwight v. Brewster, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 50, 11 Am. Dec. 133; Pomeroy v. Donaldson, 5 Mo. 36; Hale v. Navigation Co., 15 Conn. 539, 39 Am. Dec. 398; Jencks v. Coleman, 2 Summ. 221, Fed. Cas. No. 7,258; Sewall v. Allen, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 335; Citizens' Bank v. Steamboat Co., 2 Sto. 16, Fed. Cas. No. 2,730; L. R. 1 C. P. 423; Piedmont Mfg. Co. v. R. Co., 19 S. C. 353; New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Bank, 6 How. (U. S.) 344, 12 L. Ed. 465; 30 L. J. Q. B. 273.

A common carrier is bound to treat all shippers alike and may be compelled to do so by mandamus; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Flour Mills Co., 211 U. S. 612, 29 Sup. Ct. 214, 53 L. Ed. 352; State v. Ry. Co., 52 La. Ann. 1850, 28 South. 284; it cannot lawfully reject some goods and afterwards receive and transport others when at the time of refusal there is room for the rejected goods; Ocean S. S. Co. of Savannah v. Supply Co., 131 Ga. 831, 63 S. E. 577, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 867, 127 Am. St. Rep. 265, 15 Ann. Cas. 1044. It must furnish cars when requested by a shipper, and if unable to do so must advise the shipper of that fact; Di Giorgio Importing & Steamship Co. v. R. Co., 104 Md. 693, 65 Atl. 425, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 108; but at common law there is no duty to furnish sufficient cars for transportation beyond its own line of road; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 353, 120 S. W. 1028. The Hepburn Act (June 29, 1906) made it the duty of interstate carriers to furnish cars; this invalidated all state laws on the same subject; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Elevator Co., 226 U. S. 426, 33 Sup. Ct. 174, 57 L. Ed. 284, reversing Hardwick Farmers' Elevator Co. v. R. Co., 110 Minn. 25, 124 N. W. 819, 19 Ann. Cas. 1088; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Grocery Co., 227 U. S. 1, 33 Sup. Ct. 213, 55 L. Ed. —. But the business of a common carrier may be restricted within such limits as he may deem expedient, if an individual, or which may be prescribed in its grant of powers, if a corporation, and he is not bound to accept goods out of the line of his usual business. But should the carrier accept goods not within the line of his business, he assumes the liability of a common carrier as to the specific goods accepted; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Transp. Co., 23 Vt. 186, 56 Am. Dec. 68; Hays v. Mouille, 14 Pa. 48; Bennett v. Dutton, 10 N. H. 481; Powell v. Mills, 30 Miss. 231, 64 Am. Dec. 158; New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 357, 21 L. Ed. 627; Sewall v. Allen, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 335; Kimball v. R. Co., 26 Vt. 248, 62 Am. Dec. 567. The carrier may require freight to be paid in advance; but in an action for not carrying, it is only necessary to allege a readiness to pay freight; 8 M. & W. 372; Galena & C., U. R. Co. v. Rae, 18 Ill. 488, 68 Am. Dec. 574; Knox v. Rives, 14 Ala. 249, 48 Am. Dec. 97. It is not required to prove or allege a tender, if the carrier refuse to accept the goods for transportation. The carrier is entitled to a lien upon the goods for freight; 2 Ld. Raym. 752; and for advances made to other carriers; White v. Vann, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 70, 44 Am. Dec. 294; Bissel v. Price, 16 Ill. 408; Palmer v. Lorillard, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 356; Beggs v. Martin, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 243. The consignor is prima facie liable for freight; but the consignee may be liable when the consignor is his agent, or when the title is in him and he accepts the goods; 3 Bingh. 383; Merian v. Funck, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 110; New York & Harve Steam Nav. Co. v. Young, 3 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 187. A shipper must pay the combined rates over connecting railroads existing at the time of the shipment, and he cannot take advantage of a reduction, while the goods are in transit over the first road, if there are no joint through rates; Payne

v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 12 Int. St. Com. Rep. 190.

Common carriers may qualify their common-law responsibility by special contract; 4 Coke 83; 1 Ventr. 238; Story, Bailm. § 549; New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 357, 21 L. Ed. 627; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 16 Wall. (U. S.) 318, 21 L. Ed. 297; Empire Transp. Co. v. Oil Co., 63 Pa. 14, 3 Am. Rep. 515; Indianapolis, D. & W. R. Co. v. Forsythe, 4 Ind. App. 326, 29 N. E. 1138. A carrier cannot exact as a condition precedent that a shipper must sign a contract in writing limiting the common law liability; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dill, 48 Kan. 210, 29 Pac. 148; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Carter, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 677, 29 S. W. 565. A contract to qualify the common-law liability may be shown by proving a notice, brought home to and assented to by the owner of the goods or his authorized agent, wherein the carrier stipulates for a qualified liability; 8 M. & W. 243; New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Bank, 6 How. (U. S.) 344, 12 L. Ed. 465; Dorr v. Nav. Co., 11 N. Y. 491, 62 Am. Dec. 125; Laing v. Colder, 8 Pa. 479, 49 Am. Dec. 533; Swindler v. Hilliard, 2 Rich. (S. C.) 286, 45 Am. Dec. 732; Reno v. Hogan, 12 B. Monr. (Ky.) 63, 54 Am. Dec. 513; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Transp. Co., 23 Vt. 186, 56 Am. Dec. 68; Barney v. Prentiss, 4 Har. & J. (Md.) 317, 7 Am. Dec. 670. A carrier may for a consideration limit its common law liability; Simmons Hardware Co. v. Ry. Co., 140 Mo. App. 130, 120 S. W. 663; a mere agreement to carry is not a sufficient consideration; Burgher v. R. Co., 139 Mo. App. 62, 120 S. W. 673; the limitation must be made by special contract; Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Hall, 124 Ga. 322, 52 S. E. 679, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898, 110 Am. St. Rep. 170, 4 Ann. Cas. 128; and no contract will be implied from any condition in a bill of lading unless clearly brought to the shipper's attention at the time of shipment; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Doyle, 142 Fed. 669, 74 C. C. A. 245. In the case of passage tickets for an ocean voyage a limitation with regard to baggage liability covers a loss occasioned by negligence although not expressly provided for; Tewes v. S. S. Co., 186 N. Y. 151, 78 N. E. 864, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 199, 9 Ann. Cas. 909. A contract by a carrier limiting his liability for negligence is governed by the lex loci contractus; Fairchild v. R. Co., 148 Pa. 527, 24 Atl. 79.

But the carrier cannot contract against his own negligence or the negligence of his employes and agents; Muser v. Exp. Co., 1 Fed. 382; Welch v. R. Co., 41 Conn. 333; New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 357, 21 L. Ed. 627; Adams Exp. Co. v. Sharpless, 77 Pa. 516; Inman v. R. Co., 129 U. S. 128, 9 Sup. Ct. 249, 32 L. Ed. 612; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 9 Sup. Ct. 469, 32 L. Ed. 788; The Edwin I. Morrison, 153 U. S. 199, 14 Sup. Ct. 823, 38 L. Ed. 688; L. R. 2 App. Cas. 792; South & N. A. R. Co. v. Henlein, 56 Ala. 368; Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co. v. Theilbar, 86 Ill. 71; Wright v. Gaff, 6 Ind. 416; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Selby, 47 Ind. 471, 17 Am. Rep. 719; Hoadley v. Transp. Co., 115 Mass. 304, 15 Am. Rep. 106; Levering v. Ins. Co., 42 Mo. 88, 97 Am. Dec. 320. In the absence of legislation by congress a state may impose upon common carriers even in interstate business a liability for their negligence, a contract to the contrary notwithstanding; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hughes, 191 U. S. 477, 24 Sup. Ct. 132, 48 L. Ed. 268; usually a common carrier cannot limit its liability for loss due to its negligence; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Hall, 124 Ga. 322, 52 S. E. 679, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898, 110 Am. St. Rep. 170, 4 Ann. Cas. 128; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Selby, 47 Ind. 471, 17 Am. Rep. 719; Russell v. R. Co., 157 Ind. 305, 61 N. E. 678, 55 L. R. A. 253, 87 Am. St. Rep. 214; Baltimore & O. S. W. Ry. Co. v. Voigt, 176 U. S. 498, 20 Sup. Ct. 385, 44 L. Ed. 560; Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Mahoney, 148 Ind. 196, 46 N. E. 917, 47 N. E. 464, 40 L. R. A. 101, 62 Am. St. Rep. 503; even though a reduced rate based on a limited valuation of the property has been approved by the state commission; Everett v. R. Co., 138 N. C. 68, 50 S. E. 557, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 985; this rule does not apply outside of the performance of its duties as a common carrier; Santa Fé, P. & P. Ry. Co. v. Const. Co., 228 U. S. 177, 33 Sup. Ct. 474, 57 L. Ed. —; where a gratuitous pass containing a condition absolving the company from negligence is issued by a carrier by sea, there can be no recovery for the carrier's negligence; [1900] P. D. 161. The reasons for the rule forbidding a contract against its own negligence fail as to persons riding on pass; Griswold v. R. Co., 53 Conn. 371, 4 Atl. 261, 55 Am. Rep. 115; Rogers v. Steamboat Co., 86 Me. 261, 29 Atl. 1069, 25 L. R. A. 491; Quimby v. R. Co., 150 Mass. 365, 23 N. E. 205, 5 L. R. A. 846; Kinney v. R. Co., 34 N. J. L. 513, 3 Am. Rep. 265; Wells v. R. Co., 24 N. Y. 181; Muldoon v. R. Co., 7 Wash. 528, 35 Pac. 422, 22 L. R. A. 794, 38 Am. St. Rep. 901. The carrier is liable for injuries to the shipper's servants resulting from defects in a car furnished by it; Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Pritchard, 168 Ind. 398, 79 N. E. 508, 81 N. E. 78, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 857; and likewise if the defects injure the property received by it, although the car is in fact the property of another corporation; Ladd v. R. Co., 193 Mass. 359, 79 N. E. 742, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 874, 9 Ann. Cas. 988.

Railroad companies, steamboats, and all other carriers who allow express companies to carry parcels and packages on their cars, or boats, or other vehicles, are liable as common carriers to the owners of goods for all loss or damage which occurs, without regard to the contract between them and such express carriers; New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Bank, 6 How. (U. S.) 344, 12 L. Ed. 465; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Transp. Co., 23 Vt. 186, 56 Am. Rep. 68; American Exp. Co. v. Ogles, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 407, 81 S. W. 1023.

A carrier is not liable for the loss of a mail package through the negligence of its employé, being in that employment not a carrier, but a public agent of the United States; Bankers' Mutual Casualty Co. v. Ry. Co., 117 Fed. 434, 54 C. C. A. 608, 65 L. R. A. 397. But where the carrier transports cars of an express company under a special contract, a clause exempting the carrier from liability is valid; Baltimore & O. S. Ry. Co. v. Voigt, 176 U. S. 498, 20 Sup. Ct. 385, 44 L. Ed. 560.

Railways, steamboats, packets, and other common carriers of passengers, although not liable for injuries to their passengers without their fault, are nevertheless responsible for the baggage of such passengers intrusted to their care as common carriers of goods; and such responsibility continues for a reasonable time after the goods have been placed in the warehouse or depot of the carrier, at the place of destination, for delivery to the passenger or his order; 2 B. & P. 416; Powell v. Myers, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 591; Bennett v. Dutton, 10 N. H. 481; Dill v. R. Co., 7 Rich. (S. C.) 158, 62 Am. Dec. 407. See Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 81 Tex. 479, 17 S. W. 133.

Where baggage was stored with a carrier as warehouseman after its arrival by railroad, the burden is on the owner to show negligence; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Hughes, 94 Miss. 242, 47 South. 662, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 975. If a carrier maintains a check room and limits its liability for articles checked, such limitation is good, but the carrier is liable as an insurer for the limited amount; Terry v. Southern Ry., 81 S. C. 279, 62 S. E. 249, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 295.

See BAGGAGE.

The responsibility of common carriers begins upon the delivery of the goods for immediate transportation. A delivery at the usual place of receiving freight, or to the employés of the company in the usual course of business, is sufficient; Merriam v. R. Co., 20 Conn. 354, 52 Am. Dec. 344; 2 M. & S. 172; Gregory v. Ry. Co., 46 Mo. App. 574; Railway Co. v. Neel, 56 Ark. 279, 19 S. W. 963; Rogers v. Wheeler, 52 N. Y. 262; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Smyser & Co., 38 Ill. 354, 87 Am. Dec. 301; but where carriers have a warehouse at which they receive goods for transportation, and goods are delivered there not to be forwarded until some event occur, the carriers are, in the meantime, only responsible as depositaries; Moses v. R. R., 24 N. H. 71, 55 Am. Dec. 222; and where goods are received as wharfingers, or warehousemen, or forwarders, and not as carriers, liability will be incurred only for ordinary negligence; Platt v. Hibbard, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 497. A carrier may make reasonable regulations governing the manner and place in which it will receive articles which it professes to carry, and these regulations may be changed on reasonable notice to the public; Robinson v. R. Co., 129 Fed. 753, 64 C. C. A. 281; proof of delivery of property to the carrier in sound condition and of its re-delivery at the end of the route in damaged condition is sufficient to sustain a recovery; Duncan v. R. Co., 17 N. D. 610, 118 N. W. 826, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 952. Where goods are injured because of insecure packing or boxing, the carrier is not liable; Goodman v. O. R. & N. Co., 22 Or. 14, 28 Pac. 894; but where it does not appear that they were received as in bad order, or that they were so in fact, the presumption is that they were in good order; Henry v. Banking Co., 89 Ga. 815, 15 S. E. 757. Where there was less than a carload of goods, and there was no agreement on the part of the carrier to transport them in a ventilated car, although it was requested by the carrier that they should be so shipped, it was held that the carrier was not liable for the loss of perishable goods; Davenport Co. v. R. Co., 173 Pa. 398, 34 Atl. 59.

The responsibility of the carrier terminates after the arrival of the goods at their destination and a reasonable time has elapsed for the owner to receive them in business hours. After that, the carrier may put them in a warehouse, and is only responsible for ordinary care; Thomas v. R. Corp., 10 Metc. (Mass.) 472, 43 Am. Dec. 444; Smith v. Railroad, 27 N. H. 86, 59 Am. Dec. 364; 2 M. & S. 172. Where goods are delivered to the consignee in violation of instructions not to deliver without a bill of lading, the company is liable to the shipper for loss thereby sustained; Foggan v. R. Co., 61 Hun 623, 16 N. Y. Supp. 25. The delivery of goods from a ship must be according to the custom of the port, and such delivery will discharge the carrier of his responsibility; Constable v. S. S. Co., 154 U. S. 51, 14 Sup. Ct. 1062, 38 L. Ed. 903.

Notice to the consignee of the arrival of goods and a reasonable time to remove them are necessary to reduce the liability of the carrier to that of a warehouseman; Roythress v. R. Co., 148 N. C. 391, 62 S. E. 515, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 427; and where goods are stolen after notice to the consignee, but before a reasonable time for removal has elapsed, the carrier is liable; Burr v. Express Co., 71 N. J. L. 263, 58 Atl. 609. The test of reasonable time for the removal of goods which changes a carrier to a warehouseman is whether the consignee exercised reasonable diligence to ascertain when the goods had arrived or would arrive, and to remove them after he had received, or, with reasonable care, would have received notice;

Lewis v. R. Co., 135 Ky. 361, 122 S. W. 184, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 938, 21 Ann. Cas. 527. Three and a half months was held more than reasonable time; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Mill Co., 109 Va. 184, 63 S. E. 415; eighteen days after notice was mailed; Southern R. Co. v. Machine Co., 165 Ala. 436, 51 South. 779. Where baggage was left over night, the carrier's liability, if any, for its loss, was that of a warehouseman; Campbell v. R. Co., 78 Neb. 479, 111 N. W. 126. One and a half business days is sufficient to terminate the liability of the carrier as such; United Fruit Co. v. Transportation Co., 104 Md. 567, 65 Atl. 415, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 240, 10 Ann. Cas. 437; a carrier whose liability has become that of a warehouseman is liable as a bailee for hire unless it notifies the owner that it will no longer hold the property as warehouseman; Brunson & Boatwright v. R. Co., 76 S. C. 9, 56 S. E. 538, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 577.

On unconditional consignments the carrier must treat the consignee as the absolute owner until he receives notice to the contrary; Pratt v. Express Co., 13 Idaho, 373, 90 Pac. 341, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 499, 121 Am. St. Rep. 268; where the consignee takes the goods from the carrier's possession without its knowledge or consent, the carrier is not justified for its failure to comply with an order of the shipper diverting the consignment; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Schriever, 72 Kan. 550, 84 Pac. 119, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1056; but there is no liability where the carrier permits inspection of the goods at the point of destination in consequence of which the consignor, who was also the consignee, was prevented from making a sale thereof; Dudley v. Ry. Co., 58 W. Va. 604, 52 S. E. 718, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135, 112 Am. St. Rep. 1027.

Where goods are so marked as to pass over successive lines of railways, or other transportation having no partnership connection in the business of carrying, the successive carriers are only liable for damage or loss occurring during the time the goods are in their possession for transportation; Nashua Lock Co. v. R. Co., 48 N. H. 339, 2 Am. Rep. 242; Ogdensburg & L. C. R. Co. v. Pratt, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 129, 22 L. Ed. 827; Van Santvoord v. St. John, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 158; *Hood v. R. A carrier may stipulate that it shall be released from liability after goods have left its road; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Adams, 78 Tex. 372, 14 S. W. 666, 22 Am. St. Rep. 56; McCarn v. Ry. Co., 84 Tex. 352, 19 S. W. 547, 16 L. R. A. 39, 31 Am. St. Rep. 51; Coles v. R. Co., 41 Ill. App. 607; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Clarke, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 547, 24 S. W. 355. The English courts hold the first carrier, who accepts goods marked for a place beyond his route, responsible for the entire route, unless he stipulates expressly for the extent of his own route only; 8 M. & W. 421; 3 E. L. & Eq. 497; 18 id. 553, 557; 7 H. L. 194.

Where one of the carriers has contracted clearly and unequivocally to deliver goods at their destination, i. e., to carry them over the whole route, his liability will continue until final delivery; *Converse v. At common law a carrier, unless there is a special contract is only bound to carry over its own line and deliver to a connecting carrier; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. State, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 353, 120 S. W. 1028. If it accepts goods marked for a point beyond its own line, it is bound to carry and deliver them at that place; Wabash R. Co. v. Thomas, 222 Ill. 337, 78 N. E. 777, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 104; and when it has so contracted, all connecting lines are its agents, for whose default it is responsible; Schwartz v. R. Co., 155 Cal. 742, 103 Pac. 196; and if loss occurs through the negligence of the connecting carrier or while in its possession the original carrier is liable; Whitnack v. R. Co., 82 Neb. 464, 118 N. W. 67, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1011, 130 Am. St. Rep. 692; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Randle, 85 Ark. 127, 107 S. W. 669; the interchange of traffic between two connecting carriers is, in the absence of statutory provision, a matter of contract, and the courts have no power to compel such interchange of traffic; Central Stock Yards Co. v. R. Co., 118 Fed. 113, 55 C. C. A. 63, 63 L. R. A. 213, affirmed in Central Stock Yards Co. v. R. Co., 192 U. S. 568, 24 Sup. Ct. 339, 48 L. Ed. 565; when goods arrive at the end of the original carrier's line, it is the duty of such carrier to deliver them to the succeeding carrier or notify it of their arrival; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Reiss, 183 U. S. 621, 22 Sup. Ct. 252, 46 L. Ed. 358; in the absence of such notice, the original carrier is not relieved of his liability as insurer; id. If the original carrier still continues to have control over the goods and has a choice as between connecting carriers, his liability is not terminated until actual delivery of the goods to one of the connecting carriers; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Callender, 183 U. S. 632, 22 Sup. Ct. 257, 46 L. Ed. 362. The original carrier's duty is not discharged by tendering the goods in an unfit condition whether such condition arises from an injury received in its possession or from some unusual cause; Buston v. R. Co., 116 Fed. 235, affirmed in 119 Fed. 808, 56 C. C. A. 320; the receipt of perishable goods involves the duty of the carrier to provide a refrigerator car and to ice it properly, not only on its own line, but on the connecting carrier's route; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Produce Co., 111 Md. 356, 73 Atl. 571. If the connecting carrier negligently detains goods at the connecting point until they are overtaken by a flood, the original carrier is still liable for the loss; Wabash R. Co. v. Sharpe, 76 Neb. 424, 107 N. W. 758, 124 Am. St. Rep. 823; a shipper may demand delivery of the goods at the connecting point of two routes by paying the charges of the first carrier; Wente v. R. Co., 79 Neb. 179, 115 N. W. 859, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 756.

The Carmack Amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act makes a carrier liable for loss beyond its own lines when goods are received for interstate transportation. It is a valid exercise of the commerce power; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Mills, 219 U. S. 186, 31 Sup. Ct. 164, 55 L. Ed. 167, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 7; but it was not decided there whether a carrier can be compelled to accept goods for transportation beyond its own lines.

The agents of railway and steamboat companies, will bind their principals to the full extent of the business intrusted to their control, whether they follow their instructions or not; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. (U. S.) 468, 483, 14 L. Ed. 502. See Jennings v. R. Co., 127 N. Y. 438, 28 N. E. 394. Nor will it excuse the company because the servant or agent acted wilfully in disregard of his instructions; Weed v. R. Co., 5 Duer (N. Y.) 193; Redf. Railw. § 137, and cases cited in notes.

A common carrier has power to make reasonable regulations governing the manner and place in which it will receive goods for transportation and also may change such regulations upon reasonable notice to the public; Robinson v. R. Co., 129 Fed. 753, 64 C. C. A. 281; Platt v. Lecocq, 158 Fed. 723, 85 C. C. A. 621, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 558. It may require reasonable assurance of the character of the goods, and also provide for a reasonable inspection; Adams Express Co. v. Com., 129 Ky. 420, 112 S. W. 577, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1182.

A stipulation in a bill of lading limiting the time within which claims for damage may be presented is valid, provided the time fixed is reasonable; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. v. H. M. Long & Son, 163 Ala. 165, 50 South. 130; but a stipulation of ten days is not reasonable with regard to injuries to live stock; Wabash R. Co. v. Thomas, 222 Ill. 337, 78 N. E. 777, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 104.

Transportation of animals is common carriage; Swiney v. Exp. Co., 144 Ia. 342, 115 N. W. 212; and the carrier is bound to care for and feed them in transit; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 76 Ill. 393; Peck v. R. Co., 138 Ia. 187, 115 N. W. 1113, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 883, 128 Am. St. Rep. 185. A common carrier is absolutely liable for the destruction by fire of animals while in its possession; Stiles, Gaddie & Stiles v. R. Co., 129 Ky. 175; a carrier of live stock is liable only for the negligence of its servants, but not as insurer; Cash v. Wabash R. Co., 81 Mo. App. 109; Rick v. Wells Fargo Co., 39 Utah, 130, 115 Pac. 991; he is not liable for loss due to the natural propensities and habits of the stock; Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Hunter & Co., 47 Tex. Civ. App. 190, 104 S. W. 1075; Summerlin v. Ry., 56 Fla. 687, 47 South. 557, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 191, 131 Am. St. Rep. 164; where trained bears while in transit injure a person, the carrier is not liable; Molloy v. Starin, 191 N. Y. 21, 83 N. E. 588, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 445, 14 Ann. Cas. 57. It is the duty of the carrier to provide a safe pen for unloading stock at a junction point; El Paso & N. E. R. Co. v. Lumbley, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 418, 120 S. W. 1050; and they must be kept in a reasonably safe condition; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Beets, 75 Kan. 295, 89 Pac. 683, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 571. If the carrier accept live stock for transportation, he is bound to exercise at least ordinary care; German v. R. Co., 38 Ia. 127; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Ellison, 70 Tex. 491, 7 S. The burden of proof is on the carrier to show that loss or injury to live stock resulted from an excepted cause, when shipped under special contract, containing exemptions from liability; Johnson v. R. Co., 69 Miss. 191, 11 South. 104, 30 Am. St. Rep. 534.

Under the act of congress of June 29, 1906, common carriers by land and water carrying live stock in interstate commerce are forbidden to confine them more than 28 consecutive hours "without unloading the same in a humane manner into properly equipped pens for rest, water and feeding, for a period of at least 5 consecutive hours, unless prevented by storm or by other accidental or unavoidable causes which cannot be anticipated or avoided by the exercise of due diligence and foresight," except that sheep need not be unloaded in the night time, and it is provided that upon the written request of the owner, etc., of a particular shipment, separate from any bill of lading or other railroad form, the time of confinement may be extended to 36 hours.

Animals so unloaded shall be properly fed and watered either by the owner or custodian, or, in case of his default, by the carrier at the reasonable expense of the owner or custodian, for which the carrier shall have a lien upon the animals, but the owner or shipper shall have the right to furnish food if he so desires. Section 3 provides that where animals are carried in such way that they have proper food, water, space and opportunity to rest, they need not be unloaded.

A railroad company which delivers the cars to a connecting carrier within the 28 hours is relieved from responsibility; U. S. v. Southern Pac. Co., 157 Fed. 459; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. U. S., 178 Fed. 15, 101 C. C. A. 143.

That the company had made proper rules requiring employees to comply with the act is no defense; U. S. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 173 Fed. 764, 98 C. C. A. 110; nor is pressure of business; U. S. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 169 Fed. 65, 94 C. C. A. 433. It is no defense that the violation was by reason of the oversight of a train dispatcher, contrary to the rules and orders; Montana Cent. Ry. Co. v. U. S., 164 Fed. 400, 90 C. C. A. 388.

An accidental or unavoidable cause, as mentioned in the act, which cannot be anticipated or avoided, etc., is one which cannot be avoided by that degree of care which the law requires of every one under the circumstances of the particular case; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. U. S., 178 Fed. 15, 101 C. C. A. 143.

Failure to provide unloading stations, congested traffic, conditions reasonably to be anticipated from past experience, and breakdowns resulting from negligent operation and omission to furnish properly equipped and inspected cars, etc., are not accidental or unavoidable causes which will relieve the carrier; U. S. v. R. Co., 166 Fed. 160. A company must know how long a connecting line has kept animals without food or water and must learn such fact at its peril; U. S. v. Stockyards Co., 181 Fed. 625. The question of compliance with the act of congress of the written request for the extension of the period of confinement is for the court; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. U. S., 178 Fed. 15, 101 C. C. A. 143.

The act is not criminal; it does not require proof of malevolent purpose, but only that animals were knowingly and intentionally confined beyond the prescribed period; U. S. v. Stockyards Co., 162 Fed. 556.

There is a separate offense as to each lot of cattle shipped simultaneously as soon as the prescribed time expires as to each lot, regardless of the number of shippers, trains or cars. The aggregate sum of the possible penalties is the amount in dispute for jurisdictional purposes; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. U. S., 220 U. S. 94, 31 Sup. Ct. 368, 55 L. Ed. 384.

The carrier has an insurable interest in the goods, both in regard to fire and marine disasters, measured by the extent of his liability for loss or damage; Chase v. Ins. Co., 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 595.

The carrier is not bound, unless he so stipulate, to deliver goods by a particular time, or to do more than to deliver in a reasonable time under all the circumstances attending the transportation; 5 M. & G. 551; Broadwell v. Butler, 6 McLean 296, Fed. Cas. No. 1,910; Wibert v. R. Co., 12 N. Y. 245. See 15 W. R. 792; L. R. 9 C. P. 325; McLaren v. R. Co., 23 Wis. 138; Illinois Central R. Co. v. Waters, 41 Ill. 73; Dawson v. R. Co., 79 Mo. 296. The implied agreement of a common carrier is to deliver at the destination within a reasonable time; Chicago & Alton R. Co. v. Kirby, 225 U. S. 155, 32 Sup. Ct. 648, 56 L. Ed. 1033; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Implement Co., 73 Kan. 295, 85 Pac. 408, 87 Pac. 80, 6 J. R. A. (N. S.) 1058, 117 Am. St. Rep. 468, 9 Ann. Cas. 790; interference by strikers excuses delay; Sterling v. R. Co., 38 Tex. Civ. App. 451, 86 S. W. 655; but where the carrier's facilities were overtaxed by an unusual press of business, which it knew of at the time of the shipment, the consequent delay in delivery is not excused; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Blum Co., 88 Miss. 180, 40 South. 748, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 432; for failure to deliver promptly theatrical scenery and properties, the carrier is liable for the value of the ordinary earnings, less the expenses which the owner has saved by inability to exhibit; Weston v. R. Co., 190 Mass. 298, 76 N. E. 1050, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 569, 112 Am. St. Rep. 330, 5 Ann. Cas. 825. A carrier is liable for delay if it knows and does not disclose the probability of it; Thomas v. R. Co., 63 Fed. 200; at least as held by some courts, when the shipper does not know the circumstances; Nelson v. R. Co., 28 Mont. 297, 72 Pac. 642. What is a reasonable time is to be decided by the jury; Nettles v. R. Co., 7 Rich. (S. C.) 190, 62 Am. Dec. 409; 32 L. J. Q. B. 292.

But if the carrier contract specially to deliver in a prescribed time, he must perform his contract, or suffer the damages sustained by his failure; Harmony v. Birmingham, 12 N. Y. 99, 62 Am. Dec. 142; 2 B. & P. 416; Knowles v. Dabney, 105 Mass. 437; Ball v. R. Co., 83 Mo. 574.

He is liable, upon general principles, where the goods are not delivered through his default, to the extent of their market value at the place of their destination; Hand v. Baynes, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 204, 33 Am. Dec. 54; Grieff v. Switzer, 11 La. Ann. 324; 2 B. & Ad. 932; Newell v. Smith, 49 Vt. 255; Rankin v. R. R., 55 Mo. 167. See, also, Gillingham v. Dempsey, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 183; Ringgold v. Haven, 1 Cal. 108.

Receipt of goods and failure to deliver raises a presumption against the carrier; Everett v. R. Co., 138 N. C. 68, 50 S. E. 557, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 985; but the carrier is not liable for failure to deliver a carload of fruit where municipal authorities forbid the delivery on account of quarantine; Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Tirelli, 93 Miss. 797, 48 South. 962, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 731, 136 Am. St. Rep. 559, 17 Ann. Cas. 879.

If the goods are only damaged, or not delivered in time, the owner is bound to receive them. He will be entitled to damages, but cannot repudiate the goods and recover from the carrier as for a total loss; Shaw v. R. Co., 5 Rich. (S. C.) 462, 57 Am. Dec. 768; Scovill v. Griffith, 12 N. Y. 509; Hackett v. R. R., 35 N. H. 390; Robertson v. Steamship Co., 60 N. Y. Super. Ct. 132; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Saulsbury, 126 Ky. 179, 103 S. W. 254, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 431.

Where a carrier is actually deceived as to the contents of a package containing intoxicating liquors, which it transports into local option territory, it cannot be punished under a statute forbidding such transportation; Adams Exp. Co. v. Com., 129 Ky. 420, 112 S. W. 577, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1182; and to protect itself, it may require reasonable assurance that the goods are not contraband, and provide for a reasonable inspection when practicable; id.

If a shipper is guilty of fraud in misrepresenting the nature or value of the article, he forfeits his right to indemnity, because he has attempted to deprive the carrier of the right to be compensated in proportion to the value of the article and the risk assumed, and has tended to lessen the vigilance of the carrier; Hart v. R. Co., 112 U. S. 331, 5 Sup. Ct. 151, 28 L. Ed. 717; in such case he cannot hold the carrier for more than the apparent value, or the value stated by him; id.; Georgia S. & F. Ry. Co. v.

Johnson, King & Co., 121 Ga. 231, 48 S. E. 807; Graves v. R. Co., 137 Mass. 33, 50 Am. Rep. 282; Rowan v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 80 App. Div. 31, 80 N. Y. Supp. 226. This rule has been applied to one shipping a valuable horse as a horse of ordinary value at a rate applicable to the latter; Duntley v. R. Co., 66 N. H. 263, 20 Atl. 327, 9 L. R. A. 449, 49 Am. St. Rep. 610; one concealing valuable memorandum books in clothing shipped as "worn clothing;" Savannah, F. & W. Ry. Co. v. Collins, 77 Ga. 376, 3 S. E. 416, 4 Am. St. Rep. 87; one delivering a package of the value of $234,000, and representing its value as $1,000, paying for the latter valuation; U. S. Exp. Co. v. Koerner, 65 Minn. 540, 68 N. W. 181, 33 L. R. A. 600; to one shipping jewelry in a package as household goods; Charleston & S. Ry. Co. v. Moore, 80 Ga. 522, 5 S. E. 769. It has been held that in such case the carrier is relieved from all liability; Shackt v. R. Co., 911 Tenn. 658, 30 S. W. 742, 28 L. R. A. 176; Southern Exp. Co. v. Wood, 98 Ga. 268, 25 S. E. 436. On the other hand, it has been held that, where fraud was practiced in order to get a lower rate, the carrier would not be bound by the rate given, but that in such case the carrier's liability was not lessened; Lucas v. Ry. Co., 112 Ia. 594, 84 N. W. 673; Rice v. R. Co., 3 Mo. App. 27. A mere failure of the shipper, unasked, to state the value, is not, as a matter of law, a fraud upon the carrier which defeats all right of recovery; New York, C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Fraloff, 100 U. S. 24, 25 L. Ed. 531; but other cases have imposed upon the shipper the duty of disclosing to the carrier that the article is valuable; White v. Cable Co., 25 App. D. C. 364; Gilman v. Telegraph Co., 48 Misc. 372, 95 N. Y. Supp. 564. Where the value, when not stated, was, by the company's regulation, placed at $50, this limit was enforced; Magnin v. Dinsmore, 70 N. Y. 410, 26 Am. Rep. 608. See a full note in 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 745. But in Pennsylvania contracts limiting liability for the full value are held void; Wright v. Exp. Co., 230 Pa. 635, 79 Atl. 760, where the value was greatly in excess of the $50 limit and the bill of lading was stamped "value asked and not given."

Where an express company fixes its charges in proportion to the value of the property shipped and the shipper has knowledge of same, in case of loss, the shipper is limited to the value stated, and this is not a violation of the act of June 29, 1906, which states that a carrier in an interstate shipment cannot limit his liability; Adams Express Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 33 Sup. Ct. 148, 57 L. Ed. 314.

COMMON CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS.

Common carriers of passengers are such as undertake for hire to carry all persons indifferently who may apply for passage, so long as there is room, and there is no legal excuse for refusing. Thomps. Carriers of Passengers 26, n. § 1; Vinton v. R. Co., 11 Allen (Mass.) 304, 87 Am. Dec. 714; Hollister v. Nowlen, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 239, 32 Am. Dec. 455; Bennett v. Dutton, 10 N. H. 486; Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Yarwood, 15 Ill. 472; Jencks v. Coleman, 2 Sumn. 221, Fed. Cas. No. 7,258; 3 B. & B. 54.

A company owning parlor and sleeping cars, who enter into no contract of carriage with the passenger, but only give him superior accommodations, was formerly held not a common carrier; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Smith, 73 Ill. 360, 24 Am. Rep. 258; Duval v. Palace Car Co., 62 Fed. 265, 10 C. C. A. 331, 33 L. R. A. 715. See PARLOR CARS; SLEEPING CARS. A street railway company is a common carrier of passengers and liable as such on common-law principles; Spellman v. Transit Co., 36 Neb. 890, 55 N. W. 270, 20 L. R. A. 316, 38 Am. St. Rep. 753. See STREET RAILWAYS.

Common carriers may excuse themselves when there is an unexpected press of travel and all their means are exhausted. But where it appears that there is usually a large crowd at a particular station for a particular train, it is evidence of negligence on the part of the carrier in failing to anticipate the large crowd and take precautions to protect intending passengers from injury therefrom; Kuhlen v. Ry. Co., 193 Mass. 341, 79 N. E. 815, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 729, 118 Am. St. Rep. 516. And see Bennett v. Dutton, 10 N. H. 486; and they may for good cause exclude a passenger: thus, they are not required to carry drunken and disorderly persons, or one affected with a contagious disease, or those who come on board to assault passengers, commit a crime, flee from justice, gamble, or interfere with the proper regulations of the carrier, and disturb the comfort of the passengers; Thurston v. R. Co., 4 Dill. 321, Fed. Cas. No. 14,019; Pearson v. Duane, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 605, 18 L. Ed. 447; O'Brien v. R. Co., 15 Gray (Mass.) 20, 77 Am. Dec. 347; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Vandyne, 57 Ind. 576, 26 Am. Rep. 68; Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. v. Pillow, 76 Pa. 510, 18 Am. Rep. 424; Railway Co. v. Valleley, 32 Ohio St.

345, 30 Am. Rep. 601; or one whose purpose is to injure the carrier's business; Jencks v. Coleman, 2 Sumn. 221, Fed. Cas. No. 7,258; Barney v. Martin, 11 Blatchf. 233, Fed. Cas. No. 1,030; but if a carrier receives a passenger, knowing that a good cause exists for his exclusion, he cannot afterwards eject him for such cause; Pearson v. Duane, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 605, 18 L. Ed. 447; Tarbell v. R. Co., 34 Cal. 616. Where one rightfully on a train as a passenger is put off, it is of itself a good cause of action against the company irrespective of any physical injury that may have resulted; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Winter, 143 U. S. 60, 12 Sup. Ct. 356, 36 L. Ed. 71. It is not liable for injuries resulting from one trying to steal a ride on a freight train; Planz v. R. Co., 157 Mass. 377; 32 N. E. 356, 17 L. R. A. 835.

Passenger-carriers are not held responsible as insurers of the safety of their passengers, as common carriers of goods are. But they are bound to the very highest degree of care and watchfulness in regard to all their appliances for the conduct of their business; so that, as far as human foresight can secure the safety of passengers, there is an unquestionable right to demand it of all who enter upon the business of passenger-carriers; Spellman v. Rapid Transit Co., 36 Neb. 890, 55 N. W. 270, 20 L. R. A. 316, 38 Am. St. Rep. 753; Texas Central R. Co. v. Stuart, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 642, 20 S. W. 962; Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. v. Lewis, 145 Ill. 67, 33 N. E. 960; L. R. 9 Q. B. 122; 2 Q. B. D. 377; White v. R. Co., 136 Mass. 321; Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. Ed. 141; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Anderson, 94 Pa. 351, 39 Am. Rep. 787. They are liable only for injuries resulting from their negligence; [1901] A. C. 496; and such negligence must be the proximate cause of the injury; Bevard v. L. Traction Co., 74 Neb. 802, 105 N. W. 635, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 318. A carrier is not permitted to contract against liability for negligence, but a private carrier may, by special contract; Cleveland, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Henry, 170 Ind. 94, 83 N. E. 710. Where a conductor negligently assists a passenger from the car to the station platform, the company is responsible for injuries resulting therefrom; Hanlon v. R. Co., 187 N. Y. 73, 79 N. E. 846, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 411, 116 Am. St. Rep. 591, 10 Ann. Cas. 366; and even carrying a passenger at reduced fare does not entitle the carrier to stipulate for an exemption from liability for negligence; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Higgs, 165 Ind. 694, 76 N. E. 299, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1081.

A state may by statute limit the right of recovery for injuries to certain classes of persons; Martin v. R. Co., 203 U. S. 284, 27 Sup. Ct. 100, 51 L. Ed. 184.

It is not responsible to persons boarding trains to assist passengers; Hill v. R. Co., 124 Ga. 243, 52 S. E. 651, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 432; to purchase fruit from one not in the employ of the railroad company; Peterson v. R. Co., 143 N. C. 260, 55 S. E. 618, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1240, 118 Am. St. Rep. 799; or to speak to a passenger thereon; Bullock v. R. Co. (Tex.) 55 S. W. 184; and it owes no duty to them.

Where an injury occurs on cars chartered by an association or individual, the carrier is liable to a passenger thereon as in other cases; Clerc v. R. & S. S. Co., 107 La. 370, 31 South. 886, 90 Am. St. Rep. 319; Estes v. R. Co., 110 Mo. App. 725, 85 S. W. 627; Collins v. R. Co., 15 Tex. Civ. App. 169, 39 S. W. 643; and so where such a passenger has been ejected from such a train; Kirkland v. R. Co., 79 S. C. 273, 60 S. E. 668, 128 Am. St. Rep. 848. Where a train is signalled at a section house, which is not a regular stopping-place, and a person boards it without any one's knowledge, and in doing so is injured, the carrier is not liable; Georgia Pac. R. Co. v. Robinson, 68 Miss. 643, 10 South. 60.

The passenger must be ready and willing to pay such fare as is required by the established regulations of the carriers in conformity with law. But an actual tender of fare or passage-money does not seem requisite in order to maintain an action for an absolute refusal to carry, and much less is it necessary in an action for any injury sustained; 6 C. B. 775; 2 Kent 598. The rule of law is the same in regard to paying fare in advance that it is as to freight, except that, the usage in the former case being to take pay in advance, a passenger is expected to have procured his ticket before he had taken passage.

It is the carrier's duty to maintain safe stations and approaches, whether on their own premises or on another's and maintained by them; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Trautwein, 52 N. J. L. 169, 19 Atl. 178, 7 L. R. A. 435, 19 Am. St. Rep. 442; Tobin v. R. Co., 59 Me. 183, 8 Am. Rep. 415; or even where maintained by another; Cotant v. R. Co., 125 Ia. 46, 99 N. W. 115, 69 L. R. A. 932; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Glenk, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 599, 606, 30 S. W. 278; Schlessinger v. R. Co., 49 Misc. 504, 98 N. Y. Supp. 840; Beard v. R. Co., 48 Vt. 101; but in such case it is suggested that the liability is rather for not guarding the carrier's premises so that the defective approach would not be used; 20 Harv. L. Rev. 67. If there are two approaches and one is faulty, the carrier is liable to one using it; -19 C. B. N. S. 183. In making platforms safe the care required is not the highest degree of care, but ordinary care; Pittsburgh, C. & St. Louis R. Co. v. Harris, 38 Ind. App. 77, 77 N. E. 1051; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Scates, 90 Ill. 586; but they have been held to all that human sagacity and foresight can do and liable for slightest negligence; Zimmer v. R. Co., 36 App. Div. 265, 55 N. Y. Supp. 308; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Wightman's Adm'r, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 431, 26 Am. Rep. 384.

A carrier is liable for severe illness of a passenger caused by negligent failure to heat its cars properly; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Powell, 127 Ga. 805, 56 S. E. 1006, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 769, 9 Ann. Cas. 553.

It is the duty of a steamship company running a night boat to supply berths to unobjectionable passengers in the order of application; Patterson v. S. S. Co., 140 N. C. 412, 53 S. E. 224. And they must absolutely protect passengers against the misconduct of their own servants engaged in executing the contract; New Jersey S. B. Co. v. Brockett, 121 U. S. 637, 7 Sup. Ct. 1039, 30 L. Ed. 1049; Haver v. R. Co., 62 N. J. L. 282, 41 Atl. 916, 43 L. R. A. 84, 72 Am. St. Rep. 647; but if an employé is free from liability for injury done a passenger, the carrier is also; New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Jopes, 142 U. S. 18, 12 Sup. Ct. 109, 35 L. Ed. 919. Where one enters a ticket-office to buy a ticket he is entitled to the protection of a passenger, although the agent refuse to sell him a ticket; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Galliher, 89 Va. 639, 16 S. E. 935.

The degree of speed allowable upon a railway depends upon the condition of the road; 5 Q. B. 747.

Passenger-carriers are not responsible where the injury resulted directly from the negligence of the passenger; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 439, 24 L. Ed. 506; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Aspell, 23 Pa. 147, 62 Am. Dec. 323; 3 B. & Ald. 304.

It is the duty of a street railway company to stop when a passenger is about to alight and not to start again until he has done so; Washington & G. R. Co. v. Harmon, 147 U. S. 571, 13 Sup. Ct. 557, 37 L. Ed. 284; but the act of alighting from a moving car is not negligence per se, regardless of attending circumstances; Duncan v. Ry. Co., 48 Mo. App. 659; McCaslin v. Ry. Co., 93 Mich. 553, 53 N. W. 724; Ober v. R. Co., 44 Ia. Ann. 1059, 11 South. 818, 32 Am. St. Rep. 366; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Johnson, 44 Ill. App. 56; but see Brown v. Barnes, 151 Pa. 562, 25 Atl. 144. A carrier is not liable, because it fails to stop a train for an intending passenger, for injury to his health, where he later procured a carriage to drive him across country on a stormy night to avoid delay in waiting for the next train; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Addison, 100 Tex. 241, 97 S. W. 1037, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 880.

Carriers of passengers are bound to carry for the whole route for which they stipulate, and according to their public advertisements and the general usage and custom of their business; Weed v. R. Co., 19 Wend. (N. Y.)

534; S. E. L. & Eq. 362. The carrier's liability extends over the entire route for which he has contracted to carry, though the destination is reached over connecting lines; McElroy v. R. Co., 4 Cush. (Mass.) 400, 50 Am. Dec. 794; McLean v. Burbank, 11 Minn. 277 (Gil. 1890); Candee v. R. Co., 21 Wis. 582, 94 Am. Dec. 566. But the carrier is also liable on whose line the loss or injury is suffered; Hood v. R. Co., 22 Conn. 502; Sprague v. Smith, 29 Vt. 421; Briggs v. Vanderbilt, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 222.

Where a passenger holds a coupon ticket (not jointly issued) over connecting lines and is delayed by the negligence of a preceding carrier, a succeeding road is not bound to carry him on such ticket if it has expired; Brian v. R. Co., 40 Mont. 109, 105 Pac. 489, 20 Ann. Cas. 311; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Bennett, 50 Fed. 496, 1 C. C. A. 544; otherwise where it was a round trip ticket and the initial and last carrier were the same and the delay was by an intermediate carrier, the ticket being refused on the return by the last carrier; Stevens v. R. Co., 45 Tex. Civ. App. 196, 100 S. W. 807. Where the ticket is jointly issued, the passenger is entitled to complete his journey after the time has expired; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Looney, 85 Tex. 158, 19 S. W. 1039, 16 L. R. A. 471, 34 Am. St. Rep. 787. If all the lines are operated by the company selling the ticket, and the passenger commences his journey within the period, he may complete it after the ticket, by its terms has expired; Brian v. R. Co., 40 Mont. 109, 105 Pac. 489, 20 Ann. Cas. 311.

Where a passenger is carried some distance beyond his destination, and ejected against his protest, being compelled to walk back to the station, the company is liable for breach of contract; Evansville & R. R. Co. v. Kyte, 6 Ind. App. 52, 32 N. E. 1134; and so where he was injured in walking back on a dark night; Kentucky & I. Bridge & R. R. Co. v. Buckler, 125 Ky. 24, 100 S. W. 328, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 555, 128 Am. St. Rep. 234.

Passenger-carriers may establish reasonable regulations in regard to the conduct of passengers, and discriminate between those who conform to their rules in regard to obtaining tickets, and those who do not,—requiring more fare of the latter; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Parks, 18 Ill. 460, 68 Am. Dec. 562; Hilliard v. Goad, 34 N. H. 230, 66 Am. Dec. 765; Stephen v. Smith, 29 Vt. 160; Com. v. Power, 7 Mete. (Mass.) 596, 41 Am. Dec. 465; State v. Overton, 24 N. J. L. 435, 61 Am. Dec. 671; 29 E. L. & Eq. 143; Crocker v. R. Co., 24 Conn. 249; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Mays, 4 Ind. App. 413, 30 N. E. 1106; but a passenger is not bound to comply with the rules of a company unless they are reasonable; Central Railroad & Banking Co. v. Strickland, 90 Ga. 562, 16 S. E. 352. Passengers may be required to go through in the same train or forfeit the remainder of their tickets; Cheney v. R. R. Co., 11 Mete. (Mass.) 121, 45 Am. Dec. 190; Oil Creek & A. R. Ry. Co. v. Clark, 72 Pa. 231; State v. Overton, 24 N. J. L. 438, 61 Am. Dec. 671; Cleveland, C. & C. R. Co. v. Bartram, 11 Ohio St. 462; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Henry, 84 Tex. 678, 19 S. W. 870, 16 L. R. A. 318. The words "good this trip only" upon a ticket will not limit the undertaking of the company to any particular day or any specific train,—they relate to a journey and not to a time; and the ticket is good if used at any time within six years from its date; Pier v. Finch, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 514; Drew v. R. Co., 51 Cal. 425. See Lundy v. R. Co., 66 Cal. 191, 4 Pac. 1193, 56 Am. Rep. 100; Auerbach v. R. Co., 89 N. Y. 281, 42 Am. Rep. 290; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Looney, 85 Tex. 158, 19 S. W. 1039, 16 L. R. A. 471, 34 Am. St. Rep. 787; but a ticket "good for this day only," or for "only two days after date," is of no validity after that date though not used; Boston & L. R. Co. v. Proctor, 1 Allen (Mass.) 267, 79 Am. Dec. 729; Gale v. R. Co., 7 Hun (N. Y.) 670. Where a passenger buys a ticket which is silent as to stop-over privileges, he may rely on the statements of the ticket agent on that subject; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Winter, 143 U. S. 60, 12 Sup. Ct. 356, 36 L. Ed. 71. In determining what is a reasonable regulation the convenience of both the public and the company must be considered; Faber v. Ry. Co., 62 Minn. 433, 64 N. W. 918, 36 L. R. A. 789, where the schedule was disarranged and no notice given that the car would not proceed to its destination. It was held that the passenger could not be required to transfer to a car ahead; Burrow v. Ry. & Light Co., 12 Va. L. Reg. 763; contra, 37 Can. Sup. Ct. 523; but where a transfer is compelled there is a remedy for failure to provide seats in the new car; Louisville, N. O. & T. Ry. Co. v. Patterson, 69 Miss. 421, 13 South. 697, 22 L. R. A. 259; see Camden & A. R. R. Co. v. Hoosey, 99 Pa. 492, 497, 44 Am. Rep. 120. An ordinance imposing a penalty for unnecessary changes is reasonable; City of New York v. Ry. Co., 43 Misc. 29, 86 N. Y. Supp. 673. It is the duty of the carrier to give information necessary for the journey; Dwinelle v. R. Co., 120 N. Y. 117, 24 N. E. 319, 8 L. R. A. 224, 17 Am. St. Rep. 611; as of circumstances likely to cause delay; Hasseltine v. Railway, 75 S. C. 141, 55 S. E. 142, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1009; and passengers have the right to rely on information given; Pennsylvania Co. v. Hoagland, 78 Ind. 203. The obligation is treated as an incident of the business; see 20 Harv. L. Rev. 232; but in England false information is dealt with as if deceit; 5 El. & Bl. 860.

Railway passengers, when required by the regulations of the company to surrender their tickets in exchange for the conductor's checks, are liable to be expelled from the cars for a refusal to comply with such regulation, or to pay fare again; Northern R. Co. v. Page, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 130; or for refusal to exhibit a ticket at the request of the conductor in compliance with the standing regulations of the company; Hibbard v. R. Co., 15 N. Y. 455. See TICKET.

Railway companies may exclude merchandise from their passenger trains. It is not the duty of a company to search every parcel carried by a passenger, and it is not guilty for the death of a fellow passenger resulting from an explosion of fire works carried by another; [1901] A. C. 396. The company is not bound to carry a passenger daily whose trunk or trunks contain merchandise, money, or other things known as "express matter"; 5 Am. Law Reg. 364.

COMMON CONDIDIT. See CONDIDIT, COMMON.

COMMON COUNCIL. See COUNCIL.

COMMON COUNTS. Certain general counts, not founded on any special contract, which are introduced in a declaration, for the purpose of preventing a defeat of a just right by an accidental variance in the evidence.

These are, in an action of assumpsit, counts founded on implied promises to pay money in consideration of a precedent debt, and have been variously classified. Those usually comprehended under the term are:—

1. Indebitatus assumpsit, which alleges a debt founded upon one of the several causes of action from which the law implies a promise to pay, and this is made the consideration for the promise to pay a sum of money equivalent to such indebtedness. This covers two distinct classes:—

a. Those termed money counts, because they related exclusively to money transactions as the basis of the debt alleged:

- (1) Money paid for defendant's use.
- (2) Money had and received by defendant for the plaintiff's use.
- (3) Money lent and advanced to defendant.
- (4) Interest.
- (5) Account stated.

b. Any of the usual states of fact upon which the debt may be founded, the most common being:

- (1) Use and occupation.
- (2) Board and lodging.
- (3) Goods sold and delivered.
- (4) Goods bargained and sold.
- (5) Work, labor, and services.
- (6) Work, labor, and materials.

2. Quantum meruit.

3. Quantum valebant.

See ASSUMPSIT.

COMMON FINE. A small sum of money paid to the lords by the residents in certain leets. Fleta; Wharton.

COMMON FISHERY. A fishery to which all persons have a right. A common fishery is different from a common of fishery, which is the right to fish in another's pond, pool, or river. See FISHERY.

COMMON HIGHWAY. By this term is meant a road to be used by the community at large for any purpose of transit or traffic. Hammond, N. P. 239. See HIGHWAY.

COMMON INFORMER. One who, without being specially required by law or by virtue of his office, gives information of crimes, offences, or misdemeanors which have been committed, in order to prosecute the offender; a prosecutor.

COMMON INTENT. The natural sense given to words.

It is the rule that when words are used which will bear a natural sense and an artificial one, or one to be made out by argument and inference, the natural sense shall prevail. It is simply a rule of construction, and not of addition. Common intent cannot add to a sentence words which have been omitted; 2 H. Blackst. 530. In pleading, certainty is required; but certainty to a common intent is sufficient—that is, what upon a reasonable construction may be called certain, without recurring to possible facts; Co. Litt. 203 a; Dougl. 163. See CERTAINTY.

COMMON LAW. That system of law or form of the science of jurisprudence which has prevailed in England and in the United States of America, in contradistinction to other great systems, such as the Roman or civil law.

Those principles, usages, and rules of action applicable to the government and security of persons and of property, which do not rest for their authority upon any express and positive declaration of the will of the legislature. 1 Kent 492.

The body of rules and remedies administered by courts of law, technically so called, in contradistinction to those of equity and to the canon law.

The law of any country, to denote that which is common to the whole country, in contradistinction to laws and customs of local application.

The most prominent characteristic which marks this contrast, and perhaps the source of the distinction, lies in the fact that under the common law neither the stiff rule of a long antiquity, on the one hand, nor, on the other, the sudden changes of a present arbitrary power, are allowed ascendancy, but, under the sanction of a constitutional government, each of these is set off against the other; so that the will of the people, as it is gathered both from long established custom and from the expression of the legislative power, gradually forms a system—just, because it is the deliberate will of a free people—stable, because it is the growth of centuries—progressive, because it is amenable to the constant revision of the people. A full idea of the genius of the common law cannot be gathered without a survey of the philosophy of English and American history. Some of the elements will, however, appear in considering the various narrower senses in which the phrase "common law" is used.

Perhaps the most important of these narrower senses is that which it has when used in contradistinction to statute law, to designate unwritten as distinguished from written law. It is that law which derives its force and authority from the universal consent and immemorial practice of the people. It has never received the sanction of the legislature by an express act, which is the criterion by which it is distinguished from the statute law.

When it is spoken of as the lex non scripta, it is meant that it is law not written by authority of law. The statutes are the expression of law in a written form, which form is essential to the statute. The decision of a court which establishes or declares a rule of law may be reduced to writing and published in the reports; but this report is not the law; it is but evidence of the law; it is but a written account of one application of a legal principle, which principle, in the theory of the common law, is still unwritten. However artificial this distinction may appear, it is nevertheless of the utmost importance, and bears continually the most wholesome results. It is only by the legislative power that law can be bound by phraseology and by forms of expression. The common law eludes such bondage; its principles are not limited nor hampered by the mere forms in which they may have been expressed, and the reported adjudications declaring such principles are but the instances in which they have been applied. The principles themselves are still unwritten, and ready, with all the adaptability of truth, to meet every new and unexpected case. Hence it is said that the rules of the common law are flexible; Bell v. State, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 42; Rensselaer Glass Factory v. Reid, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 587, 628, 632.

It naturally results from the inflexible form of the statute or written law, which has no self-contained power of adaptation to cases not foreseen by legislators, that every statute of importance becomes, in course of time, supplemented, explained, enlarged, or limited by a series of adjudications upon it, so that at last it may appear to be merely the foundation of a larger superstructure of unwritten law. It naturally follows, too, from the less definite and precise forms in which the doctrine of the unwritten law stands, and from the proper hesitation of courts to modify recognized doctrines in new exigencies, that the legislative power frequently intervenes to declare, to qualify, or to abrogate the doctrines of the common law. Thus, the written and the unwritten law, the statutes of the present and the traditions of the past, interlace and react upon each other. Historical evidence supports the view which these facts suggest, that many of the doctrines of the common law are but the common-law form of antique statutes, long since overgrown and imbedded in judicial decisions. While this process is doubtless continually going on in some degree, the contrary process is also continually going on; and to a very considerable extent, particularly in the United States, the doctrines of the common law are being reduced to the statutory form, with such modifications, of course, as the legislature will choose to make. This subject is more fully considered under the title Code, which see.

In a still narrower sense, the expression "common law" is used to distinguish the body of rules and of remedies administered by courts of law technically so called in contradistinction to those of equity administered by courts of chancery, and to the canon law, administered by the ecclesiastical courts.

In England the phrase is more commonly used at the present day in the second of the three senses above mentioned.

In this country the common law of England has been adopted as the basis of our jurisprudence in all the states except Louisiana. Many of the most valued principles of the common law have been embodied in the constitution of the United States and the constitutions of the several states; and in many of the states the common law and the statutes of England in force in the colony at the time of our independence are by the state constitution declared to be the law of the state until repealed. There is an express constitutional adoption of it in Delaware, New York, Michigan, Wisconsin, and West Virginia, and an implied adoption of it in the constitutions of Kentucky and West Virginia. It has been adopted by statute in Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Florida, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, Washington and Wyoming. It was extended to Alabama by the ordinance of 1787 and the recognition of the latter in the state constitution; Polard v. Hagan, 3 How. (U. S.) 212, 11 L. Ed. 565; Barlow v. Lambert, 28 Ala. 707, 65 Am. Dec. 374. It is recognized by judicial decision without any statute in Iowa; State v. Twogood, 7 Ia. 252; Mississippi; Hemingway v. Scales, 42 Miss. 1, 97 Am. Dec. 425, 2 Am. Rep. 586. See 1 Bish. Crim. Law § 15, note 4, § 45, where the rules adopted by the several states in this respect are stated. Hence, where a question in the courts of one state turns upon the laws of a sister state, if no proof of such laws is offered, it is, in general, presumed that the common law as it existed at the time of the separation of this country from England prevails in such state; Abell v. Douglass, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 305; Schurman v. Marley, 29 Ind. 458; Kermot v. Ayer, 11 Mich. 181; Mohr v. Miesen, 47 Minn. 228, 49 N. W. 862; contra, in Pennsylvania, in cases where that state has changed from the common law; the presumption being that the law of the sister state has made the same change, if there is no proof to the contrary. The term common law as thus used may be deemed to include the doctrine of equity; Williams v. Williams, 8 N. Y. 535; but the term is also used in the amendments to the constitution of the United States (art. 7) in contradistinction to equity, in the provision that "In suits at common law where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved." The "common law" here mentioned is the common law of England, and not of any particular state; U. S. v. Wonson, 1 Gall. 20, Fed. Cas. No. 16,750; Bains v. The Catherine, 1 Baldw. 554, Fed. Cas. No. 756; Robinson v. Campbell, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 223, 4 L. Ed. 372; Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 446, 7 L. Ed. 732. See Patterson v. Winn, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 241, 8 L. Ed. 108; Com. v. Leach, 1 Mass. 61; Coburn v. Harvey, 18 Wis. 147. The term is used in contradistinction to equity, admiralty, and maritime law; Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 446, 7 L. Ed. 732; Bains v. The Catherine, 1 Baldw. 554, Fed. Cas. No. 756.

The common law of England is not in all respects to be taken as that of the United States or of the several states: its general principles are adopted only so far as they are applicable to our situation, and the principles upon which courts discriminate between what is to be taken and what is to be left have been much the same whether the common law was adopted by constitution, statute, or decision. While no hard and fast rule can be laid down which will at once differentiate every case, a very discriminating effort was made by Chancellor Bates, in Clawson v. Primrose, 4 Del. Ch. 643, to formulate the result of the decisions and ascertain the criterion which they had in most instances applied to the subject. In this discussion, which was characterized by Professor Washburn as having great value, the conclusion reached is thus stated:

"It cannot be overlooked that, notwithstanding the broad language of the constitution ('the common law of England as well as so much of the statute law as has been heretofore adopted in practice, . . . such parts only excepted as are repugnant to the rights and privileges contained in this constitution and the declaration of rights') there were many parts of the common law of England, as it stood prior to 1776, which never have in fact been regarded by our courts as in force in this country; yet it is to be observed that the courts have not herein acted arbitrarily in adopting some parts of the common law and rejecting other parts, according to their views of the policy of particular rules or doctrine. On the contrary, those parts of the common law of England which have not been here practically administered by the courts will be found on examination to reduce themselves to two classes, resting upon grounds which render them proper to be treated as implied exceptions to the constitutional provision in addition to the expressed exception of such parts of the common law as were repugnant to the rights and privileges contained in the constitution. One of these classes of exceptions may be briefly disposed of. It embraces those parts of the rules and practice of the common law which had become superseded by long settled usages of trade, or business, or habits of dealing among our people, such as could not be unsettled or disturbed without serious inconvenience or injury. In such cases, upon the necessary maxim that communis error facit jus, the courts accepted these departures as practical modifications of the common law. . . .

"The other class of rules which, though parts of the common law of England, have never been administered by the courts under the constitution of 1776, embraces those parts of the common law which in the terms usually employed were, at the period of our independence, inapplicable to the existing circumstances and institutions of our people.

"There is less difficulty in applying the limitation practically than in attempting to define it. I understand it as excluding those parts of the common law of England which were applicable to subjects connected with political institutions and usages peculiar to the mother country, and having no existence in the colonies, such for example as officers, dignities, advowsons, titles, etc.; also, as excluding some of the more artificial rules of the common law, springing out of the complicated system of police, revenue, and trade, among a great commercial people and not therefore applicable to the more simple transactions of the colonies or of the states in their early history; also it may be understood as excluding or modifying many rules of what is known as the common law of practice, and possibly of evidence, which the greater simplicity in our system for the administration of justice, would render unnecessary or inconvenient.

"But, on the other hand, our legislative and judicial history shows conclusively that what may be termed the common law of property was received as an entire system, subject to alterations by the legislature only. Rights of property and of person are fundamental rights necessary to be defined and protected in every civil society. The common law, as a system framed to this very end, could not be deemed inapplicable in the colonies for want of a subject matter, or as being needless or superfluous, or unacceptable, which is the true sense of the limitation in question. Certain it is, as a matter of history, that our ancestors did not so treat it."

Among the other cases in which the subject is treated are Van Ness v. Pacard, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 144, 7 L. Ed. 374; Town of Pawlet v. Clark, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 333, 3 L. Ed. 735; *Lyle v. S.) 253, 8 L. Ed. 114; Wiley v. Ewing, 47 Ala. 424.

In actions in the federal courts in a territory, the common law is the rule of decision, in the absence of statutes or proof of laws or customs prevailing in the territory; Pyeatt v. Powell, 51 Fed. 551, 2 C. C. A. 367. The common-law rule of decision in a federal court is that of the state in which it is sitting; Lorman v. Clarke, 2 McLean 563, Fed. Cas. No. 5516.

Illustrations of what it has been held not to include are the rule respecting conveyance by parol; Lindsley's Lessee v. Coats, 1 Ohio 245; but see Lavelle v. Strobel, 89 Ill. 370; shifting inheritances; Drake v. Rogers, 13 Ohio St. 21; Cox v. Matthews, 17 Ind. 367; Bates v. Brown, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 710, 18 L. Ed. 535; mere possession of land as against miners; McClintock v. Bryden, 5 Cal. 100, 63 Am. Dec. 87; newspaper communications respecting a judge considered as a contempt in England; Stuart v. People, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 404; cutting timber; Dawson v. Coffman, 28 Ind. 220; easement by use in party-wall; Hieatt v. Morris, 10 Ohio St. 523, 78 Am. Dec. 280; estates in joint tenancy; Sergeant v. Steinberger, 2 Ohio 305, 15 Am. Dec. 553; rule as to partial reversal of a judgment against an infant and another; Wilford v. Grant, Kirby (Conn.) 117; cy pres doctrine; Grimes' Ex'rs v. Harmon, 35 Ind. 198, 9 Am. Rep. 690; riparian rights to soil under water; *Reno Smelting, Milling & Reduction Works v. Dec. 696; the definition of a navigable river; Fulmer v. Williams, 122 Pa. 191, 15 Atl. 726, 1 L. R. A. 603, 9 Am. St. Rep. 88; the law of waters as applied to large lakes, or to a river which is a national boundary; Champlain & St. L. R. Co. v. Valentine, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 484.

In criminal law the common law is generally in force in the states to some extent, and while it is in some states held that no crime is punishable unless by statute, there are in many states general statutes resorting to the common law for all crimes not otherwise enumerated, and for criminal matters generally. When there is no statutory definition of a crime named, the common-law definition is generally resorted to; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711; as also are its rules of evidence in criminal cases, and of practice as well as principle in the absence of statutes to the contrary; Hyde v. State, 16 Tex. 445, 67 Am. Dec. 630; and in Louisiana, although not recognized in civil matters, the common law in criminal cases is expressly adopted; State v. McCoy, 8 Rob. 545, 41 Am. Dec. 301. It has been held to prevail in the District of Columbia as to theft; State v. Cummings, 33 Conn. 260, 89 Am. Dec. 208; as to conspiracy in Maryland; State v. Buchanan, 5 Harr. & J. 358, 9 Am. Dec. 534; kidnapping in New Hampshire; State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 550; homicide without intent to kill in Maine; State v. Smith, 32 Me. 369, 54 Am. Dec. 578; and in Tennessee; Jacob v. State, 3 Humph. 493; capacity to commit rape in New York; People v. Randolph, 2 Park. Cr. Rep. 174; but not in Ohio; Williams v. State, 14 Ohio 222, 45 Am. Dec. 536.

There is no common law of the United States, as a distinct sovereignty; Swift v. R. Co., 64 Fed. 59; Gatton v. Ry. Co. (Ia.) 63 N. W. 589; Wheaton v. Peters, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 658, 8 L. Ed. 1055; People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 374; Forepaugh v. R. Co., 123 Pa. 217, 18 Atl. 503, 5 L. R. A. 508, 15 Am. St. Rep. 672; and therefore there are no common-law offences against the U. S.; U. S. v. Hudson, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 32, 3 L. Ed. 259; In re Greene, 52 Fed. 104; U. S. v. Lewis, 36 Fed. 449; U. S. v. Britton, 108 U. S. 199, 2 Sup. Ct. 525, 27 L. Ed. 703; U. S. v. Eaton, 144 U. S. 677, 12 Sup. Ct. 764, 36 L. Ed. 591. There is a rare and valuable pamphlet on this subject, by St. George Tucker Campbell, of the Philadelphia Bar, which contains a full discussion of this question. For earlier cases before the question was fully settled, see U. S. v. Worrall, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 384, Fed. Cas. No. 16,766; U. S. v. Coolidge, 1 Gall. 488, Fed. Cas. No. 14,857; id., 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 415, 4 L. Ed. 124. But the common law is resorted to by federal courts for definition of common-law crimes not defined by statute; U. S. v. Armstrong, 2 Curt. C. C. 446, Fed. Cas. No. 14,467; U. S. v. Coppersmith, 4 Fed. 198. See COMMERCIAL LAW.

The admiralty law is distinct from the common law and the line of demarcation is to be sought in the English decisions before the Revolution and those of the state courts prior to the constitution. See La Amistad de Rues, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 391, 5 L. Ed. 115; Bains v. The James and Catherine, Baldw. 558, Fed. Cas. No. 756; Sawyer v. Steamboat Co., 46 Me. 400, 74 Am. Dec. 463. And as to the adoption of the English ecclesiastical law, see Le Barron v. Le Barron, 35 Vt. 365; Crump v. Morgan, 38 N. C. 91, 40 Am. Dec. 447; Perry v. Perry, 2 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 501; Brinkley v. Brinkley, 50 N. Y. 184, 10 Am. Rep. 460. New York has adopted only so much of the common law as is applicable to the circumstances of the colonies and conformable to her institutions; Cutting v. Cutting, 86 N. Y. 522; Shayne v. Publishing Co., 168 N. Y. 70, 61 N. E. 115, 55 L. R. A. 777, 85 Am. St. Rep. 654. In adopting the common law in New York, principles inconsonant with the circumstances or repugnant to the spirit of American institutions were not adopted; Barnes v. Terminal Co., 193 N. Y. 378, 85 N. E. 1093, 127 Am. St. Rep. 962.

It does not become a part of the law of a state of its own vigor, but is adopted by constitutional provision, statute or decision; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Milling Co., 218 U. S. 406, 31 Sup. Ct. 59, 54 L. Ed. 1088, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 220, 21 Ann. Cas. 815. As to Indiana, see Sopher v. State, 169 Ind. 177, 81 N. E. 913, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 172, 14 Ann. Cas. 27.

"There is no body of federal common law separate and distinct from the common law existing in the several states in the sense that there is a body of statute law enacted by congress separate and distinct from the body of statute law enacted by the several states. But it is an entirely different thing to hold that there is no common law in force generally throughout the United States, and that the countless multitude of interstate commercial transactions are subject to no rules and burdened by no restrictions other than those expressed in the statutes of congress;" Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pub. Co., 181 U. S. 92, 21 Sup. Ct. 561, 45 L. Ed. 765, following Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 564, 31 L. Ed. 308; Wheaton v. Peters, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 591, 8 L. Ed. 1055; New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 357, 21 L. Ed. 627. There is an elaborate opinion in Murray v. Ry. Co., 62 Fed. 24, on this subject. See also 36 Amer. L. Rev. 498; 18 Harv. L. Rev. 134.

Sir F. Pollock expresses the opinion that there is a common law of the United States as distinguished from that of a state. 3 Encycl. of Laws of England 142.

In general, too, the statutes of England are not understood to be included, except so far as they have been recognized by colonial legislation, but the course pursued has been rather to re-enact such English statutes as were deemed applicable to our case. Those passed since the settlement of the particular colony are not in force, unless specially accepted by it, or expressly made to apply to it; if these were suitable to the condition of the colony they were usually accepted; Baker v. Mattocks, Quincy (Mass.) 72; Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 280, 8 L. Ed. 120; Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 64, 1 L. Ed. 38.

There cannot be said to be a settled rule as to what date is to be fixed as determining what British statutes were received as part of the common law. Many states fix July 4, 1776. This is provided by constitution in Florida, Maryland and Rhode Island, and by statute in Kentucky; in other states 4th Jac. I. is the period named after which English statutes are not included, as Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Virginia, Wyoming (but the last four except stats. 43 Eliz. c. 6, § 2; 13 Eliz. c. 8 and 37 Hen. VIII. c. 9); McCool v. Smith, 1 Black (U. S.) 459, 17 L. Ed. 218; Scott v. Lunt, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 596, 8 L. Ed. 797; Baker's Adm'r v. Crandall, 78 Mo. 587, 47 Am. Rep. 126; Herr v. Johnson, 11 Colo. 393, 18 Pac. 342. As to English statutes in force in Pennsylvania, see Report of the Judges in Roberts, Eng. Stat.; Boehm v. Engle, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 15, 1 L. Ed. 17; Biddle v. Shippen, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 19, 1 L. Ed. 19; Respublica v. Mesca, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 73, 1 L. Ed. 42; Shewel v. Fell, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 17; id., 4 Yeates (Pa.) 47; Johnson v. Hessel, 134 Pa. 315, 19 Atl. 700. Generally, it may be stated that the statutes adopted prior to the Revolution, and held applicable under rules stated, are accepted as part of the common law; Hamilton v. Kneeland, 1 Nev. 40; Sackett v. Sackett, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 309; Coburn v. Harvey, 18 Wis. 148. But see Matthews v. Ansley, 31 Ala. 20; Bogardus v. Trinity Church, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 178; Crawford v. Chapman, 17 Ohio 452; In re Lamphere, 61 Mich. 105, 27 N. W. 882. Upon the subject of English statutes as part of the common law see an able note on the whole subject of this title in 22 L. R. A. 501. By reason of the modifications arising out of our different condition, and those established by American statutes and by the course of American adjudication, the common law of America differs widely in many details from the common law of England; but the fact that this difference has not been introduced by violent changes, but has grown up from the native vigor of the system, identifies the whole as one jurisprudence.

A person has no property, no vested interest, in any rule of common law. That is only one of the forms of municipal law, and is no more sacred than any other. Rights of property which have been created by the common law cannot be taken away without due process, but the law itself, as a rule of conduct, may be changed at will . . . of the legislature, unless prevented by constitutional limitations. Indeed, the great office of statutes is to remedy defects in the common law as they are developed, and to adapt it to the changes of time and circumstances; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 134, 24 L. Ed. 77; quoted and approved, Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U. S. 1, 50, 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44.

See LAW MERCHANT.

COMMON LAW MARRIAGE. See MARRIAGE.

COMMON LAW PROCEDURE ACTS. See PROCEDURE ACTS.

COMMON NUISANCE. One which affects the public in general, and not merely some particular person. 1 Hawkins, PL Cr. 197 See NUISANCE.

COMMON PLEAS. The name of a court having jurisdiction generally of civil actions.

Such pleas or actions are brought by private persons against private persons, or by the government, when the cause of action is of a civil nature. In England, whence we derived this phrase, common pleas are so called to distinguish them from pleas of the crown.

The Court of Common Pleas in England consisted of one chief and four puisne (associate) justices. It is thought by some to have been established by king John for the purpose of diminishing the power of the aula regis, but is referred by some writers to a much earlier period. 3 Co. 239; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 177; Termes de la Ley; 3 Bla. Comm. 39. It exercised an exclusive original jurisdiction in many classes of civil cases. See 3 Sharsw. Bla. Comm. 38, n. The right of practising in this court was for a long time confined to two classes of practitioners, limited in number; see SERJEANT; but is now thrown open to the bar generally. Its jurisdiction is merged in the High Court of Justice. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

Courts of the same name exist in many states.

COMMON RECOVERY. A judgment recovered in a fictitious suit, brought against the tenant of the freehold, in consequence of a default made by the person who is last vouched to warranty in the suit, which recovery, being a supposed adjudication of the right, binds all persons, and vests a free and absolute fee-simple in the recoverer.

A common recovery is a kind of conveyance, and is resorted to when the object is to create an absolute bar of estates tail, and of the remainders and reversions expectant on the determination of such estates. 2 Bla. Com. 357. Though it has been used in some of the states, this form of conveyance is nearly obsolete, easier and less expensive modes of making conveyances, which have the same effect, having been substituted; 2 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 2092, 2096; Frost v. Cloutman, 7 N. H. 9, 26 Am. Dec. 723; Lyle v. Richards, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 322; Stump v. Findlay, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 163, 19 Am. Dec. 632; Sharp v. Thompson, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 151; Dow v. Warren, 6 Mass. 328.

COMMON SCHOOLS. Schools for general elementary instruction, free to all the public. 2 Kent 195. See SCHOOLS.

COMMON SCOLD. One who, by the practice of frequent scolding, disturbs the neighborhood. Bish. Crim. Law § 147.

The offence of being a common scold is cognizable at common law. It is a particular form of nuisance, and was punishable by the ducking-stool at common law, in place of which punishment fine and imprisonment are substituted in the United States; Whart. Cr. L. 1442; James v. Com., 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 220. See 1 Term 748; 6 Mod. 11; 4 Rog. 90; 1 Russ. Cr. 302; Roscoe, Cr. Ev., 8th ed. 824; Baker v. State, 53 N. J. L. 45, 20 Atl. 858.

COMMON SEAL. The seal of a corporation. See SEAL.

COMMON SERJEANT. A judicial officer of the corporation of the city of London. He attends the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen on court days and acts as one of the judges of the Central Criminal Court. Whart.

COMMON, TENANTS IN. See ESTATE IN COMMON.

COMMON TRAVERSE. See TRAVERSE.

COMMON VOUCHER. In common recoveries, the person who is vouched to warranty. In this fictitious proceeding the crier of the court usually performs the office of a common voucher. 2 Bla. Com. 358.

COMMONALTY. The common people of England, as distinguished from the king and nobles.

The body of a society or corporation, as distinguished from the officers. 1 Perr. & D. 243. Charters of incorporation of the various tradesmen's societies, etc., in England are usually granted to the master, wardens, and commonalty of such corporation.

COMMONER. One possessing a right of common.

COMMONS. Those subjects of the English nation who are not noblemen. They are represented in parliament by the house of commons.

COMMONWEALTH. A word which properly signifies the common weal or public policy; sometimes it is used to designate a republican form of government. But it was used in royal times in reference to England. 17 L. Q. R. 131.

The English nation during the time of Cromwell was called The Commonwealth. It is the legal title of the states of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, and Virginia.

COMMORANT. One residing in a particular town, city, or district. Barnes 162.

COMMORIENTES. Those who perish at the same time in consequence of the same calamity. See SURVIVOR; DEATH.

COMMUNE CONCILIIUM. The King's Council. See PRIVY COUNCIL.

COMMUNI DIVIDENDO. In Civil Law. An action which lies for those who have property in common, to procure a division. It lies where parties hold land in common but not in partnership. Calvinus, Lex.

COMMUNINGS. In Scotch Law. The negotiations preliminary to a contract.

COMMUNIO BONORUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A community of goods.

When a person has the management of common property, owned by himself and others, not as partners, he is bound to account for the profits, and is entitled to be reimbursed for the expenses which he has sustained by virtue of the quasi-contract which is created by his act, called communio bonorum. Vicat; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 907, note.

COMMUNITY (Lat. communis, common). In Civil Law. A corporation or body politic. Dig. 3. 4.

"We can find in our law books no such terms as corporation, body corporate, body politic, though we may read much of convents, chapters and communities. The large-est term in general use is community, commonalty or commune, in Latin, communitas or communa. It is a large, vague word. . . . But we dare not translate it by corporation, for if, on the one hand, it is describing cities and boroughs which already are, or at least are on their way to become, corporations, it will stand equally well for counties, hundreds and townships which in the end have failed to acquire a corporate character. . . ." 1 Poll. & Maitl. Hist. E. L. 494.

In French Law. A species of partnership which a man and woman contract when they are lawfully married to each other.

Conventional community is that which is formed by express agreement in the contract of marriage.

By this contract the legal community which would otherwise subsist may be modified as to the proportions which each shall take, and as to the things which shall compose it.

Legal community is that which takes place by virtue of the contract of marriage itself.

The French system of community property was known as the dotal system. The Spanish system was the Ganancial System, q. v. The conquest of Mexico by the Spaniards and their acquisition of the Florida territory resulted in the introduction on American soil of the Spanish system. Louisiana, originally a French colony, was afterwards ceded to Spain when the Spanish law was introduced. It again reverted to the French and from them was acquired by the United States. The Louisiana Code has, with slight modifications, adopted the dotal system of the Code Napoléon as regards the separate rights of husband and wife, but as to their common property it retained the essential features of the Spanish ganancial system. Texas and California have adopted the community system of Spain and Mexico or modified it by their constitutions. New Mexico appears to have followed the Spanish law of property rights of married persons in its entirety. The community system as adopted in older community states has been adopted by Nevada, Washington, and Idaho, with certain modifications. Hence it may be said that the American community system prevails at this day in Louisiana, Texas, California, Nevada, Arizona, Washington, Idaho, Montana, and New Mexico, and in Porto Rico, and is indebted to Spain for its origin. See Ballinger, Community Property, § 6; Chavez v. McKnight, 1 N. M. 147. It is said to be the only remains in those states (except Louisiana) of the civil law.

Property (in Washington Territory) acquired during marriage with community funds became an acquêt of the community and not the sole property of the one in whose name the property was bought, although by the law existing at the time the husband was given the management, control and power of sale of such property; this right being vested in him, not because he was the exclusive owner, but because by law he was created the agent of the community. Warburton v. White, 176 U. S. 484, 20 Sup. Ct. 404, 44 L. Ed. 555.

The community embraces the profits of all the effects of which the husband has the administration and enjoyment, either of right or in fact; and of the estates which they may acquire during the marriage, either by donations made jointly to them, or through their outlay or industry as well as the fruits of the bienes propios which each one brought to the matrimony, and of all that which this acquisition produced by whatever title acquired; Ballinger, Community Prop. § 5, or by purchase, or in any other similar way, even although the purchase be made in the name of one of the two, and not of both; because in that case the period of time when the purchase is made is alone attended to, and not the person who made the purchase; Davidson v. Stuart, 10 La. 146; Brown v. Cobb, 10 La. 172; Clark v. Norwood, 12 La. Ann. 598. The debts contracted during the marriage enter into the community, and must be acquitted out of the common fund; but not the debts contracted before the marriage.

The husband has the right to manage and control the community property during its existence; Warburton v. White, 176 U. S. 484, 20 Sup. Ct. 404, 44 L. Ed. 555; Stockstill v. Bart, 47 Fed. 231; and hence he can alienate or encumber during coverture, even without the consent or joinder of the wife, any of the property belonging to the community; Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 339, 48 Pac. 228, 36 L. R. A. 497, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170; Cook v. Vault Co., 104 Ky. 473, 47 S. W. 325; Moore v. Moore, 73 Tex. 383, 11 S. W. 396; Hearfield v. Bridges, 75 Fed. 47, 21 C. C. A. 212. He must act in good faith toward the wife, and if he disposes of property with intent to defraud her, his conveyance or disposal will be voidable on that ground, but a bona fide purchaser is protected; Lord v. Hough, 43 Cal. 581; Cotton v. Cotton, 34 La. Ann. 858; Hagerty v. Harwell, 16 Tex. 663. But in Washington the husband has no right to sell or encumber the property unless the wife joins with him; Kimble v. Kimble, 17 Wash. 75, 49 S. W. 216. In general a sale or conveyance of the property by the wife alone is absolutely void; Tryon v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 490; Humphries v. Sorenson, 33 Wash. 563, 74 Pac. 690.

The property is liable for the community debts; Succession of Kerley, 18 La. Ann. 583; Barnett v. O'Loughlin, 14 Wash. 259, 44 Pac. 267; and it is in general also liable for the husband's separate debts; Schuyler v. Broughton, 70 Cal. 282, 11 Pac. 719; Lee v. Henderson, 75 Tex. 190, 12 S. W. 981; Gund v. Parke, 15 Wash. 393, 46 Pac. 408; contra as to realty; Ross v. Howard, 31

Wash. 393, 72 Pac. 74. The husband usually sues alone in his own name; Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 339, 48 Pac. 228, 36 L. R. A. 497, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170; Jordan v. Moore, 65 Tex. 363; Crow v. Van Sickle, 6 Nev. 146; Ford v. Brooks, 35 La. Ann. 157. But in Washington, since the husband and wife have equal interests in the community, all actions must be brought by the husband and wife jointly; Parke v. City of Seattle, 8 Wash. 78, 35 Pac. 594.

The community is dissolved by the death of either spouse; Thompson v. Vance, 110 La. 26, 34 South. 112; by divorce; Biggi v. Biggi, 98 Cal. 35, 32 Pac. 803, 35 Am. St. Rep. 141; (contra, in Porto Rico, Garrozi v. Dastas, 204 U. S. 64, 27 Sup. Ct. 224, 51 L. Ed. 369); and by a judicial decree following a suit for separation of property; Succession of Bothick, 52 La. Ann. 1863, 28 South. 458. A culpable abandonment of one spouse by the other may entitle the party abandoned to the rights in the community that follow upon its dissolution; Cullers v. James, 66 Tex. 494, 1 S. W. 314; mere voluntary separation is not sufficient; Muse v. Yarborough, 11 La. 521; nor is insanity; Succession of Bothick, 52 La. Ann. 1863, 28 South. 458.

Either surviving spouse may sell his or her interest in the absence of fraud upon the rights of others; Harvey v. Cummings, 68 Tex. 599, 5 S. W. 513; but the survivor cannot, except for the payment of community debts, alienate the interest of the heirs of the deceased spouse; Meyer v. Opperman, 76 Tex. 105, 13 S. W. 174; Biossat v. Sullivan, 21 La. Ann. 565. The general rule is that one half of the property vests in the surviving spouse and one half in the heirs of the deceased; Payne v. Payne, 18 Cal. 291; George v. Delaney, 111 La. 760, 35 South. 894; Chadwick v. Tatem, 9 Mont. 354, 23 Pac. 729; Wortman v. Vorhies, 14 Wash. 152, 44 Pac. 129.

The effects which compose the community of gains are divided into two equal portions between the heirs at the dissolution of the marriage; La. Civ. Code 2375. See Pothier, Contr.; Toullier. But the wife's interest in the community property is residuary and she is not the owner of any specific property before the debts are paid, whether to third persons or to the succession of her husband; Berthelot v. Fitch, 45 La. Ann. 389, 12 South. 625.

A right to recover damages for personal injuries, if acquired during marriage, is considered community property; Neale v. Ry. Co., 94 Cal. 425, 29 Pac. 954.

See ACQUÊTS.

COMMUTATION. The change of a punishment to which a person has been condemned into a less severe one. This can be granted only by the authority in which the pardoning power resides. See Ex parte Janes, 1 Nev.

321; In re Victor, 31 Ohio St. 206; Lee v. Murphy, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 789, 12 Am. Rep. 563.

See PRISONER.

COMMUTATIVE CONTRACT. In Civil Law. One in which each of the contracting parties gives and receives an equivalent.

The contract of sale is of this kind. The seller gives the thing sold, and receives the price, which is the equivalent. The buyer gives the price, and receives the thing sold, which is the equivalent. Such contracts are usually distributed into four classes, namely: Do ut des (I give that you may give); Facio ut facias (I do that you may do); Facio ut des (I do that you may give); Do ut facias (I give that you may do). Pothier, Obl. n. 13. See La. Civ. Code, art. 1761.

COMPACT. An agreement. A contract between parties, which creates obligations and rights capable of being enforced, and contemplated as such between the parties, in their distinct and independent characters. Story, Const. b. 3, c. 3; Rutherf. Inst. b. 2, c. 6, § 1.

The parties may be nations, states, or individuals; but the constitution of the United States declares that "no state shall, without the consent of congress, enter into agreement or compact with another state, or with a foreign power." See Marlatt v. Silk, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 9 L. Ed. 609; Poole v. Fleeger, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 185, 9 L. Ed. 680; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 5 L. Ed. 547.

COMPANIONS. In French Law. A general term, comprehending all persons who compose the crew of a ship or vessel. Pothier, Mar. Contr. n. 163.

COMPANY. An association of a number of individuals for the purpose of carrying on some legitimate business.

This term is not synonymous with partnership, though every such unincorporated company is a partnership. Usage has reserved the term to associations whose members are in greater number, their capital more considerable, and their enterprises greater, either on account of their risk or importance.

When these companies are authorized by the government, they are known by the name of corporations.

The proper signification of the word "company" when applied to a person engaged in trade, denotes those united for the same purpose or in a joint concern. It is commonly used in this sense or as indicating a partnership. Palmer v. Pinkham, 33 Me. 32.

Sometimes the word is used to represent those members of a partnership whose names do not appear in the name of the firm. See 12 Toullier 97.

COMPARATIVE JURISPRUDENCE. See JURISPRUDENCE.

COMPARATIVE NEGLIGENCE. That doctrine in the law of negligence by which the negligence of the parties is compared in the degree of "slight," "ordinary," and

"gross" negligence, and a recovery permitted notwithstanding the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, when the negligence of the plaintiff is slight and the negligence of the defendant gross, but refused when the plaintiff has been guilty of a want of ordinary care contributing to his injury; or when the negligence of the defendant is not gross, but only ordinary or slight when compared under the circumstances of the case with the contributory negligence of the plaintiff. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. R. Co., 103 Ill. 512; Calumet Iron & Steel Co. v. Martin, 115 Ill. 358, 3 N. E. 456; Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Delaney, 82 Ill. 198, 25 Am. Rep. 308. This doctrine existed in the civil law, and in some instances in admiralty, but it did not exist in the states other than Illinois and Louisiana.

The doctrine of comparative negligence no longer obtains in Illinois; it must now be established in actions for personal injuries, or for death by wrongful act that the plaintiff, or the deceased, was exercising ordinary care; Imes v. R. Co., 105 Ill. App. 37; see Sluder v. Transit Co., 189 Mo. 107, 88 S. W. 648, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 239. It has been revived in the Federal Employer's Liability Act of 1908.

COMPATIBILITY. Such harmony between the duties of two offices that they may be discharged by one person.

COMPENSACION. In Spanish Law. The extinction of a debt by another debt of equal dignity between persons who have mutual claims on each other.

COMPENSATIO CRIMINIS. The compensation or set-off of one crime against another: for example, in questions of divorce, where one party claims the divorce on the ground of adultery of his or her companion, the latter may show that the complainant has been guilty of the same offence, and, having himself violated the contract, cannot complain of its violation on the other side. This principle is incorporated in the codes of most civilized nations. See 1 Hagg. Cons. 144; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 714; Wood v. Wood, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 108, 2 D. & B. 64; Bishop, Marr. & D. §§ 393, 394.

COMPENSATION. In Chancery Practice. Something to be done for or paid to a person of equal value with something of which he has been deprived by the acts or negligence of the party so doing or paying.

When a simple mistake, not a fraud, effects a contract, but does not change its essence, a court of equity will enforce it, upon making compensation for the error. "The principle upon which courts of equity act," says Lord Chancellor Eldon, "is by all the authorities brought to the true standard, that though the party had not a title at law, because he had not strictly complied with the terms so as to entitle him to an action

(as to time, for instance), yet if the time, though introduced (as some time must be fixed, where something is to be done on one side, as a consideration for something to be done on the other), is not of the essence of the contract, a material object, to which they looked in the first conception of it, even though the lapse of time has not arisen from accident, a court of equity will compel the execution of the contract upon this ground, that one party is ready to perform, and that the other may have a performance in substance if he will permit it;" 13 Ves. Ch. 287. See 10 id. 505; 13 id. 73, 81, 426; 6 id. 575; 1 Cox, Ch. 59.

In Civil Law. A reciprocal liberation between two persons who are both creditors and debtors of each other. Est debiti et crediti inter se contributio. Dig. 16. 2. 1.

It resembles in many respects the common-law set-off. The principal difference is that a set-off must be pleaded to be effectual; whereas compensation is effectual without any such plea. See 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1407.

It may be legal, by way of exception, or by reconvention; Blanchard v. Cole, 8 La. 158; 8 Dig. 16. 2; Code, 4. 31; Inst. 4. 6. 30; Burge, Suret. b. 2, c. 6, p. 181.

It takes place by mere operation of law, and extinguishes reciprocally the two debts as soon as they exist simultaneously, to the amount of their respective sums. It takes place only between two debts having equally for their object a sum of money, or a certain quantity of consumable things of one and the same kind, and which are equally liquidated and demandable. It takes place whatever be the cause of the debts, except in case, first, of a demand of restitution of a thing of which the owner has been unjustly deprived; second, of a demand of restitution of a deposit and a loan for use; third, of a debt which has for its cause aliments declared not liable to seizure. La. Civ. Code 2203-2208. See Dorvin v. Wiltz, 11 La. Ann. 520; Stewart v. Harper, 16 La. Ann. 181.

As to taking property, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

In Criminal Law. Recrimination, which see.

COMPERTORIUM. In the Civil Law. A judicial inquest by delegates or commissioners to find out and relate the truth of a cause. Wharton.

COMPERUIT AD DIEM (Lat. he appeared at the day). A plea in bar to an action of debt on a bail bond. The usual replication of this plea is, nul tiel record: that there is not any such record of appearance of the said —. For forms of this plea, see 5 Wentworth 470; Lilly, Entr. 114; 2 Chit. Pl. 527.

When the issue is joined on this plea, the trial is by the record. See 1 Taunt. 23; Tidd, Pr. 239. And see, generally, Comyns, Dig. Pleader (2 W. 31); 7 B. & C. 478.

COMPETENCY. The legal fitness or ability of a witness to be heard on the trial of a cause. That quality of written or other evidence which renders it proper to be given on the trial of a cause.

There is a difference between competency and credibility. A witness may be competent, and, on examination, his story may be so contradictory and improbable that he may not be believed; on the contrary, he may be incompetent, and yet be perfectly credible if he were examined.

The court are the sole judges of the competency of a witness, and may, for the purpose of deciding whether the witness is or is not competent, ascertain all the facts necessary to form a judgment; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 426.

Prima facie every person offered is a competent witness, and must be received, unless his incompetency appears; 9 State Tr. 652.

In French Law. The right in a court to exercise jurisdiction in a particular case: as, where the law gives jurisdiction to the court when a thousand francs shall be in dispute, the court is competent if the sum demanded is a thousand francs or upwards, although the plaintiff may ultimately recover less.

COMPETENT. Able, fit, qualified; authorized or capable to act. Abb. L. Dict.; as competent court; 1 C. P. D. 176; competent evidence; Chapman v. McAdams, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 504; competent persons, 5 Ad. & El. 75; competent clerk, Porter v. Duglass, 27 Miss. 393.

COMPETENT EVIDENCE. That evidence which the very nature of the thing to be proven requires, as the production of a writing where its contents are the subject of inquiry. Chapman v. McAdams, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 504; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 2. See EVIDENCE.

COMPETENT WITNESS. One who is legally qualified to be heard to testify in a cause. In many states a will must be attested, for the purpose of passing lands, by competent witnesses.

COMPILATION. A literary production composed of the works of others and arranged in a methodical manner.

A compilation requiring, in its execution, taste, learning, discrimination, and intellectual labor, is an object of copyright (q. v.); as, for example, Bacon's Abridgment. Curtis, Copyr. 186. A compilation consists of selected extracts from different authors; an abridgment is a condensation of the views of an author; Story v. Holcombe, 4 McLean 314, Fed. Cas. No. 13,497.

COMPLAINANT. One who makes a complaint. A plaintiff in a suit in chancery is so called.

COMPLAINT. In Criminal Law. The allegation made to a proper officer that some person, whether known or unknown, has been guilty of a designated offence, with an offer to prove the fact, and a request that the offender may be punished. It is a technical term, descriptive of proceedings before a magistrate. Com. v. Davis, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 436.

To have a legal effect, the complaint must be supported by such evidence as shows that an offence has been committed and renders it certain or probable that it was committed by the person named or described in the complaint.

The fact that a complaint is drawn in flagrant disregard of the rules of pleading is not sufficient to support a demurrer thereto, if the allegations are susceptible of a construction that will support the action; U. S. Nat. Bank v. Bank, 18 N. Y. Supp. 758.

In Practice. The name given in New York and other states to the statement of the plaintiff's case which takes the place of the declaration in common-law pleading.

COMPOS MENTIS. See NON COMPOS MENTIS.

COMPOSITION. An agreement, made upon a sufficient consideration, between a debtor and creditor, by which the creditor accepts part of the debt due to him in satisfaction of the whole. See COMPOUNDING A FELONY.

A composition deed executed by a debtor and his creditors in due form, operates as a settlement of the original claims of such creditors and supersedes the cause of action thereon, the rights and remedies of the parties being determined thereafter by the new agreement; Brown v. Farnham, 48 Minn. 317, 51 N. W. 377. An oral agreement between several creditors and their debtor to compound and discharge their claims is valid; Halstead v. Ives, 73 Hun 56, 25 N. Y. Supp. 1058; Chemical Nat. Bank v. Kohner, 85 N. Y. 189. In an action upon a composition agreement, any creditor being a party thereto may bring a several action for damages for breach thereof; Brown v. Farnham, 55 Minn. 27, 56 N. W. 352.

COMPOSITION OF MATTER. A mixture or chemical combination of materials. The term is used in the act of congress, July 4, 1836, § 6, in describing the subjects of patents. It may include both the substance and the process, when the compound is new.

COMPOUND INTEREST. Interest upon interest; for example, when a sum of money due for interest is added to the principal, and then bears interest. This is not, in general, allowed. See INTEREST.

COMPOUNDER. In Louisiana. He who makes a composition.

An amicable compounder is one who has undertaken by the agreement of the parties to compound or settle differences between them. La. Code of Pract. art. 444.

COMPOUNDING A FELONY. The act of a party immediately aggrieved, who agrees with a thief or other felon that he will not prosecute him, on condition that he return to him the goods stolen, or who takes a reward not to prosecute. See State v. Buckmaster, 2 Harr. (Del.) 532; Bothwell v. Brown, 51 Ill. 234; Chandler v. Johnson, 39 Ga. 85; Powell v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 342, 101 S. W. 1006.

This is an offence punishable by fine and imprisonment, and at common law rendered the person committing it an accessory; Hawk. Pl. Cr. 125. And a conviction may be had though the person guilty of the original offence has not been tried; Watt v. State, 97 Ala. 72, 11 South. 901; or if no offence liable to a penalty has been committed by the person from whom the consideration is received; State v. Carver, 69 N. H. 216, 39 Atl. 973. A failure to prosecute for an assault with an intent to kill is not compounding a felony; Phillips v. Kelly, 29 Ala. 628. The accepting of a promissory note signed by a party guilty of larceny, as a consideration for not prosecuting, is sufficient to constitute the offence; Com. v. Pease, 16 Mass. 91; and the offence is committed although the consideration is for another than the one making the agreement; State v. Ruthven, 58 Ia. 121, 12 N. W. 235. The mere retaking by the owner of stolen goods is no offence, unless the offender is not to be prosecuted; Hale, Pl. Cr. 546; 1 Chit. Cr. Law 4; Clarke, Cr. L. 329; Bothwell v. Brown, 51 Ill. 234.

In an indictment for compounding a felony, it must be alleged that the felony was committed by the person with whom the corrupt agreement is made; State v. Hodge, 142 N. C. 665, 55 S. E. 626, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 709, 9 Ann. Cas. 563. The agreement not to prosecute being the gist of the offense, it must be clearly charged; Williams v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. 1, 100 S. W. 149. An information is insufficient if it fails to allege that the defendant intended to hinder the course of justice and allow the felon to escape unpunished; State v. Wilson, 80 Vt. 249, 67 Atl. 533. See note 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 484.

The compounding of misdemeanors, as it is also a perversion or defeating of public justice, is in like manner an indictable offence at common law; Jones v. Rice, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 440, 29 Am. Dec. 612; Pearce v. Wilson, 111 Pa. 14, 2 Atl. 99, 56 Am. Rep. 243; McMahon v. Smith, 47 Conn. 221, 36 Am. Rep. 67. But the law will permit a compromise of any offence, though made the subject of a criminal prosecution, for which the injured party might recover damages in an action.

There is said to be no reported case in England for compounding a misdemeanor, but that in grave cases (perjury or rioting) it would be held an offence; such agreements in lesser cases are often sanctioned by courts, and in cases when the injured party can both sue and prosecute (especially for an assault) compromises are not illegal and will be enforced; Odgers, C. L. 202, citing L.

R. 10 Ch. 297. But, if the offence is of a public nature, no agreement can be valid that is founded on the consideration of stifling a prosecution for it; 6 Q. B. 308; Fay v. Oatley, 6 Wis. 42; Buck v. Bank, 27 Mich. 293, 15 Am. Rep. 189; Shaw v. Reed, 30 Me. 105; Jones v. Rice, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 440, 29 Am. Dec. 612; State v. Carver, 69 N. H. 216, 39 Atl. 973.

Compounding a felony is an indictable offence. No action can be supported on any contract of which such offence is the consideration in whole or in part; Com. v. Pease, 16 Mass. 91; Mattaacks v. Owen, 5 Vt. 42; Plumer v. Smith, 5 N. H. 553, 22 Am. Dec. 478; People v. Buckland, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 592; Sneed v. Com., 6 Dana (Ky.) 338; Levy v. Ross, T. U. P. Charlt. (Ga.) 292. A receipt in full of all demands given in consideration of stifling a criminal prosecution is void; Bailey v. Buck, 11 Vt. 252. A contract which is void as compounding a felony is incapable of ratification; Stanard v. Sampson, 23 Okl. 13, 99 Pac. 796; the law leaves the parties where it finds them; it will neither aid in enforcing the contract, nor permit a recovery of the consideration; Town of Cottonwood v. Austin, 158 Ala. 117, 48 South. 345; Jourdan v. Burstow, 76 N. J. Eq. 55, 74 Atl. 124, 139 Am. St. Rep. 741.

Proceedings on a judgment by confession will be enjoined where the consideration was stifling a prosecution for forgery; Given's Appeal, 121 Pa. 260, 15 Atl. 468, 6 Am. St. Rep. 795. An injunction will be granted against action on a note given in consideration of compounding a felony; Porter v. Jones, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 313; 13 Sim. 513; contra, Adams v. Barrett, 5 Ga. 404; Allison v. Hess, 28 Ia. 388; Williams v. Englebrecht, 37 Ohio St. 383; Rock v. Mathews, 35 W. Va. 537, 14 S. E. 137, 14 L. R. A. 508.

COMPRA Y VENTA (Span.). Buying and selling. The laws of contracts arising from purchase and sale are given very fully in Las Partidas, part 3, tit. xviii. ll. 56.

COMPRINT. The surreptitious printing of the copy of another to the intent to make a gain thereby. Strictly, it signifies to print together. There are several statutes in prevention of this act. Jacob; Cowell.

COMPRIVIGNI (Lat.). Step-brothers or step-sisters. Children who have one parent, and only one, in common. Calvinus, Lex.

COMPROMIS (French). An agreement of arbitration. 2 Amer. J. of Int. L. 898.

COMPROMISARIUS. In Civil Law. An arbitrator.

COMPROMISE. An agreement made between two or more parties as a settlement of matters in dispute.

Such settlements are sustained at law; Poll. Contr. 180; Durham v. Wadlington, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. C.) 258; Van Dyke v. Davis, 2 Mich. 145; and are highly favored; Zane's

Devisees v. Zane, 6 Munf. (Va.) 406; Taylor v. Patrick, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 168; Truett v. Chaplin, 11 N. C. 178; Stoddard v. Mix, 14 Conn. 12; Barlow v. Ins. Co., 4 Mete. (Mass.) 270; Hart v. Gould, 62 Mich. 262, 28 N. W. 831. The amount in question must, it seems, be uncertain; 2 B. & Ad. 889. And see Muirhead v. Kirkpatrick, 21 Pa. 237; Livingston v. Dugan, 20 Mo. 102; Wilbur v. Crane, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 284; 3 M. & W. 648. The compromise of a doubtful or disputed claim is a sufficient consideration to uphold an assumpsit; Cox v. Stokes, 156 N. Y. 491, 51 N. E. 316. See Battle v. McArthur, 49 Fed. 715. The compromise of a doubtful claim made in good faith is a good consideration for a promise, though it afterwards appears that the claim was wholly groundless; L. R. 5 Q. B. 449; Union Collection Co. v. Buckman, 150 Cal. 159, 88 Pac. 708, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568, 119 Am. St. Rep. 164, 11 Ann. Cas. 609. It is not necessary that the claim settled should be one that could be successfully maintained; Neibles v. Ry. Co., 37 Minn. 151, 33 N. W. 332. Nor is necessary that there should be any doubt about the claim; it is enough if the parties consider it doubtful; City Electric Ry. Co. v. Floyd County, 115 Ga. 655, 42 S. E. 45; Bement v. May, 135 Ind. 664, 34 N. E. 327, 35 N. E. 387; or if the parties thought at the time that there was a real question between them; Alexander v. Trust Co., 106 Md. 170, 66 Atl. 826. In Pitkin v. Noyes, 48 N. H. 294, 97 Am. Dec. 615, 2 Am. Rep. 218, it was held that the claim must be one which was understood by both parties to be doubtful. It is said that the question is as to the belief, in good faith, of the claimant in the validity of his claim. There must be a colorable ground for the claim; Smith v. Boruff, 75 Ind. 412; an agreement not to contest a will is not enough, if the party had no right to make a contest; Bement v. May, 135 Ind. 664, 34 N. E. 327, 35 N. E. 387. "A claim is honest if the claimant does not know that his claim is unsubstantial, or if he does not know the facts which show that his claim is a bad one;" L. R. 32 Ch. Div. 266; Grandin v. Grandin, 49 N. J. L. 514, 9 Atl. 756, 60 Am. Rep. 642. But it has been held that one may buy his peace by compromising a claim which he knows is without right; Dailey v. King, 79 Mich. 568, 44 N. W. 959. But the compromise of an illegal claim will not sustain a promise; Read v. Hitchings, 71 Me. 590; so of a note given for a gambling debt; Tyson v. Woodruff, 108 Ga. 368, 33 S. E. 981; and a note given for liquor sold without a license; Melchoir v. McCarty, 31 Wis. 252, 11 Am. Rep. 605; where, however, the illegal contract has been fully performed, a compromise may be valid; Antoine v. Smith, 40 La. Ann. 560, 4 South. 321; and where the parties have disputed claims against each other and agree to settle them, it is binding although some or all of the claims were illegal; Wilder v. R. Co., 65 Vt. 43, 25 Atl. 896; after a claim is in suit, it is said to make no difference whether it could have been maintained or not; Clark v. Turnbull, 47 N. J. L. 265, 54 Am. Rep. 157. The subject is fully treated in Armijo v. Henry, 14 N. M. 181, 89 Pac. 305, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275.

Where a debtor tenders part of a disputed claim to the creditor in full satisfaction, if the latter accepts the tender, he is bound by the terms thereof; Deutmann v. Kilpatrick, 46 Mo. App. 624. An offer of settlement by plaintiff, but not accepted by defendant, does not bind either party; Clark v. Pope, 29 Fla. 238, 10 South. 586. As to a compromise of a criminal charge, see COMPOUNDING A FELONY.

An offer to pay money by way of compromise is not evidence of debt, since, as was said by Lord Mansfield, "it must be permitted to men 'to buy their peace' without prejudice to them, if the offer did not succeed; and such offers are made to stop litigation without regard to the question whether anything, or what, is due."

If the terms "buy their peace" are attended to, they will resolve all doubts on this head of evidence; Bull. N. P. 236; and the author adds an example: If A sue B for one hundred pounds, and B offer to pay him twenty pounds, it shall not be received in evidence, for this neither admits nor ascertains any debt, and is no more than saying he would give twenty pounds to get rid of the action. But if an account consist of ten articles, and B admits that a particular one is due, it is good evidence for so much.

In one of the oldest cases on the subject, Lord Kenyon declared at nisi prius: "Evidence of concessions made for the purpose of settling matters in dispute I shall never admit;" 3 Esp. 113; but evidence was admitted that after the action was brought the defendant called upon the plaintiff and said he was sorry that the thing had happened, and offered two hundred pounds in settlement, which was not accepted; 3 Stark. N. P. 123; and in other cases evidence of offers of compromise made, but not expressed to be without prejudice, were held to be admissible; 1 M. & W. 446; apparently in opposition to the rule laid down by Lord Mansfield and Lord Kenyon above referred to.

It may, however, be considered settled that letters or admissions containing the expression in substance that they are to be without prejudice will not be admitted in evidence; 4 C. & P. 462; L. R. 6 Ch. 827; 3 Sc. N. R. 741.

In the last case the rule is put definitely on the ground of public policy by Tindal, C. J., who said: "It is of great consequence that parties should be unfettered by correspondence entered into upon the express understanding that it is to be without prejudice," and he also declared "that where used in the letter containing the offer, the words 'without prejudice' must cover the whole correspondence." And this rule has been followed and it was held that not only the letter bearing the words "without prejudice," but also the answer thereto, which was not so guarded, was inadmissible in evidence; and to the same effect is L. R. 10 Ch. 264. It is the recognized rule in the United States that admissions made in treating for an adjustment cannot be given in evidence; Ferry v. Taylor, 33 Mo. 323; Durgin v. Somers, 117 Mass. 65; Molyneux v. Collier, 13 Ga. 406; and in Canada; 3 Ont. 584; 11 id. 442. In Finn v. Tel. Co., 101 Me. 279, 64 Atl. 490, it was held that the admissibility of such evidence depended upon the intention of the party seeking the compromise. If he intended it as an admission of liability, it was admissible; if he only intended it as a compromise settlement, it was not.

Verbal offers of compromise of a claim made by a defendant's solicitor are also protected and cannot be given in evidence against his client; 2 C. & K. 24; 6 C. P. 437.

An account rendered by the defendant to the plaintiff, showing a balance in the plaintiff's favor, accompanied by a letter proposing an arrangement and stating that the letter and account were without prejudice was held to be inadmissible as evidence; 6 C. P. 437. The principle of the exclusion of such admissions, whether verbal or documentary, therefore, seems to rest on the fact that there is some matter in controversy or some claim by one person against the other for the settlement or adjustment of which the communication is made, and that in furtherance of the maxim, "Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium," it is for the public good that communications having that end in view should not be allowed to prejudice either party in the event of their proving abortive. It is not necessary that such communications should be expressly guarded if they manifestly appear to have been made by way of compromise; 2 C. & K. 24; such admissions or negotiations are inadmissible whether made "without prejudice" or not; Reynolds v. Manning, 15 Md. 510; Frick & Co. v. Wilson, 36 S. C. 65, 15 S. E. 331; Emery v. Real Estate Exch., 88 Ga. 321, 14 S. E. 556; Smith v. Satterlee, 130 N. Y. 677, 29 N. E. 225; 2 Whart. Ev. § 1090; but see Chaffe v. Mackenzie, 43 La. Ann. 1062, 10 South. 369; Hood v. Tyner, 3 Ind. App. 51, 28 N. E. 1033; Thom v. Hess, 51 Ill. App. 274. Where a letter opening negotiations for a compromise, but not stated to be without prejudice, was followed a day or two afterwards by another guarding against prejudice, it was held that the whole correspondence was thereby protected; 26 W. R. 109, and Gurney, B., refused to receive in evidence a letter written "without prejudice," even in favor of the party who had written it, saying, "If you write without prejudice so as not to bind yourself, you cannot use the letter against the other party;" 5 C. & P. 388.

And evidence of plaintiff that offers of compromise were made by him is inadmissible; York v. Conde, 66 Hun 316, 20 N. Y. Supp. 961. And negotiations between parties for the purpose of clearing title to land and compromising differences will not prejudice the rights of either party; Hand v. Swann, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 241, 21 S. W. 282.

Correspondence of this kind is not only inadmissible as evidence at the trial of the action, but it has also been held to be privileged from production for the purpose of discovery; 11 Beav. 111; 15 id. 321, 388.

Romilly, M. R., in the last of these cases, stated the rule very much in the same way as did Tindal, C. J., supra; he said: "Such communications made with a view of an amicable arrangement ought to be held very sacred, for if parties were to be afterwards prejudiced by their efforts to compromise, it would be impossible to attempt an amicable arrangement of differences."

When a correspondence for a settlement had commenced "without prejudice" but those words were afterwards dropped, it was immaterial; 6 Ont. 719.

The same principle is applied where the cause of action is other than a debt, as in a bastardy proceeding, where offers of compromise were held not admissible against the defendant as admissions of his guilt; Olson

v. Peterson, 33 Neb. 358, 50 N. W. 155; East Tennessee, V. & G. Ry. Co. v. Davis, 91 Ala. 615, 8 South. 349; Carey v. Carey, 108 N. C. 267, 12 S. E. 1038; nor does the payment of a certain sum on a claim for a much larger sum constitute a recognition of a legal liability to make further payments on such claim; Camp v. U. S., 113 U. S. 648, 5 Sup. Ct. 687, 28 L. Ed. 1081; but where offers of compromise are made to a third person, who has no authority to settle the claim, and there is no intimation that they were made "without prejudice" or in confidence, they are admissible in evidence; Moore v. Mfg. Co., 113 Mo. 98, 20 S. W. 975; a statement made by one of several defendants to his co-defendants, advocating the settlement of plaintiff's claims is not within the rule excluding offers made for the purpose of compromise, but is competent as an admission of liability; Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 30 Pac. 529; and evidence of the admission of an independent fact, although made during a negotiation tending towards a compromise, is admissible; Hess v. Van Auken, 11 Misc. 422, 32 N. Y. Supp. 126; Durgin v. Somers, 117 Mass. 55.

In a prosecution for rape, evidence that defendant had offered money to the foster father of prosecutrix to stop criminal proceedings was incompetent, Sanders v. State, 148 Ala. 603, 41 South. 466.

The extent of the protection which may be invoked by the use of the word "without prejudice" is limited to the purposes contemplated by the rule as stated and will not be extended to exclude evidence of communications, which from their character may prejudice the person to whom it is addressed if he should reject the offer; 62 L. J. Rep. Q. B. 511; nor a letter which is intended to be used by the party writing it; the words protect both parties from its use, but if the writer declare that he will use it, from that moment it loses its privileged character; 29 U. C. Q. B. 136. Such communications, when the negotiation is successful and a compromise is agreed to, are admissible both for the purpose of showing the terms of the compromise and enforcing it; 6 Ont. 719; and also in order to account for lapse of time; 15 Beav. 388; L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 38. But whether verbal or written, such communications cannot be regarded for the purpose of determining the question of costs; 58 L. J. Rep. Q. B. 501. In this well considered case, the English court of appeal established the rule contrary to what had been in some previous cases thought proper. See 2 Dr. & Sm. 29; 1 Jur. N. S. 899.

As to a compromise on a mistaken interpretation of a will, see [1905] 1 Ch. 704.

See ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

In Civil Law. An agreement between two or more persons, who, wishing to settle their disputes, refer the matter in controversy to arbitrators, who are so called because those who choose them give them full powers to arbitrate and decide what shall appear just and reasonable, to put an end to the differences of which they are made the judges. 1 Domat, Lois, Civ. liv. 1, t. 14.

COMPTE ARRÊTÉ (Fr.) An account stated in writing and acknowledged to be correct on its face by the party against whom it is stated. Chevallier v. Hyams, 9 La. Ann. 485.

COMPTROLLER. An officer of a state, or of the United States, who has certain duties to perform in the regulation and management of the fiscal matters of the government under which he holds office.

In the treasury department of the United States there is an officer known as the comptroller of the treasury. R. S. § 268 et seq. He is charged with the duty of revising accounts, upon appeal from the settlements made by the auditors. Upon the request of a disbursing officer, or the head of a department, he is required to give his decision upon the validity of a payment to be made; to approve, disapprove, or modify all decisions made by the auditors making an original construction, or modifying an existing construction of statutes, and to certify his action to the auditor. The forms of keeping and rendering all public accounts (except those relating to the postal service), the recovery of debts certified by the auditors to be due to the United States, and the preservation, with their vouchers and certificates, of accounts finally adjusted, are under his direction.

COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY.

An officer of the United States Treasury Department. R. S. § 324 et seq. He has supervision over the creation of national banks and their operations, with a visitatorial power; he may appoint receivers for them if he deems them insolvent.

COMPULSION. Forcible inducement to the commission of an act.

Acts done under compulsion are not, in general, binding upon a party; but when a man is compelled by lawful authority to do that which he ought to do, that compulsion does not affect the validity of the act; as, for example, when a court of competent jurisdiction compels a party to execute a deed, under the pain of attachment for contempt, the grantor cannot object to it on the ground of compulsion. But if the court compelled a party to do an act forbidden by law, or had not jurisdiction over the parties or the subject-matter, the act done by such compulsion would be void. See COERCION; DURESS.

COMPULSORY NON-SUIT. See NON-SUIT.

COMPULSORY PILOTAGE. See PILOT.

COMPULSORY SCHOOL ATTENDANCE

ACTS. Such acts are not unconstitutional as an invasion of the natural right of the parents to control their children; State v. Bailey, 157 Ind. 324, 61 N. E. 730, 59 L. R. A. 435; State v. Jackson, 71 N. H. 552, 53 Atl. 1021, 60 L. R. A. 739. They do not include occasions of temporary absence; State v. Jackson, 71 N. H. 552, 53 Atl. 1021, 60 L. R. A. 739.

In Washington the act provides that any parent may be summoned before a superior judge to show cause why his child should not be kept in school, and for want of cause may be found guilty of a misdemeanor and fined. See State v. Macdonald, 25 Wash. 122, 64 Pac. 912.

COMPURGATOR. One of several neighbors of a person accused of a crime or charged as a defendant in a civil action, who appeared and swore that they believed him on his oath. 3 Bla. Com. 341.

Formerly, when a person was accused of a crime, or sued in some kinds of civil actions, he might purge himself upon oath of the accusation made against him, whenever the proof was not the most clear and positive; and if upon his oath he declared himself innocent, he was absolved.

This usage, so eminently calculated to encourage perjury by impunity, was soon found to be dangerous to the public safety. To remove this evil, the laws were changed, by requiring that the oath should be administered with the greatest solemnity; but the form was soon disregarded, for the mind became easily familiarized to those ceremonies which at first imposed on the imagination, and those who cared not to violate the truth did not hesitate to treat the form with contempt. In order to give a greater weight to the oath of the accused, the law was again altered so as to require that the accused should appear before the judge with a certain number of his neighbors, who were freeholders of the hundred, who should swear that they believed the accused had sworn truly. This new species of witnesses were called compurgators. If it was not his first offence or if his compurgators did not agree to make the oath, he was put to the ordeal (q. v.). The origin of the system lies back in the history of the Teuton race. It is said still to survive in the practice of the criminal courts by which an accused person is allowed to call witnesses as to his character, as a defence, while the prosecution is not allowed to traverse their testimony. Inderwick, The King's Peace. See WAGER OF LAW.

The number of compurgators varied according to the nature of the charge and other circumstances, and the rank of the party—formerly, from two to five; later, the practice was twelve. See 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. See Du Cange, Juramentum; Spelman, Gloss. Assarth; Termes de la Ley; 3 Bla. Com. 341-348. The last reported case is 2 B. & C. 538; see 2 Poll. & Maitl. 600.

COMPUTUS (Lat. computare, to account).

A writ to compel a guardian, bailiff, receiver, or accountant, to yield up his accounts. It is founded on the stat. Westm. 2, cap. 12; Reg. Orig. 135.

CONCEAL. To withhold or keep secret mental facts from another's knowledge, as well as to hide or secrete physical objects from sight or observation. Gerry v. Dunham, 57 Me. 339.

CONCEALED WEAPONS. See DANGEROUS WEAPONS.

CONCEALERS. Such as find out concealed lands: that is, lands privily kept from the king by common persons having nothing to show for them. They are called "a troublesome, distubant sort of men; turbulent persons." Cowell.

CONCEALMENT. The improper suppression of any fact or circumstance by one of the parties to a contract from the other, which in justice ought to be known.

The omission by an applicant for insurance preliminarily to state facts known to him, or which he is bound to know, material to the risk proposed to be insured against, or omission to state truly the facts expressly inquired about by the underwriters to whom application for insurance is made, whether the same are or are not material to the risk.

Concealment, when fraudulent, avoids a contract, or renders the party using it liable for the damage arising in consequence thereof; Kidney v. Stoddard, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 252; Prentiss v. Russ, 16 Me. 30; Jackson v. Wilcox, 1 Seam. (Ill.) 344; 3 B. & C. 605; Daniels v. Ins. Co., 12 Cush. (Mass.) 416, 59 Am. Dec. 192. But it must have been of such facts as the party is bound to communicate; Webb, Poll. Torts 368; 3 E. L. & Eq. 17; Otis v. Raymond, 3 Conn. 413; Van Arsdale & Co. v. Howard, 5 Ala. 596; Kintzing v. McElrath, 5 Pa. 467; Stevens v. Fuller, 8 N. H. 463; Hanrick v. Hogg, 12 N. C. 351; Fleming v. Slocum, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 403, 9 Am. Dec. 224; George v. Johnson, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 36, 44 Am. Dec. 288. A concealment of extrinsic facts is not, in general, fraudulent, although peculiarly within the knowledge of the party possessing them; Laidlaw v. Organ, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 195, 4 L. Ed. 214; Blydenburgh v. Welsh, Baldw. 331, Fed. Cas. No. 1,583; Bench v. Sheldon, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 72; Burnett v. Stanton, 2 Ala. 181. But see Frazer v. Gervais, Walk. (Miss.) 72; Baker v. Seahorn, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 54, 55 Am. Dec. 724; Hough v. Evans, 4 McCord (S. C.) 169. And the rule against the concealment of latent defects is stricter in the case of personal than of real property; Mason v. Crosby, 1 Woodb. & M. 342, Fed. Cas. No. 9,234; 3 Campb. 508; 3 Term 759.

A failure to state facts known to an insurer or his agent, or which he ought to know, or which lessen the risk, for that only is material which tends to increase the risk, in the absence of express stipulation, and where no inquiry is made, is no concealment; May, Ins. § 207; Lexington Fire, Life & Marine Ins. Co. v. Payer, 16 Ohio 334.

Where there is confidence reposed, concealment becomes more fraudulent; 9 B. & C. 577.

See, generally, 2 Kent 482; DECEIT; MISREPRESENTATION; REPRESENTATION.

CONCERT OF EUROPE. The union between the chief powers of Europe for purposes of concerted action in matters affecting their mutual interests. It is sometimes called the Primacy of the Great Powers. It has existed under various forms from the time of the Congress of Vienna, in 1815. The most important action of the Concert of Europe within recent years was that taken at Berlin in 1878, when the status of the European provinces of Turkey was determined, and again in 1885, when the general act of the Congo Conference laid down rules determining the status of the newly acquired colonies in Africa.

CONCESSI (Lat. I have granted). A term formerly used in deeds.

It is a word of general extent, and is said to amount to a grant, feoffment, lease, release, and the like; 2 Saund. 96; Co. Litt. 301; Dane, Abr. Index; Hemphill v. Eckfeldt, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 278.

It has been held in a feoffment or fine to imply no warranty; Co. Litt. 384; 4 Co. 80; Vaughan's Argument in Vaughan 126; Butler's note, Co. Litt. 384. But see 1 Freem. 339, 414.

CONCESSIMUS (Lat. we have granted). A term used in conveyances. It created a joint covenant on the part of the grantors. 5 Co. 16; Bacon, Abr. Covenant.

CONCESSION. A grant. The word is frequently used in this sense when applied to grants made by the French and Spanish governments in Louisiana.

CONCESSOR. A grantor.

CONCILIUM. A council.

In Roman Law. A meeting of a section of the people to consider and decide matters especially affecting itself. Launspach, State and Family in Early Rome 70.

CONCILIIUM REGIS. See CURIA REGIS; PRIVY COUNCIL; COMMUNE CONCILIIUM.

CONCLUSION. The close; the end.

In Pleading. IN DECLARATIONS. That part which follows the statement of the cause of action. In personal or mixed actions, where the object is to recover damages, the conclusion is, properly, to the damage of the plaintiff, etc. Com. Dig. Pleader, c. 84; 10 Co. 1156. And see 1 M. & S. 236; DAMAGES.

The form was anciently, in the King's Bench, "To the damage of the said A B, and thereupon he brings suit;" in the Exchequer, "To the damage," etc., "whereby he is the less able to satisfy our said lord the king the debts which he owes his said majesty at his exchequer, and therefore he brings his suit;" 1 Chit. Pl. 356. It is said to be mere matter of form, and not demurrable; Piereson v. Wallace, 7 Ark. 282.

IN PLEAS. The conclusion is either to the country—which must be the case when an issue is tendered, that is, whenever the plaintiff's material statements are contradicted—or by verification, which must be the case when new matter is introduced. See VERIFICATION. Every plea in bar, it is said, must have its proper conclusion. All the formal parts of pleadings have been much modified by statute in the various states and in England.

In Practice. Making the last argument or address to the court or jury. The party on whom the burden of proof rests, in general, has the conclusion. See OPENING AND CLOSING.

In Remedies. An estoppel; a bar; the act of a man by which he has confessed a matter or thing which he can no longer deny.

For example, the sheriff is concluded by his return to a writ; and, therefore, if upon a capias he return cepi corpus, he cannot afterwards show that he did not arrest the defendant, but is concluded by his return. See Plowd. 276 b; 3 Thomas, Co. Litt. 600.

CONCLUSION TO THE COUNTRY. In Pleading. The tender of an issue for trial by a jury.

When an issue is tendered by the defendant, it is as follows: "And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country." When tendered by the plaintiff, the formula is, "And this the said A B prays may be inquired of by the country." It is held, however, that there is no material difference between these two modes of expression, and that if the one be substituted for the other the mistake is unimportant; 10 Mod. 166.

When there is an affirmative on one side and a negative on the other, or vice versa, the conclusion should be to the country; 2 Saund. 189; Gazley v. Price, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 267. So it is though the affirmative and negative be not in express words, but only tantamount thereto; Co. Litt. 126 a; 1 Saund. 103; 1 Chit. Pl. 592; Com. Dig. Plader, E, 32.

CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE. That which cannot be controlled or contradicted by any other evidence.

Evidence which of itself, whether contradicted or uncontradicted, explained or unexplained, is sufficient to determine the matter at issue. 6 Lond. L. Mag. 373.

Evidence upon the production of which the judge is bound by law to regard some fact as proved, and to exclude evidence to disprove it. Steph. Dig. Ev.

CONCLUSIVE PRESUMPTION. A rule of law determining the quantity of evidence requisite for the support of a particular averment which is not permitted to be overcome by any proof that the fact is otherwise. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 15. Thus, for example, the possession of land under claim of title for a certain period of time raises a conclusive presumption of a grant. See PRESUMPTION.

In the civil law, such presumptions are said to be juris et de jure.

CONCORD. An agreement or supposed agreement between the parties in levying a fine of lands in which the deforciant (or he who keeps the other out of possession) acknowledges that the lands in question are the right of complainant; and from the admission of right thus made, the party who levies the fine is called the cognizor, and the person to whom it is levied, the cognizee. 2 Bla. Com. 350; Cruise, Dig. tit. 35, c. 2, § 33; Com. Dig. Fine (E, 9).

CONCORDAT. A convention; a pact; an agreement. The term is generally confined to the agreements made between independent governments, and most usually applied to those between the pope and some prince.

In French Law. A composition. The French Concordat was repealed in 1906.

CONCUBEANT. Lying together. Wharton.

CONCUBINAGE. A species of marriage which took place among the ancients.

The act or practice of cohabiting, in sexual commerce, without the authority of law or a legal marriage. See 1 Brown, Civ. Law 80; Merlin, Rép.; Dig. 32. 49. 4; 7. 1. 1; Code, 5. 27. 12.

"Concubinage is the act upon the part of the woman of cohabiting with a man without ceremonial marriage, or consent and intent good at common law." U. S. v. Bitty, 155 Fed. 938. See a definition in State v. Baldwin, 214 Mo. 290, 113 S. W. 1123.

Living together and having sexual relations as husband and wife; State v. Tucker, 72 Kan. 481, 84 Pac. 126. The words concubinage and prostitution have no common law meaning, but in their popular sense cover all cases of lewd intercourse; People v. Cummings, 56 Mich. 544, 23 N. W. 215. See ABDUCTION; PROSTITUTION; PROCURATION.

CONCUBINATUS. A sort of unequal marriage which existed under Roman law between a man of superior rank and a woman of inferior rank. It did not raise the wife to the husband's level; the children were not legitimate, but they could require their father to support them, and, in Justinian's time, had a qualified right of intestate succession to him. They followed their mother's condition and could inherit from her. A man could not have more than one concubine at a time. It was abolished by the Emperor Leo the Philosopher in A. D. 887. Bryce, Studies in Hist., etc. See MARRIAGE.

CONCUBINE. A woman who cohabits with a man as his wife, without being married.

CONCUR. In Louisiana. To claim a part of the estate of an insolvent along with other claimants. Thompson v. Chauveau, 6 Mart. N. S. (La.) 460; as, "the wife concurs with her husband's creditors, and claims a privilege over them."

CONCURRENCE. In French Law. The equality of rights or privileges which several persons have over the same thing; as, for example, the right which two judgment-creditors, whose judgments were rendered at the same time, have to be paid out of the proceeds of real estate bound by them. Dict. de Jur.

CONCURRENT. Running together; having the same authority; thus, we say, a concurrent consideration occurs in the case of mutual promises; such and such courts have concurrent jurisdiction,—that is, each has the same jurisdiction.

Concurrent writs. Duplicate originals, or several writs running at the same time for the same purpose, for service on or arrest of a person, when it is not known where he is to be found; or for service on several persons, as when there are several defendants to an action. Mozley & W. Dict.

CONCURSUS. A proceeding in Louisiana similar to interpleader. See Louisiana Molasses Co. v. Le Sassier, 52 La. Ann. 2070, 28 South. 217.

CONCUSSION. In Civil Law. The unlawful forcing of another by threats of violence to give something of value. It differs from robbery in this, that in robbery the thing is taken by force, while in concussion it is obtained by threatened violence. Heineccius, Lec. El. § 1071.

CONDEMN. To sentence; to adjudge. 3 Bla. Com. 291.

To declare a vessel a prize. To declare a vessel unfit for service. 1 Kent 102; 5 Esp. 65.

CONDEMNATION. The sentence of a competent tribunal which declares a ship unfit for service. This sentence may be re-examined and litigated by the parties interested in disputing it; 5 Esp. 65; Abb. Sh. 15; 30 L. J. Ad. 145.

The judgment, sentence, or decree by which property seized and subject to forfeiture for an infraction of revenue, navigation, or other laws is condemned or forfeited to the government. See CAPTOR.

In International Law. The sentence or judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction that a ship or vessel taken as a prize on the high seas was liable to capture, and was properly and legally captured and held as prize.

Some of the grounds of capture and condemnation are: violation of neutrality in time of war; The Commercen, 2 Gall. 261, Fed. Cas. No. 3,055; carrying contraband goods; The Springbok, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 18 L. Ed. 480; The Peterhoff, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 28, 18 L. Ed. 564; The Bermuda, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 514, 18 L. Ed. 200; breach of blockade; The Plymouth, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 28, 18 L. Ed. 125; The Louisiana, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 170, 18 L. Ed. 85; The Admiral, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 603, 18 L. Ed. 58.

By the general practice of the law of nations, a sentence of condemnation is at present generally deemed necessary in order to divest the title of a vessel taken as a prize. Until this has been done, the original owner may regain his property, although the ship may have been in possession of the enemy twenty-four hours, or carried infra præsidia; Hall, Int. L.; The Estrella, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 298, 4 L. Ed. 574. A sentence of condemnation is generally binding everywhere; Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 246, 4 L. Ed. 381; Croudson v. Leonard, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 434, 2 L. Ed. 670. Title vests completely in the captors, and relates back to the time of capture; 2 Russ. & M. 35; 15 Ves. 139.

Confiscation (q. v.), in technical if not in general usage, is the act of the sovereign against a rebellious subject; condemnation as prize is the act of a belligerent against another belligerent. The former may be effected by such means as the sovereign through legal channels may please to adopt; the latter can be made only in accordance with principles recognized in the common jurisprudence of the world. Both are in rem; but confiscation recognizes the title of the original owner, while in prize the tenure of the property is qualified, provisional and destitute of absolute ownership; Winchester v. U. S., 14 Ct. Cls. 14.

The condemnation of prize property while lying in a neutral port or the port of an ally is valid; Jecker v. Montgomery, 13 How. (U. S.) 498, 14 L. Ed. 240; 4 C. Rob. 43.

By Art. 3 of the Convention Relative to the Establishment of an International Prize Court (q. v.) the judgments of national prize courts condemning neutral ships or cargoes, or enemy cargoes on board neutral ships, may be reviewed by the International Prize Court.

The word is in general use in connection with the taking of land under the right of eminent domain, q. v. The condemnation of lands is but a purchase of them in invitum, and the title acquired is but a quit claim; Lake Merced Water Co. v. Cowles, 31 Cal. 215.

In Civil Law. A sentence or judgment which condemns some one to do, to give, or to pay something, or which declares that his claim or pretensions are unfounded.

The word is used in this sense by common-law lawyers also; though it is more usual to say conviction, both in civil and criminal cases; 3 Bla. Com. 291. It is a maxim that no man ought to be condemned unheard and without the opportunity of being heard.

CONDICTIO (Lat. from condicere).

In Civil Law. A summons.

A personal action. An action arising from an obligation to do or give some certain, precise, and defined thing. Inst. 3. 15. pr.

Condictio is a general name given to personal actions, or actions arising from obligations, and is distinguished from vindicatio (real action), an action to regain possession of a thing belonging to the actor, and from actiones mixtæ (mixed actions). Condictio is also distinguished from an action ex stipulatu, which is a personal action which lies where the thing to be done or given is uncertain in amount or identity. See Calvinus, Lex.; Halifax, Anal. 117.

CONDICTIO EX LEGE. An action arising where the law gave a remedy but provided no appropriate form of action. Calvinus, Lex.

CONDICTIO INDEBITATI. An action which lies to recover that which the plaintiff has paid to the defendant, by mistake, and which he was not bound to pay, either in fact or in law.

This action does not lie if the money was due ex æquitate, or by a natural obligation, or if he who made the payment knew that nothing was due; for qui consulto dat quod non debet præsumitur donare; Bell, Dict.; Calvinus, Lex.; 1 Kames, Eq. 301.

CONDUCTIO REI FURTIVÆ. An action against the thief or his heir to recover the thing stolen.

CONDUCTIO SINE CAUSA. An action by which anything which has been parted with without consideration may be recovered. It also lay in case of failure of consideration, under certain circumstances. Calvinus, Lex.

CONDIDIT, COMMON. The name of a plea entered by a party to a libel in the Ecclesiastical Court. The administrators "formally propounded the will, in a plea known as common condidit from its merely pleading the deceased to have made the will, being of sound mind, etc., in set form—in common use . . . in this description of cases"; 3 Ad-dams Eccl. 79 (2 Engl. Eccl. Repts., Phila. Reprint 438); also used in 1 Curteis Eccl. 707 (6 Engl. Eccl. Rep. 431).

CONDITION. In Civil Law. The situation of every person in some one of the different orders of persons which compose the general order of society and allot to each person therein a distinct, separate rank. Domat, tom. ii. l. 1, tit. 9, sec. i. art. viii.

A paction or agreement which regulates that which the contractors have a mind should be done if a case which they foresee should come to pass. Domat, tom. i. l. 1, tit. 1, sec. 4.

Casual conditions are such as depend upon accident, and are in no wise in the power of the person in whose favor the obligation is entered into.

Mixed conditions are such as depend upon the joint wills of the person in whose favor the obligation is contracted and of a third person: as "If you marry my cousin, I will give," etc. Pothier.

Potestative conditions are those which are in the power of the person in whose favor the obligation was contracted: as, If I contract to give my neighbor a sum of money in case he cuts down a tree.

Resolutive conditions are those which are added not to suspend the obligation till their accomplishment, but to make it cease when they are accomplished.

Suspensive obligations are those which suspend the obligation until the performance of the condition. They are casual, mixed, or potestative.

Domat says conditions are of three sorts. The first tend to accomplish the covenants to which they are annexed. The second dissolve covenants. The third neither accomplish nor avoid, but create some change. When a condition of the first sort comes to pass, the covenant is thereby made effectual. In case of conditions of the second sort, all things remain in the condition they were in by the covenant, and the effect of the condition is in suspense until the condition comes to pass and the covenant is void. Domat, lib. i. tit. 1, § 4, art. 6. See Pothier, Obl. pt. i. c. 2, art. 1, § 1; pt. ii. c. 3, art. 2.

In Common Law. The status or relative situation of a person in the state arising from the regulations of society. Thus, a person under twenty-one is an infant, with certain privileges and disabilities. Every person is bound to know the condition of the person with whom he deals.

A qualification, restriction, or limitation modifying or destroying the original act with which it is connected.

A clause in a contract or agreement which has for its object to suspend, rescind, or modify the principal obligation, or, in a case of a will, to suspend, revoke, or modify the devise or bequest.

A modus or quality annexed by him that hath an estate, or interest or right to the same, whereby an estate, etc., may either be defeated, enlarged, or created upon an uncertain event. Co. Litt. 201 a.

A qualification or restriction annexed to a conveyance of lands, whereby it is provided that in case a particular event does or does not happen, or in case the grantor or grantee does or omits to do a particular act, an estate shall commence, be enlarged, or be defeated. Greenl. Cruise, Dig. tit. xiii. c. i. § 1.

A future uncertain event on the happening or the non-happening of which the accomplishment, modification, or rescission of a testamentary disposition is made to depend.

A condition annexed to a bond is usually termed a defeasance, which see. A condition defeating a conveyance of land in a certain event is generally a mortgage. See MORTGAGE. Conditions annexed to the realty are to be distinguished from limitations; a stranger may take advantage of a limitation, but only the grantor or his heirs of a condition; Den v. R. Co., 26 N. J. L. 1; Vermont v. Society, 2 Paine 545, Fed. Cas. No. 16,920; a limitation always determines an estate without entry or claim, and so doth not a condition; Sheppard, Touchst. 121; 2 Bla. Com. 155; 4 Kent 122, 127; Proprietors of the Church in Brattle Square v. Grant, 3 Gray (Mass.) 142, 63 Am. Dec. 725; Van Rensselaer v. Ball, 19 N. Y. 100; from conditional limitations; in case of a condition, the entire interest in the estate does not pass from the grantor, but a possibility of reverter remains to him and to his heirs and devisees; in case of a conditional limitation, the possibility of reverter is given over to a third person; Chal. R. P. 233; Proprietors of the Church in Brattle Square v. Grant, 3 Gray (Mass.) 142, 63 Am. Dec. 725; from remainders; a condition operates to defeat an estate before its natural termination, a remainder takes effect on the completion of a preceding estate; Co. Litt. Butler's note 94; from covenants; a covenant may be said to be a contract, a condition, something affixed nomine pœne for the non-fulfilment of a contract; the question often depends upon the apparent intention of the parties, rather than upon fixed rules of construction; if the clause in question goes to the whole of the consideration, it is rather to be held a condition; 2 Parsons Contr. 31; Platt, Cov. 71; 10 East 295; see Woodruff v. Power Co., 10 N. J. Eq. 489; McCullough v. Cox, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 386; Houston v. Spruance, 4 Harr. (Del.) 117; a covenant may be made by a grantee, a condition by the grantor only; 2 Co. 70; from charges; if a testator create a charge upon the devisee personally in respect of the estate devised, the devisee takes the estate on condition, but where a devise is made of an estate and also a bequest of so much to another person, payable "thereout" or "therefrom" or "from the estate," it is rather to be held a charge; 4 Kent 604; Potter v. Gardner, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 498, 6 L. Ed. 706; Taft v. Morse, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 523; Harvey v. Olmsted, 1 N. Y. 483; 14 M. & W. 698. Where a forfeiture is not distinctly expressed or implied, it is held a charge; Luckett v. White, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 480; Pownall v. Taylor, 10 Leigh (Va.) 172, 34 Am. Dec. 725. See, also, Wilson v. Wilson, 38 Me. 1, 61 Am. Dec. 227; 1 Pow. Dev. 664; CHARGE; LEGACY.

Affirmative conditions are positive conditions.

Affirmative conditions implying a negative are spoken of by the older writers: but no such class is now recognized. Shep. Touchst. 117.

Collateral conditions are those which require the doing of a collateral act. Shep. Touchst. 117.

Compulsory conditions are such as expressly require a thing to be done.

Consistent conditions are those which agree with the other parts of the transaction.

Copulative conditions are those which are composed of distinct parts or separate conditions, all of which must be performed. They are generally conditions precedent, but may be subsequent. Pow. Dev. c. 15.

Covert conditions are implied conditions.

Conditions in deed are express conditions.

Disjunctive conditions are those which require the doing of one of several things. If a condition become impossible in the copulative, it may be taken in the disjunctive. Viner, Abr. Condition (S b) (Y b 2).

Express conditions are those which are created by express words. Co. Litt. 328.

Implied conditions are those which the law supposes the parties to have had in mind at the time the transaction was entered into, though no condition was expressed. Shep. Touchst. 117.

Impossible conditions are those which cannot be performed in the course of nature.

Inherent conditions are such as are annexed to the rent reserved out of the land whereof the estate is made. Shep. Touchst. 118.

Insensible conditions are repugnant conditions.

Conditions in law are implied conditions. The term is also used by the old writers without careful discrimination to denote limitations, and is little used by modern writers. Littleton § 380; 2 Bla. Com. 155.

Lawful conditions are those which the law allows to be made.

Positive conditions are those which require that the event contemplated should happen.

Possible conditions are those which may be performed.

Precedent conditions are those which are to be performed before the estate or the obligation commences, or the bequest takes effect. Powell, Dev. c. 15. A bond to convey land on the payment of the purchase-money furnishes a common example of a condition precedent. Stone v. Ellis, 9 Cush. (Mass.)

95. They are distinguished from conditions subsequent.

Repugnant conditions are those which are inconsistent with, and contrary to, the original act.

Restrictive conditions are such as contain a restraint: as, that a lessee shall not alien. Shep. Touchst. 118.

Single conditions are those which require the doing of a single thing only.

Subsequent conditions are those whose effect is not produced until after the vesting of the estate or bequest or the commencement of the obligation.

A mortgage with a condition defeating the conveyance in a certain event is a common example of a condition subsequent. All conditions must be either precedent or subsequent. The character of a condition in this respect does not depend upon the precise form of words used; Creswell's Lessee v. Lawson, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 227, 240; Vanhorne's Lessee v. Dorrance, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 317, Fed. Cas. No. 16,857, 1 L. Ed. 391; In re New York Cent. R. Co., 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 425; Brockenbrough v. Ward's Adm'r, 4 Rand. (Va.) 352; Sprigg's Heirs v. Albin's Heirs, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 161; Barry v. Alsbury, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 151; Shinn v. Roberts, 20 N. J. L. 435, 43 Am. Dec. 636; Yeatman v. Broadwell, 1 La. Ann. 424; Rogan v. Walker, 1 Wis. 527; nor upon the position of the words in the instrument; 1 Term 645; Cas. temp. Talb. 166; the question is whether the conditional event is to happen before or after the principal; Brockenbrough v. Ward's Adm'r, 4 Rand. (Va.) 352. The word "if" implies a condition precedent, however, unless controlled by other words; Crabb, R. P. § 2152.

Unlawful conditions are those which are forbidden by law.

They are those which first, require the performance of some act which is forbidden by law, or which is malum in se; or, second, require the omission of some act commanded by law; or, third, those which encourage such acts or omissions. 1 P. Wms. 189.

Void conditions are those which are of no validity or effect.

Creation of. Conditions must be made at the same time as the original conveyance or contract, but may be by a separate instrument, which is then considered as constituting one transaction with the original; Hamilton v. Elliott, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 375; Cooper v. Whitney, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 95; Brown v. Dean, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 208; Perkins' Lessee v. Dibble, 10 Ohio 433, 36 Am. Dec. 97; Bassett v. Bassett, 10 N. H. 64; Blaney v. Bearce, 2 Greenl. (Me.) 132; Watkins v. Gregory, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 113. Conditions are sometimes annexed to and depending upon estates, and sometimes annexed to and depending upon recognizances, statutes, obligations, and other things, and are also sometimes contained in acts of parliament and records; Shep. Touchst. 117.

Unlawful conditions are void. Conditions in restraint of marriage generally are held void; Poll. Contr. 334; Williams v. Cowden, 13 Mo. 211, 53 Am. Dec. 143; see Com. v. Stauffer, 10 Pa. 350, 51 Am. Dec. 489; Denfield, Petitioner, 156 Mass. 265, 30 N. E. 1018; Knight v. Mahoney, 152 Mass. 523, 25 N. E. 971, 9 L. R. A. 573; Mann v. Jackson, 84 Me. 400, 24 Atl. 886, 16 L. R. A. 707, 30 Am. St. Rep. 358; otherwise of conditions restraining from marriage to a particular person, or restraining a widow from a second marriage: 10 E. L. & Eq. 139; 2 Sim. 255; Fahs v. Fahs, 6 Watts (Pa.) 213. A condition in general restraint of alienation is void: Schermerhorn v. Negus, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 449; 6 East 173; Potter v. Couch, 141 U. S. 296, 11 Sup. Ct. 1005, 35 L. Ed. 721; and see Blackstone Bank v. Davis, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 42, 32 Am. Dec. 241; but a condition restraining alienation for a limited time may be good: Co. Litt. 223. An unreasonable condition is also void: In re Vandevort, 62 Hun 612, 17 N. Y. Supp. 316; as is a condition repugnant to the grant: Hardy v. Galloway, 111 N. C. 519, 15 S. E. 890, 32 Am. St. Rep. 828.

Where land is devised, there need be no limitation over to make the condition good: 1 Mod. 300; 1 Atk. 361. See Tilley v. King, 109 N. C. 461, 13 S. E. 936; but where the subject of the gift is personalty without a limitation over, the condition, if subsequent, is held to be in terrorem merely, and void: 1 Jarm. Wills 887; Melville v. Gethen, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 575. See In re Vandevort, 62 Hun 612, 17 N. Y. Supp. 316. But if there be a limitation over, a non-compliance with the condition divests the bequest: 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 112. A limitation over must be to persons who could not take advantage of a breach: Jackson v. Topping, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 388, 19 Am. Dec. 515; Wheeler v. Walker, 2 Conn. 196, 7 Am. Dec. 264. A gift of personalty may not be on condition subsequent at common law, except as here stated; 1 Rolle, Abr. 412. See Halbert v. Halbert, 21 Mo. 277.

Any words suitable to indicate the intention of the parties may be used in the creation of a condition; "On condition" is a common form of commencement.

Formerly, much importance was attached to the use of particular and formal words in the creation of a condition. Three phrases are given by the old writers by the use of which a condition was created without words giving a right of re-entry. These were Sub condicione (On condition), Provisio ita quod (Provided always), Ita quod (So that). Littleton 331; Shep. Touchst. 125.

Amongst the words used to create a condition where a clause of re-entry was added were, Quod si contingat (If it shall happen), Pro (For), Si (If), Causa (On account of); sometimes, and in case of the king's grants, but not of any other person, ad faciendum or faciendo, ea intentione, ad effectum or ad propositum. For avoiding a lease for years, such precise words of condition are not required; Co. Litt. 204 b. In a gift, it is said, may be present a modus, a condition and a consideration: the words of creation are ut for the modus, si for the condition, and quid for the consideration.

Technical words in a will will not create a condition where it is unreasonable to suppose that the testator intended to create a technical condition; Emery v. Judge of Probate, 7 N. H. 142. The words of condition need be in no particular place in the instrument; 1 Term 645; 6 id. 668.

Construction of. Conditions which go to defeat an estate or destroy an act are strictly construed; while those which go to vest an estate are liberally construed; Crabb, R. P. § 2130; Mayor etc., of New York v. Stuyvesant, 17 N. Y. 34; Inhabitants of Hadley v. Mfg. Co., 4 Gray (Mass.) 140; Chapin v. School District, 35 N. H. 445; Wilson v. Galt, 18 Ill. 431; Perkins v. Fourniquet, 15 How. (U. S.) 323, 14 L. Ed. 435. The condition of an obligation is said to be the language of the obligee, and for that reason to be construed liberally in favor of the obligor; Co. Litt. 42 a, 183 a; Shep. Touchst. 375; Dy. 14 b, 17 a; Jackson v. Brownell, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 267, 3 Am. Dec. 326. But wherever an obligation is imposed by a condition, the construction is to be favorable to the obligee; Catlin v. Fire Ins. Co., 1 Sumn. 440, Fed. Cas. No. 2,522. Conditions subsequent are not favored in law but are always strictly construed because they tend to destroy estates; Peden v. R. Co., 73 Ia. 328, 35 N. W. 424, 5 Am. St. Rep. 680; and where it is doubtful whether a clause in a deed be a covenant or a condition, the courts will incline against the latter construction; Woodruff v. Woodruff, 44 N. J. Eq. 349, 16 Atl. 4, 1 L. R. A. 380.

Performance should be complete and effectual; 1 Rolle, Abr. 425. An inconsiderable casual failure to perform is not non-performance; Mayor, etc., of New York v. Stuyvesant's Heirs, 17 N. Y. 34. Any one who has an interest in the estate may perform the condition; but a stranger gets no benefit from performing it; Frederick v. Gray, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 186. Conditions precedent, if annexed to land, are to be strictly performed, even when affecting marriage. Conditions precedent can generally be exactly performed; and, at any rate, equity will not generally interfere to avoid the consequences of non-performance; 3 Ves. Ch. 89; 2 Brown, Ch. 431. But in cases of conditions subsequent, equity will interfere where there was even a partial performance, or where there is only a delay of performance; Crabb, R. P. § 2160; Leach v. Leach, 4 Ind. 628, 58 Am. Dec. 642; Laques v. Thompson, 26 Me. 525. This is the ground of equitable jurisdiction over mortgages.

Generally, where there is a gift over in case of non-performance, the parties will be held more strictly to a performance than where the estate or gift is to revert to the grantor or his heirs.

Where conditions are liberally construed, a strict performance is also required; and it may be said, in the same way, that a non-exact performance is allowed where there is a strict construction of the condition.

Generally, where no time of performance is limited, he who has the benefit of the contract may perform the condition when he pleases, at any time during his life;

Plowd. 16; Co. Litt. 208 b; and need not do it when requested; Co. Litt. 209 a. A condition precedent must be performed within a reasonable time, when no time is fixed for the performance thereof; Soderberg v. Crockett, 17 Nev. 409, 30 Pac. 826. But if a prompt performance be necessary to carry out the will of a testator, the beneficiary shall not have a lifetime in which to perform the condition; Hamilton v. Elliott, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 384. In this case, no previous demand is necessary; Hamilton v. Elliott, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 385; nor is it when the continuance of an estate depends upon an act to be done at a fixed time; Royal v. Aultman & Taylor Co., 116 Ind. 424, 19 N. E. 202, 2 L. R. A. 526. But even then a reasonable time is allowed; 1 Rolle, Abr. 449.

If the place be agreed upon, neither party alone can change it, but either may with consent of the other; 1 Rolle 444; Peck's Adm'r v. Hubbard, 11 Vt. 612; 3 Leon. 260. See CONTRACT; PERFORMANCE.

Non-performance of a condition which was possible at the time of its making, but which has since become impossible, is excused if the impossibility is caused by act of God; Poll. Contr. 387; Merrill v. Emery, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 507; or by act of law, if it was lawful at its creation; Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 366, 21 L. Ed. 287; Kelly v. Henderson, 1 Pa. 495; or by the act of the party; as, when the one imposing the obligation accepts another thing in satisfaction or renders the performance impossible by his own default; Bradstreet v. Clark, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 389; Vermont v. Society, 1 Paine 652, Fed. Cas. No. 16,919; U. S. v. De la Maza Arredondo, 6 Pet. 691, 8 L. Ed. 547; Frets v. Frets, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 339. If performance of one part becomes impossible by act of God, the whole will, in general, be excused; 1 B. & P. 242; Cro. Eliz. 280; 5 Co. 21; 1 Ld. Raym. 279.

The effect of conditions may be to suspend the obligation; as, if I bind myself to convey an estate to you on condition that you first pay one thousand dollars, in which case no obligation exists until the condition is performed; or may be to rescind the obligation; as, if you agree to buy my house on condition that it is standing unimpaired on the tenth of May, or I convey to you my farm on condition that the conveyance shall be void if I pay you one thousand dollars, in such cases the obligation is rescinded by the non-performance of the condition: or it may modify the previous obligation; as if I bind myself to convey my farm to you on the payment of four thousand dollars if you pay in bank stock, or of five thousand if you pay in money: or, in case of gift or bequest, may qualify the gift or bequest as to amount or persons.

The effect of a condition precedent is, when performed, to vest an estate, give rise to an obligation, or enlarge an estate already vested; Ludlow v. R. Co., 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 440. Unless a condition precedent be performed, no estate will vest; and this even where the performance is prevented by the act of God or of the law; Co. Litt. 42; 2 Bla. Com. 157; 4 Kent 125; Mizell v. Burnett, 49 N. C. 249, 69 Am. Dec. 744; Tilley v. King, 109 N. C. 461, 13 S. E. 936. Not so if prevented by the party imposing it; Jones v. Walker, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 163, 56 Am. Dec. 557.

If a condition subsequent was void at its creation, or becomes impossible, unlawful, or in any way void, the estate or obligation remains intact and absolute; 2 Bla. Com. 157; Taylor v. Sutton, 15 Ga. 103, 60 Am. Dec. 682. Where the condition upon which an estate is to be divested and go to a third party is founded on a contingency that can never happen, the grantee will take a fee simple; Munroe v. Hall, 97 N. C. 206, 1 S. E. 651.

In case of a condition broken, if the grantor is in possession, the estate reverts at once; Lincoln & Kennebeck Bank v. Drummond, 5 Mass. 321; Hamilton v. Elliott, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 375; Andrews v. Senter, 32 Me. 394; Thrall v. Spear, 63 Vt. 266, 22 Atl. 414; Higbee v. Rodeman, 129 Ind. 244, 28 N. E. 442; Alford v. Alford, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 245, 21 S. W. 283. But see Willard v. Henry, 2 N. H. 120. But if the grantor is out of possession, he must enter; Cross v. Carson, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 138, 44 Am. Dec. 742; Phelps v. Chesson, 34 N. C. 194; Bowen v. Bowen, 18 Conn. 535; Sperry v. Sperry, 8 N. H. 477; Inhabitants of Bangor v. Warren, 34 Me. 324, 56 Am. Dec. 657; 8 Exch. 67; and is then in, as of his previous estate; Co. Litt. Butler's note, 94. Only the grantor, his heirs or devisees, can take advantage of the failure to perform a condition subsequent, contained in a deed; Boone v. Clark, 129 Ill. 466, 21 N. E. 850, 5 L. R. A. 276; Skipwith v. Martin, 50 Ark. 141, 6 S. W. 514.

It is usually said in the older books that a condition is not assignable, and that no one but the grantor and his heirs can take advantage of a breach; Gilbert, Ten. 26. Statutory have equal rights in this respect with common-law heirs; Bowen v. Bowen, 18 Conn. 535; Marwick v. Andrews, 25 Me. 525; and in some of the states the common-law rule has been broken in upon, and the devisee may enter; McKissick v. Pickle, 16 Pa. 150; Hayden v. Stoughton, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 528; contra, Underhill v. Ry. Co., 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 455; while in others even an assignment of the grantor's interest is held valid, if made before breach; McKissick v. Pickle, 16 Pa. 140; and of a particular estate; Van Rensselaer v. Ball, 19 N. Y. 100. In equity, a condition with a limitation over to a third person will be regarded as a trust, and, though the legal rights of the grantor and his heirs may not be destroyed, equity will follow him and compel a performance of the trust; Co. Litt. 236 a;

Downer v. Downer, 9 Watts (Pa.) 60; Wheeler v. Walker, 2 Conn. 201, 7 Am. Dec. 264. Consult Blackstone; Kent, Commentaries; Crabb; Washburn, Real Prop.; Leake, Poleck, Contracts. As to effect of conditions in deeds, see Conger v. Low, 124 Ind. 368, 24 N. E. 889, 9 L. R. A. 165.

CONDITIONAL FEE. A fee which, at the common law, was restrained to some particular heirs, exclusive of others.

It was called a conditional fee by reason of the condition, expressed or implied in the donation of it, that if the donee died without such particular heirs, the land should revert to the donor. For this was a condition annexed by law to all grants whatsoever, that, on failure of the heirs specified in the grant, the grant should be at an end and the land return to its ancient proprietor.

Such a gift, then, was held to be a gift upon condition that it should revert to the donor if the donee had no heirs of his body, but, if he had, it should then remain to the donee. It was, therefore, called a fee simple, on condition that the donee had issue. As soon as the donee had issue born, his estate was supposed to become absolute, by the performance of the condition,—at least so far absolute as to enable him to charge or to alienate the land, or to forfeit it for treason. But on the passing of the statute of Westminster II., commonly called the statute De Donis Conditionalibus, the judges determined that the donee had no longer a conditional fee simple which became absolute and at his own disposal as soon as any issue was born; but they divided the estate into two parts, leaving the donee a new kind of particular estate, which they denominated a fee tail; and vesting in the donor the ultimate fee simple of the land, expectant on the failure of issue, which expectant estate was called a reversion. And hence it is said that tenant in fee tail is by virtue of the statute De Donis. 2 Bla. Com. 112.

A conditional fee may be granted by will as well as by deed; Corey v. Springer, 138 Ind. 506, 37 N. E. 322.

CONDITIONAL LIMITATION. A condition followed by a limitation over to a third person in case the condition be not fulfilled or there be a breach of it.

A condition determines an estate after breach upon entry or claim by the proper person: a limitation marks the period which determines an estate without any act on the part of him who has the next expectant interest. A conditional limitation is, therefore, of a mixed nature, partaking of that of a condition and a limitation. Proprietors of Church in Brattle Square v. Grant, 3 Gray (Mass.) 143, 63 Am. Dec. 725. The limitation over need not be to a stranger; 2 Bla. Com. 155; Fifty Associates v. Howland, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 102; Watk. Conv. 204.

See CONDITION; LIMITATION; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 459; 4 Kent 122, 127; 1 Preston, Est. §§ 40, 41, 93.

CONDITIONAL SALE. See SALE; ROLLING STOCK.

CONDITIONAL STIPULATION. In Civil Law. A stipulation on condition. Inst. 3, 16, 4.

CONDITIONS OF SALE. The terms upon which the vendor of property by auction proposes to sell it.

The instrument containing these terms, when reduced to writing or printing.

It is always prudent and advisable that the conditions of sale should be printed and exposed in the auction-room: when so done they are binding on both parties, and nothing that is said at the time of sale, to add to or vary such printed conditions, will be of any avail; 12 East 6; 6 Ves. Ch. 330; 15 id. 521; 1 Des. Ch. 573; Judson v. Wass, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 525, 6 Am. Dec. 392. See forms of conditions of sale in Babington Auct. 233-243; Sugden, Vend. App. no. 4.

CONDONACION. In Spanish Law. The remission of a debt, either expressly or tacitly.

CONDONATION. The conditional forgiveness or remission, by a husband or wife, of a matrimonial offence which the other has committed.

"A blotting out of an imputed offence against the marital relation so as to restore the offending party to the same position he or she occupied before the offence was committed." 1 Sw. & Tr. 334. See, as to this definition, 2 Bish. Mar. & Div. § 35; Odom v. Odom, 36 Ga. 286; [1893] P. D. 313.

While the condition remains unbroken, condonation, on whatever motive it proceeded, is an absolute bar to the remedy for the particular injury condoned; Bish. Mar. & Div. § 354.

The doctrine of condonation is chiefly, though not exclusively, applicable to the offence of adultery. It may be either express, i. e. signified by words or writing, or implied from the conduct of the parties. The latter, however, is much the more common; and it is in regard to that that the chief legal difficulty has arisen. The only general rule is, that any cohabitation with the guilty party, after the commission of the offence, and with the knowledge or belief on the part of the injured party of its commission, will amount to conclusive evidence of condonation; but this presumption may be rebutted by evidence; 60 L. J. Prob. 73. The construction, however, is more strict when the wife than when the husband is the delinquent party; Bish. Mar. & Div. § 355; Miles v. Miles, 101 Ill. App. 406. A mere promise to condone is not in itself a condonation; 1 Sw. & Tr. 183; Quarles v. Quarles, 19 Ala. 263; but see, contra, Christianberry v. Christianberry, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 202, 25 Am. Dec. 96, where there was only an unaccepted inducement held out to the wife to return. Knowledge of the offence is essential; Burns v. Burns, 60 Ind. 259; Turnbull v. Turnbull, 23 Ark. 615; Connelly v. Connelly, 98 Mo. App. 95, 71 S. W. 1111. A divorce will not be granted for adultery where the parties continue to live together after it was known; Land v. Martin, 46 La. Ann. 1246, 15 South. 657; Day v. Day, 71 Kan. 385, 80 Pac. 974, 6 Ann. Cas. 169; or there is sexual intercourse after knowledge of the adultery; Rogers v. Rogers, 67 N. J. Eq. 534, 58 Atl. 822; or sleeping together for a single night; Toulson v. Toulson, 93 Md. 754, 50 Atl. 401;

Todd v. Todd (N. J.) 37 Atl. 766 (the wife alleging that he had intercourse with her); contra, where for three or four nights they occupied the same bed, but there was no reconciliation and no sexual intercourse; Haun v. Haun, 58 N. J. Eq. 211, 42 Atl. 564; or where they continued to cohabit but a disease was communicated to the wife; Muir v. Muir, 92 S. W. 314, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 1355, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909; or where the husband had a venereal disease which he told the wife was the result of an injury; Wilkins v. Wilkins (N. J.) 58 Atl. 821; or where the wife denied actual guilt, and the husband, after belief in her innocence was no longer possible, left her; Gosser v. Gosser, 183 Pa. 499, 38 Atl. 1014; or where the husband lied to the wife as to his offence, and she left him after she learned the truth; Merrill v. Merrill, 41 App. Div. 347, 58 N. Y. Supp. 503.

Every implied condonation is upon the implied condition that the party forgiven will abstain from the commission of the like offence thereafter; and also treat the forgiving party, in all respects, with conjugal kindness. Such, at least, is the better opinion; though the latter branch of the proposition has given rise to much discussion. It is not necessary, therefore, that the subsequent injury be of the same kind, or proved with the same clearness, or sufficient of itself, when proved, to warrant a divorce or separation. Accordingly, it seems that a course of unkind and cruel treatment will revive condoned adultery, though the latter be a ground of divorce a vinculo matrimonii, while the former will, at most, only authorize a separation from bed and board; Johnson v. Johnson, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 637; Warner v. Warner, 31 N. J. Eq. 225; Wagner v. Wagner, 6 Mo. App. 573; Atteberry v. Atteberry, 8 Or. 224. Acts of cruelty against a wife revive acts of cruelty which have been condoned; Straus v. Straus, 67 Hun 491, 22 N. Y. Supp. 567; Denison v. Denison, 4 Wash. 705, 30 Pac. 1100.

Condonation is not so strict a bar against the wife as the husband; Armstrong v. Armstrong, 32 Miss. 279; Phillips v. Phillips, 1 Ill. App. 245; 1 Hag. Ec. 773.

The presumption of condonation from cohabitation in cases of cruelty is not so strong as in cases of adultery; 2 Bish. Mar. & Div. § 50 et seq. A divorce on the ground of cruelty will not be granted where the parties lived together a long time after the alleged cruelty and before the action was brought, as the offence will be presumed to have been condoned; O'Connor v. O'Connor, 109 N. C. 139, 13 S. E. 887; Hitchins v. Hitchins, 140 Ill. 326, 29 N. E. 888; Nullmeyer v. Nullmeyer, 49 Ill. App. 573. But not in cases where it is overlooked for a time, but its continuance makes it intolerable; Owens v. Owens, 96 Va. 191, 31 S. E. 72; Gauntt v.

Gauntt, 34 Pa. C. C. R. 100; Breedlove v. Breedlove, 27 Ind. App. 560, 61 N. E. 797.

Enduring cruelty for several years in the hope of better treatment will not prevent a reliance upon the original cruelty; Creyts v. Creyts, 133 Mich. 4, 94 N. W. 383; Cochran v. Cochran, 93 Minn. 284, 101 N. W. 179; Twyman v. Twyman, 27 Mo. 383.

Where a husband's infidelity was condoned, a remedy because of such infidelity was revived by his subsequent cruelty to her; Moorhouse v. Moorhouse, 90 Ill. App. 401; Fisher v. Fisher, 93 Md. 298, 48 Atl. 833; or by subsequent adultery; 19 L. Q. R. 365; or by subsequent desertion; 29 id. 108.

Condonation of husband's cruelty is upon the explicit condition that he will thereafter treat her kindly. A breach of this condition revives the right of suit for the original misconduct; Smith v. Smith, 167 Mass. 87, 45 N. E. 52; and it is not necessary that the subsequent misconduct shall be sufficient to warrant divorce without regard to previous cruelty if there is such frequent unkindness as to warrant the belief that it will break out into acts of gross cruelty; Jefferson v. Jefferson, 168 Mass. 456, 47 N. E. 123.

If condonation was based upon conditions which the husband failed to perform, it was ineffective; Ferguson v. Ferguson, 145 Mich. 290, 108 N. W. 682. It is always based upon the condition of proper conduct afterwards; a breach of a condition revives the original offence; Owens v. Owens, 96 Va. 191, 31 S. E. 72; Mosher v. Mosher, 16 N. D. 269, 113 N. W. 99, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 820, 125 Am. St. Rep. 654; [1905] P. 94.

There is no condonation in case of a continuing venereal disease; Hooe v. Hooe, 122 Ky. 590, 92 S. W. 317, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 729, 13 Ann. Cas. 214.

CONDUCT MONEY. Money paid to a witness for his travelling expenses. Wharton.

CONDUCTIO (Lat.). A hiring; a bailment for hire.

It is the correlative of locatio, a letting for hire. Conducti actio, in the civil law, is an action which the hirer of a thing or his heir had against the latter or his heir to be allowed to use the thing hired. Conducere, to hire a thing. Conductor, a hirer, a carrier; one who undertakes to perform labor on another's property for a specified sum. Conductus, the thing hired. Calvinus, Lex.; Du Cange; 2 Kent 586. See BAILMENT.

CONE AND KEY. A woman at fourteen or fifteen years of age may take charge of her house and receive cone and key (that is, keep the accounts and keys). Cowell. Said by Lord Coke to be cover and keye, meaning that at that age a woman knew what in her house should be kept under lock and key. Co. 2d Inst. 203.

CONFECTIO (Lat. from conficere). The making and completion of a written instrument. 5 Co. 1.

CONFEDERACY. In Criminal Law. An agreement between two or more persons to do an unlawful act or an act which though not unlawful in itself, becomes so by the confederacy. The technical term usually employed to signify this offence is conspiracy. See State v. Crowley, 41 Wis. 284, 22 Am. Rep. 719; Watson v. Navigation Co., 52 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 353.

In Equity Pleading. An improper combination alleged to have been entered into between the defendants to a bill in equity.

A general charge of confederacy is made a part of a bill in chancery, and is the fourth part, in order, of the bill; but it has become merely formal, except in cases where the complainant intends to show that such a combination actually exists or existed, in which case a special charge of such confederacy must be made. Story, Eq. Pl. § 29; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 41.

In International Law. An agreement between two or more states or nations, by which they unite for their mutual protection and good. This term is applied to such an agreement made between two independent nations; but it is also used to signify the union of different states of the same nation; as, the confederacy of the states.

The original thirteen states, in 1781, adopted for their federal government the "Articles of confederation and perpetual union between the states." These were completed on the 15th of November, 1777, and, with the exception of Maryland, which afterwards also agreed to them, were adopted by the several states, which were thereby formed into a federal government, going into effect on the first day of March, 1781, 1 Story, Const. § 225, and so remained until the adoption of the present constitution, which acquired the force of the supreme law of the land on the first Wednesday of March, 1789. Owings v. Speed, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 420, 5 L. Ed. 124. See ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION.

CONFEDERATE BONDS. As the bonds of the Confederate States have been declared illegal by the Fourteenth Amendment, a contract entered into since the war for the sale and delivery of such bonds is void, and no action will lie for a breach of the contract; Branch v. Haas, 16 Fed. 53.

CONFEDERATE MONEY. Contracts made during the rebellion in Confederate money may be enforced in the United States courts, and parties compelled to pay in lawful money of the United States the actual value of the notes at the time and place of contract; Effinger v. Kenney, 115 U. S. 566, 6 Sup. Ct. 179, 29 L. Ed. 495; and when payment was accepted and receipted for by the creditor, it was held to be a valid payment; Glasgow v. Lipse, 117 U. S. 327, 6 Sup. Ct. 757, 29 L. Ed. 901. These notes were currency imposed upon the community by irresistible force, and it must be considered in the courts of law the same as if it had been issued by a foreign government temporarily occupying a part of the territory of the United States; Thorington v. Smith, 8 Wall.

(U. S.) 1, 19 L. Ed. 361; and a contract payable in such notes was not invalid; Hanauer v. Woodruff, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 448, 21 L. Ed. 224; Confederate Note Case, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 556, 22 L. Ed. 196; Stevens v. Griffith, 111 U. S. 50, 4 Sup. Ct. 283, 28 L. Ed. 348; Cook v. Lillo, 103 U. S. 792, 26 L. Ed. 460; Stewart v. Salamon, 94 U. S. 434, 24 L. Ed. 275; Rives v. Duke, 105 U. S. 132, 26 L. Ed. 1031; but where a contract was entered into before the war, and the deferred payments came due and were discharged with depreciated currency, it was held, as against the non-ratification of the payment, to be void; Opie v. Castleman, 32 Fed. 511.

After one has accepted payment in Confederate money and acquiesces in the transaction for fifteen years, he is concluded by laches from disputing its validity; Washington v. Opie, 145 U. S. 214, 12 Sup. Ct. 822, 36 L. Ed. 680. Where payment was made in 1864 in such money, it was sufficient consideration though it afterwards became worthless; Dohoney v. Womack, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 354, 19 S. W. 883, 20 S. W. 950. The act of a fiduciary in accepting Confederate money in payment of debts due the estate and investing the proceeds in bonds of the Confederate States issued for the avowed purpose of waging war against the United States is wholly illegal; Opie v. Castleman, 32 Fed. 511.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA.

The Confederate States were a de facto government in the sense that its citizens were bound to render the government obedience in civil matters, and did not become responsible, as wrong-doers, for such acts of obedience; Thorington v. Smith, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 9, 19 L. Ed. 361; but it was not strictly a de facto government; ibid.; see Williams v. Bruffy, 96 U. S. 176, 24 L. Ed. 716. During the war the inhabitants of the Confederate States were treated as belligerents; Thorington v. Smith, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 10, 19 L. Ed. 361; U. S. v. Alexander, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 404, 17 L. Ed. 915. Land sold to the Confederate government, and captured by the Federal government, became the property of the United States; U. S. v. Huckabee, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 414, 21 L. Ed. 457.

The Confederate States was an illegal organization, within the provision of the constitution of the United States prohibiting any treaty, alliance, or confederation of one state with another; whatever efficacy, therefore, its enactments possessed in any state entering into that organization, must be attributed to the sanction given to them by that state; Williams v. Bruffy, 96 U. S. 176, 24 L. Ed. 716. The laws of the several states were valid except so far as they tended to impair the national authority or the rights of citizens under the constitution; ibid.

Unless suspended or superseded by the commanders of the United States forces which occupied the insurrectionary states, the laws of those states, so far as they affected the inhabitants, remained in force during the war, and over them their tribunals continued to exercise their ordinary jurisdiction; Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S. 509, 24 L. Ed. 1118.

"Beyond all doubt, the late rebellion against the government of the United States was a sectional civil war; and all persons interested in or affected by its operations are entitled to have their rights determined by the laws applicable to such a condition of affairs." Waite, C. J., in Young v. U. S., 97 U. S. 39, 24 L. Ed. 992.

Transactions between persons actually dwelling within the territory dominated by the government of the Confederate States were not invalid for the reason only that they occurred under the sanction of the laws of that government or of any local government recognizing its authority; that within such territory, the preservation of order, the maintenance of police regulations, the prosecution of crimes, the protection of property, the enforcement of contracts, the celebration of marriages, the settlement of estates, etc., were, during the war, under the control of the local governments constituting the so-called Confederate States. What was done in respect of such matters under the authority of the laws of these local de facto governments should not be disregarded or held invalid merely because those governments were organized in hostility to the Union. Judicial and legislative acts in the respective states should be respected by the courts if they were not hostile in their purpose or mode of enforcement to the authority of the national government, and did not impair the rights of citizens under the federal constitution. Harlan, J., in Baldy v. Hunter, 171 U. S. 388, 18 Sup. Ct. 890, 43 L. Ed. 208.

"The government of the Confederate States, although in no sense a government de jure, and never recognized by the United States as in all respects a government de facto, yet was an organized and actual government, maintained by military power, throughout the limits of the states that adhered to it, except in those portions of them protected from its control by the presence of the armed forces of the United States; and the United States had conceded to that government some of the rights and obligations of a belligerent." Oakes v. U. S., 174 U. S. 794, 19 Sup. Ct. 864, 43 L. Ed. 1169.

See 2 So. L. Rev. 313; 3 id. 47; SECESSION.

CONFEDERATION. The name given to the form of government which the American colonies during the revolution devised for their mutual safety and government.

CONFEDERATION CLAUSE. See CONFEDERACY.

CONFÉRENCE. In French Law. A similarity between two laws or two systems of laws.

In International Law. Verbal explanations between the representatives of at least two nations, for the purpose of accelerating matters by avoiding the delays and difficulties of written communications.

A meeting of plenipotentiaries of different nations to adjust differences or formulate a plan of joint action; as, the conference at Berlin of representatives of the United States, Great Britain, and Germany respecting the affairs of Samoa, in 1889, the monetary conference at Brussels of representatives of the United States and several European powers in 1894, and the Hague Conferences of 1899 and 1907. See CONGRESS.

In Legislation. Mutual consultations by two committees appointed, one by each house of a legislature, in cases where the houses cannot agree in their action.

CONFESSION. In Criminal Law. The voluntary admission or declaration made by a person who has committed a crime or misdemeanor, to another, of the agency or participation which he had in the same. People v. Parton, 49 Cal. 632; State v. Novak, 109 Ia. 717, 79 N. W. 465.

Judicial confessions are those made before a magistrate or in court in the due course of legal proceedings.

Extra-judicial confessions are those made by the party elsewhere than before a magistrate or in open court.

Voluntary confessions are admissible in evidence; Rafe v. State, 20 Ga. 60; Hamilton v. State, 3 Ind. 552; Dick v. State, 30 Miss. 593; Craig v. State, 30 Tex. App. 619, 18 S. W. 297; McQueen v. State, 94 Ala. 50, 10 South. 433; State v. Coella, 3 Wash. 99, 28 Pac. 28; Wigginton v. Com., 92 Ky. 282, 17 S. W. 634; People v. Taylor, 93 Mich. 638, 53 N. W. 777; People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 19 Pac. 161; Anderson v. State, 25 Neb. 555, 41 N. W. 357; State v. Demarest, 41 La. Ann. 617, 6 South. 136; Com. v. Culver, 126 Mass. 464; but a confession is not admissible in evidence where it is obtained by temporal inducement, by threats, promise or hope of favor held out to the party in respect of his escape from the charge against him, by a person in authority; 4 C. & P. 570; State v. York, 37 N. H. 175; Simon v. State, 5 Fla. 285; Smith v. State, 10 Ind. 106; Smith v. Com., 10 Gratt. (Va.) 734; Flagg v. People, 40 Mich. 706; Joe v. State, 38 Ala. 422; Earp v. State, 55 Ga. 136; Garrard v. State, 50 Miss. 147; Territory v. McClin, 1 Mont. 394; Beery v. U. S., 2 Col. 186; State v. Carr, 37 Vt. 191; Laros v. Com., 84 Pa. 200; see People v. Rogers, 18 N. Y. 9, 72 Am. Dec. 484; Com. v. Cuffee, 108 Mass. 285; State v. Day, 55 Vt. 510; State v. De Graff, 113 N. C. 688, 18 S. E. 507; or where there is reason to presume that such person appeared to the party to sanction such threat or inducement; 5 C. & P. 539; 2 Crawf. & D. 347; State v. Roberts, 12 N. C. 259.

To make an admission or a declaration a confession, it must, in some way, have been an acknowledgment of guilt, and have been so intended, for it must have been voluntary; State v. Novak, 109 Ia. 717, 79 N. W. 465; People v. Parton, 49 Cal. 632. Voluntary does not in such cases mean spontaneous; Levison v. State, 54 Ala. 520; Roesel v. State, 62 N. J. L. 216, 41 Atl. 408. There are three kinds: (1) A confession in open court of the prisoner's guilt, which is conclusive and renders any proof unnecessary. (2) The next highest kind of confession is that made before a magistrate. (3) The lowest is that which is made to any other person, and requires to be sustained by proof of corroborating circumstances; Garrard v. State, 50 Miss. 147.

The distinction between a confession and a statement or declaration is recognized both by courts and text-writers. A confession in a legal sense is restricted to an acknowledgment of guilt made by a person after an offense has been committed and does not apply to a mere statement or declaration of an independent fact from which such guilt may be inferred; State v. Campbell, 73 Kan. 688, 85 Pac. 784, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 533, 9 Ann. Cas. 1203; State v. Reinhart, 26 Or. 466, 38 Pac. 822; People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286, 62 L. R. A. 193.

Where a defendant attended an inquest in obedience to a subpoena and testified under a threat of punishment for contempt if he refused, his testimony was held admissible, though he was not advised of his rights when it was given; it being shown that he was not under arrest or formally accused of crime; People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286, 62 L. R. A. 193. To the same effect, Taylor v. State, 37 Neb. 788, 56 N. W. 623; People v. Mondon, 103 N. Y. 211, 8 N. E. 496, 57 Am. Rep. 709; People v. Chaplean, 121 N. Y. 266, 24 N. E. 469; Wilson v. State, 110 Ala. 1, 20 South. 415, 55 Am. St. Rep. 17; State v. Coffee, 56 Conn. 399, 16 Atl. 151; People v. Hickman, 113 Cal. 80, 45 Pac. 175; People v. Parton, 49 Cal. 632. The inducement must be held out by a person in authority; Com. v. Tuckerman, 10 Gray (Mass.) 173; but see 4 C. & P. 570; otherwise the confession is admissible; 1 C. & P. 97, 129; State v. Gossett, 9 Rich. (S. C.) 428; Shifflet v. Com., 14 Gratt. (Va.) 652; Com. v. Sego, 125 Mass. 210; Cady v. State, 44 Miss. 332; Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245; but see Spears v. State, 2 Ohio St. 583; or if the inducement be spiritual merely; 1 Mood. 197; Jebb, Ir. 15; Com. v. Drake, 15 Mass. 161; Fouts v. State, 8 Ohio St. 98; or an appeal to the party to speak the truth; L. R. 1 C. C. 362; Cady v. State, 44 Miss. 333; Huffman v. State, 130 Ala. 89, 30 South. 394; State v. General Armstrong, 167 Mo. 267, 66 S. W.

961; Com. v. Sego, 125 Mass. 210; even if the appeal comes from an officer of the law; 15 Ir. L. R. N. S. 60; Harding v. State, 54 Ind. 359; State v. McLaughlin, 44 Ia. 82; Davis v. State, 2 Tex. App. 588; Hornsby v. State, 94 Ala. 55, 10 South. 522; Com. v. Myers, 160 Mass. 530, 36 N. E. 481; but see 2 Crawf. & D. 152. Mere advice to confess and tell the truth does not exclude; State v. Hagan, 54 Mo. 192; Stafford v. State, 55 Ga. 592; but see State v. Carson, 36 S. C. 524, 15 S. E. 588; and the temporal inducement must have been held out by the person to whom the confession was made; 4 C. & P. 223; unless collusion be suspected; 4 C. & P. 550. The fact that defendant was intoxicated when he made his confession, though tending to affect its weight, is not ground for its exclusion; White v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 625, 25 S. W. 784; State v. Hogan, 117 La. 863, 42 South. 352; Lester v. State, 32 Ark. 727; Eskridge v. State, 25 Ala. 30.

Confessions made by an accused in her sleep were held admissible; State v. Morgan, 35 W. Va. 266, 13 S. E. 385; contra, People v. Robinson, 19 Cal. 41.

Nervousness on the part of the accused will not render his statements inadmissible; State v. Jones, 47 La. Ann. 1524, 18 South. 515; or that he was greatly excited; People v. Cokahnour, 120 Cal. 253, 52 Pac. 505; Young v. State, 90 Md. 579, 45 Atl. 531; or that he had but recently recovered from delirium tremens; Com. v. Chance, 174 Mass. 245, 54 N. E. 551, 75 Am. St. Rep. 306.

A confession is admissible though elicited by questions put to a prisoner by a constable, magistrate, or other person; 5 C. & P. 312; Austin v. State, 14 Ark. 556; Com. v. Smith, 119 Mass. 305; Murphy v. People, 63 N. Y. 590; State v. Carlisle, 57 Mo. 102; State v. Ingram, 16 Kan. 14; McQueen v. State, 94 Ala. 50, 10 South. 433; Bell v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 276, 20 S. W. 549; State v. McLaughlin, 44 Ia. 82; even though the question assumes the prisoner's guilt or the confession is obtained by trick or artifice; 1 Mood. 28; Sam v. State, 33 Miss. 347; State v. Fredericks, 85 Mo. 145; State v. Staley, 14 Minn. 105 (Gil. 75); Balbo v. People, 80 N. Y. 484; King v. State, 40 Ala. 314; and although it appears that the prisoner was not warned that what he said would be used against him; 8 Mod. 89; 9 C. & P. 124. Statements made to a trial judge freely and voluntarily are admissible in evidence; State v. Chambers, 45 La. Ann. 36, 11 South. 944.

Confession under oath is admissible when freely made; Com. v. Wesley, 166 Mass. 248, 44 N. E. 228; Shoeffler v. State, 3 Wis. 823; Com. v. Clark, 130 Pa. 641, 18 Atl. 988; State v. Legg, 59 W. Va. 315, 53 S. E. 545, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1152; U. S. v. Brown, 40 Fed. 457; People v. McGloin, 91 N. Y. 241. That it was made under oath does not change it from a confession into a deposition; People v.

The question of the admissibility of confessions at examinations under oath is almost wholly controlled by statute, the prisoner being permitted to become a witness for himself, and being entitled to be cautioned that his statements may be used against him. It is then simply a question whether the statutory requirements have been fulfilled. Where a statute contained no provision authorizing or permitting an oath in the preliminary examination, a confession under oath was held inadmissible; People v. Gibbons, 43 Cal. 557.

The spirit of the law is that one accused of crime shall not be required to be put under oath, and thus placed in the dilemma of either being required to testify against himself or being subject to the penalties of false swearing; Adams v. State, 129 Ga. 248, 58 S. E. 822, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 468, 12 Ann. Cas. 158, where the accused were summoned before a coroner's jury, and without being informed of their right not to testify, were sworn.

A statement, not compulsory, made by a party not at the time a prisoner under a criminal charge, is admissible in evidence against him, although it is made upon oath; 5 C. & P. 530; State v. Broughton, 29 N. C. 96, 45 Am. Dec. 507; State v. Vaigneur, 5 Rich. (S. C.) 391; Com. v. Reynolds, 122 Mass. 454; Alston v. State, 41 Tex. 39; Snyder v. State, 59 Ind. 105; contra, Josephine v. State, 39 Miss. 615; see 8 C. & P. 250; otherwise, if the answers are compulsory; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 236; People v. McMahon, 15 N. Y. 384; Shoeffler v. State, 3 Wis. 823; People v. McMahon, 2 Park. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 663; U. S. v. Prescott, 2 Dill. 405, Fed. Cas. No. 16,085; People v. Soto, 49 Cal. 69.

A confession may be inferred from the conduct and demeanor of a prisoner when a statement is made in his presence affecting himself; 5 C. & P. 332; State v. Crowson, 98 N. C. 595, 4 S. E. 143; Slattery v. People, 76 Ill. 217; Murphy v. State, 36 Ohio St. 628; Broyles v. State, 47 Ind. 251; unless such statement is made in the deposition of a witness or examination of another prisoner before a magistrate; 1 Mood. 347; 6 C. & P. 164.

Where a confession has been obtained, or an inducement held out, under circumstances which would render a confession inadmissible, a confession subsequently made is not admissible, unless from the length of time intervening, from proper warning of the consequences, or from other circumstances, there is reason to presume that the hope or fear which influenced the first confession is dispelled; 1 Greenl. Ev. 221; 4 C. & P. 225; State v. Guild, 10 N. J. L. 163, 18 Am. Dec. 404; State v. Patrick, 48 N. C. 443; State v. Vaigneur, 5 Rich. (S. C.) 391; Van Buren

v. State, 24 Miss. 512; Bubster v. State, 33 Neb. 663, 50 N. W. 953; State v. Drake, 113 N. C. 624, 18 S. E. 166; State v. Carr, 37 Vt. 191; Com. v. Sheets, 197 Pa. 69, 46 Atl. 753; People v. Castro, 125 Cal. 521, 58 Pac. 133; Smith v. State, 74 Ark. 397, 85 S. W. 1123; State v. Wood, 122 La. 1014, 48 South. 438, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 392; U. S. v. Charles, 2 Cra. C. C. 76, Fed. Cas. No. 14,786; and the motives proved to have been offered will be presumed to continue, and to have produced the confession, unless the contrary is shown by clear evidence, and the confession will be rejected; State v. Roberts, 12 N. C. 259; Peter v. State, 12 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 31; Com. v. Taylor, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 605; State v. Potter, 18 Conn. 166; Moore v. Com., 2 Leigh (Va.) 701; Bob v. State, 32 Ala. 560; Deathridge v. State, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 75.

Under such circumstances, contemporaneous declarations of the party are receivable in evidence, or not, according to the attending circumstances; but any act of the party, though done in consequence of such confession, is admissible if it appears from a fact thereby discovered that so much of the confession as immediately relates to it is true; 1 Leach 263, 386; Russ & R. 151; Com. v. Knapp, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 496, 20 Am. Dec. 491; Jordan v. State, 32 Miss. 382; State v. Motley, 7 Rich. (S. C.) 327.

A confession made before a magistrate is admissible; State v. Patterson, 68 N. C. 292; State v. Hand, 71 N. J. L. 137, 58 Atl. 641; though made before the evidence of the witnesses against the party was concluded; 4 C. & P. 567.

Parol evidence, precise and distinct, of a statement made by a prisoner before a magistrate during his examination, is admissible though such statement neither appears in the written examination nor is vouched for by the magistrate; State v. Bowe, 61 Me. 171; 7 C. & P. 188; but not if it is of a character which it was the duty of the magistrate to have noted; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 227, n. Parol evidence of a confession before a magistrate may be given where the written examination is inadmissible through informality; 4 C. & P. 550, n.; State v. Parish, 44 N. C. 239.

Accusatory statements made to a prisoner and not replied to by him are admissible; Simmons v. State (Ala.) 61 South. 466.

The whole of what the prisoner said must be taken together; 1 Greenl. Ev. 218; 2 C. & K. 221; Brown v. Com., 9 Leigh (Va.) 633, 33 Am. Dec. 263; Republica v. McCarty, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 86, 1 L. Ed. 300. Where a prisoner signs the confession which is written by another for him, he waives any objection to it as evidence; Com. v. Coy, 157 Mass. 200, 32 N. E. 4.

The prevailing rule is that confessions are prima facie voluntary; Egner v. State, 25

Ohio St. 464; Com. v. Culver, 126 Mass. 464; State v. Sanders, 84 N. C. 728; State v. Meyers, 99 Mo. 107, 12 S. W. 516; State v. Hottman, 196 Mo. 110, 94 S. W. 237; State v. Grover, 96 Me. 363, 52 Atl. 757; Thurman v. State, 169 Ind. 240, 82 N. E. 64; but it is sometimes held that confessions are prima facie involuntary and therefore inadmissible, and they can be rendered admissible only by showing that they are voluntary and not constrained; Amos v. State, 83 Ala. 1, 3 South. 749, 3 Am. St. Rep. 682; Jackson v. State, 83 Ala. 76, 3 South. 847; Corley v. State, 50 Ark. 305, 7 S. W. 255; but a confession is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that the party is in custody, provided it is not extorted by inducements or threats; Pierce v. U. S., 160 U. S. 355, 16 Sup. Ct. 321, 40* L. Ed. 454; Nicholson v. State, 38 Md. 140; State v. Johnson, 30 La. Ann. 881; State v. Hernia, 68 N. J. L. 299, 53 Atl. 85; State v. Conly, 130 N. C. 683, 41 S. E. 534; Hintz v. State, 125 Wis. 405, 104 N. W. 110; Calloway v. State, 103 Ala. 27, 15 South. 821; State v. Armstrong, 203 Mo. 554, 102 S. W. 503.

The practice of eliciting confessions by a magistrate during the preliminary examination has been strongly condemned. Such a power, once admitted, is liable to unlimited abuse. It is a power not judicial, but essentially inquisitorial, and, on the whole, prejudicial to the administration of justice; Kelly v. State, 72 Ala. 244; Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 596, 16 Sup. Ct. 644, 40 L. Ed. 819.

In Bram v. U. S., 168 U. S. 532, 18 Sup. Ct. 183, 42 L. Ed. 568, it was said: To communicate to a person suspected of the commission of crime the fact that his co-suspect has stated that he had seen him commit the offense; to make this statement to him under circumstances which call imperatively for an admission or a denial; and to accompany the communication with conduct which necessarily perturbs the mind and engenders confusion of thought; and then to use the denial made by the person so situated as a confession because of the form in which the denial is made, is not only to compel the reply, but to produce the confusion of words supposed to be found in it, and then use statements thus brought into being for the conviction of the accused. A plainer violation as well of the letter as of the spirit and purpose of the constitutional immunity could scarcely be conceived of.

A confession by a prisoner who had been confined for several days in a sweat box is not admissible against him, though no threats nor coercion were used, nor any inducements held out to him; Anmons v. State, 80 Miss. 592, 32 South. 9, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 768, 92 Am. St. Rep. 607. Such sweat box procedure is unlawful; Flagg v. People, 40 Mich. 706.

Where the accused was taken to the office of the chief of police, and in the presence of several deputies, detectives and newspaper men, for an hour to an hour and a half, was closely questioned by those present until he was very much broken down, being very weak but "not quite collapsed," and in this condition he confessed, such confession was held involuntary and inadmissible; Galagher v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 296, 50 S. W. 388.

In 31 Ont. Rep. 14, it is said that as to statements made by persons accused, while in custody, in response to questions put by an officer in charge, the judges have regarded the matter from three points of view. First, there are those who consider the practice so reprehensible that any statement so obtained should not be given in evidence. Others, that while the practice of interrogation is undesirable and not to be encouraged, yet the answer so obtained could not be rejected as evidence. The third class held that such an investigation might be so conducted as to be useful and even desirable in the furtherance of justice.

That the confession was drawn out by the questions of a police officer will not render it inadmissible; Bram v. U. S., 168 U. S. 532, 18 Sup. Ct. 183, 42 L. Ed. 568; Com. v. Storti, 177 Mass. 339, 58 N. E. 1021; Com. v. Williams, 171 Mass. 461, 50 N. E. 1035; State v. Phelps, 74 Mo. 128. In State v. Brinte, 4 Pennewill (Del.) 551, 58 Atl. 258, an objection was made that such a confession was involuntary under the 5th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution, but it was held that this applies to judicial examinations, not to extra-judicial confessions; so in (1893) 2 Q. B. 12.

The prisoner's confession, when the corpus delicti is not otherwise proved, is insufficient to warrant his conviction; State v. Guild, 10 N. J. L. 163, 185, 18 Am. Dec. 404; Keithler v. State, 10 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 229; Flower v. U. S., 116 Fed. 241, 53 L. Ed. 271; Bergen v. People, 17 Ill. 426, 65 Am. Dec. 672. See, contra, Russ. & R. 481, 509; 1 Leach 311; People v. Ruloff, 3 Park. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 401; Stephen v. State, 11 Ga. 225.

Whether a confession is voluntary is held to be primarily for the court to determine; State v. Hernia, 68 N. J. L. 299, 53 Atl. 85; State v. Burgwyn, 87 N. C. 572; Hunter v. State, 74 Miss. 515, 21 South. 305; Smith v. Com., 10 Gratt. (Va.) 734; Brown v. State, 124 Ala. 76, 27 South. 250; Murray v. State, 25 Fla. 528, 6 South. 498; State v. Gorham, 67 Vt. 365, 31 Atl. 845; State v. Sherman, 35 Mont. 512, 90 Pac. 981, 119 Am. St. Rep. 869; Com. v. Howe, 132 Mass. 250; State v. Stebbins, 188 Mo. 387, 87 S. W. 460; People v. White, 176 N. Y. 331, 68 N. E. 630; Com. v. Johnson, 217 Pa. 77, 66 Atl. 233; Hintz v. State, 125 Wis. 405, 104 N. W. 110; other cases hold that, on conflicting evidence, it is for the jury; Burdge v. State, 53 Ohio

St. 512, 42 N. E. 594; People v. Cassidy, 133 N. Y. 612, 30 N. E. 1003; Com. v. Sheu, 190 Pa. 23, 42 Atl. 377; Com. v. Burrough, 162 Mass. 513, 39 N. E. 184; People v. Robinson, 86 Mich. 415, 49 N. W. 260; State v. Stebbins, 188 Mo. 387, 87 S. W. 460; State v. Moore, 160 Mo. 443, 61 S. W. 199; Com. v. Epps, 193 Pa. 512, 44 Atl. 570; People v. Oliveria, 127 Cal. 377, 59 Pac. 772.

When there is a conflict of evidence as to whether a confession is or is not voluntary, if the court decides that it is admissible, the question may be left to the jury, with the direction that they shall reject the confession if, upon the whole evidence, they are satisfied it was not the voluntary act of the defendant; Wilson v. U. S., 162 U. S. 613, 16 Sup. Ct. 895, 40 L. Ed. 1090, followed in Roesel v. State, 62 N. J. L. 216, 41 Atl. 408; Burdge v. State, 53 Ohio St. 512, 42 N. E. 594; Hardy v. U. S., 3 App. D. C. 35; Com. v. Preece, 140 Mass. 276, 5 N. E. 494.

Consult Greenleaf; Wigmore; Phillipps, Evidence; Wharton, Criminal Evidence; Roscoe, Crim. Ev.; Joy, Confessions; 1 Bennett & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 112. See ADMISSIONS.

CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE. The admission in a pleading of the truth of the facts as stated in the pleading to which it is an answer, and the allegation of new and related matter of fact which destroys the legal effect of the facts so admitted. The plea and any of the subsequent pleadings may be by way of confession and avoidance, or, which is the same thing, in confession and avoidance. Pleadings in confession and avoidance must give color. See COLOR; 1 East 212. They must admit the material facts of the opponent's pleading, either expressly in terms; Dy, 171 b; or in effect. They must conclude with a verification; 1 Saund. 103, n. For the form of statement, see Steph. Pl. 72, 79.

Pleas in confession and avoidance are either in justification and excuse, which go to show that the plaintiff never had any right of action, as, for example, son assault demesne, or in discharge, which go to show that his right has been released by some matter subsequent.

CONFESSOR. A priest of some Christian church who hears confessions of their sins by members of his church and undertakes to give them absolution of their sins. The common law does not recognize any such relation, at least so as to exempt or prevent the confessor from disclosing such communications as are made to him in this capacity, when he is called upon as a witness. See CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS.

CONFIDENCE. This word is considered peculiarly appropriate to create a trust. It is, when applied to the subject of a trust, as nearly a synonym as the English language is capable of. Trust is a confidence which one man reposes in another, and confidence is a trust. Coates' Appeal, 2 Pa. 133.

CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS.

Those statements with regard to any transaction made by one person to another during the continuance of some relation between them which calls for or warrants such communications.

At law, certain classes of such communications are held not to be proper subjects of inquiry in courts of justice, and the persons receiving them are excluded from disclosing them when called upon as witnesses, upon grounds of public policy.

Secrets of state and communications between the government and its officers are usually privileged; Gray v. Pentland, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 23; Thompson v. R. Co., 22 N. J. Eq. 111; 5 H. & N. 538; Totten v. U. S., 92 U. S. 107, 23 L. Ed. 605. So also the consultations of the judges, the testimony of arbitrators in certain cases, and the sources of information in criminal prosecutions; 1 Wharton, Ev. sec. 600; Welcome v. Batchelder, 23 Me. 85; 4 C. & P. 327; Woodbury v. Northy, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 85, 14 Am. Dec. 214; Worthington v. Scribner, 109 Mass. 487, 12 Am. Rep. 736; Stephen's Dig. Ev. art. 113.

Of this character are all communications made between husband and wife in all cases in which the interests of the other party are involved; Stein v. Bowman, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 223, 10 L. Ed. 129; Drew v. Tarbell, 117 Mass. 90; Castello v. Castello, 41 Ga. 613; Corse v. Patterson, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 153; Warner v. Pub. Co., 132 N. Y. 181, 30 N. E. 393; French v. Wade, 35 Kan. 391, 11 Pac. 138; Higham v. Vanosdol, 101 Ind. 160. Nor does it make any difference which party is called upon as a witness; Ry. & M. 352; or when the relation commenced; 3 C. & P. 558; or whether it has terminated; Stein v. Bowman, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 209, 10 L. Ed. 129; Barnes v. Camack, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 392; 1 C. & P. 364; Robb's Appeal, 98 Pa. 501; Stanley v. Montgomery, 102 Ind. 102, 26 N. E. 213; Crose v. Rutledge, 81 Ill. 266; Lingo v. State, 29 Ga. 470. A third party who overheard such a conversation may testify as to it; Com. v. Griffin, 110 Mass. 181; Gannon v. People, 127 Ill. 518, 21 N. E. 525, 11 Am. St. Rep. 147. The wife may be examined as to a conversation with her husband in the presence of a third party; State v. Center, 35 Vt. 379; Lyon v. Prouty, 154 Mass. 488, 28 N. E. 908; Fay v. Guynon, 131 Mass. 31; Floyd v. Miller, 61 Ind. 224; Westerman v. Westerman, 25 Ohio St. 500; but not if the third person failed to hear or paid no attention to the conversation; Jacobs v. Hesler, 113 Mass. 160.

The confidential counsellor, solicitor, or attorney of any party cannot be compelled to disclose papers delivered or communications made to him, or letters written or entries made by him, in that capacity; 4 B. & Ad. 876; Britton v. Lorenz, 45 N. Y. 57; Orton v. McCord, 33 Wis. 205; Johnson v. Sullivan, 23 Mo. 474; Chirac v. Reinecker, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 295, 6 L. Dresser, 103 Mass. 523; Vogel v. Gruaz, 110 U. S. 311, 4 Sup. Ct. 12, 28 L. Ed. 158; Snow v. Gould, 74 Me. 540, 43 Am. Rep. 604; 9 Exch. 298; nor will he be permitted to make such communications against the will of his client; 4 Term 756, 759; 12 J. B. Moo. 520; Bank of Utica v. Mersereau, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 528, 49 Am. Dec. 189; Anon., 8 Mass. 370; nor even if the communication is made in the presence of a third person; Blount v. Kimpton, 155 Mass. 378, 29 N. E. 590, 31 Am. St. Rep. 554; nor will the client be compelled to disclose such communications; Bigler v. Reyher, 43 Ind. 112; Duttenhofer v. State, 34 Ohio St. 91, 32 Am. Rep. 362; Hemenway v. Smith, 28 Vt. 701; not even when the client takes the witness stand on his own behalf; Bigler v. Reyher, 43 Ind. 112; Barker v. Kuhn, 38 Ia. 395; Duttenhofer v. State, 34 Ohio St. 91, 32 Am. Rep. 362; contra, Inhabitants of Woburn v. Henshaw, 101 Mass. 193, 3 Am. Rep. 333.

The privilege extends to all matters made the subject of professional intercourse, without regard to the pendency of legal proceedings; 5 C. & P. 592; Miller v. Weeks, 22 Pa. 89; Foster v. Hall, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 89, 22 Am. Dec. 400; Sargent v. Inhabitants of Hampden, 38 Me. 581; Wetherbee v. Ezekiel, 25 Vt. 47; Bacon v. Frisbie, 80 N. Y. 394, 36 Am. Rep. 627; Jones v. State, 65 Miss. 179, 3 South. 379; Young v. State, 65 Ga. 525; but see Hemenway v. Smith, 28 Vt. 701; Thompson v. Kilborne, 28 Vt. 750, 67 Am. Dec. 742; and to matters discovered by the counsellor, etc., in consequence of this relation; 5 Esp. 52.

Conversations between solicitor or counsel and a party, relating to the subject matter of a suit, are privileged; Montgomery v. Perkins, 94 Fed. 23; but evidence of a contract between an attorney and client for compensation, or the assignment of an interest in the judgment, is not privileged; Strickland v. Mills, 74 S. C. 16, 54 S. E. 220, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 426; and the attorney is released from his obligation of secrecy so far as is necessary to protect his interests; Keck v. Bode, 23 Oh. C. C. 413; Mitchell v. Bromberger, 2 Nev. 345, 90 Am. Dec. 550; Minard v. Stillman, 31 Or. 164, 49 Pac. 976, 65 Am. St. Rep. 815; Nave v. Baird, 12 Ind. 318; L. R. 35 Ch. Div. 722. An attorney will be compelled to disclose the name and residence of a person who retains him as counsel for an accused person, but he need not disclose the interest of such person in the matter; U. S. v. Lee, 107 Fed. 702. A communication to a counselor in the course of his employment by persons other than his client is not privileged; General Electric Co. v. Jonathon Clark & Sons Co., 108 Fed. 170; likewise a letter written by an attorney to his client advising him of the terms of an injunction granted against him; Aaron v. U. S., 155 Fed. 833, 84 C. C. A. 67.

The doctrine of privileged communications does not apply to a solicitor of patents when he is not an attorney-at-law; Brungger v. Smith, 49 Fed. 124.

Communications between a party or his legal adviser and witnesses are privileged; L. R. 8 Eq. 522; 16 id. 112; but see In re Mellen, 18 N. Y. Supp. 515; so are communications between parties to a cause touching the preparation of evidence; Hare, Discov. 152; 43 L. J. C. P. 206; but see 6 B. & S. 888; 3 H. & N. 871. Communications between an attorney and client are not privileged where the latter disclaims the existence of such relations.

Interpreters; 4 Term 756; Jackson v. French, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 337, 20 Am. Dec. 699; In re Mellen, 18 N. Y. Supp. 515; Parker v. Carter, 4 Munf. (Va.) 273, 6 Am. Dec. 513; Maas v. Bloch, 7 Ind. 202; Andrews v. Solomon, 1 Pet. C. C. 356, Fed. Cas. No. 378; and agents to collect evidence; 2 Beav. 173; 1 Phill. Ch. 471, 687; are considered as standing in the same relation as the attorney; so, also, is a barrister's clerk; 2 C. & P. 195; 5 id. 177; 5 M. & G. 271; Foster v. Hall, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 93, 22 Am. Dec. 400; Jackson v. French, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 337, 20 Am. Dec. 699; Sibley v. Waffle, 16 N. Y. 180; Landsberger v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 450; but not a student at law in an attorney's office; Barnes v. Harris, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 576, 54 Am. Dec. 734. Contra, Pritchard v. Henderson, 3 Pennewill (Del.) 128, 50 Atl. 217.

The cases in which communications to counsel have been held not to be privileged may be classed under the following heads: When the communication was made before the attorney was employed as such; 1 Ventr. 197; see Sargent v. Hampden, 38 Me. 581; Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 636, 22 Pac. 26, 131; Althouse v. Wells, 40 Hun (N. Y.) 336; Wilson v. Godlove, 34 Mo. 337; after the attorney's employment has ceased; 4 Term 431; Williams v. Benton, 12 La. Ann. 91; when the attorney was consulted because he was an attorney, yet was not acting as such; 4 Term 753; Alderman v. People, 4 Mich. 414, 69 Am. Dec. 321; Goltra v. Wolcott, 14 Ill. 89; Branden & Nethers v. Gowing, 7 Rich. (S. C.) 459; where his relation of attorney was the cause of his being present at the taking place of a fact, but there was nothing in the circumstances to make it amount to a communication; 2 Ves. Ch. 189; 2 Curt. Eccl. 866; Patten v. Moor, 29 N. H. 163; when the matter communicated was not in its nature private, and could in no sense be termed the subject of a confidential communication; 7 East 357; Riggs v. Denniston, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 198, 2 Am. Dec. 145; Lloyd v. Davis, 2 Ind. App. 170, 28 N. E. 232; when it was intended that the communications should be imparted by him to others; Ferguson v. McBean, 91 Cal. 63, 27 Pac. 518, 14 L. R. A. 65; when the things disclosed had no reference to professional employment, though disclosed while the relation of attorney and client subsisted; Peake 77; when the attorney made himself a subscribing witness; 2 Curt. Eccl. 866; 3 Burr. 1687; when he is a party to the transaction; Dudley v. Beck, 3 Wis. 274; Story, Eq. Pl. § 601; when he was directed to plead the facts to which he is called to testify; Cormier v. Richard, 7 Mart. La. (N. S.) 179; where an attorney is employed only to draw up a deed and bill of sale to be executed by another to such person, he may testify as to what passed between them and himself; O'Neill v. Murry, 6 Dak. 107, 50 N. W. 619.

The attorney may be called upon to prove his client's handwriting; Brown v. Jewett, 120 Mass. 215; L. R. 8 Eq. 575; L. R. 5 Ch. Ap. 703; Glenn v. Liggett, 47 Fed. 472; to identify his client; 2 D. & R. 347; though not to disclose his client's address; L. R. 15 Eq. 257; unless the client be a ward of court; L. R. 8 Eq. 575; or a bankrupt; L. R. 5 Ch. 703. He may be required to testify as to whether he was retained by his client, and in what capacity; Whart. Ev. 589; Heaton v. Findlay, 12 Pa. 304; but see Chirac v. Reinicker, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 280, 6 L. Ed. 474.

After testator's death on the question whether an instrument present for probate was his will, the attorney may testify as to directions given him in its preparation by testator; Doherty v. O'Callaghan, 157 Mass. 90, 31 N. E. 726, 17 L. R. A. 188, 34 Am. St. Rep. 258. He may testify as to what was said in their presence by a third person brought by his client; Tyler v. Hall, 106 Mo. 313, 17 S. W. 319, 27 Am. St. Rep. 337.

The rule of privilege does not extend to confessions made to clergymen; 1 Greenl. Ev. 247; 4 Term 753; 2 Skimm. 404; Com. v. Drake, 15 Mass. 161; 1 McNally 253; State v. Bostick, 4 Harr. Y.) 637; and information acquired by the physicians of a railroad company in treating an injured person against her protest is privileged; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Thomas, 152 Fed. 365, 81 C. C. A. 491; but he may testify from knowledge and information acquired while not treating a patient professionally; Fisher v. Fisher, 129 N. Y. 654, 29 N. E. 951.

Privilege does not extend to confidential friends; 4 Term 758; Hoffman v. Smith, 1 Cal. (N. Y.) 157; Brayton v. Chase, 3 Wis. 456; Goltra v. Wolcott, 14 Ill. 89; L. R. 18 Eq. 649; clerks; 3 Campb. 337; 1 C. & P. 337; bankers; 2 C. & P. 325; a banker is not privileged to withhold the identity of a person depositing securities in his bank; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Harriman, 157 Fed. 432; stewards; 2 Atk. 524; 11 Price 455; nor servants; Isham v. State, 6 How. (Miss.) 35.

Where, at the trial, the privilege of a physician is waived, such waiver extends to subsequent trials; Elliott v. Kansas City, 198 Mo. 593, 96 S. W. 1023, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1082, 8 Ann. Cas. 653; McKinney v. R. Co., 104 N. Y. 352, 10 N. E. 544; Green v. Crapo, 181 Mass. 55, 62 N. E. 956; contra, Burgess v. Drug Co., 114 Ia. 275, 86 N. W. 307, 54 L. R. A. 364, 89 Am. Rep. 372 (referred to in brief of counsel, but not cited in the opinion of the court, in McKinney v. R. Co., 104 N. Y. 352, 10 N. E. 544); but a waiver by the plaintiff as to the testimony of his own physicians does not operate as a waiver of the testimony of a physician called by the defendant who had attended the plaintiff for the same injuries but at a different time; Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. v. Jacobi, 112 Fed. 924, 50 C. C. A. 619.

A trial judge may properly refuse to charge the jury that they might draw inferences from a party's refusal to waive the privilege with respect to his physician's testimony; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Durkee, 147 Fed. 99, 78 C. C. A. 107, 8 Ann. Cas. 790; Brackney v. Fogle, 156 Ind. 535, 60 N. E. 303; Wigm. Ev. § 2386; contra, Deutschmann v. R. Co., 87 App. Div. 503, 84 N. Y. Supp. 887.

See COMMERCIAL AGENCY; PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS; LIBEL.

CONFIRMATIO (Lat. confirmare). The conveyance of an estate, or the communication of a right that one hath in or unto lands or tenements, to another that hath the possession thereof, or some other estate therein, whereby a voidable estate is made sure and unavoidable, or whereby a particular estate is increased or enlarged. Shep. Touchst. 311; 2 Bla. Com. 325.

Confirmatio crescens tends and serves to increase or enlarge a rightful estate, and so to pass an interest.

Confirmatio diminuens tends or serves to diminish and abridge the services whereby the tenant holds.

Confirmatio perficiens tends and serves to confirm and make good a wrongful and defeasible estate, by adding the right to the possession or defeasible seisin, or to make a conditional estate absolute, by discharging the condition.

CONFIRMATIO CHARTARUM (Lat. confirmation of the charters). A statute passed in the 25 Edw. I., whereby the Great Charter is declared to be allowed as the common law; all judgments contrary to it are declared void; copies of it are ordered to be sent to all cathedral-churches and read twice a year to the people; and sentence of excommunication is directed to be as constantly denounced against all those that, by word or deed or counsel, act contrary thereto or in any degree infringe it. 1 Bla. Com. 128.

CONFIRMATIO PERFICIENS. A confirmation which makes valid a wrongful and defeasible title, or makes a conditional estate, absolute. Shep, Touchst. 311; Black.

CONFIRMATION. A contract by which that which was voidable is made firm and unavoidable.

A species of conveyance.

Where a party, acting for himself or by a previously authorized agent, has attempted to enter into a contract, but has done so in an informal or invalid manner, he confirms the act and thus renders it valid, in which case it will take effect as between the parties from the original making. See 2 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 2067-2069.

To make a valid confirmation, the party must be apprized of his rights; and where there has been a fraud in the transaction he must be aware of it and intend to confirm his contract. See 1 Ball & B. 353; 2 Sch. & L. 486; 12 Ves. Ch. 373; 1 id. 215; 1 Atk. 301.

A confirmation does not strengthen a void estate. For confirmation may make a voidable or defeasible estate good, but cannot operate on an estate void in law; Co. Litt. 295. The canon law agrees with this rule; and hence the maxim, qui confirmat nihil dat. Toullier, Dr. Civ. Fr. l. 3, t. 3, c. 6, n. 476. See Viner, Abr.; Comyns, Dig.; Ayliffe, Pand. *386; 1 Chit. Pr. 315; Blessing v. House's Lessee, 3 Gill & J. (Md.) 290; Love's Lessee v. Shields, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 405; 9 Co. 142 a; RATIFICATION.

CONFIRMEE. He to whom a confirmation is made.

CONFIRMOR. He who makes a confirmation to another.

CONFISCARE. To confiscate.

CONFISCATE. To appropriate to the use of the state.

Especially used of the goods and property of alien enemies found in a state in time of war. 1 Kent 52 et seq. Bona confiscata et forisfacta are said to be the same (1 Bla. Com. 299), and the result to the individual is the same whether the property be forfeited or confiscated; but, as distinguished, an individual forfeits, a state confiscates, goods or other property. Used also as an adjective—forfeited. 1 Bla. Com. 299.

In International Law. It is a general rule that the property of the subjects of an enemy found in the country may be appropriated by the government without notice, unless there be a treaty to the contrary; Hall, Int. L. 397; The Emulous, 1 Gall. 563, Fed. Cas. No. 4,479; Ware v. Hylton, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 199, 1 L. Ed. 568. It has been frequently provided by treaty that foreign subjects should be permitted to remain and continue their business, notwithstanding a rupture between the governments, so long as they conducted themselves innocently; and when there was no such treaty, such a liberal permission has been announced in the very declaration of war. Vattel, l. 3, c. 4, § 63. Sir Michael Foster (Discourses on High Treason, pp. 185-6) mentions several instances of such declarations by the king of Great Britain; and he says that alien enemies were thereby enabled to acquire personal chattels and to maintain actions for the recovery of their personal rights in as full a manner as alien friends; 1 Kent 57.

In the United States, the broad principle has been laid down "that war gives to the sovereign full right to take the persons and confiscate the property of the enemy, wherever found. The mitigations of this rigid rule which the policy of modern times has introduced into practice will more or less affect the exercise of this right, but cannot impair the right itself;" Brown v. U. S., 8 Cra. (U. S.) 122, 3 L. Ed. 504. Commercial nations have always considerable property in the possession of their neighbors; and when war breaks out, the question what shall be done with enemies' property found in the country is one rather of policy than of law, and is properly addressed to the consideration of the legislature, and not to courts of law. The strict right of confiscation exists in congress; and without a legislative act authorizing the confiscation of enemies' property, it cannot be condemned; 8 Cra. (U. S.) 128, 3 L. Ed. 504.

Notwithstanding this positive statement of the law, private property of enemy subjects was not confiscated during the wars of the 19th century, and it may safely be said that an international custom prohibiting such confiscation has grown up having nearly the force of law. An exception is to be found in the right of a belligerent to seize and make use of such private property of enemy subjects as may be of use in the conduct of the war, upon payment of proper indemnity. On the other hand, public property, such as provisions, ammunition, rolling stock of state railroads, realizable securities, funds, etc., of one belligerent in the territory of the other, is subject to seizure. See IV H. C. Art. 53.

The claim of a right to confiscate debts contracted by individuals in time of peace, and which remain due to subjects of the enemy in time of war, rests upon much the same principle as that concerning the enemy's tangible property found in the country at the commencement of the war. But it is the universal practice to forbear to seize and confiscate debts and credits. 1 Kent 64.

The right of confiscation exists as fully in case of a civil war as it does when the war is foreign, and rebels in arms against the lawful government, or persons inhabiting the territory exclusively within the control of the rebel belligerents, may be treated as public enemies. So may adherents, or aiders and abettors of such a belligerent, though not resident in such enemy's territory; Miller v. U. S., 11 Wall. (U. S.) 269, 20 L. Ed. 135. Proceedings under the Confiscation Act of July 17, 1862, were justified as an exercise of belligerent rights against a public enemy, but were not, in their nature, a punishment for treason. Therefore, confiscation being a proceeding distinct from, and independent of, the treasonable guilt of the owner of the property confiscated, pardon for treason will not restore rights to property previously condemned and sold in the exercise of belligerent rights as against a purchaser in good faith and for value; Semmes v. U. S., 91 U. S. 21, 23 L. Ed. 193.

A suit in confiscation is an action of entirely different nature from a proceeding in prize. Confiscation is the act of the sovereign against a rebellious subject. Condemnation as prize is the act of a belligerent against another belligerent or against an offending neutral. Confiscation may be effected by such means, either summary or arbitrary, as the sovereign expressing his will through lawful channels, may please to adopt. Condemnation as prize can only be made in accordance with principles of law recognized in the common jurisprudence of the world. Both are proceedings in rem, but confiscation recognizes the title of the original owner to the property which is to be forfeited, while in prize the tenure of the property seized is qualified, provisional and destitute of absolute ownership; The Peterhoff, Blatchf. Pr. Cas. 620, Fed. Cas. No. 11,025. To confiscate property seized upon land, resort must be had to the common-law side of the court; The Confiscation Cases, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 110, 22 L. Ed. 320; prize proceedings are always in admiralty; Winchester v. U. S., 14 Ct. Cls. 48.

CONFITENS REUS. An accused person who admits his guilt. Wharton.

CONFLICT OF LAWS. A contrariety or opposition in the laws of states or countries in cases where the rights of the parties, from their relations to each other or to the subject-matter in dispute, are liable to be affected by the laws of both jurisdictions.

As a term of art, it also includes the deciding which law is in such cases to have superiority. It also includes many cases where there is no opposition between two systems of law, but where the question is how much force may be allowed to a foreign law with reference to which an act has been done, either directly or by legal implication, in the absence of any domestic law exclusively applicable to the case.

As to the most suitable term to apply to this branch of the law, see PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Among the leading canons on the subject are these: the laws of every state affect and bind directly all property, real or personal, situated within its territory, all contracts made and acts done and all persons resident within its jurisdiction, and are supreme within its own limits by virtue of its sovereignty; Milne v. Moreton, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 361, 6 Am. Dec. 466; Green v. Van Buskirk, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 151, 19 L. Ed. 109; Minor v. Cardwell, 37 Mo. 354, 90 Am. Dec. 390; Cowp. 208; 4 T. R. 192. Ambassadors and other public ministers while in the state to which they are sent, and members of an army marching through or stationed in a friendly state, are not subject to this rule; Crawford v. Wilson, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 522; U. S. v. Lafontaine, 4 Cra. C. C. 173, Fed. Cas. No. 15,550.

Possessing exclusive authority, with the above qualification, a state may regulate the manner and circumstances under which property, whether real or personal, in possession or in action, within it, shall be held, transmitted, or transferred, by sale, barter, or bequest, or recovered or enforced; the condition, capacity, and state of all persons within it; the validity of contracts and other acts done there; the resulting rights and duties growing out of these contracts and acts; and the remedies and modes of administering justice in all cases; Story, Conf. Laws § 18; Vattel, b. 2, c. 7, §§ 84, 85.

Whatever force and obligation the laws of one country have in another depends upon the laws and municipal regulations of the latter; that is to say, upon its own proper jurisprudence and polity, and upon its own express or tacit consent; Huberus, lib. 1, t. 3, § 2.

The power of determining whether, or how far, or with what modification, or upon what conditions, the laws of one state or any rights dependent upon them shall be recognized in another, is a legislative one. The comity involved is a comity of the states, and not of the courts, and the judiciary must be guided in deciding the question by the principle and policy adopted by the legislature; Thompson v. Waters, 25 Mich. 214, 12 Am. Rep. 243; Stack v. Cedar Co., 151 Mich. 21, 114 N. W. 576, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 616, 14 Ann. Cas. 112. The contract in the latter case was made in Michigan, in which state an Illinois corporation had been admitted to do business. An Illinois statute provided that no corporation should interpose the defense of usury in any action. It was contended that this disability imposed in the state creating the corporation followed it and attached to its charter in Michigan. But the court held that the restriction in Illinois would not follow it into Michigan so as to prevent it from taking advantage of the local statute against usury.

When a statute or the unwritten or common law of the country forbids the recognition of the foreign law, the latter is of no force whatever. When both are silent, then the question arises, which of the conflicting laws is to have effect. Each sovereignty must determine for itself whether it will enforce a foreign law; Finney v. Guy, 106 Wis. 256, 82 N. W. 595, 49 L. R. A. 486; Hunt v. Whewell, 122 Wis. 33, 99 N. W. 599; Fox v. Telegraph-Cable Co., 138 Wis. 648, 120 N. W. 390, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 490. It is a principle universally recognized that the revenue laws of one country have no force in another. The exemption laws and laws relating to married women, as well as the local statute of frauds, and statutes authorizing distress and sale for non-payment of rent, are not recognized in another jurisdiction under the principles of comity. Morgan v. Neville, 74 Pa. 52; Waldron v. Ritchings, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 288; Siegel v. Robinson, 56 Pa. 19, 93 Am. Dec. 775; Ross v. Wigg, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 192; Ludlow v. Van Rensselaer, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 95.

The statutes of one state giving a right of action to enforce a penalty have no force in another; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123; Russell v. R. Co., 113 Cal. 258, 45 Pac. 323, 34 L. R. A. 747; Ferguson v. Sherman, 116 Cal. 169, 47 Pac. 1023, 37 L. R. A. 622; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Kirk, 222 Pa. 567, 71 Atl. 1085, 128 Am. St. Rep. 823.

So rights of action arising under foreign bankrupt, insolvent, or assignment laws are not recognized by a state when prejudicial to the interests of its own citizens; Warner v. Jaffray, 96 N. Y. 248, 48 Am. Rep. 616; In re Waite, 99 N. Y. 443, 2 N. E. 440; Barth v. Backus, 140 N. Y. 230, 35 N. E. 425, 23 L. R. A. 47, 37 Am. St. Rep. 545; Gilman v. Lockwood, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 409, 18 L. Ed. 432.

A remedy special to a particular foreign state is not, by any principle of comity enforceable elsewhere and must be applied within the jurisdiction of the domicile of the corporation; Fowler v. Lamson, 146 Ill. 472, 34 N. E. 932, 37 Am. St. Rep. 163; Young v. Farwell, 139 Ill. 326, 28 N. E. 845; Tuttle v. Bank, 161 Ill. 497, 44 N. E. 984, 34 L. R. A. 750; National Bank of Auburn v. Dillingham, 147 N. Y. 603, 42 N. E. 338, 49 Am. St. Rep. 692; Marshall v. Sherman, 148 N. Y. 9, 42 N. E. 419, 34 L. R. A. 757, 51 Am. St. Rep. 654.

Generally, force and effect will be given by any state to foreign laws in cases where from the transactions of the parties they are applicable, unless they affect injuriously her own citizens, violate her express enactments, or are contra bonos mores.

The broad rule as to contracts is thus stated by Wharton (Conf. Laws § 401): "Obligations, in respect to the mode of their solemnization, are subject to the rule locus regit actum; in respect to their interpretation, to the lex loci contractus; in respect to the mode of their performance, to the law of the place of their performance. But the lex fori determines when and how such laws, when foreign, are to be adopted, and in all cases not specified above, supplies the applicatory law." This rule is quoted by Hunt, J., in Scudder v. Bank, 91 U. S. 411, 23 L. Ed. 245. In a later part of his opinion, in the same case, he says: "Matters bearing upon the execution, the interpretation, and the validity of a contract are determined by the law of the place where the contract is made. Matters connected with its performance are regulated by the law prevailing at the place of performance. Matters respecting the remedy, such as the bringing of suits, admissibility of evidence, statutes of limitations, depend upon the law of the place where the suit is brought. A careful consideration of the decisions of this country and of England will sustain these positions;" cited in Milliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241, which is in turn cited in Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 1 Sup. Ct. 102, 27 L. Ed. 104, where, in a suit on a bond executed in New York to indemnify the plaintiff's intestate as surety in an appeal bond in a suit in Louisiana, the court defined the "seat of the obligation" and held the law applicable to be the lex loci solutionis which was the law of Louisiana; the lex loci contractus was said to be a confusing phrase, because it is in reality the law not of the place of execution but of the seat of the obligation, and that might be either the place of execution or the place of performance.

Mr. Wharton expressed the rule in the following terms, in the second edition (1881) of his Conf. Laws § 401: "A contract, so far as concerns its formal making, is to be determined by the place where it is solemnized, unless the lex situs of property disposed of otherwise requires; so far as concerns its interpretation, by the law of the place where its terms are settled, unless the parties had the usages of another place in view; so far as concerns the remedy, by the law of the place of suit; and so far as concerns its performance, by the law of the place of performance."

The criterion by which to ascertain whether a particular inquiry relates to the substance of the contract or the remedy merely is said to be: Suppose the legislature of the locus contractus to enact the law of the forum, making it applicable to the existing contract. If the result is that the obligation of the contract is either increased or impaired thereby, then the point to which the law of the forum relates is part of the obligation or substance of the contract and is not merely a matter of remedy, and the lex loci, not the lex fori, should control. If, on the other hand, the result is that the obligation of the contract is not at all affected, being neither increased nor diminished, then the inquiry relates to a matter of remedy only, and the lex fori should govern. 16 Harv. L. Rev. 262.

A contract (to pay money) was made in Dakota by a married woman and was payable there. The Dakota law permitted her to contract and to sue, and be sued as though she were unmarried. She owned land in Missouri which the Dakota creditor sought to attach. By the law of Missouri (lexi fori) a married woman (for purposes of this case) was competent to be sued personally, but her property could not be attached. The question was whether the particular remedy of attachment related to the obligation of the contract (to be governed by Dakota law) or to the remedy merely, in which case the law of Missouri should control. By a divided court it was held that the Missouri law should control; Ruhe v. Buck, 124 Mo. 178, 27 S. W. 412, 25 L. R. A. 178, 46 Am. St. Rep. 439.

Where an action was brought in Massachusetts upon a contract made in New York to convey land situated in Massachusetts, it was held that the measure of damages for the breach of contract was part of the obligation of the contract to be determined by New York law, not a mere matter of remedy to be controlled by the lex fori; Atwood v. Walker, 179 Mass. 514, 61 N. E. 58.

Prof. Beale (23 Harv. L. Rev.) considers very fully the laws governing the validity of contracts and reaches substantially the following results (here summarized by permission):

Story states as a general principle that the law of the place of making governs, but there is an exception where the contract is to be elsewhere performed, and hence the law of the place of performance governs. The rule that the intention of the parties shall govern may be directly traced to the dictum of Lord Mansfield in Robinson v. Bland, 2 Burr. 1077, and was derived by him from the doctrines of the Civil Law. The rule that the law of the place of performance governs may be traced to the statement of Judge

Story in his Conflict of Laws § 280, often repeated verbatim in the cases; and it was on his part a restatement of his opinion in Van Reimsdyk v. Kane, 1 Gall. 371, 375, Fed. Cas. No. 16,871. The present tendency greatly stimulated by the late English and federal cases, is toward the adoption of the law intended by the parties. Though the greater number of states still profess adherence to Judge Story's rule, it is being superseded by the other rule. In enumerating the states which accept one or the other of the principal rules, it must be pointed out that in several the question appears not to have arisen; in others, the decisions or dicta are not sufficiently clear to justify including the state in either list.

Cas. 85; and, in usury cases, also the federal courts and Alabama, Georgia, Kansas, Missouri, Mississippi, Ohio, and Tennessee.

THE FEDERAL CASES. 1. Place of making governs: Fidelity Mut. Life Ass'n v. Jeffords, 107 Fed. 402, 46 C. C. A. 377, 53 L. R. A. 193; Robinson v. Brick Co., 127 Fed. 804, 62 C. C. A. 484; thus the place of making is adopted as opposed to the law of the domicile of the parties: Northwestern S. S. Co. v. Ins. Co., 161 Fed. 166; or to the place from which the offer is sent; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States v. Trimble, 83 Fed. 85, 27 C. C. A. 404; or to the place where a document is signed, prior to its taking effect elsewhere as an obligation; Phipps v. Harding, 70 Fed. 468, 17 C. C. A. 203, 30 L. R. A. 513.

2. In a small number of cases, it has been held that the law of the place of performance governs the validity of the contract; Smith v. Ins. Co., 5 Fed. 582; Pacific States Savings, Loan & Bldg. Co. v. Green, 123 Fed. 43, 59 C. C. A. 167; Berry v. Chase, 146 Fed. 625, 77 C. C. A. 161; but where there is more than one place of performance, it has been held that the parties ex necessitate must be referred to the law of the place of making; Morgan v. R. Co., 2 Woods 244, Fed. Cas. No. 9,804.

3. The place by the law of which the contract is valid: In usury cases it has often been held that, if the place of performance would hold an agreement void for usury, the law of the place of making may be resorted to for making the contract valid; Sturdivant v. Bank, 60 Fed. 730, 9 C. C. A. 256; Andruss v. Saving Ass'n, 94 Fed. 575, 36 C. C. A. 336; Dygart v. Trust Co., 94 Fed. 913, 37 C. C. A. 389.

4. Place intended by the parties: In some cases the court seeks to find the intention of the parties, and governs the contract by that; Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 6 L. Ed. 253; Gibson v. Ins. Co., 77 Fed. 561. This is the rule most commonly laid down in the usury cases, where the parties are presumed to intend the law of the place of making or of the place of performance, according to which would make the contract valid; Cromwell v. Sac County, 96 U. S. 51, 24 L. Ed. 681; Matthews v. Murchison, 17 Fed. 760; so in other than usury cases; Hubbard v. Bank, 72 Fed. 234, 18 C. C. A. 525; but where both laws would make the agreement usurious, the intention of the parties is allowed no weight, and the law of the place of making governs; Andrews v. Pond, 13

Pet. (U. S.) 65, 10 L. Ed. 61; Heath v. Griswold, 5 Fed. 573, 18 Blatch. 555. The law of the place of making is presumed, in some cases, to be that intended by the parties; Liverpool & G. W. S. Co. v. Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 9 Sup. Ct. 469, 32 L. Ed. 788; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Cohen, 179 U. S. 262, 21 Sup. Ct. 106, 45 L. Ed. 181; The Majestic, 60 Fed. 624, 9 C. C. A. 161, 23 L. R. A. 746; in a few other cases, the law of the place of performance is presumed to be that intended by the parties; Hall v. Cordell, 142 U. S. 116, 12 Sup. Ct. 154, 35 L. Ed. 956; Johnson v. Norton Co., 159 Fed. 361, 86 C. C. A. 361. When the parties expressly agree that the contract shall be subject to a certain law, it has been intimated, though never expressly decided by the Supreme Court, that the court will give effect to this intention; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hill, 193 U. S. 551, 24 Sup. Ct. 538, 48 L. Ed. 788; but no such stipulation will be given effect where it is regarded as against public policy; Lewisohn v. Steamship Co., 56 Fed. 602; Botany Worsted Mills v. Knott, 76 Fed. 582; or where the parties would thereby avoid the provisions of a statute of the place of making; Fowler v. Trust Co., 141 U. S. 384, 12 Sup. Ct. 1, 35 L. Ed. 786; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hathaway, 106 Fed. 815, 45 C. C. A. 655; Albro v. Ins. Co., 119 Fed. 629; but a legislative enactment which declares a public policy and prohibits its violation has, to some extent, an extra-territorial effect; thus, a prohibition in a decree of divorce against the re-marriage of the guilty party during the lifetime of the other has, in general, no extra-territorial effect; Dimpfel v. Wilson, 107 Md. 329, 68 Atl. 561, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180, 15 Ann. Cas. 753; Van Voorhis v. Brintnall, 86 N. Y. 18, 40 Am. Rep. 505; Thorp v. Thorp, 90 N. Y. 602, 43 Am. Rep. 189; Moore v. Hegeman, 92 N. Y. 521, 44 Am. Rep. 408; yet where a statute forbids such remarriage within a specified time, and the persons go to another state for the express purpose of evading the law of their domicile, contract a marriage in such state, valid under its laws, and return to the state of their domicile, such marriage will there be held invalid as against public policy and good morals; Lanham v. Lanham, 136 Wis. 360, 117 N. W. 787, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1085; and where the state statutes prohibit the guilty party in a divorce granted for adultery from marrying the co-respondent, during the lifetime of the innocent spouse, a marriage in another state, valid according to its laws, will not be recognized in the state declaring such a marriage to be against its public policy and good morals; Pennegar v. State, 87 Tenn. 244, 10 S. W. 305, 2 L. R. A. 703, 10 Am. St. Rep. 648; Stull's Estate, 183 Pa. 625, 39 Atl. 16, 39 L. R. A. 539, 63 Am. St. Rep. 776; so where a statute prohibited the marriage of negroes and white persons, such a marriage, when made outside of the state and valid where performed, was held void in the state enacting it; Dupre v. Boulard's Ex'r, 10 La. Ann. 411; Kinney v. Com., 30 Gratt. (Va.) 858, 32 Am. Rep. 690; so where an English statute provided that a marriage with a deceased wife's sister should be invalid, a marriage made outside of England, and lawful where it was celebrated, was held void in England; 9 H. L. Cas. 193; so where there was statutory prohibition of the marriage of first cousins, such a marriage was held void where the parties contracted a valid marriage elsewhere and returned to the state prohibiting it; Johnson v. Johnson, 57 Wash. 89, 106 Pac. 500, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 179.

A like provision in the Civil Code of South Dakota was held not to warrant the annulment of a marriage contracted in California between first cousins who at the time of the marriage were citizens of California; Garcia v. Garcia, 25 S. D. 645, 127 N. W. 586, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 621.

A statute declared that re-marriage by one of the parties to a divorce within a given time, either within or without the state, should be void; after a divorce within the state, one of the parties within the prohibited time went to a foreign country and there acquired a domicile and contracted a marriage valid by its laws; six years after she returned to the state, where she was divorced and married again. On a prosecution for bigamy, her foreign marriage was held valid; State v. Fenn, 47 Wash. 561, 92 Pac. 417, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 800, on the ground that her domicile was at the time in such foreign country.

REAL ESTATE. In general, the mode of conveying, incumbering, transmitting, devising, and controlling real estate is governed by the law of the place of situation of the property; Bronson v. Lumber Co., 44 Minn. 348, 46 N. W. 570; Cochran v. Benton, 126 Ind. 58, 25 N. E. 870; U. S. v. Crosby, 7 Cr. (U. S.) 115, 3 L. Ed. 287; Oakey v. Bennett, 11 How. (U. S.) 33, 13 L. Ed. 593; Augusta Ins. & Banking Co. v. Morton, 3 La. Ann. 418; 14 Ves. 541; 4 T. R. 182; Fall v. Eastin, 215 U. S. 1, 30 Sup. Ct. 2, 54 L. Ed. 65, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 924, 17 Ann. Cas. 853; Brine v. Ins. Co., 96 U. S. 627, 24 L. Ed. 858. See LEX REI SITÆ.

Perhaps an exception may exist in the case of mortgages; Bank of England v. Tarleton, 23 Miss. 175; Dundas v. Bowler, 3 McLean 397, Fed. Cas. No. 4,141. But the point cannot be considered as settled; 1 Washb. R. P. 524; Story, Conf. Laws § 363; Westl. Priv. Int. Law 75. It is said by Wharton (Conf. Laws § 368) that the law governing the mortgage, as such, is the law of situs of the land which the mortgage covers; but the debt is governed by the law of the domicile of the party to whom it is due, no matter where the property be situated; see Townsend v. Riley, 46 N. H. 300; Oregon & W. Trust Inv.

Co. v. Rathburn, 5 Sawy. 32, Fed. Cas. No. 10,555; Cope v. Wheeler, 41 N. Y. 313; Post v. Bank, 138 Ill. 559, 28 N. E. 978; Penfield v. Tower, 1 N. D. 216, 46 N. W. 413; and that when the money is invested on the land for which the mortgage is given, the lex sitæ prevails. For the purposes of taxation a debt has its situs at the domicile of the creditor; Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 490, 25 L. Ed. 628.

PERSONAL PROPERTY. For the general rules as to the disposition of personal property, see DOMICIL. Bills of exchange and promissory notes are to be governed, as to validity and interpretation, by the law of the place of making, as are other contracts. The residence of the drawee of a bill of exchange, and the place of making a promissory note where no other place of payment is specified, is the locus contractus; 10 B. & C. 21; 4 C. & P. 35; Bissell v. Lewis, 4 Mich. 450; Davis v. Clemson, 6 McLean, 622, Fed. Cas. No. 3,630; Barney v. Newcomb, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 46; Peck v. Hibbard, 26 Vt. 698, 62 Am. Dec. 605; Wilson v. Lazier, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 477; Lizardi v. Cohen, 3 Gill (Md.) 430; Fessenden v. Taft, 65 N. H. 39, 17 Atl. 713; Stevens v. Gregg, 89 Ky. 461, 12 S. W. 775; see Raymond v. Holmes, 11 Tex. 54; Frazier v. Warfield, 9 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 220, where the place of address is said to be the place of making. As between the drawee and drawer and other parties (but not as between an indorser and indorsee, Everett v. Vendyres, 19 N. Y. 436; but see Peck v. Mayo, 14 Vt. 33, 39 Am. Dec. 205); each indorsement is considered a new contract; Young v. Harris, 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 556, 61 Am. Dec. 170; Cook v. Litchfield, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 330; Cox v. Adams, 2 Ga. 158; Dundas v. Bowler, 3 McLean 397, Fed. Cas. No. 4,141. On a bill of exchange drawn in one state and payable in another, the time within which notice of protest must be mailed is determined by the law of the latter state; Brown v. Jones, 125 Ind. 375, 25 N. E. 452, 21 Am. St. Rep. 227. In case of commercial paper the notice required to bind drawer and indorser is determined by law of place of drawing and indorsing. See LEX LOCI. A statute of limitations of a foreign state providing that an action on a note shall be brought within a certain time after the cause of action accrues bars the debt itself if not brought within the time limited, and may be pleaded in bar of an action brought on the note in another state; Rathbone v. Coe, 6 Dak. 91, 50 N. W. 620. See MacNichol v. Spence, 83 Me. 87, 21 Atl. 748. Place of payment governs as to all matters connected with payment; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 1 Sup. Ct. 102, 27 L. Ed. 104; Tarbox v. Childs, 165 Mass. 408, 43 N. E. 124.

The better rule as to the rate of interest to be allowed on bills of exchange and promissory notes, where no place of payment is specified and no rate of interest mentioned, seems to be the rate of the lex loci; 5 C. & F. 1, 12; Slacum v. Pomery, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 221, 3 L. Ed. 205; The Star, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 101, 4 L. Ed. 338; James v. Allen, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 191, 1 L. Ed. 93; Hawley v. Sloo, 12 La. Ann. 815. And see Friend v. Wilkinson, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 31; Buck v. Little, 24 Miss. 463; Price v. Page & Bacon, 24 Mo. 65; 1 Pars. Contr. 238; Cope v. Alden, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 350; Campbell v. Nichols, 33 N. J. L. 81; The Star, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 101, 4 L. Ed. 338. The damages recoverable on a bill of exchange not paid are those of the place where the plaintiff is entitled to reimbursement. In the United States, these are generally fixed by statute; Hendricks v. Franklin, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 119; Grimshaw v. Bender, 4 Mass. 157; Smith v. Shaw, 2 Wash. C. C. 167, Fed. Cas. No. 13,107; Grant v. Healey, 3 Summ. 523, Fed. Cas. No. 5,696.

Where a place of payment is specified, the interest of that place must be allowed; French v. French, 126 Mass. 360; Peck v. Mayo, 14 Vt. 33, 39 Am. Dec. 205; Pomeroy v. Ainsworth, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 118; Dickinson v. Edwards, 77 N. Y. 573, 33 Am. Rep. 671. See Fanning v. Consequa, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 511, 8 Am. Dec. 442; except that when a contract is made in one state, to be performed in another, parties may contract for the legal rate of interest allowable in either state, provided such contract is entered into in good faith, and not merely to avoid the usury laws; Depau v. Humphreys, 8 Mart. N. S. (La.) 1; Townsend v. Riley, 46 N. H. 300; Miller v. Tiffany, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 310, 17 L. Ed. 540; Berrien v. Wright, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 213; Kilgore v. Dempsey, 25 Ohio St. 413, 18 Am. Rep. 306; Arnold v. Potter, 22 Ia. 194; Brownell v. Freese, 35 N. J. L. 285, 10 Am. Rep. 239. See Odum v. Security Co., 91 Ga. 505, 18 S. E. 131; contra, Story, Conf. Laws § 298. A note made in one state and payable in another, is not subject to the usury laws of the latter state, if it is valid in that respect in the state where it was made; Matthews v. Paine, 47 Ark. 54, 14 S. W. 463; Brewster v. Lyndes, 2 Miles (Pa.) 185.

Chattel mortgages valid and duly registered under the laws of the state in which the property is situated at the time of the mortgage, will be held valid in another state to which the property is removed, although the regulations there are different; Bank of United States v. Lee, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 107, 10 L. Ed. 81; Feurt v. Rowell, 62 Mo. 524; Barker v. Stacy, 25 Miss. 471; Kanaga v. Taylor, 7 Ohio St. 134, 70 Am. Dec. 62; Martin v. Hill, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 631; but see Handley v. Harris, 48 Kan. 606, 29 Pac. 1145, 17 L. R. A. 703, 30 Am. St. Rep. 322; Clough v. Kyne, 40 Ill. App. 234; Green v. Van Buskirk, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 140, 19 L. Ed. 109; and it will be enforced in the state to which the property has been removed, although it would have been invalid if made in that state; Smith v. Hutchings, 30 Mo. 383; but it is said by Wharton (Conf. Laws § 317), that the law in regard to chattel mortgages is governed by the lex rei sitæ; that a lien is extinguished when goods are taken from the place where the lien was created to a place where such a lien is not recognized; Whart. Conf. Laws § 318; McCabe v. Blymyre, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 615 (where a chattel mortgage made in Maryland was held invalid in Pennsylvania as against a bona fide purchaser without notice); and a Louisiana court refused to enforce a chattel mortgage made in another state, such mortgages being unknown in Louisiana; Delop v. Windsor & Randolph, 26 La. Ann. 185.

The law of the situs governs a mortgage of chattels in one state, executed in another; Rorer, Int. St. L. 96; Jones, Chat. Mortg. § 305; Clark v. Tarbell, 58 N. H. 88; Green v. Van Buskirk, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 139, 19 L. Ed. 109; Denny v. Faulkner, 22 Kan. 89. See Ames Iron Works v. Warren, 76 Ind. 512, 40 Am. Rep. 258; Tyler v. Strang, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 198; contra, Runyon v. Groshon, 12 N. J. Eq. 86; Blystone v. Burgett, 10 Ind. 28, 68 Am. Dec. 658. The same is true in the case of conditional sales; Langworthy v. Little, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 109; Hervey v. Locomotive Works, 93 U. S. 664, 23 L. Ed. 1003; Cleveland Machine Works v. Lang, 67 N. H. 348.

The lex fori determines the remedies on the mortgage; Ferguson v. Clifford, 37 N. H. 86; contra, Story, Conf. Laws § 402; Mumford v. Cauty, 50 Ill. 370, 99 Am. Dec. 525 (where there appears to have been notice). See Watson v. Campbell, 38 N. Y. 153, where a mortgage on a ship, made and shown to be invalid in Pennsylvania, was held invalid in New York; Beaumont v. Yeatman, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 542.

The registration of chattel mortgages and transfer of government and local stocks are frequently made subjects of positive law, which then suspends the law of the domicile.

Where the mortgagor of chattels removes with them to another state, the mortgagee, to preserve his rights, need not again record the mortgage in such other state; Keenan v. Stimson, 32 Minn. 377, 20 N. W. 364; Ferguson v. Clifford, 37 N. H. 87; Feurt v. Rowell, 62 Mo. 524; Parr v. Brady, 37 N. J. L. 201. But in Alabama it must be recorded to preserve its validity; Johnson v. Hughes, 89 Ala. 588, 8 South. 147.

As to whether such mortgages will be respected in preference to claims of citizens of the state into which the property is removed, it is held that they will; Jones v. Taylor, 30 Vt. 42, overruling Skiff v. Solace, 23 Vt. 279; Kanaga v. Taylor, 7 Ohio St. 134, 70 Am. Dec. 62; Martin v. Hill, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 631; Beaumont v. Yeatman, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 542. A chattel mortgage valid in the state where executed without change of possession protects the property mortgaged against an attachment in Vermont, though in the possession of the mortgagor; Taylor v. Boardman, 25 Vt. 581; Norris v. Sowles, 57 Vt. 360.

Questions of priority of liens and other claims are, in general, to be determined by the lex rei sitæ even in regard to personal property; Harrison v. Sterry, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 289, 3 L. Ed. 104; Olivier v. Townes, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 93; In re Miller's Estate, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 312, 24 Am. Dec. 345; Hammond v. Stovall, 17 Ga. 491; Walker v. Roberts, 4 Rich. (S. C.) 561; Trapnall v. Richardson, 13 Ark. 543, 58 Am. Dec. 338. A chattel mortgage made in Canada, with possession delivered to the mortgagee, was held entitled to priority in Michigan, whither the property was taken without consent of the mortgagee, over a prior chattel mortgage in Michigan executed before the property was taken to Canada and recorded after its return; Vining v. Millar, 109 Mich. 205, 67 N. W. 126, 32 L. R. A. 442.

The existence of the lien will generally depend on the lex loci; Story, Conf. Laws §§ 322 b, 402; Harrison v. Sterry, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 289, 3 L. Ed. 104. See note on extra-territoriality of chattel mortgages, 17 L. R. A. 127.

Marriage comes under the general rule in regard to contracts, with some exceptions. See LEX LOCI; 25 Amer. Law Rev. 82.

The scope of a marriage settlement made abroad is to be determined by the lex loci contractus; 1 Bro. P. C. 129; 2 M. & K. 513; where not repugnant to the lex rei sitæ; 31 E. L. & Eq. 443; De Pierres v. Thorn, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 266.

When the contract for marriage is to be executed elsewhere, the place of execution becomes the locus contractus; 23 E. L. & Eq. 288. On the continent of Europe, capacity is usually governed by nationality, though in administering the rule the courts favor their own citizens; in England it was governed by domicile, but now the courts have gone back to the decision in 3 P. D. 1, holding capacity is governed by law of place of ceremony; and in America by the lex loci; Com. v. Lane, 113 Mass. 458, 18 Am. Rep. 509. Hence it is quite unsafe for an American to marry a foreigner without a complete investigation of his capacity to marry according to his personal law. See an article by J. H. Beale, Jr., in 15 H. L. R. 382; MARRIAGE.

Torts. In an action brought in one state for injuries done in another, the statutes and decisions of the courts of the latter state must fix the liability; Njus v. Ry. Co., 47 Minn. 92, 49 N. W. 527; Erickson v. S. S. Co., 96 Fed. 80; Burnett v. R. Co., 176 Pa. 45, 34 Atl. 972 (where a ticket was purchased at a point in New Jersey to a place in New York; the person was injured in Pennsylvania; the law of Pennsylvania was held to apply); Alexander v. Pennsylvania Co., 48

Ohio St. 623, 30 N. E. 69; Railway Co. v. Lewis, 89 Tenn. 235, 14 S. W. 603. See Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 145 U. S. 193, 12 Sup. Ct. 806, 36 L. Ed. 672.

In a proceeding to limit liability for claims against a French vessel found to be in fault for a collision in a fog on the high seas, the law of France, which authorizes a recovery for loss of life against the vessel in fault, will be enforced by the courts of the United States, although the French courts, in applying the facts, found the international rule as to the speed of vessels in a fog might not have held such vessel to be at fault; La Bourgogne, 210 U. S. 95, 28 Sup. Ct. 664, 52 L. Ed. 973.

Movables in general. An assignment of a movable which gives a good title according to the law of the country where it is situated is recognized as valid in England, whatever the domicile of the parties may be; [1892] 1 Ch. 238; so it lies with the law of the place where a written instrument is situated to determine whether it is negotiable or not; [1905] 1 K. B. 677. Where, by the law of the place where goods are shipped and where the ship is, a shipper is entitled to exercise a right of stoppage in transitu, and has exercised that right in a manner recognized as valid by such law, his title to the goods will be recognized; 1 East 515. The rights of the assignor and the assignee on an assignment, in one country, of a document of title to a debt or to an interest in personal property, are in general governed by the law of the country where the assignment takes place, although the debt may be due from persons living in, or the personal property may be situated in, a foreign country; [1898] A. C. 616. The validity of an assignment of documents, such as policies of insurance; 17 Q. B. D. 309; or negotiable instruments; [1904] 2 K. B. 870; is determined by the law of the place where the assignment is made; 15 App. Cas. 267.

SPECIAL PERSONAL RELATIONS. Executors and administrators, in the absence of a specific statute authorizing it, have no power to sue or be sued by virtue of a foreign appointment as such; Westl. Priv. Int. Law 279; Brookshire v. Dubose, 55 N. C. 276; Kirkpatrick v. Taylor, 10 Rich. (S. C.) 393; L. R. 5 Ch. App. 315; Swatzen v. Arnold, 1 Woolw. 383, Fed. Cas. No. 13,682; Clark v. Blackington, 110 Mass. 369; Parker's Appeal, 61 Pa. 478; Watson's Adm'r v. Pack's Adm'r, 3 W. Va. 154; Turner v. Linam, 55 Ga. 253; Morton v. Hatch, 54 Mo. 408; Bell's Adm'r v. Nichols, 38 Ala. 678; Gilman v. Gilman, 54 Me. 453; Armstrong v. Lear, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 169, 6 L. Ed. 589; 3 Q. B. 498; 2 Ves. 35. Where a foreign executor has brought assets into a state, then as the title is in him he can sue as an individual, but not as executor; Talmage v. Chapel, 16 Mass. 71.

In the United States, however, payment to such executor will be an equitable discharge, if the money has been distributed to those entitled; Doolittle v. Lewis, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 49, 11 Am. Dec. 389.

Ships and cargoes and the proceeds thereof, on the death of the owner, complete their voyages and return to the home port to be administered; Story, Conf. Laws § 520; Wells v. Miller, 45 Ill. 382; Orcutt v. Orms, 3 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 459.

See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Guardians have no power over the property, whether real or personal, of their wards, by virtue of a foreign appointment; Morrell v. Dickey, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 153; Kraft v. Wickey, 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 332, 23 Am. Dec. 569; 4 T. R. 185; they must have the sanction of the appropriate local tribunal; Curtis v. Smith, 6 Blatch. 537, Fed. Cas. No. 3,505; Noonan v. Bradley, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 394, 19 L. Ed. 757; Woodworth v. Spring, 4 Allen (Mass.) 321; Whart. Conf. Laws § 260; L. R. 2 Eq. 74.

As to the power of a guardian over the domicile of his ward, see DOMICIL.

As to their extra-territorial powers, see RECEIVERS.

Surctics come under the general rules, and their contracts are governed by the lex loci; but in the case of a bond with sureties, given to the government by a navy agent for the faithful performance of his duties, the liability of the sureties is governed by the common law, as the accountability of the principal was at Washington, the seat of government; Cox v. U. S., 6 Pet. (U. S.) 172, 8 L. Ed. 359 (the case coming up from Louisiana). See Duncan v. U. S., 7 Pet. (U. S.) 435, 8 L. Ed. 739. See SURETYSHIP.

JUDGMENTS AND DECREES OF FOREIGN COURTS relating to immovable property within their jurisdiction are held binding everywhere. And the rule is the same with regard to movables actually within their jurisdiction; Noble v. Oil Co., 79 Pa. 354, 21 Am. Rep. 66; The Rio Grande, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 458, 23 L. Ed. 158; 2 C. & P. 155. See Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565; L. R. 4 H. L. 414; Barrow v. West, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 270; Croudson v. Leonard, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 434, 2 L. Ed. 670. Thus admiralty proceedings in rem are held conclusive everywhere if the court had a rightful jurisdiction founded on actual possession of the subject-matter; Rose v. Himely, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 241, 2 L. Ed. 608; Hudson v. Guestier, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 293, 2 L. Ed. 625; Croudson v. Leonard, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 434, 2 L. Ed. 670; The Mary, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 126, 3 L. Ed. 678; Grant v. M'Lachlin, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 34; Bradstreet v. Ins. Co., 3 Summ. 600, Fed. Cas. No. 1,793; Magoun v. Ins. Co., 1 Sto. 157, Fed. Cas. No. 8,961; Gray v. Swan, 1 H. & J. (Md.) 142; Calhoun v. Ins. Co., 1 Binn. (Pa.) 299; Baxter v. Ins. Co., 6 Mass. 277, 4 Am. Dec. 125; L. R. 5 Q. B. 599;

Dunham v. Ins. Co., 1 Low. 253, Fed. Cas. No. 4,152; State v. R. Co., 10 Nev. 47.

But such decree may be avoided for matter apparently erroneous on the face of the record; 7 Term 523; or if there be an ambiguity as to grounds of condemnation; 7 Bingham 495; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 541, n.; Andrews v. Herriot, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 520, n. 3; 2 Kent 120.

Jurisdiction to garnish a debt not payable at a particular place cannot, according to some cases, be had without personal service on the creditor; see cases collected in Minor, Conf. of Laws § 125. These cases are overruled in Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 19 Sup. Ct. 797, 43 L. Ed. 1144, which holds that service on the garnishee alone, obtained in the state of his domicile, gives jurisdiction. This decision was based on reasoning and dicta which would allow jurisdiction irrespective of domicile wherever such service is obtained, and this view had been previously adopted by a few cases cited in Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 19 Sup. Ct. 797, 43 L. Ed. 1144. See, contra, Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Rogers, 52 W. Va. 450, 44 S. E. 300, 62 L. R. A. 178.

Proceedings under the garnishee process are held proceedings in rem; and a decree may be pleaded in bar of an action against the trustee or garnishee; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 542; 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 520, n. But the court must have rightful jurisdiction over the res to make the judgment binding; and then it will be effectual only as to the res, unless the court had actual jurisdiction over the person also; McVicker v. Beedy, 31 Me. 314, 50 Am. Dec. 666; Mattingly's Heirs v. Corbit, 7 B. Monr. (Ky.) 376; State v. R. Co., 10 Nev. 47; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565.

ASSIGNMENTS AND TRANSFERS. Voluntary assignments of personal property, valid where made, will transfer property everywhere; Speed v. May, 17 Pa. 91, 55 Am. Dec. 540; Schroder v. Tompkins, 58 Fed. 672; Van Wyck v. Read, 43 Fed. 716; Richardson v. Leavitt, 1 La. Ann. 430, 45 Am. Dec. 90; Greene v. Mfg. Co., 52 Conn. 330; Train v. Kendall, 137 Mass. 366; not as against citizens of the state of the situs attaching prior to the assignees' obtaining possession; Ingraham v. Geyer, 13 Mass. 146, 7 Am. Dec. 132; King v. Johnson, 5 Har. (Del.) 31. Otherwise Wilson v. Carson, 12 Md. 54.

An involuntary assignment by operation of law as under bankrupt or insolvent laws will not avail as against attaching creditors in the place of situation of the property; Hoyt v. Thompson, 5 N. Y. 320; Frazier v. Fredericks, 24 N. J. L. 162; Blake v. Williams, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 286, 302, 17 Am. Dec. 372; McNeil v. Colquhoun, 3 N. C. 24; Robinson v. Crowder, 4 McCord (S. C.) 519, 17

Am. Dec. 762; Saunders v. Williams, 5 N. H. 213; Olivier v. Townes, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 93; Milne v. Moreton, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 353, 6 Am. Dec. 466; Harrison v. Sterry, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 289, 3 L. Ed. 104; Very v. McHenry, 29 Me. 208; Burk v. McClain, 1 Harr. & McH. (Md.) 236; Beer v. Hooper, 32 Miss. 246; Upton v. Hubbard, 28 Conn. 274, 73 Am. Dec. 670; Woodward v. Roane, 23 Ark. 526; Osborn v. Adams, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 247; Lichtenstein v. Gillett, 37 La. Ann. 522.

It may be a question whether the same rule would hold if the assignees had obtained possession; Cook v. Van Horn, 81 Wis. 291, 50 N. W. 893. An assignment by operation of law is good so as to vest property in the assignees by comity; 6 M. & S. 126; Holmes v. Remsen, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 262, 11 Am. Dec. 269; Milne v. Moreton, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 363, 6 Am. Dec. 466; Goodwin v. Jones, 3 Mass. 517, 3 Am. Dec. 173.

In England it is settled that an assignment under the bankrupt law of a foreign country passes all the personal property of the bankrupt locally situate, and debts owing in England, and that an attachment of such property by an English creditor, after such bankruptcy, with or without notice to him, is invalid to overreach the assignment. See 25 Q. B. Div. 399.

Discharges by the lex loci contractus are valid everywhere; May v. Breed, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 15, 54 Am. Dec. 700; Long v. Hammond, 40 Me. 204; Peck v. Hibbard, 26 Vt. 703, 62 Am. Dec. 605; Blanchard v. Russell, 13 Mass. 1, 7 Am. Dec. 106; Mason v. Haile, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 370, 6 L. Ed. 660; 5 East 124. This rule is restricted in the United States by the clause in the constitution forbidding the passage of any law impairing the obligation of contracts. Under this provision, it is held that a state insolvent or bankrupt law may not have any extra-territorial effect to discharge the debtor; Cook v. Moffat, 5 How. (U. S.) 307, 12 L. Ed. 159; Donnelly v. Corbett, 7 N. Y. 500; Story, Const. § 1115. See LEX FORI. It may, however, take away the remedy for non-performance of the contract in the locus contractus, on contracts made subsequently.

As to FOREIGN JUDGMENTS and FOREIGN LAWS, see those titles.

The important question of federal courts following state decisions, or not, is properly treated here. There is no common law of the United States in the sense of a national customary law distinct from the common law of England as adopted by the several states, each for itself, applied as its local law, and subject to such alteration as may be provided by its own statutes; Wheaton v. Peters, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 591, 8 L. Ed. 1055; Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 564, 31 L. Ed. 508. A determination in a given case, of what that law is, may be different in a federal court from one prevailing in a state court. This arises from the circumstance that the federal courts, where they are called upon to administer the law of the state in which they sit, or by which the transaction is governed, exercise an independent, though concurrent, jurisdiction, and are required to ascertain and declare the law according to their own judgment; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Pub. Co., 181 U. S. 92, 21 Sup. Ct. 561, 45 L. Ed. 765. The conclusion of a state court, as to the time when a cause of action accrues in case of fraud or concealment, based, not on a construction of a state statute, but on the view taken of the rule of the common law, is not binding on a federal court, when called on to construe the common law and to apply its principles to cases arising between citizens of different states; Murray v. R. Co., 62 Fed. 24.

U. S. R. S. § 721, provides that the laws of the several states shall be regarded as rules of decision in trials at common law in courts of the United States in cases where they apply. Judge Story in Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 10 L. Ed. 865, says: "It will hardly be contended that decisions of courts constitute laws. They are at most only evidence of what the laws are, and are not themselves laws. They are often re-examined, reversed, and qualified by the courts themselves, whenever they are found to be either defective, ill-founded or otherwise incorrect." All the decisions of the state courts are "highly persuasive" upon the United States courts, even on propositions of general law; this is because of the desire for harmony between the jurisdictions; Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 20, 2 Sup. Ct. 10, 27 L. Ed. 359. Some of the questions on which the federal courts have refused to follow the state courts are as follows: A case concerning building and loan associations; Alexander v. Loan Ass'n, 110 Fed. 267; as to taking possession of chattels under a chattel mortgage; Thompson v. Fairbanks, 196 U. S. 516, 25 Sup. Ct. 306, 49 L. Ed. 577; as to the liability of common carriers, in the absence of a statute; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 13 Sup. Ct. 261, 37 L. Ed. 97; the law of fellow servant; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 372, 13 Sup. Ct. 914, 37 L. Ed. 772; the law as to the duties of the master to furnish safe appliances to the servant; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Barrett, 166 U. S. 617, 17 Sup. Ct. 707, 41 L. Ed. 1136; the law as to injuries at railroad crossings; Schofield v. Ry. Co., 114 U. S. 615, 5 Sup. Ct. 1125, 29 L. Ed. 224; and as to the validity of contracts exempting telegraph companies from liability for mistakes, etc., in the transmission of messages; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Cook, 61 Fed. 624, 9 C. C. A. 680.

As to all matters governed by the law merchant, the federal courts are not bound by state decisions; Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 20, 2 Sup. Ct. 10, 27 L. Ed. 359. It is said that the same is true in the law of insurance; see Foster Fed. Pr. 557, 575, where the cases are collected.

Federal courts follow decisions of state courts: 1. Upon the construction of state constitutions and statutes; Walker v. State Harbor Com'rs, 17 Wall. 648, 21 L. Ed. 744; Gage v. Pumpelly, 115 U. S. 454, 6 Sup. Ct. 136, 29 L. Ed. 449; its interpretation is accepted as the true interpretation, whatever may be the federal court's opinion of its soundness; Oates v. Bank, 100 U. S. 245, 25 L. Ed. 580. 2. Upon questions involving the title to land; Myrick v. Heard, 31 Fed. 241; Deguire v. Lead Co., 37 Fed. 663; Shields v. McAuley, 37 Fed. 302; Arrowsmith v. Gleason, 129 U. S. 86, 9 Sup. Ct. 237, 32 L. Ed. 630. 3. Upon the question whether a third person may sue on a contract made for his benefit; Bethlehem Iron Co. v. Hoadley, 152 Fed. 735; as to the effect upon contracts of a statute prohibiting labor on Sunday; Hill v. Hite, 79 Fed. 826; as to what constitutes a breach of a contract for service; Ely v. Revolving Door Co., 184 Fed. 459; as to the right of the lowest bidder to the award of a contract for a public improvement; U. S. Wood Preserving Co. v. Sundmaker, 186 Fed. 678, 110 C. C. A. 224; as to the payment of wages of employees; Crowther v. Ins. Trust & C. Co., 85 Fed. 41, 29 C. C. A. 1. 4. Upon the construction and effect of statutes in relation to marriage; Meister v. Moore, 96 U. S. 76, 24 L. Ed. 826; and generally as to the capacity of married women to contract and their liability on their contracts; Cross v. Allen, 141 U. S. 528, 12 Sup. Ct. 67, 35 L. Ed. 843; and specifically her right, under married women's acts, to mortgage her separate property to secure her husband's debts; Mitchell v. Lippincott, 2 Woods 467, Fed. Cas. No. 9,665; the requisites of conveyances; Gillespie v. Coal, etc., Co., 163 Fed. 992, 91 C. C. A. 494; and acknowledgment; Berry v. Bank, 93 Fed. 44, 35 C. C. A. 185, by a married woman; the effect of conveyances to husband and wife; Meyers v. Reed, 17 Fed. 401; a wife's right to sue in her own name; and as to the running of the statute of limitations against her; Kibbe v. Ditto, 93 U. S. 674, 23 L. Ed. 1005; the common-law right of husband and wife respectively to the custody of a child; In re Barry, 42 Fed. 113, 136 U. S. 597, 34 L. Ed. 503, note. 5. Upon questions distinctive of a statute giving a right of action for a negligent homicide; Matz v. C. & A. R. R. Co., 85 Fed. 180; Spinello v. R. Co., 183 Fed. 762, 106 C. C. A. 189. 6. Upon the validity of a license ordinance adopted by a board of county supervisors; Flanigan v. Sierra County, 196 U. S. 553, 25 Sup. Ct. 314, 49 L. Ed. 597; or ordinances respecting the traffic in intoxicating liquors; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 11 Sup. Ct. 13, 34 L. Ed. 620. 7. Upon general questions of local law in regard to the character and extent of the powers and liabilities of the political bodies or municipal corporations of a state; Johnson v. St. Louis, 172 Fed. 31, 96 C. C. A. 617, 18 Ann. Cas. 949. 8. Upon questions in relation to the state courts; Mohr v. Manierre, 101 U. S. 417, 25 L. Ed. 1052.

See 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 380, with an exhaustive note.

The rules of evidence of the state are generally applied in the federal courts; Bucher v. R. Co., 125 U. S. 555, 583, 8 Sup. Ct. 974, 31 L. Ed. 795.

CONFORMITY STATUTE. A term used to designate section 721 of Revised Statutes of the U. S. which provides as to federal courts conforming to state practice.

CONFRONTATION. The act by which a witness is brought into the presence of the accused, so that the latter may object to him, if he can, and the former may know and identify the accused and maintain the truth in his presence. In criminal cases no man can be a witness unless confronted with the accused, except by consent.

CONFUSIO (Lat. confundere). In Civil Law. A pouring together of liquids; a melting of metals; a blending together of an inseparable compound.

It is distinguished from commixtion by the fact that in the latter case a separation may be made, while in a case of confusio there cannot be. 2 Bla. Com. 405.

CONFUSION OF DEBTS. The concurrence of two adverse rights to the same thing in one and the same person. Woods v. Ridley, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 198.

CONFUSION OF GOODS. Such a mixture of the goods of two or more persons that they cannot be distinguished.

When this takes place by the mutual consent of the owners, they have an interest in the mixture in proportion to their respective shares; Silbury v. McCoon, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 425, 41 Am. Dec. 753; but see Wells v. Batts, 112 N. C. 283, 17 S. E. 417, 34 Am. St. Rep. 506. Where it is caused by the wilful act of one party without the other's consent, the one causing the mixture must separate them at his own peril; Bisp. Eq. § 86; Hesseltine v. Stockwell, 30 Me. 237, 50 Am. Dec. 627; Bryant v. Ware, 30 Me. 295; Dunning v. Stearns, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 630; 2 Kent 365; and must bear the whole loss; Brackenridge v. Holland, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 377, 20 Am. Dec. 123; Huff v. Earl, 3 Ind. 306; Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 62; Willard v. Rice, 11 Metc. (Mass.)

493, 45 Am. Dec. 226; Hesseltine v. Stockwell, 30 Me. 237; unless he can identify his goods; Ayre v. Hixson, 53 Or. 19, 98 Pac. 518, 133 Am. St. Rep. 819; Levyreau v. Clements, 175 Mass. 376, 56 N. E. 735, 50 L. R. A. 397; otherwise, it is said, if the confusion is the result of negligence merely, or accident; Pratt v. Bryant, 20 Vt. 333; or of the wrongful act of a stranger; Bryant v. Ware, 30 Me. 295; if commingled by mistake or accident, or by consent of the parties, the owners will be treated as tenants in common; Ayre v. Hixson, 53 Or. 19, 98 Pac. 518, 133 Am. St. Rep. 819. The rule extends no further than necessity requires; 2 Campb. 575; Holbrook v. Hyde, 1 Vt. 286; Wood v. Fales, 24 Pa. 246, 64 Am. Dec. 655; Queen v. Wernwag, 97 N. C. 383, 2 S. E. 657; for if the goods can be distinguished, it will not justify one in taking another's goods upon the ground that they have been intermingled; Claflin v. Beaver, 55 Fed. 576.

Lord Eldon was of opinion that the wrongdoer should not lose his whole property in the mass; 15 Ves. 442; and with this view agrees a learned article in 6 Am. L. Rev. 455, understood (Williston, Sales, 179) to have been written by Mr. Justice O. W. Holmes, and containing a full discussion of the principles relating to grain in elevators.

Where a vessel was wrecked and the bales of cotton that were saved were indistinguishable as to ownership, it was held that the several owners of the cotton that was shipped had a proportional interest in what was saved, as by a kind of tenancy in common; L. R. 3 C. P. 427.

The fact that defendants in replevin to recover ore had wrongfully mixed plaintiff's ore with their ore of a lower grade did not preclude recovery of their ore, though some of the defendants' might have been taken with it; Blurton v. Hansen, 135 Mo. App. 548, 116 S. W. 474. Where a bank commingles its own collateral to secure its own debts with collaterals which it held to secure a note payable through the bank, owed to a depositor, in such a way that it was impossible to distinguish one set from the other, all the collaterals became the property of the depositor to secure the note; First Nat. Bank of Decatur v. Henry, 159 Ala. 367, 49 South. 97.

A writer in 14 Harv. L. Rev. 157, is of opinion that the better view is that where there has been no change of value and the mass is homogeneous each party is entitled to his proportionate share irrespective of brand; citing Hesseltine v. Stockwell, 30 Me. 237, 50 Am. Dec. 627; Claflin v. Jersey Works, 85 Ga. 27, 46, 11 S. E. 721.

As to grain in an elevator, the cases give effect to the intention of the parties (which undoubtedly exists) that the depositor shall retain title; Williston, Sales, § 154, citing Woodward v. Semans, 125 Ind. 330, 25 N. E. 444, 21 Am. St. Rep. 225; Moses v. Teetors, 64 Kan. 149, 67 Pac. 526, 57 L. R. A. 267; Ledyard v. Hibbard, 48 Mich. 421, 12 N. W. 637, 42 Am. Rep. 474; Millhiser Mfg. Co. v. Mills Co., 101 Va. 579, 44 S. E. 760; Rahilly v. Wilson, 3 Dill. 420, Fed. Cas. No. 11,532. The same writer says (section 154): "The warehouseman is thus a bailee to keep the grain, with power to change the bailor's ownership in severalty into a tenancy in common of a larger mass and back again, and with a continuous power of sale, substitution and resale. At any given moment, however, all the holders of receipts for the grain are tenants in common of the amount in store, the share of each being proportionate to the amount of his receipts as compared with the total number of receipts outstanding." It is the duty of the bailee to keep sufficient grain to meet all his outstanding receipts; Young v. Miles, 23 Wis. 643.

Where gas from plaintiff's well was wrongfully mixed with gas from defendant's 59 wells, plaintiff could recover  $\frac{1}{80}$  of the proceeds from the sale of the product of all of the 60 wells; Great Southern Gas & Oil Co. v. Fuel Co., 155 Fed. 114, 83 C. C. A. 574.

The doctrine does not apply to cattle and horses or other like property that can be readily identified; McKnight v. U. S., 130 Fed. 659, 65 C. C. A. 37.

CONFUSION OF RIGHTS. A union of the qualities of debtor and creditor in the same person. The effect of such a union is, generally, to extinguish the debt; 1 Salk. 306; Cro. Car. 551; 1 Ld. Raym. 515. See 5 Term 381; Comyns, Dig. Baron et Feme (D).

CONGÉ. In French Law. A clearance. A species of passport or permission to navigate.

CONGÉ D'ACCORDER (Fr. leave to accord). A phrase used in the process of levying a fine. Upon the delivery of the original writ, one of the parties immediately asked for a congé d'accorder, or leave to agree with the plaintiff. Termes de la Ley; Cowell. See LICENTIA CONCORDANDI; 2 Bla. Com. 350.

CONGÉ D'ÉLIRE (Fr. leave to elect). The king's permission royal to a dean and chapter in time of vacation to choose a bishop, or to an abbey or priory of his own foundation to choose the abbot or prior.

Originally, the king had free appointment of all ecclesiastical dignities whensoever they chanced to be void. Afterwards he made the election over to others, under certain forms and conditions: as, that at every vacation they should ask of the king congé délire; Cowell; Termes de la Ley; 1 Bla. Com. 379, 382. The permission to elect is a mere form; the choice is practically made by the crown. A letter missive accompanies the authority to elect, designating the person to be chosen and if there is no election within twenty days there is a liability to a penalty.

CONGÉ D'EMPARLER (Fr. leave to im-parl). The privilege of an imparlance (U- centia loquendi). 3 Bla. Com. 299.

CONGEABLE (Fr. congé, permission, leave). Lawful, or lawfully done, or done with permission: as, entry congeable and the like. Littleton, § 279.

CONGREGATION. A society of a number of persons who compose an ecclesiastical body.

Certain bureaus at Rome, where ecclesiastical matters are attended to.

In the United States, the members of a particular church who meet in one place to worship. See Robertson v. Bullions, 9 Barb.
(N. Y.) 64.

CONGRESS. An assembly of deputies convened from different governments to treat of peace or of other international affairs;
as the Congress of Berlin to settle the terms of peace between Russia and Turkey in 1878, composed of representations of the great Powers of Europe.

In theory a congress may conclude a treaty, while a conference is for consultation, and its result, ordinarily a protocol, prepares the way for a treaty. See Cent.
Dict.; Encyc. Dict. But this is not always true, as the Berlin conference of 1889 was composed of plenipotentiaries and its deliberations resulted in a treaty.

The legislative body of the United States, composed of the senate and house of representatives (q. v.). U. S. Const. art. 1, § 1.

Each house is the judge of the election and qualifications of its members. A majority of each house is a quorum; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members. Each house may make rules, punish its members, and by a two-thirds vote expel a member. Each house must keep a journal and publish the same, excepting such parts as may, in their judgment, require secrecy, and record the yeas and nays at the desire of one-fifth of the members present. Art. 1, s. 6. A court is bound to assume that the journal speaks the truth and cannot receive oral testimony to impeach its correctness; U. S. v. Bal-lin, 144 U. S. 1, 12 Sup. Ct. 507, 36 L. Ed. 321.

The members of both houses are in all cases, except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, privileged from arrest while attending to and returning from the session of their respective houses; and no member can be questioned in any other place for any speech or debate in either house. U. S. Const.
art. 1, s. 6.

Whether a senator of the United States has waived his privilege from arrest and whether such privilege is personal or given for the purpose of always securing the representation of his state in the senate are questions which can be raised by writ of error directly to the district court; Burton v.
U. S., 196 U. S. 283, 25 Sup. Ct. 243, 49 L. Ed. 482.

Each house of congress has claimed and exercised the power to punish contempts and breaches of its privileges, on the ground that all public func-tionaries are essentially invested with the powers of self-preservation, and that whenever authorities are given, the means of carrying them into execution are given by necessary implication. Jefferson,

Proceedings, Gales and Seaton's Annals of Cong.,
6th Congress, pp. 122, 184; Wolcott's Case, Journal
Hou. Reps. 1st Sess. 35th Congress, pp. 371, 386, 535.
Irwin's Case, 2d Sess. 43d Congress, Index. In Kil- bourn's Case, 103 U. S. 168, 26 L. Ed. 377, it was held that although the house can punish its own members for disorderly conduct or for failure to attend its sessions, and can decide cases of contested elections and determine the qualifications of its members, and exercise the sole power of impeachment of officers of the government, and may, when the examination of witnesses is necessary to the performance of these duties, fine or imprison a contumacious witness,—there is not found in the constitution any general power vested in either house to punish for contempt. The order of the house ordering the imprisonment of a witness for refusing to answer certain questions put to him by the house, concerning the business of a real estate partnership of which he was a member, and to produce certain books in relation thereto, was held void and no defence on the part of the sergeant-at-arms in an action by the witness for false imprisonment. The members of the committee, who took no actual part in the imprisonment, were held not liable to such action. The cases in which the power had been exercised are numerous. This power, however, extends no further than imprisonment;

and that will continue no further than the duration of the power that imprisons. The imprisonment will therefore terminate with the adjournment or dissolution of congress.

The rules of proceeding in each house are substantially the same: the house of representatives choose their own speaker; the vice-president of the United States is, ex officio, president of the senate.
For rules of proceeding, see Hind's Precedents of the H. of R.

When a bill is engrossed, and has received the sanction of both houses, it is sent to the president for his approbation. If he approves of the bill, he signs it. If he does not, it is returned, with his objections, to the house in which it originated, and that house enters the objections at large on its journal and proceeds to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of the house agree to pass the bill, it is sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it is likewise reconsidered, and, if approved by two-thirds of that house, it becomes a law. But in all such cases the votes of both houses are determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill are to be entered on the journal of each house respectively.

If any bill shall not be returned by the president within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the congress by their adjournment prevent its return; in which case it shall not be a law. See
Kent, Lect. XI.

The right of the president to sign a bill after an adjournment of congress although within ten days of its passage, has been inferentially approved by the supreme court on four different occasions, in connection with the captured and abandoned property act, which was signed by the president on March 12, 1863, and after the adjournment of congress; Tobey v. Leonard, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 423, 17 L.
Ed. 842; U. S. v. Anderson, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 56, 19 L.
Ed. 615; U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 128, 20 L.
Ed. 519. Upon this point the court of claims held that a bill signed by the president after the usual adjournment of congress for the winter holidays, but within ten days from the time when it was presented to him, was duly approved within the intent and meaning of the constitution; U. S. v. Alice
Well, 29 Ct. Cl. 523.

The house of representatives has the exclusive right of originating bills for raising revenue; and this is the only privilege that house enjoys in its legislative character which is not shared equally with the other; and even those bills are amendable by the senate in its discretion; Art. 1, s. 7.

One of the houses cannot adjourn, during the session of congress, for more than three days without the consent of the other; nor to any other place than that in which the two houses shall be sitting; Art. 1, s. 5.

All the legislative powers granted by the constitution of the United States or necessarily implied from those granted, are vested in the congress.

CONJECTIO CAUSÆ. In Civil Law. A statement of the case. A brief synopsis of the case given by the advocate to the judge in opening the trial. Calvinus, Lex.

CONJECTURE. A slight degree of credence, arising from evidence too weak or too remote to cause belief. 1 Mascardus, De Prob. quæst. 14, n. 14.

An idea or notion founded on a probability without any demonstration of its truth.

CONJOINTS. Persons married to each other. Story, Conf. Laws, § 71; Wolfius, Droit de la Nat. § 858.

CONJUGAL RIGHTS. See RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS.

CONJUNCTIVE. Connecting in a manner denoting union.

There are many cases in law where the conjunctive and is used for the disjunctive or, and vice versa.

CONJUNCTIVE OBLIGATION. One in which the several objects in it are connected by a copulative, or in any other manner which shows that all of them are severally comprised in the contract. This contract creates as many different obligations as there are different objects; and the debtor, when he wishes to discharge himself, may force the creditor to receive them separately. Civil Code, La. § 2063.

CONJURATION (Lat. a swearing together). A plot, bargain, or compact, made by a number of persons under oath, to do some public harm.

Personal conference with the devil or some evil spirit, to know any secret or effect any purpose. The laws against conjuration and witchcraft were repealed in 1736. Mozley & W. Law Dict.

CONNECTICUT. The name of one of the original states of the United States of America.

It was not until the year 1666 that the whole territory now known as the state of Connecticut was under one colonial government. The charter was granted by Charles II. in April, 1662. Previous to that time there had been two colonies, with separate governments.

As this charter to the colony of Connecticut embraced the colony of New Haven, the latter resisted it until about January, 1666, when the two colonies, by mutual agreement, became indissolubly united. In 1687, Sir Edmund Andros attempted to seize and take away the charter; but it was secreted and preserved in the famous Charter Oak at Hartford, and is now kept in the office of the secretary of state. 1 Hollister, Hist. Conn. 315. It remained in force, with a temporary suspension, as a fundamental law of the state, until the present constitution was adopted. Story, Const. 336; Comp. Stat. Conn. Rev. of 1875, tit. xlv.

The present constitution was adopted on the 15th of September, 1818. Seventeen amendments have been adopted, 1823-1875; also in 1901 and 1905.

CONNECTING LINES. See COMMON CARRIERS.

CONNIVANCE. An agreement or consent, indirectly given, that something unlawful shall be done by another.

Connivance differs from condonation, though the same legal consequences may attend it. Connivance necessarily involves criminality on the part of the individual who connives; condonation may take place without imputing the slightest blame to the party who forgives the injury. Connivance must be the act of the mind before the offence has been committed; condonation is the result of a determination to forgive an injury which was not known until after it was inflicted. 3 Hagg. Eccl. 350.

Connivance differs, also, from collusion: the former is generally collusion for a particular purpose, while the latter may exist without connivance. 3 Hagg. Eccl. 130.

The connivance of the husband to his wife's prostitution deprives him of the right of obtaining a divorce, or of recovering damages from the seducer; Geary, Mar. & Fam. R. 268; 4 Term 657. The husband may actively connive at the adultery; Myers v. Myers, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 114; Hedden v. Hedden, 21 N. J. Eq. 61; or he may passively; 5 Eng. Ecc. 27; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 87. It may be satisfactorily proved by implication. See Shelf. Mar. & Div. 449; 2 Bish. Mar. & Div. § 6; 2 Hagg. Eccl. 278, 376; 3 id. 58, 82, 107, 119, 312; Pierce v. Pierce, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 299, 15 Am. Dec. 210; Seagar v. Sligerland, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 219; Masten v. Masten, 15 N. H. 161; Herrick v. Herrick, 31 Mich. 300; In re Childs, 109 Mass. 407; Cochran v. Cochran, 35 Ia. 477.

A husband who connives at or consents to adultery by his wife is deemed as consenting to it with others and cannot have a divorce for a subsequent act with a different person, though the act connived at was not committed; Hedden v. Hedden, 21 N. J. Eq. 61; nor can he where the wife was led into it by connivance of a detective employed by the husband, not for such purpose but to obtain evidence; Rademacher v. Rademacher, 74 N. J. Eq. 570, 70 Atl. 687; L. R. 2 P. & D. 428. So also abandonment by the wife, knowing (as she said she did) that the husband would naturally seek other women, was held to be connivance; Richardson v. Richardson, 114 N. Y. Supp. 912. Where a husband willfully abstains from any attempt to prevent misconduct which he must know is likely to occur, he is held to have connived at such misconduct; 33 L. J. Mat. Cas. 161.

CONNOISSEMENT. In French Law. An instrument, signed by the master of a ship or his agent, containing a description of the goods loaded on a ship, the persons who have sent them, the persons to whom they were sent, and the undertaking to transport them. A bill of lading. Guyot, Répert. Univ.; Ord. de la Marine, l. 3, t. 3, art. 1.

CONNUBIUM (Lat.). A lawful marriage. See MARRIAGE; CONCUBINATUS.

CONOCIMIENTO. In Spanish Law. A bill of lading. In the Mediterranean ports it is called poliza de cargamento.

CONQUEST (Lat. conquiro, to seek for).

In Feudal Law. Purchase; any means of obtaining an estate out of the usual course of inheritance.

The estate itself so acquired.

According to Blackstone and Sir Henry Spelman, the word in its original meaning was entirely dissociated from any connection with the modern idea of military subjugation, but was used solely in the sense of purchase. It is difficult and quite profitless to attempt a decision of the question which has arisen, whether it was applied to William's acquisition of England in its original or its popular meaning. It must be allowed to offer a very reasonable explanation of the derivation of the modern signification of the word, that it was still used at that time to denote a technical purchase—the prevalent method of purchase then, and for quite a long period subsequently, being by driving off the occupant by superior strength. The operation of making a conquest, as illustrated by William the Conqueror, was no doubt often afterwards repeated by his followers on a smaller scale; and thus the modern signification became established. On the other hand, it would be much more difficult to derive a general signification of purchase from the limited modern one of military subjugation. But the whole matter must remain mainly conjectural; and it is undoubtedly going too far to say, with Burrill, that the meaning assigned by Blackstone is "demonstrated," or, with Wharton, that the same meaning is a "mere idle ingenuity." Fortunately, the question is not of the slightest importance in any respect.

See 17 L. Q. R. 392.

In International Law. The acquisition of the sovereignty of a country by force of arms, exercised by an independent power which reduces the vanquished to submission to its empire.

The intention of the conqueror to retain the conquered territory is generally manifested by formal proclamation of annexation, and when this is combined with a recognized ability to retain the conquered territory, the transfer of sovereignty is complete. A treaty of peace based upon the principle of uti possidetis (q. v.) is formal recognition of conquest.

The effects of conquest are to confer upon the conquering state the public property of the conquered state, and to invest the former with the rights and obligations of the latter; treaties entered into by the conquered state with other states remain binding upon the annexing state, and the debts of the extinct state must be taken over by it. Conquest likewise invests the conquering state with sovereignty over the subjects of the conquered state. Among subjects of the conquered state are to be included persons domiciled in the conquered territory who remain there after the annexation. The people of the conquered state change their allegiance but not their relations to one another. Leitensdorfer v. Webb, 20 How. (U. S.) 176, 15 L. Ed. 891.

After the transfer of political jurisdiction to the conqueror the municipal laws of the territory continue in force until abrogated by the new sovereign. American Ins. Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 511, 7 L. Ed. 242.

Bouv.—39

CONQUÊTS. In French Law. The name given to every acquisition which the husband and wife, jointly or severally, make during the conjugal community. Thus, whatever is acquired by the husband and wife, either by his or her industry or good fortune, enures to the extent of one half for the benefit of the other. Merlin, Rép. Conquêt; Merlin, Quest., Conquêt. In Louisiana, these gains are called acquêts. La. Civ. Code, art. 2369. The conquêts by a former marriage may not be settled on a second wife to prejudice the heirs; 2 Low. C. 175.

CONSANGUINEOUS FRATER. A brother who has the same father. 2 Bla. Com. 231.

CONSANGUINITY (Lat. consanguis, blood together).

The relation subsisting among all the different persons descending from the same stock or common ancestor. See Swezey v. Willis, 1 Brad. Surr. R. (N. Y.) 495.

Having the blood of some common ancestor. Blodget v. Brinsmaid, 9 Vt. 30.

Collateral consanguinity is the relation subsisting among persons who descend from the same common ancestor, but not from each other. It is essential, to constitute this relation, that they spring from the same common root or stock, but in different branches.

Lineal consanguinity is that relation which exists among persons where one is descended from the other, as between the son and the father, or the grandfather, and so upward in a direct ascending line; and between the father and the son, or the grandson, and so downwards in a direct descending line.

In computing the degree of lineal consanguinity existing between two persons, every generation in the direct course of relationship between the two parties makes a degree; and the rule is the same by the canon, civil, and common law.

The mode of computing degrees of collateral consanguinity at the common and by the canon law is to discover the common ancestor, to begin with him to reckon downwards, and the degree the two persons, or the more remote of them, is distant from the ancestor, is the degree of kindred subsisting between them. For instance, two brothers are related to each other in the first degree, because from the father to each of them is one degree. An uncle and a nephew are related to each other in the second degree, because the nephew is two degrees distant from the common ancestor; and the rule of computation is extended to the remotest degrees of collateral relationship.

The method of computing by the civil law is to begin at either of the persons in question, and count up to the common ancestor, and then downwards to the other person, calling it a degree for each person, both ascending and descending, and the degrees they stand from each other is the degree in which they stand related. Thus, from a nephew to his father is one degree; to the grandfather, two degrees; and then to the uncle three; which points out the relationship.

The following table, in which the Roman numeral letters express the degrees by the civil law, and those in Arabic figures those by the common law, will fully illustrate the subject.

The mode of the civil law is preferable, for it points out the actual degree of kindred in all cases; by the mode adopted by the common law, different relations may stand in the same degree. The uncle and nephew stand related in the second degree by the common law, and so are two first cousins, or two sons of two brothers; but by the civil law the uncle and nephew are in the third degree, and the cousins are in the fourth. The mode of computation, however, is immaterial; for both will establish the same person to be the heir; 2 Bla. Com. 202.

CONSCRIPTION. A compulsory enrolment of men for military service; draft. The body of conscripts. Stand. Dict.

A military force was raised by conscription under the acts of July 17, 1862, March 3, 1863, and February 10, 1864. They provided for a national enrolment under the authority of the United States, for an apportionment of quotas among the states, and authorized the quotas to be obtained in the several districts into which the states were divided. Certain classes of persons were exempt, and drafted men were released upon furnishing acceptable substitutes or by the payment of a statutory sum of money. Davis, Mil. Law. 51.

CONSEIL D'ÉTAT. This is one of the oldest of French institutions, its origin dating back to 1302. Under a law of 1879 it was reorganized as follows: President, the keeper of the seals, who at the same time is invariably the Minister of Justice. There are thirty-two councillors (ordinary) and eighteen councillors (extraordinary) and thirty assistant councillors. It decides upon state questions and measures proposed for legislation, submitted to it by the President of the Republic and by the members of the Cabinet. It advises in connection with bills submitted by Parliament for its consideration and bills prepared by the government, and proposed decrees. Matters relating to public administration come within the scope of its duties. Coxe, Manual of French Law.

CONSEILLE DE FAMILLE (Fr.). A family council, which see.

CONSENSUAL CONTRACT. In Civil Law. A contract completed by the consent of the parties merely, without any further act.

The contract of sale, among the civilians, is an example of a consensual contract, because the moment there is an agreement between the seller and the buyer as to the thing and the price, the vendor and the purchaser have reciprocal actions. On the contrary, on a loan, there is no action by the lender or borrower, although there may have been consent, until the thing is delivered or the money counted; Pothier, Obl. pt. 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 2; 1 Bell, Comm. 435.

CONSENSUS AD IDEM. An agreement of parties to the same thing; a meeting of minds. See AGREEMENT.

CONSENT (Lat. con, with, together, sentire, to feel). A concurrence of wills.

Expressa consent is that directly given, either viva voce or in writing.

Implied consent is that manifested by signs, actions, or facts, or by inaction or silence, from which arises an inference that the consent has been given.

Consent supposes a physical power to act, a moral power of acting, and a serious, determined, and free use of these powers. Fonblanque, Eq. b. 1, c. 2, s. 1. Consent is implied in every agreement. See AGREEMENT; CONTRACT.

Where a power of sale requires that the sale should be with the consent of certain specified individuals, the fact of such consent having been given ought to be evinced in the manner pointed out by the creator of the power, or such power will not be considered as properly executed; 10 Ves. Ch. 308, 378. See as to consent in vesting or divesting legacies; 2 V. & B. 234; 3 Ves. Ch. 239; 12 id. 19; 3 Bro. C. C. 145; 1 Sim. & S. 172. As to implied consent arising from acts, see ESTOPPEL IN PAIS.

See Hakim Chand, Law of Consent.

In Criminal Law. No act shall be deemed a crime if done with the consent of the party injured, unless it be committed in public, and is likely to provoke a breach of the peace, or tends to the injury of a third party; provided no consent can be given which will deprive the consenter of any inalienable right; A. & E. Encyc. Desty, Cr. L. § 33. The one who gives consent must be capable of doing so; 1 Whar. Cr. L. § 146; Hadden v. People, 25 N. Y. 373. But by statutes in various states a female child under a certain specified age cannot consent to sexual intercourse. See RAPE.

CONSENT JUDGMENT. One entered by agreement of the parties.

Proceedings at the instance of one party to a cause are not taken by consent simply because the other party had notice and did not object; Jennings v. R. Co., 218 U. S. 255, 31 Sup. Ct. 1, 54 L. Ed. 1031.

CONSENT RULE. An entry of record by the defendant, confessing the lease, entry, and ouster by the plaintiff, in an action of ejectment. This was, until recently, used in England, and still is in those states in which ejectment is still retained as a means of acquiring possession of land.

The consent rule contains the following particulars, viz.: first, the person appearing consents to be made defendant instead of the casual ejector; second, he agrees to appear at the suit of the plaintiff, and, if the proceedings are by bill, to file common bail; third, to receive a declaration in ejectment, and to plead not guilty; fourth, at the trial of the case, to confess lease, entry, and ouster, and to insist upon his title only; fifth, that if, at the trial, the party appearing shall not confess lease, entry, and ouster, whereby the plaintiff shall not be able to prosecute his suit, such party shall pay to the plaintiff the cost of the non pros., and suffer judgment to be entered against the casual ejector; sixth, that if a verdict shall be given for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall not prosecute his suit for any other cause than the non-confession of lease, entry, and ouster, the lessor of the plaintiff shall pay costs to the defendant; seventh, that, when the landlord appears alone, the plaintiff shall be at liberty to sign judgment immediately against the casual ejector, but that execution shall be stayed until the court shall further order; Ad. Eject. 233. See, also, Jackson v. Stiles, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 442; Jackson v. Denniston, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 311.

CONSENTIBLE LINES. See LINE.

CONSEQUENTIAL DAMAGES. Those damages which arise not from the immediate act of the party, but as an incidental consequence of such act. See DAMAGES.

CONSERVATOR (Lat. conservare, to preserve). A preserver; one whose business it is to attend to the enforcement of certain statutes.

A delegated umpire or standing arbitrator, chosen to compose and adjust difficulties arising between two parties. Cowell.

A guardian. So used in Connecticut. Woodford v. Webster, 3 Day (Conn.) 472; Treat v. Peck, 5 Conn. 280; Hutchins v. Johnson, 12 Conn. 376, 30 Am. Dec. 622.

See CONSERVATOR TRUCIS.

CONSERVATOR OF THE PEACE. He who hath an especial charge, by virtue of his office, to see that the king's peace be kept.

Before the reign of Edward III., who created justices of the peace, there were sundry persons interested to keep the peace, of whom there were two classes: one of which had the power annexed to the office which they held; the other had it merely by itself, and were hence called wardens or conservators of the peace. Lambard, Eirenarchia, l. 1, c. 3. This latter sort are superseded by the modern justices of the peace; 1 Bla. Com. 349.

The king was the principal conservator of the peace within all his dominions. The lord chancellor or keeper, the lord treasurer, the lord high steward, the lord marshal and lord high constable, all the justices of the court of king's bench (by virtue of their offices), and the master of the rolls (by prescription) were general conservators of the peace throughout the whole kingdom, and might commit all breakers of it, or bind them in recognizances to keep it: the other judges were only so in their own courts. The coroner was also a conservator of the peace within his own county, as also the sheriff, and both of them might take recognizances or security for the peace. Constables, tythingmen, and justices of the peace were also conservators of the peace within their own jurisdiction; and might apprehend all breakers of the peace, and commit them until they found sureties for their keeping it. See Stephen, Hist. Cr. L. 110; Burns Justice; 19 State Tr. (Judgment of Lord Camden).

The judges and other similar officers of the various states, and also of the United States, are conservators of the public peace, being entitled "to hold to the security of the peace and during good behavior."

The Constitution of Delaware (1831) provides that: "The members of the senate and house of representatives, the chancellor, the judges, and the attorney-general shall, by virtue of their offices, be conservators of the peace throughout the state; and the treasurer, secretary, and prothonotaries, registers, recorders, sheriffs, and coroners, shall, by virtue of their offices, be conservators thereof within the counties respectively in which they reside."

CONSERVATOR TRUCIS (Lat.). An official appointed under an English act of 1414 passed to prevent breaches of truces made, or of safe conducts granted, by the king. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 392.

Such offences are declared to be treason, and such officers are appointed in every port, to hear and determine such cases, "according to the ancient maritime law then practised in the admiral's court as may arise upon the high seas, and with two associates to determine those arising upon land." 4 Bla. Com. 69.

CONSIDER, CONSIDERED. See CONSIDERATUM EST PER CURIAM.

CONSIDERATION. An act or forbearance, or the promise thereof, which is offered by one party to an agreement, and accepted by the other as an inducement to that other's act or promise. Poll. Contr. 91.

Blackstone defines it to be the reason which moves a contracting party to enter into a contract (2 Com. 443); Burgher v. R.

Co., 139 Mo. App. 62, 120 S. W. 673; but this definition is manifestly defective because it is within the distinction taken by Patteson, J., who says: "It is not to be confounded with motive, which is not the same thing as consideration. The latter means something which is of value in the eye of the law, moving from the plaintiff, either of benefit to the plaintiff or of detriment to the defendant;" Langd. Sel. Cas. Contr. 168; s. c. 2 Q. B. 851. In distinguishing between consideration and motive a helpful criterion is to be found in the expression "nothing is consideration that is not regarded as such by both parties;" Philpot v. Gruninger, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 570, 577, 20 L. Ed. 743; Ellis v. Clark, 110 Mass. 389, 14 Am. Rep. 609; Sterne v. Bank, 79 Ind. 549, 551.

The price, motive, or matter of inducement to a contract,—whether it be the compensation which is paid, or the inconvenience which is suffered by the party from whom it proceeds. A compensation or equivalent. A cause or occasion meritorious, requiring mutual recompense in deed or in law. Viner, Abr. Consideration (A).

Consideration, in a contract, is the quid pro quo that the party to whom the promise is made does or agrees to do in exchange for the contract. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 197, 7 Sup. Ct. 500, 30 L. Ed. 644. See also Pollock, Contracts (1902 Ed.).

It is also defined as "any act of the plaintiff from which the defendant or a stranger derives a benefit or advantage, or any labor, detriment, or inconvenience sustained by the plaintiff, however small, if such act is performed or inconvenience suffered by the plaintiff by the consent, express or implied, of the defendant." Tindal, C. J., in 3 Scott 250. According to Kent it must be given in exchange, mutual, an inducement to the contract, lawful, and of sufficient value, with respect to the assumption. 2 Com. 464.

"The name consideration appeared only about the 16th century, and we do not know by what steps it became a settled term of art." Pollock Contr. 170. That it was not borrowed from equity as a modification of the Roman Law causa, see CAUSA.

Concurrent considerations are those which arise at the same time or where the promises are simultaneous and reciprocal.

Continuing considerations are those which consist of acts which must necessarily continue over a considerable period of time.

Executed considerations are acts done or values given at the time of making the contract. Leake, Contr. 18, 612.

Executory considerations are promises to do or give something at a future day. Ibid.

Good considerations are those of blood, natural love or affection, and the like.

Motives of natural duty, generosity, and prudence come under this class; 2 Bla. Com. 297; Batty v. Carswell, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 52; Ewing v. Ewing, 2 Leigh (Va.) 337; Carpenter v. Dodge, 20 Vt. 695; 1 C. & P. 401; Doran v. McConlogue, 150 Pa. 93, 24 Atl. 357; Mascolo v. Montesanto, 61 Conn. 50, 23 Atl. 714, 29 Am. St. Rep. 170. The only purpose for which a good consideration may be effectual is to support a covenant to stand seized to uses, in favor of wife, child or blood relation. It is good against a grantor when it has been executed; Cblity, Contr. 28; so of a gift; Candee v. Savings Bank, 81 Conn. 372, 71 Atl. 551, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568; but may be void against creditors and subsequent bona fide purchasers for value; Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4; 10 B. & C. 606; Patterson v. Mills, 69 Ia. 765, 28 N. W. 53; Shep. Touchst. 512; Leake Contr. 442.

The term is sometimes used in the sense of a consideration valid in point of law; and it then includes a valuable as well as a meritorious consideration; Hodgson v. Butts, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 140, 2 L. Ed. 391; Lang v. Johnson, 24 N. H. 302; 2 Madd. 430; 3 Co. 81; Ambl. 593. Generally, however, good is used in antithesis to valuable.

Illegal considerations are acts, which if done or promises which if enforced, would be prejudicial to the public interest. Hariman, Cont. 101.

Impossible considerations are those which cannot be performed.

Moral considerations are such as are based upon a moral duty.

Past consideration is an act done before the contract is made, and is ordinarily by itself no consideration for a promise; Anson, Contr. 82. Pollock considers that whether a past benefit is, in any case, a good consideration is a question not free from uncertainty. On principle it should not be. Possible exceptions might be services rendered on request, without definite promise of reward (see Hob. 105) and voluntarily doing something which one was legally bound to do. Also a promise to pay a debt barred by the statute of limitations; but he considers that none of these exceptions are logical. See Poll. Contr. 170.

Valuable considerations are either some benefit conferred upon the party by whom the promise is made, or upon a third party at his instance or request; or some detriment sustained, at the instance of the party promising, by the party in whose favor the promise is made. Doct. & Stud. 179; Townsend v. Sumrall, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 182, 7 L. Ed. 386; Violet v. Patton, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 142, 3 L. Ed. 61; Wright v. Wright, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 183; Powell v. Brown, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 100; Brewster v. Silence, 8 N. Y. 207; Forster v. Fuller, 6 Mass. 58, 4 Am. Dec. 87; Lemaster v. Burckhart, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 30; Wooldridge v. Cates, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 222; Farmer v. Stewart, 2 N. H. 97; Shenk v. Mingle, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 29; Tompkins v. Philips, 12 Ga. 52; Odineal v. Barry, 24 Miss. 9; Dunbar v. Bonesteel, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 33; Taylor v. Meek, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 388; 3 C. B. 321; Hodge v. Powell, 96 N. C. 67, 2 S. E. 182, 60 Am. Rep. 401. The detriment on entering into the contract and not from the breach of it; Ridgway v. Grace, 2 Misc. 293, 21 N. Y. Supp. 934.

"A valuable consideration may consist either in some right, interest, profit, or benefit accruing to one party, or some forbearance, detriment, loss, or responsibility given, suffered, or undertaken by the other." L. R. 10 Ex. 162. See Train v. Gold, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 380.

A valuable consideration is usually in some way pecuniary, or convertible into money; and a very slight consideration, provided it be valuable and free from fraud, will support a contract; Lawrence v. McCalmont, 2 How. (U. S.) 426, 11 L. Ed. 326; Phelps v. Stewart, 12 Vt. 259; Upson v. Raiford, 29 Ala. 188; Harlan v. Harlan, 20 Pa. 303; Sauborn v. French, 22 N. H. 246; 11 Ad. & E. 933; Mathews v. Meek, 23 Ohio St. 292. Valuable considerations are divided by the civilians into four classes, which are given, with literal translations: Do ut des (I give that you may give), Facio ut facias (I do that you may do), Facio ut des (I do that you may give), Do ut facias (I give that you may do).

Consideration has been treated as the very life and essence of a contract; and a parol contract or promise for which there was no consideration could not be enforced at law; Reading R. Co. v. Johnson, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 317; Plowd. 308; Cumber v. Wane, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 606; Mosby v. Leeds, 3 Call (Va.) 439; Cook v. Bradley, 7 Conn. 57, 18 Am. Dec. 79; Brown v. Adams, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 51, 18 Am. Dec. 36; Thacher v. Dinsmore, 5 Mass. 301, 4 Am. Dec. 61; Burnet v. Bisco, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 235; Perrine v. Cheeseman, 11 N. J. L. 174, 19 Am. Dec. 388; Beverleys v. Holmes, 4 Munf. (Va.) 95; Westmoreland v. Walker, 25 Miss. 76; Chase v. Vaughan, 30 Me. 412; Goldsborough v. Gable, 140 Ill. 269, 29 N. E. 722, 15 L. R. A. 294; McNutt v. Loney, 153 Pa. 281, 25 Atl. 1088; Bush v. Rawlins, 89 Ga. 117, 14 S. E. 886; North Atchison Bank v. Gay, 114 Mo. 203, 21 S. W. 479; Brooke, Abr. Action sur le Case, 40; such a promise was often termed a nudum pactum (ex nudo pacto non oritur actio), or nude pact. This phrase was undoubtedly borrowed from the Roman law, but its use in English law had no relation whatever to its meaning in the Roman; nor is the word pact of the latter in any sense related to the common-law contract. The nudum pactum, as appears by the note cited infra from Pollock, had not anciently in England its modern signification of an agreement without consideration in the sense of the maxim quoted. In an elaborate note to Pollock, Contracts 673, the learned author calls attention to a difference between consideration in the English law and its nearest continental analogies, which difference, he says, has not always been realized. The actual history of the English doctrine is obscure. The most we can affirm is that the general idea was formed somewhere in the latter part of the fifteenth century. At the same time or a little later, nudum pactum lost its ancient meaning (viz.: an agreement not made by specialty so as to support an action of covenant or falling within one of certain classes so as to support an action of debt), and came to mean what it does now. The word consideration in the sense now before us came into use, at least as a settled term of art, still later. In the early writers, consideration always means the judgment of a court.

The early cases of actions of assumpsit show by negative evidence which is almost conclusive that in the first half of the 15th century, the doctrine of consideration was quite unformed, though the phrase quid pro quo is earlier. But in 1459 there was a case which showed that an action of debt would then lie on any consideration executed. In the Doctor and Student (A. D. 1530) we find substantially the modern doctrine. So far as the writer of that work knows, he finds the first full discussion of consideration by that name in Plowden's report of Sharington v. Strotton, Plowd. 298.

The question of consideration was of importance in the learning of Uses before the statute, and the reflection is obvious that both the general conception and the name of Consideration have had their origin in the court of chancery in the law of uses and have been thence imported into the law of contracts rather than developed by the common-law courts. On this hypothesis, a connection with the Roman causa may be suggested with some plausibility. But see CAUSA.

The same writer proceeds to say that in the process thus sketched out some steps are conjectural, and considers that the materials are not ripe for a positive conclusion and will not be until the unpublished records of mediæval English law shall be competently edited. See Holmes, Common Law 253, where a different theory of the origin of consideration is given as being a generalization from the technical requirements of the action of debt in its earlier form.

The theory on which the phrase nudum pactum was wrongly applied was that the maxim signified that a gratuitous promise to do or pay anything on the one side, without any compensation on the other, could only be enforced, in the Roman law, when made (or clothed) with proper words or formalities—pactum verbis prescriptis vestitum; Vinnius, Com. de Inst. lib. 3, de verborum obligationibus, tit. 16, p. 677; Cod. lib. 7, tit. 52. This solemnity it was argued had much the force of our seal, which imported consideration, as it was said, meaning that the formality implied consideration in its ordinary sense i. e., deliberation, caution, and fulness of assent; Hare, Contr. 146; 3 Bingh. 111; 3 Burr. 1639; Wing v. Chase, 35 Me. 260; Augusta Bank v. Hamblet, 35 Me. 491; Erickson v. Brandt, 53 Minn. 10, 55 N. W. 62; but see Winter v. Goebner, 2 Colo. App. 259, 30 Pac. 51. There was, however, the distinction often lost sight of but which ought to be made that even on the theory that the vitality of a seal was solely as a token of the existence of a consideration, under the common law it was not the fact that the instrument was under seal which gave it vitality, but the consideration whose existence is implied therefrom, while, under the civil law, the subject of consideration bore no such relation to the contract as it does under the English law even accepting the theory of Stephen and other writers stated under title CONTRACT, q. v., that the consideration is not an essential element of a contract,—necessary to its existence. Under the civil law it was of the essence of certain contracts that they should be gratuitous, and those based upon a consideration constituted only a single division called commutative contracts, which again was subdivided into the four classes represented by the formula quoted, supra, do et des, etc.

While, therefore, the Roman law doubtless exercised a large influence upon the English law of contracts, the subject of consideration particularly has been overlaid with erroneous theories, and the ascertainment of its true bearing long postponed, by the pursuit of false analogies, due probably to the early adoption of such phrases as the above and their incorporation into the common law, to express superficial impressions created by them rather than the meaning attributed to them by the Roman jurists.

These analogies have, however, been in recent years the subject of more careful investigation, and the study of the early English authorities and a greatly increased interest in, and knowledge of, the Roman law, have resulted in disturbing many of the theories of consideration in its true relation to the contract and the true meaning of the seal as making a contract actionable which would not be so if by parol.

The consideration is generally conclusively presumed from the nature of the contract, when sealed; Grubb v. Willis, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 107; but in some of the states the want or failure of a consideration may be a good defence against an action on a sealed instrument or contract; Solomon v. Kimmel, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 232; Case v. Boughton, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 106; Leonard v. Bates, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 173; Coyle's Ex'x v. Fowler, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 473; Peebles v. Stephens, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 500; Matlock v. Gibson, 8 Rich. (S. C.) 437.

While one cannot deny the existence of some consideration, so as to defeat a deed; McGee v. Allison, 94 Ia. 527, 63 N. W. 322; Weissenfels v. Cable, 208 Mo. 515, 106 S. W. 1028; it may be proved to have been greater or less or different in character, as property or services, instead of money, and the like; Jost v. Wolf, 130 Wis. 37, 110 N. W. 232; to the same effect; Jackson v. R. Co., 54 Mo. App. 636; Cheesman v. Nicholl, 18 Colo. App. 174, 70 Pac. 797; Martin v. White, 115 Ga. 866, 42 S. E. 279. The receipt for the consideration money is only prima facie evidence of its payment, which may be rebutted by parol testimony; Smith v. Arthur, 110 N. C. 400, 15 S. E. 197; R.

A. Sherman's Sons Co. v. Mfg. Co., 82 Conn. 479, 74 Atl. 773. Parol evidence is admissible to prove a promise to pay a consideration in addition to that expressed in the deed; Allen v. Rees, 136 Ia. 423, 110 N. W. 583; 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1137; Henry v. Zurlieb, 203 Pa. 440, 53 Atl. 243; but if the consideration is contractual, such evidence is not admissible; Baum v. Lynn, 72 Miss. 932, 18 South. 428, 30 L. R. A. 441.

See note in 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1194.

"The truth is that neither consideration or anything of the kind ever was necessary in the case of a deed and . . . a mere acknowledgment of consideration received, forming no part of a contract, is only evidence, and hence may be qualified or disputed altogether." Bigelow, Estoppel, 478.

Where a deed states a consideration grossly misrepresenting the value of the property for the purpose of cheating and defrauding another who relies on such representations, such statement of value may be made the basis of an action for fraud; Leonard v. Springer, 197 Ill. 532, 64 N. E. 299.

Negotiable instruments also, as bills of exchange and promissory notes, by statute 3 & 4 Anne (adopted as common law or by reenactment in the United States), carry with them prima facie evidence of consideration; 4 Bla. Com. 445. See BILLS OF EXCHANGE; NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

The consideration, if not expressed (when it is prima facie evidence of consideration), in all parol contracts (oral or written), must be proved; this may be done by evidence aliunde; Thompson v. Blanchard, 3 N. Y. 335; Tingley v. Cutler, 7 Conn. 291; Whitney v. Stearns, 16 Me. 394; Bean v. Burbank, 16 Me. 458, 33 Am. Dec. 681; Arms v. Ashley, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 71; Cummings v. Dennett, 26 Me. 397; Patchin v. Swift, 21 Vt. 292; Sloan v. Gibson, 4 Mo. 33.

Moral or equitable considerations are not sufficient to support an express or implied promise. They are only sufficient as between the parties in conveyances by deed, and in transfers, not by deed, accompanied by possession; Scott v. Carruth, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 418; 3 B. & P. 249. See 11 A. & E. 438; Mills v. Wyman, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 207. These purely moral obligations are left by the law to the conscience and good faith of the individual. Baron Parke says, "A mere moral consideration is nothing," 9 M. & W. 501; Kennerly v. Martin, 8 Mo. 698. See In re James, 78 Hun 121, 28 N. Y. Supp. 992. It was at one time held in England that an express promise made in consequence of a previously existing moral obligation created a valid contract; per Mansfield, C. J., Cowp. 290; 5 Taunt. 36. This doctrine was at one time received in the United States, but appears now to be repudiated there; Poll. Contr. 168; except in Pennsylvania; Cornell v. Vanartsdalen, 4 Pa. 364; Hemphill v. McClimans, 24 Pa. 370.

Where one is induced to become a surety for another's husband and the promise by the other party is void on account of coverture, a subsequent promise made after the disability was removed is void for lack of consideration; Hollaway's Assignee v. Rudy, 60 S. W. 650, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1406, 53 L. R. A. 353.

It is often said that a moral obligation is sufficient consideration; but it is a rule, that such moral obligation must be one which has once been valuable and enforceable at law, but has ceased to be so by the operation of the statute of limitations, or by the intervention of bankruptcy for instance. The obligation, in such case, remains equally strong on the conscience of the debtor. The rule amounts only to a permission to waive certain positive rules of law as to remedy; Poll. Contr. 623; 2 Bla. Com. 445; Cowp. 290; 3 B. & P. 249, n.; 2 East 506; 2 Ex. 90; 8 Q. B. 487; Way v. Sperry, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 238, 52 Am. Dec. 779; Turner v. Chrisman, 20 Ohio 332; Ehle v. Judson, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 97; Warren v. Whitney, 24 Me. 561, 41 Am. Dec. 406; Paul v. Stackhouse, 38 Pa. 306; Smith v. Ware, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 259; Cook v. Bradley, 7 Conn. 57, 18 Am. Dec. 79; Hawley v. Farrar, 1 Vt. 420; Biddle v. Moore, 3 Pa. 172; Willing v. Peters, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 177; Levy v. Cadet, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 126, 17 Am. Dec. 650; Viser v. Bertrand, 14 Ark. 267; Pritchard v. Howell, 1 Wis. 131, 60 Am. Dec. 363; Trumbull v. Tilton, 21 N. H. 129; Ellicott v. Turner, 4 Md. 476. See Easley v. Gordon, 51 Mo. App. 637; In re James, 78 Hun 121, 28 N. Y. Supp. 992; Brooks v. Bank, 125 Pa. 394, 17 Atl. 418. But now, by statute, in England a promise to pay a debt barred by bankruptcy or one contracted during infancy is void; Leake, Contr. 318. If the moral duty were once a legal one which could have been made available in defence, it is equally within the rule; Nash v. Russell, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 556; Watkins v. Halstead, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 311; Phelan v. Kelley, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 389; Mardis v. Tyler, 10 B. Monr. (Ky.) 382; Womack v. Womack, 8 Tex. 397, 58 Am. Dec. 119. See as to moral obligation as a consideration, 32 Cent. L. J. 53.

An express promise to perform a previous legal obligation, without any new consideration, does not create a new obligation; 7 Dowl. 781; Reynolds v. Nugent, 25 Ind. 328; 15 C. B. 295; 16 Q. B. 689; Vanderbilt v. Schreyer, 91 N. Y. 401; Withers v. Ewing, 40 Ohio St. 400; Conover v. Stillwell, 34 N. J. L. 54; Cobb v. Cowdery, 40 Vt. 28, 94 Am. Dec. 370; Runnamaker v. Cordray, 54 Ill. 303; Warren v. Hodge, 121 Mass. 106. The promise of one party under an existing contract to perform his obligation is not a valid consideration for a new promise by the other party; Wescott v. Mitchell, 95 Me. 377, 50 Atl. 21; so where one party promises to do less than he has already agreed to do and the other party promises to do more than he is obliged to do; Weed v. Spears, 193 N. Y. 289, 86 N. E. 10; and where the consideration of the new contract is services which one is legally bound to perform under a pre-existing contract; Alaska Packers' Ass'n v. Domenico, 117 Fed. 99, 54 C. C. A. 485; contra, where additional compensation is promised to induce another to complete his contract after abandonment on account of unforeseen and unanticipated difficulties; Linz v. Schuck, 106 Md. 220, 67 Atl. 286, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 789, 124 Am. St. Rep. 481, 14 Ann. Cas. 495. Whether (a) the performance of an existing contractual obligation or (b) a new promise of such performance made to a new promisee is a good consideration for a new contract has been much discussed by legal writers. That neither is good is maintained by Anson and Williston; that both are good is the view of Ames (who even holds that a new promise of the same thing to the same promisee may be good) and Harman; that (a) is not good, but (b) is, is the opinion of Langdell, Leake and Pollock and (for not quite the same reason) Beale. See 20 L. Q. R. 9. See Articles on consideration in 9 Harv. L. R. 233; 12 id. 517; 17 id. 71; 17 Yale L. Journal, 338; 17 L. Q. R. 415.

A valuable consideration alone is good as against subsequent purchasers and attaching creditors; and one which is rendered at the request, express or implied, of the promisor; Dy, 172, n.; 1 Rolle, Abr. 11, pl. 2, 3; 1 Ld. Raym. 312; 1 Wms. Saund. 264, n. (1); 6 Ad. & E. 718; 3 C. & P. 36; 6 Am. & W. 485; 3 Q. B. 234; Cro. Eliz. 442; Hort v. Norton, 1 McCord (S. C.) 22.

Among valuable considerations may be mentioned these:

In general, the waiver of any legal or equitable right at the request of another is sufficient consideration for a promise; Knapp v. Lee, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 452; Farmer v. Stewart, 2 N. H. 97; Nicholson v. May, 1 Wright (Ohio) 660; Smith v. Weed, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 184, 32 Am. Dec. 525; Williams v. Alexander, 39 N. C. 207; 4 B. & C. 8; Union Bank v. Geary, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 114, 8 L. Ed. 60; 4 Ad. & E. 108; Heltsch v. Cole, 47 Minn. 320, 50 N. W. 235; Fraser v. Backus, 62 Mich. 540, 29 N. W. 92; Vogel v. Meyer, 23 Mo. App. 427.

Forbearance for a certain or reasonable time to institute a suit upon a valid or doubtful claim, but not upon one utterly unfounded. This is a benefit to one party, the promisor, and an injury to the other, the promisee; 1 Rolle, Abr. 24, pl. 33; Com. Dig. Action on the Case upon Assumpsit (B, 1); L. R. 7 Ex. 235; L. R. 10 Q. McLean*, 57 Wis. 258, 15 N. W. 177, 46 Am. Rep. 39. "If an intending litigant bona fide forbears the right to litigate a question of law or fact which it is not vexatious or frivolous to litigate, he does give up something of value." Lord Bowen in 32 Ch. Div. 266, 291. An agreement to forbear suit, though for an indefinite period, is sufficient consideration; Traders' Nat. Bank of San Antonio v. Parker, 130 N. Y. 415, 29 N. E. 1094; Mathews v. Seaver, 34 Neb. 592, 52 N. W. 283; Lancaster v. Elliot, 42 Mo. App. 503.

An invalid or not enforceable agreement to forbear is not a good consideration; suit may be brought immediately after the promise is made. The forbearance must be an enforceable agreement for a reasonable time; Hardr. 5; 4 M. & W. 795; King v. Upton, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 387, 16 Am. Dec. 266; Rix v. Adams, 9 Vt. 233, 31 Am. Templeton*, 78 Ky. 550. But if a meritorious claim is made in good faith, a forbearance to prosecute it may be a good consideration for a promise, although on the facts or on the law the suit would have failed of success; L. R. 5 Q. B. 449; Rue v. Meirs, 43 N. J. Eq. 377, 12 Atl. 369; 25 L. T. R. 504; 32 Ch. Div. 269; Hewett v. Currier, 63 Wis. 387, 23 N. W. 884; Fish v. Thomas, 5 Gray (Mass.) 45, 66 Am. Dec. 348; 10 Harv. L. Rev. 113.

Forbearance to prosecute a claim honestly made but not legally valid is no consideration for a promise; Price v. Bank, 62 Kans. 743, 64 Pac. 639.

The prevention of litigation is a valid and sufficient consideration; for the law favors the settlement of disputes. Thus, a compromise or mutual submission of demands to arbitration is a highly favored consideration at law; Van Dyke v. Davis, 2 Mich. 145; Zane's Devisees v. Zane, 6 Munf. (Va.) 406; Taylor v. Patrick, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 168; Truett v. Chaplin, 11 N. C. 178; Stoddard v. Mix, 14 Conn. 12; Barlow v. Ins. Co., 4

The giving up a suit instituted to try a question respecting which the law is doubtful, or is supposed by the parties to be doubtful, is a good consideration for a promise; Poll. Contr. 180; Leake, Contr. 626; L. R. 5 Q. B. 241; Hunter v. Lanius, 82 Tex. 677, 18 S. W. 201; Hamaker v. Eberley, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 509, 4 Am. Dec. 477; 2 C. B. 548; 4 East 455; *Feeter v. Incurring a legal liability to a third party is a valid consideration for a promise by the party at whose request the liability was incurred; L. R. 8 Eq. 134.

Refraining from the use of liquor and tobacco for a certain time at the request of another, is a sufficient consideration for a promise by the latter to pay a sum of money; Hamer v. Sidway, 124 N. Y. 538, 27 N. E. 256, 12 L. R. A. 463, 21 Am. St. Rep. 693.

The assignment of a debt or chose in action (unless void by reason of maintenance) with the consent of the debtor, is a good consideration for the debtor's promise to pay the assignee. It is merely a promise to pay a debt due, and the consideration is the discharge of the debtor's liability to the assignor; 4 B. & C. 525; 13 Q. B. 548; Whittle v. Skinner, 23 Vt. 532; Harrison v. Knight, 7 Tex. 47; Edson v. Fuller, 22 N. H. 185; 10 J. B. Moo. 34; 2 Bingh. 437; 1 Cr. M. & R. 430; Morse v. Bellows, 7 N. H. 549, 28 Am. Dec. 372. Work and service are perhaps the most common considerations.

In the case of deposit or mandate it was once held that there was no consideration; Yelv. 4, 128; Cro. Eliz. 883; the reverse is now usually maintained; 10 J. B. Moo. 192; 2 M. & W. 143; McCl. & Y. 205; Robinson v. Threadgill, 35 N. C. 39; Clark v. Gaylord, 24 Conn. 484; Coggs v. Bernard, 1 Sm. Lead. Cas. 354.

In these cases there does not appear to be any benefit arising from the bailment to the promisor. The definitions of mandate and deposit exclude this. Nor does any injury at the time accrue to the promisee; the bailment is for his benefit entirely.

Trust and confidence in another are said to be the considerations which support this contract. But we think parting with the possession of a thing may be considered an injury to the promisee, for which the prospect of return was the consideration held out by the promisor.

Mutual promises made at the same time are concurrent considerations, and will support each other if both be legal and binding; Cro. Eliz. 543; 6 B. & C. 255; 3 B. & Ad. 703; 3 E. L. & Eq. 420; Dorsey v. Packwood, 12 How. (U. S.) 126, 13 L. Ed. 921; Babcock v. Wilson, 17 Me. 372, 35 Am. Dec. 263; Forney v. Shipp, 49 N. C. 527; Nott v. Johnson, 7 Ohio St. 270; Cherry v. Smith, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 19, 39 Am. Dec. 150; Miller v. Drake, 1 Cal. (N. Y.) 45; Howe v. O'Mally, 5 N. C. 287, 3 Am. Dec. 693; *McKinley v. Yet the promise of an infant is a consideration for the promise of an adult. The infant may avoid his contract, but the adult cannot; Boyden v. Boyden, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 519; McGinn v. Shaeffer, 7 Watts (Pa.) 412; Hunt v. Peake, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 475, 15 Am. Dec. 475; Pool v. Pratt, 1 D. Chipm. (Vt.) 252; Cannon v. Alsbury, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 76, 10 Am. Dec. 709; Eubanks v. Peak, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 497; 3 Maule & S. 205. While a contract is executory, an agreement by one party to modify it is a consideration for a like agreement by the other; Dickson v. Owens, 134 Ill. App. 561; and a contract of employment is not lacking in mutuality because the party employed does not bind himself to continue in the employment for a definite period; Newhall v. Printing Co., 105 Minn. 44, 117 N. W. 228, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 899.

Marriage is a valuable consideration; Whelan v. Whelan, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 537; Huston's Adm'r v. Cantril, 11 Leigh (Va.) 136; Magniac v. Thompson, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 348, 8 L. A promise by one to support another in consideration of the other party's release of the first party from his promise to marry her, is valid and enforceable; Henderson v. Spratlen, 44 Colo. 278, 98 Pac. 14, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 655.

Subscriptions to shares in a chartered company are said to rest upon sufficient consideration; for the company is obliged to give the subscriber his shares, and he must pay for them; Pars. Contr. 377; Chester Glass Co. v. Dewey, 16 Mass. 94, 8 Am. Dec. 128; New Bedford & B. Turnpike Corp. v. Adams, 8 Mass. 138, 5 Am. Dec. 81; Curry v. Rogers, 21 N. Dec. 626.

On the subject of voluntary subscriptions for charitable purposes there is much confusion among the authorities; Ives v. Sterling, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 310. A promise of a subscription for the purchase of a church site, followed by the subsequent contract of the church for the land, is supported by a valid consideration; First Universalist Church v. Pungs, 126 Mich. 670, 86 N. W. 235. See SUBSCRIPTION.

Illegal considerations can be no foundation for a contract. Violations of morality, decency, and policy are in contravention of common law: as, contracts to commit, conceal, or compound a crime. So, a contract for future illicit intercourse, or in fraud of a third party, will not be enforced. Ex turpi contractu non oritur actio. But the act in question is not always a criterion; e. g. as to immoral considerations that which the law considers is whether the promise has a tendency to produce immoral results; hence while a promise of future illicit cohabitation is an illegal consideration; L. R. 16 Eq. 275; Boigner v. Boulon, 54 Cal. 146; Baldy v. Stratton, 11 Pa. 316; Harri-man, Cont. 114; but a promise founded upon past illicit cohabitation is not illegal; Bunn v. Winthrop, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 329; but simply voluntary and governed by the same rules as other past executed considerations; Poll. Cont. 262. The illegality created by statute exists when the statute either expressly prohibits a particular thing, or affixes a penalty which implies prohibition, or implies such prohibition from its object and nature; 10 Ad. & E. 815; Donallen v. Lennox, 6 Dana (Ky.) 91; Brown's Adm'rs v. Langford's Adm'rs, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 500; Town of Hinesburgh v. Sumner, 9 Vt. 23, 31 Am. Dec. 599; Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 258, 6 L. Dec. 479; Aspinwall v. Meyer, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 186; Hale v. Henderson, 4 Humphr. (Tenn.) 199; Lewis v. Welch, 14 N. H. 294; Caldwell v. Wentworth, id. 435; Cornwell v. Holly, 5 Rich. (S. C.) 47; Solomons v. Jones, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 54, 5 Am. Dec. 538; Miller v. Ammon, 145 U. S. 421, 12 Sup. Ct. 884, 36 L. Ed. 759. If any part of the consideration is void as against the law, it is void in toto; Woodruff v. Hinman, 11 Vt. 592, 34 Am. Dec. 712; Allen v. Pearce, 84 Ga. 606, 10 S. E. 1015; see Wilcox

v. Daniels, 15 R. I. 261, 3 Atl. 204; Buck v. Abbee, 26 Vt. 184, 62 Am. Dec. 564; Widoe v. Webb, 20 Ohio St. 431, 5 Am. Rep. 664; Hazelton v. Sheckels, 202 U. S. 71, 26 Sup. Ct. 567, 50 L. Ed. 939, 6 Ann. Cas. 217; but contra, if the promise be divisible and apportionable to any part of the consideration, the promise so far as not attributable to the illegal consideration might be valid; Leake, Contr. 631; 2 M. & G. 167.

A contract founded upon an impossible consideration is void. Lex neminem cogit ad vana aut impossibilia; 5 Viner, Abr. 110, 111, Condition (C) a, (D) a; 1 Rolle, Abr. 419; Co. Litt. 206 a; 2 B. & C. 474; Leake, Contr. 719. But such impossibility must be a natural or physical impossibility; 7 Ad. & E. 798; Youqua v. Nixon, 1 Pet. C. C. 221, Fed. Cas. No. 18,189; 2 Moore & S. 89; 9 Bingh. 68; but it may be otherwise when the consideration is valid at the time the contract was formed, but afterwards became impossible; Leake, Contr. 719.

An executory consideration which has totally failed will not support a contract when the performance of the consideration forms a condition precedent to the performance of the promise; 2 C. B. 548; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Beebe, 7 N. Y. 369; Fowler v. Shearer, 7 Mass. 14; Woodward v. Cowing, 13 Mass. 216; Pettibone v. Roberts, 2 Root (Conn.) 258; Dean v. Mason, 4 Conn. 428, 10 Am. Dec. 162; Boyd v. Anderson, 1 Ov. (Tenn.) 438, 3 Am. Dec. 762; Treat v. Inhabitants of Orono, 26 Me. 217; Charlton v. Lay, 5 Humphr. (Tenn.) 496; Cabot v. Haskins, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 83; Jarvis v. Sutton, 3 Ind. 289. Sometimes when the consideration partially fails, the appropriate part of the agreement may be apportioned to what remains, if the contract is capable of being severed; 4 Ad. & E. 605; 8 M. & W. 870; Parish v. Stone, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 198, 25 Am. Dec. 378; Carleton v. Woods, 28 N. H. 290; Frazier v. Thompson, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 235; L. R. 10 Q. B. 491; 1 Q. B. Div. 679; Wilson v. Hentges, 26 Minn. 288, 3 N. W. 338. See BREACH.

A past consideration will not generally be sufficient to support a contract. It is something done before the obligor makes his promise, and, therefore, cannot be a foundation for that promise, unless it has been executed at the request (express or implied) of the promisor. Such a request plainly implies a promise of fair and reasonable compensation; L. R. 8 Ch. 888; Carson v. Clark, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 113, 25 Am. Dec. 79; Doty v. Wilson, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 378; Gleason v. Dyke, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 393; Hayden v. Inhabitants of Madison, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 76; Abbot v. Third School Dist., 7 Greenl. (Me.) 118; Comstock v. Smith, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 87; Bulkley v. Landon, 2 Conn. 404; 1 Sm. Lead. Cas. 144, note to Lamplugh v. Brathwait. But a pre-existing obligation will support a promise to perform that obligation which the law, in the case of a debt, will imply; Harriman, Contr. 83; 5 M. & W. 541; but a past consideration which did not raise an obligation at the time it was furnished, will support no promise whatever; 3 Q. B. 234; Harriman, Contr. 83; where there has been a request for services, a subsequent promise to pay a definite sum for them is evidence of the actual value of the services; id. Where a creditor gives an extension of time for payment of a pre-existing debt and takes a mortgage as security he is a purchaser for value; O'Brien v. Fleckenstein, 180 N. Y. 350, 73 N. E. 30, 105 Am. St. Rep. 768; the promise to pay for another's past services to and support of defendant's mother during an illness is valid; Montgomery v. Downey, 116 Ia. 632, 88 N. W. 810; but an agreement to take up a past due note without additional consideration or a request or promise of forbearance against the maker is without consideration; J. H. Queal & Co. v. Peterson, 138 Ia. 514, 116 N. W. 593, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 842.

As to time, considerations may be of the past, present, or future. Those which are present or future will support a contract not void for other reasons; Story, Contr. 71. When the consideration is to do a thing hereafter, and the promise has been accepted, and a promise in return founded upon it, the latter promise rests upon sufficient foundation, and is obligatory; Stewart v. Redditt, 3 Md. 67; Hilton v. Southwick, 17 Me. 303, 35 Am. Dec. 253; Andrews v. Pontue, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 285; Gardner v. Weber, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 407.

The adequacy of the consideration is generally immaterial; L. R. 5 Q. B. 87; 8 A. & E. 745; L. R. 7 Ex. 235; 5 C. B. N. S. 265; 24 L. J. C. P. 271; 16 East 372; Hesser v. Steiner, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 476; Downing v. Funk, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 69; excepting formerly in England before 31 & 32 Vict. c. 4, in the case of the sale of a reversionary interest or where the inadequacy of the consideration is so gross as of itself to prove fraud or imposition; Judy v. Louderman, 48 Ohio St. 562, 29 N. E. 181. There is no case where mere inadequacy of price, independent of other circumstances has been held sufficient to set aside a contract between parties standing on equal ground and dealing with each other without imposition or oppression; Hind v. Holdship, 2 Watts (Pa.) 104, 26 Am. Dec. 107; Williams v. Jensen, 75 Mo. 681; Smock v. Pierson, 68 Ind. 405, 34 Am. Rep. 269; Wolford v. Powers, 85 Ind. 294, 44 Am. Rep. 16; Wells v. Tucker, 57 Vt. 227; Worth v. Case, 42 N. Y. 369. The adequacy of the consideration does not affect the contract; Lawrence v. McCalmont, 2 How. (U. S.) 426, 11 L. Ed. 326; but the consideration must be real and not merely colorable; one cent has been held not to be a sufficient consideration for a promise to pay $700; Schnell

v. Nell, 17 Ind. 29, 79 Am. Dec. 453; and $1 has been held insufficient to support a promise to pay $1000; Shepard v. Rhodes, 7 R. L. 470, 84 Am. Dec. 573; a dollar would be a sufficient consideration for any promise except one to pay a larger sum of money absolutely; Lawrence v. McCalmont, 2 How. (U. S.) 426, 11 L. Ed. 326. A fully executed contract will not be disturbed for want of consideration; Lamb's Estate v. Morrow, 140 Ia. 89, 117 N. W. 1118, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 226.

See note to Chesterfield v. Jannsen in 1 W. & T. Lead. Cas.; CONTRACT.

CONSIDERATUM EST PER CURIAM

(Lat. it is considered by the court). A formula used in giving judgments.

A judgment is the decision or sentence of the law, given by a court of justice, as the result of proceedings instituted therein for the redress of an injury. The language of the judgment is not, therefore, that "It is decreed," or "resolved," by the court, but that "It is considered by the court," consideratum est per curiam, that the plaintiff recover his debt, etc.

In the early writers, considerare, consideratio always means the judgment of a court. This usage was preserved down to our time in the judgment of the common-law courts in the form "It is considered," which, as Sir Frederick Pollock says, was for no obvious reason altered to "It is adjudged," in the Judicature Acts. Poll. Contr. 177. "Adjudged" was current with text-writers from the 16th century onward.

CONSIGN. To send goods to a factor or agent. See Gillespie v. Winberg, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 320.

In Civil Law. To deposit in the custody of a third person a thing belonging to the debtor, for the benefit of the creditor, under the authority of a court of justice. Pothier, Obl. pt. 3, c. 1, art. 8.

The term to consign, or consignment, is derived from the Latin consignare, which signifies to seal; for it was formerly the practice to seal up the money thus received in a bag or box. Aso & M. Inst. b. 2, t. 11, c. 1, § 5.

Generally, the consignment is made with a public officer: it is very similar to our practice of paying money into court. See Burge, Surety.

CONSIGNATIO. See CONSIGN.

CONSIGNEE. One to whom a consignment is made.

It is usual in bills of lading to state that the goods are to be delivered to the consignee or his assigns, he or they paying freight: in such case the consignee or his assigns, by accepting the goods, by implication become bound to pay the freight; Du Peirat v. Wolfe, 29 N. Y. 436; Dart v. Ensign, 47 N. Y. 619; 3 Bingh. 383.

CONSIGNMENT. The goods or property sent by means of a common carrier by one or more persons, called the consignors, in one place, to one or more persons, called the consignees, who are in another. The goods sent by one person to another, to be sold or disposed of by the latter for and on account of the former. The transmission of the goods.

CONSIGNOR. One who makes a consignment.

CONSILIARIUS (Lat. consiliare, to advise). In Civil Law. A counsellor, as distinguished from a pleader or advocate. An assistant judge. One who participates in the decisions. Du Cange.

CONSILIUM (called, also, Dies Consilii). A day appointed to hear the counsel of both parties. A case set down for argument.

It is commonly used for the day appointed for the argument of a demurrer, or errors assigned; 1 Tidd, Pr. 438; 2 id. 684, 1122; 1 Sell. Pr. 336; 1 Archb. Pr. 191, 246.

CONSIMILI CASU (Lat. in like case). A writ of entry, framed under the provisions of the statute Westminster 2d (13 Edw. I.), c. 24, which lay for the benefit of the reversioner, where a tenant by the curtesy aliened in fee or for life; 3 Bla. Com., 4th Dublin ed. 183 n.; Bac. Abr. Court of Chancery (A).

Many other new writs were framed under the provisions of this statute; but this particular writ was known emphatically by the title here defined. The writ is now practically obsolete. See 3 Bla. Com. 51; CASE; ASSUMPSIT.

CONSISTOR. A magistrate. Jacob L. D.

CONSISTORY. An assembly of cardinals convoked by the pope.

The consistory is either public or secret. It is public when the pope receives princes or gives audience to ambassadors; secret when he fills vacant sees, proceeds to the canonization of saints, or judges and settles certain contestations submitted to him.

A tribunal (prætorium).

CONSISTORY COURT. The courts of diocesan bishops held in their several cathedrals (before the bishop's chancellor, or commissary, who is the judge) for the trial of all ecclesiastical causes arising within their respective dioceses, and also for granting probates and administrations. Originally the "Chancellor" or "Official" of the bishop usually presided. In time he came to be a permanent judge, but the bishop could withdraw cases from his cognizance and hear them himself, or delegate jurisdiction over certain parts of the diocese to his "commissary"; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 369, citing L. R. 1902, 1 K. B. 816. A Consistory Court of London still exists. From the sentence of these courts an appeal lies to the Provincial Court of the archbishop of each province respectively. 2 Steph. Com. 230; 3 id. 430; 3 Bla. Com. 64; 1 Woodd. Lect. 145; Halifax, An. b. 3, c. 10, n. 12.

CONSOLATO DEL MARE. See CODE.

CONSOLIDATE. To unite into one distinct things or parts of a thing. In a general sense, to unite into one mass or body, as to consolidate the forces of an army or various funds. In parliamentary usage, to consolidate two bills is to unite them into one. In law, to consolidate benefices, actions, or corporations is to combine them into one. See Independent Dist. of Fairview v. Durland, 45 Ia. 56.

CONSOLIDATED FUND. In England. (Usually abbreviated to Consols.) A fund for the payment of the public debt.

Formerly, when a loan was made by government, a particular part of the revenue was appropriated for the payment of the interest and principal. This was called the fund; and every loan had its fund. In this manner the Aggregate fund originated in 1715; the South-Sea fund in 1717; the General fund in 1717; and the Sinking fund, into which the surplus of these flowed, which, although intended for the diminution of the debt, was applied to the necessities of the government. These four funds were consolidated into one in the year 1787; and this fund is the Consolidated fund.

It is wholly appropriated to the payment of certain specific charges and the interest on the sums originally lent the government by individuals, which yield an annual interest of three per cent. to the holders. The principal of the debt is to be returned only at the option of the government.

CONSOLIDATION. In Civil Law. The union of the usufruct with the estate out of which it issues, in the same person; which happens when the usufructuary acquires the estate, or vice versa. In either case the usufruct is extinct. Lec. Elm. Dr. Rom. 424.

CONSOLIDATION OF CORPORATIONS. See MERGER.

CONSOLIDATION RULE. An order of the court requiring the plaintiff to join in one suit several causes of action against the same defendant which may be so joined consistently with the rules of pleading, but upon which he has brought distinct suits. Brown v. Scott, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 147, 1 L. Ed. 74; Groff v. Musser, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 264; 2 Archb. Pr. 180. The matter is regulated by statute in many of the states.

It may take place in two ways: first, by the usufructuary surrendering his right to the proprietor, which in the common law is called a surrender; secondly, by the release of the proprietor of his rights to the usufructuary, which in our law is called a release.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The union of two or more benefices in one. Cowell.

In Practice. The union of two or more actions in the same declaration.

An order of court, issued in some cases, restraining the plaintiff from proceeding to trial in more than one of several actions brought against different defendants but involving the same rights, and requiring the defendants also, in such actions, to abide the event of the suit which is tried. It is in reality in this latter case a mere stay of proceedings in all the cases but one.

It is often issued where separate suits are brought against several defendants founded upon a policy of insurance; 2 Marsh. Ins. 701; see Jackson v. Schaubert, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 78; Sherman v. McNitt, id. 85; or against several obligors in a bond; 3 Chit. Pr. 645;

3 C. & P. 58. See Scott v. Brown, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 417, note; Powell v. Gray, 1 Ala. 77; Dews v. Eastham, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 297; Sykes v. Ins. Co., 7 Mo. 477; Den v. Fen, 9 N. J. L. 335; Groff v. Musser, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 262; Farmers' & Manufacturers' Bank v. Tracy, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 23.

A court may consolidate actions for trial when they involve the same property and the same questions of law and fact and the parties are the same; Welch v. Lynch, 30 App. D. C. 122.

Where two actions arose upon the same transaction, one for trespass against defendant's property, another against his person, and might have been joined, the court ordered them tried at the same time; Holmes v. Sheridan, 1 Dill. 351, Fed. Cas. No. 6,644.

When two actions are consolidated, the original actions are discontinued and only the consolidated action remains; Hiscox v. New Yorker Staats Zeitung, 30 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 131; id., 3 Misc. Rep. 110, 23 N. Y. Supp. 682.

The Federal courts are authorized to consolidate actions of a like nature, or relative to the same question, as they may deem reasonable; Rev. Stat. § 921.

CONSOLS. See CONSOLIDATED FUND.

CONSORTIUM (Lat. a union of lots or chances). A lawful marriage. Union of parties in an action.

The right of the husband and wife respectively to the conjugal fellowship, company, co-operation and aid of the other.

Company; companionship.

It occurs in this last sense in the phrase per quod consortium amisit (by which he has lost the companionship), used when the plaintiff declares for any bodily injury done to his wife by a third person; 3 Bla. Com. 140.

It is not property, but "a marital right growing out of the marriage relation"; Hodge v. Wetzler, 69 N. J. L. 490, 55 Atl. 49; but is treated as property in a broader sense in some cases; Jaynes v. Jaynes, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 40; Deitzman v. Mullin, 108 Ky. 610, 57 S. W. 247, 50 L. R. A. 808, 94 Am. St. Rep. 390; Warren v. Warren, 89 Mich. 123, 50 N. W. 842, 14 L. R. A. 545. "It usually includes the person's affection, society and aid," and, as to it, the husband and wife are equal; Bennett v. Bennett, 116 N. Y. 584, 23 N. E. 17, 6 L. R. A. 553, where the term is discussed at length. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

CONSPIRACY (Lat. con, together, spiro, to breathe). A combination of two or more persons by some concerted action to accomplish some criminal or unlawful purpose, or to accomplish some purpose, not in itself criminal or unlawful, by criminal or unlawful means. Pettibone v. U. S., 148 U. S. 203, 13 Sup. Ct. 542, 37 L. Ed. 419; Com. v. Hunt, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 111, 38 Am. Dec. 346; People

v. Mather, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 229, 21 Am. Dec. 122; State v. Burnham, 15 N. H. 396; State v. Buchanan, 5 H. & J. (Md.) 317, 9 Am. Dec. 534; Collins v. Com., 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 220; State v. Rowley, 12 Conn. 101; 11 Cl. & F. 155; Alderman v. People, 4 Mich. 414, 69 Am. Dec. 321; Breitenberger v. Schmidt, 38 Ill. App. 168.

Lord Denman defines conspiracy as a combination for accomplishing an unlawful end or a lawful end by unlawful means; 4 B. & Ad. 345.

Criminal Conspiracy. Conspiracies formed to commit crimes, or to do anything unlawful, were first treated as substantive offenses by the Star Chamber; 2 Steph. H. C. L. 227; before that, a conspiracy only extended to taking civil and criminal proceedings maliciously; 3 Holdsw. H. E. L. 313. In a prosecution for a conspiracy at common law it was neither necessary to aver nor to prove an overt act; Bannon v. U. S., 156 U. S. 468, 15 Sup. Ct. 467, 39 L. Ed. 494. So long as the design to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means, rests in intention only, it is not indictable; but when two or more agree to carry it into effect, the very plot is an act in itself and the act of each of the parties, promise against promise, act against act; L. R. 3 H. L. 317, approved in [1901] A. C. 529; [1905] 2 K. B. 746.

An indictment for a conspiracy to compass or promote a criminal or unlawful purpose must set forth that purpose, fully and clearly; and an indictment for a conspiracy to compass or promote a purpose not in itself criminal or unlawful, by the use of criminal or unlawful means, must set forth the means intended to be used; Com. v. Hunt, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 111, 38 Am. Dec. 346.

The participation in a common plan by two or more persons is not in itself a criminal conspiracy; in order to make it such, the motives of those who enter into the combination must be corrupt; People v. Flack, 125 N. Y. 324, 26 N. E. 267, 11 L. R. A. 807; Wood v. State, 47 N. J. L. 461, 1 Atl. 509; but if one member of the combination has no corrupt motive when entering into it, but afterward becomes aware of its illegality and remains a member, he is criminally liable; U. S. v. Mitchell, 1 Hughes 439, Fed. Cas. No. 15,790. So persons who agree in good faith to do an act innocent in itself do not become guilty of conspiracy if it is afterwards ascertained that the act is forbidden by statute; People v. Powell, 63 N. Y. 88.

In the definitions the terms criminal or unlawful are used, because it is manifest that many acts are unlawful which are not punishable by indictment or other public prosecution, and yet there is no doubt that a combination by numbers to do them is an unlawful conspiracy and punishable by indictment; State v. Rowley, 12 Conn. 101; State v. Burnham, 15 N. H. 396; People v. Richards, 1 Mich. 216, 51 Am. Dec. 75; 11

Q. B. 245; Twitchell v. Com., 9 Pa. 211; State v. Shooter, 8 Rich. (S. C.) 72.

Of this character was a conspiracy to cheat by false pretences without false tokens, when a cheat by false pretences only by a single person was not a punishable offence; 11 Q. B. 245. So a combination to destroy the reputation of an individual by verbal calumny of itself is not indictable; per Shaw, C. J., Com. v. Hunt, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 123, 38 Am. Dec. 346. So a conspiracy to induce and persuade a young woman, by false representations, to leave the protection of her parent's house, with a view to facilitate her prostitution; Mifflin v. Com., 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 461, 40 Am. Dec. 527; 2 Den. C. Cas. 79; and to procure an unmarried girl of seventeen to become a prostitute; 4 F. & F. 160; to procure a woman to be married by a mock ceremony, whereby she was seduced; State v. Savoye, 48 Ia. 562. And see Anderson v. Com., 5 Rand. (Va.) 627, 16 Am. Dec. 776; State v. Murphy, 6 Ala. 765, 41 Am. Dec. 79. So a conspiracy, by false and fraudulent representations that a horse bought by one of the defendants from the prosecutor was unsound, to induce him to accept a less sum for the horse than the agreed price; 1 Dears. 337. A conspiracy by traders to dispose of their goods in contemplation of bankruptcy, with intent to defraud their creditors; 1 F. & F. 33.

The obtaining of goods on credit by an insolvent person without disclosing his insolvency, and without having any reasonable expectation of being able to pay for such goods in and by means of the fair and ordinary course of his business, is not of itself such an unlawful act as may be the subject of an action for conspiracy; though it would be otherwise, it seems, in the case of a purchase made without any expectation of payment. But the obtaining possession of goods under the pretence of paying cash for them on delivery, the buyer knowing that he has no funds to pay with, and appropriating the goods to his own use in fraud of the seller, is such a fraud or cheat as may be the subject of a charge of conspiracy; Com. v. Eastman, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 189, 48 Am. Dec. 596.

A combination to go to a theatre to hiss an actor; 2 Campb. 369; 6 Term 628; to indict for the purpose of extorting money; 4 B. & C. 329; to charge a person with being the father of a bastard child; 1 Salk. 174; to coerce journeymen to demand a higher rate of wages; 6 Term 619; People v. Fisher, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 9, 28 Am. Dec. 501; to charge a person with poisoning another; F. Moore 816; to affect the price of public stocks by false rumors; 3 M. & S. 67; to prevent competition at an auction; 6 C. & P. 239; to cheat by a fraudulent prospectus of a projected company and by false accounts; 11 Cox, Cr. Ca. 414; by false accounts between partners; L. R. 1 C. C. 274; by a mock auction; 11 Cox, Cr. Ca. 404; have each been held indictable for conspiracy; as was an association of retail coaldealers in a city to fix prices and prevent a person not a member from obtaining coal from wholesalers; People v. Sheldon, 66 Hun 590, 21 N. Y. Supp. 859; id., 139 N. Y. 251, 34 N. E. 785, 23 L. R. A. 221, 36 Am. St. Rep. 690. So it is a crime for two or more persons to conspire to cheat and defraud another out of his property, but in such case the indictment must set forth the means proposed to be used to accomplish the purpose; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 558, 23 L. Ed. 588.

In order to render the offence complete, it is not necessary that any act should be done in pursuance of the unlawful agreement entered into between the parties, or that any one should have been defrauded or injured by it. The conspiracy is the gist of the crime; 9 Co. 55; 28 L. T. N. S. 75; Com. v. Judd, 2 Mass. 337, 3 Am. Dec. 54; Com. v. Tibbetts, 2 Mass. 538; Collins v. Com., 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 220; People v. Mather, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 259, 21 Am. Dec. 122; State v. Norton, 23 N. J. L. 33; Steele v. Kinkle, 3 Ala. 360; State v. Buchanan, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 317, 9 Am. Dec. 534; State v. Brady, 107 N. C. 822, 12 S. E. 325; U. S. v. Lancaster, 44 Fed. 896, 10 L. R. A. 333. But see Torrey v. Field, 10 Vt. 353. Where persons enter on an unlawful purpose, with the intent to aid or encourage each other in carrying out their design, they are each criminally responsible for everything resulting from such purpose whether specifically contemplated or not; Turner v. State, 97 Ala. 57, 12 South. 54; Boyd v. U. S., 142 U. S. 450, 12 Sup. Ct. 292, 35 L. Ed. 1077.

It is a crime for several persons, out of malice, to agree to induce many others not to enter into contracts with a certain person; see [1901] A. C. 531; or for strangers to a contract, and without just excuse, to combine in inducing a breach of it; [1905] A. C. 239; otherwise, in most cases, if they act merely out of self-interest; see 23 Q. B. D. 618. That may be unlawful if done by several, which is not if done by one; [1892] A. C. 45, per Lord Bramwell. One may be indicted alone for a conspiracy "with other persons to the jury unknown"; 94 L. T. 887.

A criminal conspiracy as boycotting, may arise out of acts which in themselves might be done by one person without preconcert with others. The parties must be numerous; they must be actuated by ill-will, and their conduct must be calculated to do harm to the person intended; 14 Cox 505.

Conspiracy may be proved by showing the declarations, acts and conduct of the conspirators; State v. Ryan, 47 Or. 338, 82 Pac. 703, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 862.

Where it is necessary that two persons concur in the commission of an act to make it a crime, as in case of bigamy, adultery or the like, the agreement is said to form part of the crime and not a conspiracy; Shannon

v. Com., 14 Pa. 226; Miles v. State, 58 Ala. 390; the combination, which is the essential of conspiracy, is not an aggravation of, but necessary to constitute, the offense, and probably such an agreement not coupled with an overt act would be a mere attempt; 2 Bish. Crim. L. (8th ed.) § 184, n. 4, cited in 20 Harv. L. Rev. 63, where the matter is illustrated by U. S. v. Guilford, 146 Fed. 298, where the indictment was for conspiracy to violate the Elkins act in giving and taking rebates and the fact was proved, there being three takers and two givers besides two other persons who were go-betweens or agents. It was held not a conspiracy, upon the principle stated.

Where three defendants were jointly arraigned on a charge of conspiracy, and one of them pleaded guilty and the other two were acquitted on pleas of not guilty, it was held that the judgment against the one who pleaded guilty must be vacated; [1902] 2 K. B. 339; this rule it has been said was "tacitly assumed by the early English decisions, and has been expressly recognized by the later ones." 1 Stra. 193; 5 B. & C. 538; 12 Q. B. D. 241; 16 Q. B. 832. The same rule is adopted in some states in certain cases in which the offense was necessarily a joint one committed by two persons; Turpin v. State, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 72; State v. Mainor, 28 N. C. 340; State v. Rinehart, 106 N. C. 787, 11 S. E. 512; and repudiated in others; Alonzo v. State, 15 Tex. App. 378, 49 Am. Rep. 207; State v. Caldwell, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 576. It is argued in a note on the subject that the last two cases are more in accord with reason; as one defendant might be a party to a joint act without criminal intent, and in the first English case cited the plea of guilty outweighs the verdict, which means nothing more than not proven; 16 Harv. L. Rev. 142.

Civil Liability. It is an early saying in the law that a conspiracy of itself gives no cause of action. There must be some overt act by one of the parties to the injury of another, Bowen v. Matheson, 14 Allen (Mass.) 499 (though there is a dictum, contra, in Patten v. Gurney, 17 Mass. 182, 9 Am. Dec. 141); Hutchins v. Hutchins, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 104; Bush v. Sprague, 51 Mich. 41, 16 N. W. 222; Hauser v. Tate, 85 N. C. 81, 39 Am. Rep. 689; 1 Id. Raym. 374; and an act which is lawful when committed by one will not be rendered unlawful when two or more conspire to do it; Boston v. Simmons, 150 Mass. 461, 23 N. E. 210, 6 L. R. A. 629, 15 Am. St. Rep. 230; Martens v. Reilly, 109 Wis. 464, 84 N. W. 840; De Wulf v. Dix, 110 Ia. 553, 81 N. W. 779; Adler v. Fenton, 24 How. (U. S.) 407, 16 L. Ed. 696; [1898] 1 Q. B. 181; but it is held otherwise in Cote v. Murphy, 159 Pa. 420, 28 Atl. 190, 23 L. R. A. 135, 39 Am. St. Rep. 686; and this is supported by a dictum in State v. Huegin, 110 Wis. 189, 85 N. W. 1046, 62 L. R. A. 700.

Civil actions have been sustained for conspiracies to injure in person or reputation, as by maliciously prosecuting; Dreux v. Domec, 18 Cal. 83; or by making false charges; Irvine v. Elliott, 206 Pa. 152, 55 Atl. 859; or to injure one in property or business; Van Horn v. Van Horn, 52 N. J. L. 284, 20 Atl. 485, 10 L. R. A. 184; Garst v. Charles, 187 Mass. 144, 72 N. E. 839; Mapstrick v. Range, 9 Neb. 390, 2 N. W. 739, 31 Am. Rep. 415; Casey v. Typographical Union No. 3, 45 Fed. 135, 12 L. R. A. 193; [1893] 1 Q. B. 715; Martell v. White, 185 Mass. 255, 69 N. E. 1085, 64 L. R. A. 260, 102 Am. St. Rep. 341; as by fraudulent use of legal proceedings; Verplanck v. Van Buren, 76 N. Y. 247.

An association of ship owners to secure a profitable and exclusive carrying trade, having agreed to limit the number of ships to be sent by members, and to allow a rebate on freights to all shippers who dealt only with members, is not an actionable conspiracy, as it was done with the lawful object of protecting and increasing trade and profit and no unlawful means had been used; [1892] A. C. 25, where the House of Lords affirmed the judgment in 23 Q. B. D. 598, where the C. A. affirmed the judgment of Lord Coleridge in 21 Q. B. D. 544.

Corporations as Conspirators. The law of conspiracy is applicable to corporations, and a combination of corporations for an unlawful purpose, either as an end or means, is a conspiracy in any case where a combination of natural persons would be such, and the converse of the proposition is equally true; Noyes, Intercorp. Rel. § 326. "We entertain," said the New York Court of Appeals, "no doubt that an action against a corporation may be maintained to cover damages caused by a conspiracy," and "it is well settled . . . that the malice and wicked intent needful to sustain such action, may be imputed to such corporations"; Buffalo Lubricating Oil Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 106 N. Y. 670, 12 N. E. 826; Transportation Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 50 W. Va. 611, 40 S. E. 591, 56 L. R. A. 804, 88 Am. St. Rep. 895. Both of these were civil actions against the Standard Oil Company, but apparently the same reason should apply in making a corporation liable for criminal conspiracy as well as civil, and such was the opinion of Judge Noyes as expressed in the section of his text book above cited. But this view was authoritatively declared when an indictment and conviction of the same company (its individual co-defendant being acquitted) were sustained on appeal. The court said: "Corporations can unquestionably commit and be guilty of a criminal conspiracy denounced by the statute, as it so expressly enacts, and they, therefore, must be counted," and further that "independent of statute, upon principle and in furtherance of sound public policy, both corporations and their officers and agents who engage in the conspiracy must be held to be parties to it"; Standard Oil Co. v. State, 117 Tenn. 618, 100 S. W. 705, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1015. Where it is provided, as in the laws of several states, that corporations as well as individuals shall be subject to the provisions of anti-trust laws the construction given to these laws has been that they "did not contemplate the commission of an offense by an impalpable abstraction, which could neither think nor act; but it was intended to bind this corporate entity by the imputed actions of its human agencies"; National Lead Co. v. Paint Store Co., 80 Mo. App. 247; State v. Ins. Co., 152 Mo. 37, 52 S. W. 595, 45 L. R. A. 363.

Conspiracy under Federal Laws. Conspiracies to prevent witnesses from testifying, to impede the course of justice, to hinder citizens from voting, to prevent persons from holding office, to defraud the United States by obtaining approval of false claims, to levy war against the United States, to impede the enforcement of the laws, etc., etc., are made punishable by acts of congress; U. S. R. S. Index, Conspiracy.

In the absence of damage, the simple act of conspiracy does not furnish ground for a civil action; Robertson v. Parks, 76 Md. 118, 24 Atl. 411.

After a conspiracy has come to an end, the admissions of one conspirator by way of narrative of past facts are not admissible in evidence against the others; Brown v. U. S., 150 U. S. 93, 14 Sup. Ct. 37, 37 L. Ed. 1010; Logan v. U. S., 144 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 617, 36 L. Ed. 429.

In a prosecution under U. S. R. S. § 5480, as amended, for a conspiracy to defraud by means of the postoffice, three matters of fact must be charged in the indictment and established by the evidence: 1. That the persons charged devised a scheme to defraud; 2. that they intended to effect this scheme by opening or intending to open correspondence with some other person through the postoffice establishment or by inciting such other person to open communication with them; 3. and that in carrying out such scheme such person must have either deposited a letter or packet in the postoffice, or taken or received one therefrom; Stokes v. U. S., 157 U. S. 187, 15 Sup. Ct. 617, 39 L. Ed. 667.

Where parties are on trial for conspiracy to stop the mails, contemporary telegrams from different parts of the country, announcing the stoppage of mail trains, are admissible in evidence against the defendants if brought home to them, and so, too, are acts and declarations of persons not parties to the record if it appears that they were made in carrying the conspiracy into effect; Clune v. U. S., 159 U. S. 590, 16 Sup. Ct. 125, 40 L. Ed. 269.

Under R. S. § 5440, the conspiracy to commit a crime against the United States is itself the offence, without reference to whether the crime is consummated, or agreed upon by the conspirators in all its details; an indictment charging the accused with a conspiracy to commit the crime of subornation of perjury was held in this case to be sufficient although the precise persons to be suborned, and the time and place of such suborning were not particularized; Williamson v. U. S., 207 U. S. 425, 28 Sup. Ct. 163, 52 L. Ed. 278. A conspiracy under that statute does not necessarily involve a direct pecuniary loss, but may exist to impair, obstruct or defeat the lawful function of any department of the government; Haas v. Heikel, 216 U. S. 462, 30 Sup. Ct. 249, 54 L. Ed. 569, 17 Ann. Cas. 1112. The words "unlawfully did conspire to defraud the United States," followed by a statement of the nature and purpose of the conspiracy and the acts done to effect its object, is sufficient; Wright v. U. S., 108 Fed. 805, 48 C. C. A. 37, where the subject is very fully discussed. It is a conspiracy under that act to do an act which Congress has made a crime, if two or more conspire to do it, and Congress may make the punishment for conspiring greater than for committing the crime itself; U. S. v. Stevenson, 215 U. S. 200, 30 Sup. Ct. 37, 54 L. Ed. 157.

The crime is complete when the conspiracy is shown; it is not necessary to aver that it succeeded; U. S. v. Greene, 115 Fed. 343.

Upon a charge of conspiracy to defraud, a somewhat wide latitude is always allowed in the introduction of circumstantial evidence to prove the intent; U. S. v. Greene, 108 Fed. 816.

The jurisdiction is in the district in which the conspiracy was entered into, although the overt act carrying it out is within another jurisdiction; Hyde v. Shine, 199 U. S. 62, 25 Sup. Ct. 760, 50 L. Ed. 90.

Where a conspiracy had been formed more than the period of the statute of limitations before the indictment and an overt act is committed within the statutory period, if the existence of the conspiracy as well as the overt act are proved, the prosecution may be sustained; Ware v. U. S., 154 Fed. 577, 84 C. C. A. 503, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053, 12 Ann. Cas. 233, where the subject is thoroughly discussed and the cases collected by Sanborn, C. J., and in a note to the last citation.

A federal court has no jurisdiction, under the 13th Amendment, of a charge of conspiracy made and carried out in a state to prevent its citizens of African descent because of their color and race from making or carrying out contracts and agreements of labor; Hodges v. U. S., 203 U. S. 1, 27 Sup. Ct. 6, 51 L. Ed. 65.

On a bill alleging a malicious conspiracy to interfere with carrying the mails and with interstate commerce, an injunction may be granted to restrain the ordering or causing a strike of the carrier's employees; Wabash R. Co. v. Hannahan, 121 Fed. 563. No civil action lies for conspiracy, unless there be an overt act that results in damage to the plaintiff: Nalle v. Oyster, 230 U. S. 165, 33 Sup. Ct. 1043, 37 L. Ed. —.

Some writers consider that there is in this country a tendency to extend the doctrine of criminal conspiracy and utilize it for the indictment of persons suspected of crime of which there is difficulty in obtaining sufficient proof. This tendency is the subject of extended discussion in an article on "The Judge-Made Law of Conspiracy," by F. P. Blair, in 37 Am. L. Rev. 33, in which the author contends that there has been a departure from the common law upon this subject. It contains a valuable enumeration and discussion of the early English cases on the subject of conspiracy.

As to conspiracies in connection with labor and labor unions, see BOYCOTT; LABOR UNION; STRIKE; COMBINATION; RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

CONSPIRATORS. Persons guilty of a conspiracy.

CONSTABLE. An officer whose duty it is to keep the peace in the district which is assigned to him. See SHERIFF.

The most satisfactory derivation of the term and history of the origin of this office is that which deduces it from the French comestable (Lat. comes-stabuli), who was an officer second only to the king. He might take charge of the army, wherever it was, if the king were not present, and had the general control of everything relating to military matters, as the marching troops, their encampment, provisioning, etc. Guyot, Rép. Univ.

The same extensive duties pertained to the constable of Scotland. Bell, Dict.

The duties of this officer in England seem to have been first fully defined by the stat. Westm. (13 Edw. 1.); and question has been frequently made whether the office existed in England before that time. 1 Bla. Com. 356. It seems, however, to be pretty certain that the office in England is of Norman origin, being introduced by William, and that subsequently the duties of the Saxon tithing-men, borsholders, etc., were added to its other functions. See Cowell; Willc. Const.; 1 Bla. Com. 356; 1 Poll. & M. 542.

High constables were first ordained, according to Blackstone, by the statute of Westminster, though they were known as efficient public officers long before that time. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 356. They were appointed for each franchise or hundred by the leet, or, in default of such appointment, by the justices at quarter-sessions. Their first duty is that of keeping the king's peace. In addition, they are to serve warrants, return lists of jurors, and perform various other services enumerated in Coke, 4th Inst. 267; 3 Steph. Com. 47.

The parish constables, under various names, were probably the successors of the old reeves in the townships. In each hundred, and in many franchises, there were also high constables, or similar officers with other names, who corresponded with the parish constables in the townships. They continued to be appointed till of late years, but their duties became almost nominal, and were abolished practically in 1869. Parish constables continued to be appointed till 1872.

Up to 1829 they were the only body of men, except the watchmen in cities and boroughs, charged with the duty of apprehending criminals and preventing crime. 1 Steph. Cr. L.

In some cities and towns in the United States there are officers called high constables, who are the principal police officers in their jurisdiction.

Petty constables are inferior officers in every town or parish, subordinate to the high constable. They perform the duties of headborough, tithing-man, or borsholder, and, in addition, their more modern duties appertaining to the keeping the peace within their town, village, or tithing.

In the United States, generally, petty constables only are retained, their duties being generally the same as those of constables in England prior to the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, including a limited judicial power as conservators of the peace, a ministerial power for the service of writs, etc., and some other duties not strictly referable to either of these heads. Their immunities and indemnities are proportioned to their powers, and are quite extensive. See 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 356, n.; ARREST.

CONSTABLE OF A CASTLE. The warden or keeper of a castle; the castellan. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 7 (3 Edw. I.); Spelman, Gloss.

The constable of Dover Castle was also warden of the Cinque Ports. There was besides a constable of the Tower, as well as other constables of castles of less note. Cowell; Lambard, Const.

CONSTABLE OF ENGLAND. His office consisted in the care of the common peace of the realm in deeds of arms and matters of war. Lambard, Const. 4.

He was to regulate all matters of chivalry, tournaments and feats of arms which were performed on horseback. 3 Steph. Com. 47. He held the court of chivalry, besides sitting in the curia regis. 4 Bla. Com. 92.

The office is disused in England, except on coronation-days and other such occasions of state, and was last held by the Duke of Buckingham, under Henry VIII. The title is Lord High Constable of England. 3 Steph. Com. 47; 1 Bla. Com. 355; 2 Grose, Mil. Antiq. 216.

See COURT OF CHIVALRY; COURT OF EARL MARSHAL.

CONSTABLE OF SCOTLAND. An officer who was formerly entitled to command all the king's armies in the absence of the king, and to take cognizance of all crimes committed within four miles of the king's person or of parliament, the privy council, or any general convention of the estates of the kingdom. The office was hereditary in the family of Errol, and was abolished by the 20 Geo. III. c. 43. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Inst. 1. 3. 37.

CONSTABLE OF THE EXCHEQUER. An officer spoken of in the 51 Hen. III. stat. 5, cited by Cowell.

CONSTABLEWICK. The territorial jurisdiction of a constable. 5 Nev. & M. 261.

CONSTABULARIUS (Lat.). An officer of horse; an officer having charge of foot or horse; a naval commander; an officer having charge of military affairs generally. Spelman, Gloss.

The titles were very numerous, all derived, however, from comes-stabuli, and the duties were quite similar in all the countries where the civil law prevailed. His powers were second only to those of the king in all matters relating to the armies of the kingdom.

In England his power was early diminished and restricted to those duties which related to the preservation of the king's peace. The office is now abolished in England, except as a matter of ceremony, and in France. Guyot, Rép. Univ.; Cowell.

CONSTAT (Lat. it appears). A certificate by an officer that certain matters therein stated appear of record. See Wilcox v. Ray, 2 N. C. 410.

An exemplification under the great seal of the enrolment of letters patent. Co. Litt. 225.

A certificate which the clerk of the pipe and auditors of the exchequer make at the request of any person who intends to plead or move in the court for the discharge of anything; and the effect of it is, the certifying what constat (appears) upon record touching the matter in question.

CONSTAT D'HUISSIER. In French Law. An affidavit made by a huissier setting forth the appearance, form, quality, color, etc., of any article upon which a suit depends. Arg. Fr. Merc. L. 554; Black, L. Dict.

CONSTATING INSTRUMENTS. The term is used to signify the documents or collection of documents which fix the constitution or charter of a corporation. Brice, Ultra Vires 34; Ackerman v. Halsey, 37 N. J. Eq. 363.

CONSTITUENT. He who gives authority to another to act for him. The constituent is bound by the acts of his attorney, and the attorney is responsible to his constituent.

CONSTITUERE. In Old English Law. To establish; to appoint; to ordain.

Used in letters of attorney, and translated by constitute. Applied generally, also, to denote appointment. Reg. Orig. 172; Du Cange.

CONSTITUTED AUTHORITIES. The officers properly appointed under the constitution for the government of the people. Those powers which the constitution of each people has established to govern them, to cause their rights to be respected, and to maintain those of each of its members.

They are called constituted, to distinguish them from the constituting authority which has created or organized them, or has delegated to an authority, which it has itself created, the right of establishing or regulating their movements.

CONSTITUTIO. In Civil Law. An establishment or settlement. Used of controversies settled by the parties without a trial. Calvinus, Lex.

A sum paid according to agreement. Du Cange.

An ordinance or decree having its force from the will of the emperor. Dig. 1. 4. 1, Cooper's notes.

In Old English Law. An ordinance or statute. A provision of a statute.

CONSTITUTION. The fundamental law of a state, directing the principles upon which the government is founded, and regulating the exercise of the sovereign powers, directing to what bodies or persons those powers shall be confided and the manner of their exercise.

An established form of government; a system of laws and customs.

Constitution, in the former law of the European continent, signified as much as decree,—a decree of importance, especially ecclesiastical decrees. The decrees of the Roman emperors referring to the jus circa sacra, contained in the code of Justinian, have been repeatedly collected and called the Constitutions. The famous bull Unigenitus was usually called in France the Constitution. Comprehensive laws or decrees have been called constitutions; thus the Constitutio Criminalis Carolina, which is the penal code decreed by Charles V. for Germany, the Constitutions of Clarendon (q. v.). In political law the word constitution came to be used more and more for the fundamentals of a government,—the laws and usages which give it its characteristic feature. We find, thus, former English writers speak of the constitution of the Turkish empire. These fundamental laws and customs appeared to our race especially important where they limited the power and action of the different branches of government; and it came thus to pass that by constitution was meant especially the fundamental law of a state in which the citizen enjoys a high degree of civil liberty; and, as it is equally necessary to guard against the power of the executive in monarchies, a period arrived—namely, the first half of the present century—when in Europe, and especially on the continent, the term constitutional government came to be used in contradistinction to absolutism.

We now mean by the term constitution, in common parlance, the fundamental law of a free country, which characterizes the organism of the country and secures the rights of the citizen and determines his main duties as a freeman. Sometimes, indeed, the word constitution has been used in recent times for what otherwise is generally called an organic law. Napoleon I. styled himself Emperor of the French by the Grace of God and the Constitutions of the Empire.

Constitutions were generally divided into written and non-written constitutions, analogous to leges scriptæ and non scriptæ. These terms do not indicate the distinguishing principle; Lieber, therefore, divides political constitutions into accumulated or cumulative constitutions and enacted constitutions. The constitution of ancient Rome and that of England belong to the first class. The latter consists of the customs, statutes, common laws, and decisions of fundamental importance. The Reform act is considered by the English a portion of the constitution as much as the trial by jury or the representative system, which have never been enacted, but correspond to what Cicero calls leges natæ.

Constitutional law in England appears to include all rules which directly or indirectly affect the distribution or the exercise of the sovereign power in the state; all rules which define the members of the sovereign power and their relation to each other and the mode in which it, or the members thereof, exercise their authority, the order of succession to the throne, the prerogations of the chief magistrate and the form of the legislature and its mode of election, ministers with their responsibilities and sphere of action, the territory over which the sovereignty of the state extends, and who are to be deemed citizens and subjects. Dicey, Const. 22.

Our constitutions are enacted; that is to say, they were, on a certain day and by a certain authority, enacted as a fundamental law of the body politic. In many cases enacted constitutions cannot be dispensed with, and they have certain advantages which cumulative constitutions must forego; while the latter have some advantages which the former cannot obtain. It has been thought, in many periods, by modern nations, that enacted constitutions and statutory law alone are firm guarantees of rights and liberties. This error has been exposed in Lieber's Civil Liberty. Nor can enacted constitutions dispense with the "grown law" (lex nata). For the meaning of much that an enacted constitution establishes can only be found by the grown law on which it is founded, just as the British Bill of Rights (an enacted portion of the English constitution) rests on the common law.

Enacted constitutions may be either octroyed, that is, granted by the presumed full authority of the grantor, the monarch; or they may be enacted by a sovereign people prescribing high rules of action and fundamental laws for its political society, such as ours is; or they may rest on contracts between contracting parties,—for instance, between the people and a dynasty, or between several states. We cannot enter here into the interesting inquiry concerning the points on which all modern constitutions agree, and regarding which they differ,—one of the most instructive inquiries for the publicist and jurist. See Hallam's Constitutional History of England; Hare; Miller; Rawle; Story; Tucker; Watson; Willoughby; Stimson; Sutherland; Flanders; Guthrie; Foster; Boutwell; Tiedeman (the Unwritten Constitution); Taylor; Thayer, on the Constitution; Farrand, Records of the Federal Convention; Sheppard's Constitutional Text-Book; Elliot's Debates on the Constitution, etc.; Lieber's article (Constitution), in the Encyclopædia Americana; Cooley, Const. Lim.; Bryce, Am. Com.; Von Holst, Hist. U. S.

For the constitutions of the several states, including those in force and the previous ones, see Charters and Constitutions, published under authority of Congress in 1878.

Thorpe's American Charters, Constitutions, etc., gives the constitutions down to 1908 inclusive.

Constitution, Self-Executing Provisions. A constitutional provision may be said to be self-executing if it supplies a sufficient rule by means of which the right given may be enjoyed and protected, or the duty imposed may be enforced, and it is not self-executing when it merely indicates principles, without laying down rules by means of which those principles may be given the force of law. Cooley, Const. Lim. 99 [84], 4th ed. 101.

"The question in every case is whether the language of a constitutional provision is addressed to the courts or the legislature. . . . If the nature and extent of the right conferred and of the liability imposed is fixed by the provision itself, so that they can be determined by the examination and construction of its own terms, and there is no language used indicating that the subject is referred to the legislature for action, then the provision should be construed as self-executing, and its language as addressed to the courts." Willis v. Mabon, 48 Minn. 150, 50 N. W. 1110, 16 L. R. A. 281, 31 Am. St. Rep. 626.

"But it must remain entirely clear that where a state constitution declares in clear language that the members of corporations shall be individually liable for their debts to a defined extent, it cannot be held that supplementary legislation is required to execute this provision, and hence that the legislature may leave it forever dormant and inoperative merely because the framers of the constitution did not go on and prescribe the remedy which should be pursued for enforcing it." Thomp. Corp. § 3004.

See Morley v. Thayer, 3 Fed. 739; Barnes v. Wheaton, 80 Hun 14, 29 N. Y. Supp. 830; May v. Black, 77 Wis. 104, 45 N. W. 949; Groves v. Slaughter, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 449, 10 L. Ed. 800; Pierce v. Com., 104 Pa. 150; Fredericks v. Canal Co., 148 Pa. 317, 23 Atl. 1067.

But it has been held that a constitutional provision that "dues from corporations shall be secured by individual liability of the stockholders to an additional amount equal to the stock owned by such stockholder, and such other means as shall be provided by law," is not self-executing and is inoperative until supplemented by statute; Marshall v. Sherman, 148 N. Y. 9, 42 N. E. 419, 34 L. R. A. 757, 51 Am. St. Rep. 654.

A provision of a state constitution imposing upon stockholders personal liability, to an additional amount equal to their stock, for "dues from corporations," is self-executing; Whitman v. Bank, 176 U. S. 559, 20 Sup. Ct. 477, 44 L. Ed. 587.

CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. The supreme law of the United States.

It was framed by a convention of delegates from all of the original thirteen states (except Rhode Island), which assembled at Philadelphia on the 14th of May, 1787. On September 17, 1787, by the unanimous consent of the states present, a form of constitution was agreed upon, and on September 28th was submitted to the congress of the confederation, with recommendations as to the method of its adoption by the states. In accordance with these recommendations, it was transmitted by the congress to the several state legislatures, in order to be submitted to conventions of delegates chosen in each state by the people thereof. The several states accordingly called conventions, which ratified the constitution upon the following dates: Delaware, December 7, 1787; Pennsylvania, December 12, 1787; New Jersey, December 18, 1787; Georgia, January 2, 1788; Connecticut, January 9, 1788; Massachusetts, February 6, 1788; Maryland, April 28, 1788; South Carolina, May 23, 1788; New Hampshire, June 21, 1788; Virginia, June 26, 1788; New York, July 26, 1788; North Carolina, November 21, 1789; Rhode Island, May 29, 1790.

It was said by Mr. Gladstone, who may be considered an impartial critic, that "as the British constitution is the most subtle organism which has proceeded from progressive history, so the American constitution is the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man." Fisher, Evolution of the Constitution, 11. In connection with this comment of the great English statesman, it is interesting to quote from an address before the American Bar Association in 1912 by George Sutherland, Senator from Utah (Rep. p. 371), which probably expresses the view of a majority of the thoughtful lawyers and statesmen of all parties. Alluding to "a growing sentiment that the constitution has become obsolete and that its provisions stand in the way of reforms which are demanded by the people," he continues: "Many of us do not believe that the constitution has been outworn, or that it has become a dead wall in the path of progress, to be assaulted and overthrown before we can move on. Its principles are living forces, as vital now as when they were adopted. It is not and never has been a wall, but a wide, free flowing stream within whose ample banks every needed and wholesome reform may be launched and carried." And the address concludes: "To the thoughtful student of law and government the great principles of the constitution, as old as the struggle for human liberty, are as nearly eternal as anything in this mutable world can be. We do not outgrow them any more than we outgrow the Ten Commandments or the enduring morality of the Sermon on the Mount. . . . The constitution did not create the Union, but, by making it 'more perfect,' preserved it from destruction. If the present day teachers of vague and visionary reform would know the fate which will overtake the republic if the constitution, through the shattered faith of the people, shall lose its binding force, they have but to read the history of our country under the Articles of Confederation. If by some unhappy turn of fortune the constitution should be wrecked, those conditions will be repeated, but intensified in the proportion that our population has increased, our territory extended, and our problems have become more numerous and intricate. The forty-eight states into which our imperial domain has finally been rounded, filled with patriotic, intelligent, justice-loving people, after all constitute but the body of the Union. Its soul is the constitution."

Under the terms of the constitution (art. vii.), its ratification by nine states was sufficient to establish it between the states so ratifying it. Accordingly, when, on July 2, 1788, the ratification by the ninth state was read to congress, a committee was appointed to prepare an act for putting the constitution into effect; and on September 13, 1788—in accordance with the recommendations made by the convention in reporting the constitution—congress appointed days for choosing electors, etc., and resolved that the first Wednesday in March then next (March 4, 1789) should be the time, and the then seat of congress (New York) the place, for commencing government under the new constitution. Proceedings were had in accordance with these directions, and on March 4, 1789, congress met, but, owing to the want of a quorum, the house did not organize until April 1st, nor the senate until April 6th. Washington took the oath of office on April 30th. The constitution became the law of the land on March 4, 1789. Owings v. Speed, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 420, 5 L. Ed. 124.

Its adoption abrogated the ordinance of 1787, except as continued in force by congress; Pollard v. Hagan, 3 How. (U. S.) 212, 11 L. Ed. 565; Pernoli v. Municipality No. 1 of New Orleans, 3 How. (U. S.) 589, 11 L. Ed. 739; Strader v. Graham, 10 How. (U. S.) 82, 13 L. Ed. 337; South Carolina v. Georgia, 93 U. S. 4, 23 L. Ed. 782; Wharton v. Wise, 153 U. S. 155, 14 Sup. Ct. 783, 38 L. Ed. 669. The constitution is to be construed with respect to the law existing at the time of its adoption and as securing to the individual citizen the rights inherited by him under English law, and not with reference to new guarantees; Mattox v. U. S., 156 U. S. 237, 15 Sup. Ct. 337, 39 L. Ed. 409; it is to be interpreted according to common law rules; Schick v. U. S., 195 U. S. 65, 24 Sup. Ct. 826, 49 L. Ed. 99; Kepner v. U. S., 195 U. Under it are derived all powers exercised by the various departments of the federal government; Dorr v. U. S., 195 U. S. 138, 24 Sup. Ct. 808, 49 L. Ed. 128, 1 Ann. Cas. 697; Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 244, 21 Sup. Ct. 770, 45 L. Ed. 1088; and the courts were thereafter bound to take notice of it; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 178, 2 L. Ed. 60; and in construing it, they gave special weight to the contemporaneous construction of it, acquiesced in; Stuart v. Laird, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 299, 2 L. Ed. 115. The "United States of America" was thereby constituted a government with full powers necessary for accomplishing the objects of its creation; Respublica v. Sweers, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 44, 1 L. Ed. 29; U. S. v. Maurice, 2 Brock. 109, Fed. Cas. No. 15,747; *U. S. v. The government created was one of delegated powers only; Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 304, 4 L. Ed. 97; McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 316, 4 L. Ed. 579; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 6 L. Ed. 23; Briscoe v. Bank, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 257, 9 L. Ed. 709; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 713, 18 L. Ed. 96; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588; U. S. v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 1 Sup. Ct. 601, 27 L. Ed. 290; and though a government of limited powers, it possesses, to every extent, the sovereignty required for the exercise of those powers which do not require to be put in practice by legislative action, but may be exercised at once by virtue of the constitution through the executive departments; In re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 15 Sup. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092.

The constitution creates a government for the United States of America, and not for countries outside of their limits, and it can, therefore, have no operation in another country; In re Ross, 140 U. S. 453, 11 Sup. Ct. 897, 35 L. Ed. 581.

The preamble of the constitution declares that the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their posterity, do ordain and establish this constitution for the United States of America.

The "people of the United States" who are declared to have ordained and established the constitution "were the people of the several states that had before dissolved the political bands which connected them with Great Britain, and assumed a separate and equal station among the powers of the earth (Declaration of Independence) and had by Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union, in which they took the name of 'The United States of America,' entered into a firm league of friendship with each other for their common defence, the security of their liberties and their mutual and general welfare, binding themselves to assist each other against all force offered to or attack made upon them, or any of them, on account of religion, sovereignty, trade or any pretense whatever" (Articles of Confederation, q. v.); Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 162, 165, 22 L. Ed. 627.

The "perfect union" contemplated by the constitution was said by the Supreme Court to be "an indestructible union composed of indestructible states"; Texas v. White, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 700, 19 L. Ed. 227, where it was also said that the union is indissoluble by the act of any one or more of them; U. S. v. Cathcart, 1 Bond 556, Fed. Cas. No. 14,756. The ordinances of secession were declared to be absolute nullities; White v. Cannon, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 443, 18 L. Ed. 923; but the effort to separate from the Union will not destroy the identity of a state, or discharge it from its obligations under the constitution; Keith v. Clark, 97 U. S. 454, 24 L. Ed. 1071; nor does a condition of civil war take away from congress any of the powers necessary to the maintenance of the Union; Tyler v. Defrees, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 331, 20 L. Ed. 161. The federal and state governments are distinct and independent of each other, and while they exercise their powers within the same territorial limits, neither can intrude upon the sphere of the other, but in case of conflict between the authorities of the two governments, those of the federal government will control until the questions between them are determined by the federal tribunals; Ableman v. Booth, 21 How. (U. S.) 506, 16 L. Ed. 169; Tarble's Case, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 397, 20 L. Ed. 597.

In addition to the powers conferred upon the federal government, the power to provide for the common defence authorizes the condemnation by a state of land for the purpose of ceding it to the United States for forts and navy-yards; In re League Island, 1 Brewst. (Pa.) 524.

The first article is divided into ten sections. By the first the legislative power is vested in congress. The second regulates the formation of the house of representatives, and declares who shall be electors. The third provides for the organization of the senate, and bestows on it the power to try impeachments. The fourth directs the time of meeting of congress, and who may regulate the times, places, and manner of holding elections for senators and representatives. The fifth determines the power of the respective houses. The sixth provides for a compensation to members of congress, and for their safety from arrests, and disqualifies them from holding certain offices. The seventh directs the manner of passing bills. The eighth defines the powers vested in congress. The ninth contains the following provisions: 1st. That the migration or importation of certain classes of persons shall not be prohibited prior to the year 1808. 2d. That the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, except in particular cases. 3d. That no bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed. 4th. The manner of levying taxes. 5th. The manner of drawing money out of the treasury. 6th. That no title of nobility shall be granted. 7th. That no officer shall receive a present from a foreign government. The tenth forbids the respective states to exercise certain powers there enumerated.

Sec. 1. The power vested in congress under the constitution comprised all that portion of governmental power and sovereignty which was, at the time of the adoption of the constitution, known and recognized as the "legislative power." As to what this includes and what it excludes, see LEGISLATIVE POWER.

Sec. 2. The right to vote for members of congress is derived from the constitution, and this is equally true even if the qualifications for electors of state officers have been adopted by the federal law as those to be required of electors for members of congress. Wiley v. Sinkler, 179 U. S. 58, 21 Sup. Ct. 17, 45 L. Ed. 84; and a denial to vote at an election of members of congress involves a federal question; Swafford v. Templeton, 185 U. S. 487, 22 Sup. Ct. 783, 46 L. Ed. 1005.

While congress has no power to establish qualifications for voters in state elections, it may impose a deprivation of citizenship as a penalty, and if the state constitution prescribes citizenship of the United States as one of the qualifications for voting, the voter, upon conviction, might thus be deprived of his right. Huber v. Reily, 53 Pa. 112.

The word "state," in this section, is used in the geographical or territorial sense. Texas v. White, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 700, 19 L. Ed. 227.

The qualifications of members of congress being fixed by par. 4, the state cannot enlarge or vary them; Barney v. McCreery, 1 Cont. Elect. Cas. 167.

As to what are direct taxes within the meaning of the constitution, see TAXATION.

The requirement that congress shall apportion direct taxes according to population does not apply to the District of Columbia or the territories, and a direct tax may be imposed in the direct district in proportion to the census; Loughborough v. Blake, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 317, 5 L. Ed. 98.

Sec. 3. Under the 17th amendment, adopted in 1913, the method of choosing senators is changed from an election by the legislature to an election by the people of each state voting at large.

The senate is a permanent body. Cush. L. & Pr. of Legisl. Ass. 272. The seat of a senator is vacated by his addressing a resignation to the governor of the state without notice of its acceptance; 1 Cont. Elect. Cas. 869. A vacancy in the senate, which has occurred before a meeting of the Legislature which adjourns without filling the vacancy, cannot be filled by the governor; 1 Cont. Elect. Cas. 874; nor is it competent for the governor to make a recess appointment to fill a vacancy which shall happen but has not happened; 1 Cont. Elect. Cas. 871.

Where a state constitution directed the governor to call a special session of the legislature upon the happening of a vacancy in the senate, and he was required by the federal constitution to make a temporary appointment, he considered that the two were in conflict and he exercised his discretion to disregard the positive mandate of the state constitution and appoint a senator to fill the vacancy. Knox's Case, 29 Pa. Co. Ct. 471 (opinion of Governor (formerly Judge) Pennypacker).

In the trials of impeachment in which the Chief Justice presides, he is a member of the court with a right to vote. 1 Trial of Pres. Johnson 185; Utica Bank v. Wagar, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 398; Rights of Lieutenant-Governor, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 213.

Sec. 4. When the legislature has failed to "prescribe the times, places and manner" of holding an election under this section, the governor may issue a writ of election, allowing a reasonable time for notice. 1 Cont. Elect. Cas. 135. Congress may control the election of senators and representatives and change any existing state regulations; In re Siebold, 100 U. S. 371, 25 L. Ed. 717; In re Clarke, 100 U. S. 399, 25 L. Ed. 715; and it may pass such laws as are required to secure the free exercise of a right of suffrage and punish illegal interference with it; In re Coy, 127 U. S. 731, 8 Sup. Ct. 1263, 32 L. Ed. 274; it may also punish violation of duty by election officers; U. S. v. Gale, 109 U. S. 65, 3 Sup. Ct. 1, 27 L. Ed. 857; it may authorize the appointment of supervisors and deputy marshals; In re Siebold, 100 U. S. 371, 399, 25 L. Ed. 717; and generally may regulate the return and counting of the vote; In re Coy, 127 U. S. 731, 8 Sup. Ct. 1263, 32 L. Ed. 274.

Sec. 5. The returns from the state authorities are only prima facie evidence of election and are not conclusive upon either house of congress; Spaulding v. Mead, 1 Cont. Elect. Cas. 157; Reed v. Cosden, 1 Cont. Elect. Cas. 353; and a failure of the state executive to grant a certificate of election does not affect the right of one who is elected a member of congress; id. 95.

A majority of the house is a quorum and a majority of the quorum is sufficient to pass a bill; U. S. v. Ballin, 144 U. S. 1, 12 Sup. Ct. 507, 36 L. Ed. 321; and the house may determine any means, not in violation of the constitutional restraints or fundamental rights, for ascertaining the presence of a quorum, as by rule authorizing the counting of members who do not vote sufficient to make a quorum; U. S. v. Ballin, 144 U. S. 1, 12 Sup. Ct. 507, 36 L. Ed. 321.

Each of the two houses possesses an inherent power to punish for contempt; Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 204, 5 L. Ed. 242; the power cannot be delegated, though a law providing for the indictment of a contumacious witness is valid; In re Chapman, 166 U. S. 661, 17 Sup. Ct. 677, 41 L. Ed. 1154. The power to punish for contempt requires that the matter in question shall be strictly within the jurisdiction of the body; Kilbourne v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168, 26 L. Ed. 377, which overrules Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 204, 5 L. Ed. 242, on the point that the warrant of the speaker for the commitment of the witness is not conclusive by way of justification to the serjeant-at-arms in an action for false imprisonment. The court relied upon some English cases as authorities; 4 Moore P. C. 63; 11 Moore P. C. 347; 4 Moore P. C. (N. S.) 203.

The power to expel a member has been held to cover an offence not punishable by statute but inconsistent with the duty of a member. Blount's Case, cited 1 Story, Const. § 838; Smith's Case, 1 Hall, L. J. 459.

The constitutional power granted to each house to keep a journal of its proceedings does not make it evidence that an enrolled bill has passed containing a section not appearing in the enrolled act filed in the state department; Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 12 Sup. Ct. 495, 36 L. Ed. 294.

Sec. 6. The privilege from arrest extends to all indictable offences; 1 Story, Const. § 865; but it has been held that the privilege from arrest of a member of the legislature applies only to civil process and not to cases of crime or misdemeanor. Com. v. Keeper of Jail, 4 W. N. C. (Pa.) 540. The privilege extends to the service of civil process while in attendance on their public duties; Geyer v. Irwin, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 107, 1 L. Ed. 762; Nones v. Edsall, 1 Wallace, Jr. 191, Fed. Cas. 10,290; Respublica v. Duane, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 347; and the privilege extends to the period of going or returning as well as the time of attendance; Lewis v. Elmendorf, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 222; and it protects a member who loses his seat on a contest until his return home in the shortest reasonable time; Com. v. Craus, 2 Clark (Pa.) 450.

The acceptance of a federal office after election to congress operates as a forfeiture of the seat; 1 Cont. Elect. Cas. 122; and this includes a military commission in a volunteer regiment; 2 Cont. Elect. Cas. 92; Hammond v. Herrick, 1 Cont. Elect. Cas. 295; but one who continued to execute the duties of a federal office after election to congress but before taking his seat is not disqualified; Hammond v. Herrick, 1 Cont. Elect. Cas. 287, 314, 316.

Sec. 7. An act imposing taxes on the notes of a national bank is not a revenue bill within this section; Twin City Nat. Bank v. Nebeker, 167 U. S. 196, 17 Sup. Ct. 766, 42 L. Ed. 134.

A bill takes effect from the time of its approval, and the doctrine that there is no fraction of a day does not apply; In re Richardson, 2 Sto. 571, Fed. Cas. No. 11,777; People v. Clark, 1 Cal. 406; contra, In re Welman, 20 Vt. 653, Fed. Cas. No. 17,407. As to the presentation of bills and their approval, see EXECUTIVE POWER.

Under the last paragraph of this section the senate has decided, July 7, 1856, that two-thirds of a quorum were sufficient to pass a bill over a veto.

A proposed amendment to the constitution need not be presented to the president for approval; Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 378, 1 L. Ed. 644; nor joint resolutions; 6 Opn. A. G. 680.

Sec. 8. This section enumerates the powers specifically granted to congress, and with respect to them it is held that where they are not exclusive, either expressly or by necessary imputation, the states may exercise them concurrently; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 193, 4 L. Ed. 529; Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 40, 5 L. Ed. 19. The power of congress to lay taxes is limited, so that it may not reach the means and instrumentalities of the government of a state; Pollock v. Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429, 15 Sup. Ct. 673, 39 L. Ed. 759; or the salaries of state officers; Collector v. Day, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 113, 20 L. Ed. 122; nor the revenues, or interest on bonds, of municipal corporations of the states; U. S. v. R. Co., 17 Wall. (U. S.) 322, 21 L. Ed. 597; Pollock v. Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429, 15 Sup. Ct. 673, 39 L. Ed. 759; but it may lay a tax upon an inheritance or property by states or from municipalities; Snyder v. Bettman, 190 U. S. 249, 23 Sup. Ct. 803, 47 L. Ed. 1035.

The debts of the United States, of which congress is authorized to provide for the payment, include those of an equitable character which would not be recoverable in a court of law; as, for example, the payment of sugar bounties to producers who were prevented by the repeal of the act from obtaining them in due time; U. S. v. Realty Co., 163 U. S. 427, 16 Sup. Ct. 1120, 41 L. Ed. 215. The requirement that taxes shall be uniform throughout the United States is a geographical expression and means simply to operate generally throughout the country; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 44 L. Ed. 969; High v. Coyne, 178 U. S. 111, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 44 L. Ed. 997; but this does not include foreign territory acquired by conquest or treaty and not incorporated into the United States; Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 244, 21 Sup. Ct. 770, 45 L. Ed. 1088.

As to the scope of the taxing power of congress in this section, see TAXATION; IMPOST; EXCISE; as to the power to regulate commerce, see COMMERCE; RESTRAINT OF TRADE; INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION; as to naturalization and bankruptcy, see those titles; as to coining money, see COINAGE; as to counterfeiting, post-offices and post-roads, see FUGGERY; POST-OFFICE; POSTAL SERVICE; as to the power to promote science and useful arts, see COPYRIGHT; PATENT; TRADE-MARK; as to the power to establish inferior courts, see UNITED STATES COURTS; as to the power to define and punish piracy and felonies on the high seas, see ADMIRALTY; PIRACY; HIGH SEAS; as to the power to declare war and support armies and a navy and to provide for the government regulation of military forces, see WAR; LETTER OF MARQUE AND REPRISAL; MILITARY LAW; COURT-MARTIAL; MILITIA; as to the power of legislation for the seat of government, see DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA; as to the line of distinction between the authority of the states over their internal affairs and that of congress in regulation of commerce, see POLICE POWER; HEALTH; QUARANTINE; INSPECTION; see also NAVIGABLE WATERS; BRIDGE; PILOT; HARBORS; FERRIES.

Sec. 9. The first paragraph of this section is no longer in force, being superseded by the 13th and 14th Amendments. While in force it was held to apply to the African race and the word "migration" related to free persons and "importation" to slaves; New York v. Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 107 U. S. 59, 2 Sup. Ct. 87, 27 L. Ed. 383.

As to the prohibition of the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, see that title; as to the three following paragraphs, see BILL OF ATTAINDER; EX POST FACTO; TAXATION. Under the last paragraph of this section it was determined that a United States marshal could not hold the office of commercial agent of France; 6 Opin. A. G. 409.

Sec. 10. The prohibition of the first paragraph of this section operated to make the Confederate government an illegal organization; Williams v. Bruffy, 96 U. S. 176, 24 L. Ed. 716; and during the time of the existence of the so-called Confederacy, the states composing it could not pass any law impairing the obligation of a contract; U. S. v. Kimbal, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 636, 20 L. Ed. 503; Ford v. Surget, 97 U. S. 594, 24 L. Ed. 1018.

The prohibitions against the states are absolute. They cannot, directly or indirectly, coin money; Briscoe v. Bank, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 257, 9 L. Ed. 709; emit bills of credit; Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 410, 7 L. Ed. 903; which implies a pledge of the public faith and the issue of paper intended to circulate as money; Briscoe v. Bank, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 257, 9 L. Ed. 709; pass a bill of attainder, which includes bills of pains and penalties; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 277, 18 L. Ed. 356; Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333, 18 L. Ed. 366; Drehman v. Stifle, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 595, 19 L. Ed. 508. As to the other prohibitions, see EX POST FACTO; IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS; NOBILITY. The prohibition against the entry by a state into an agreement or compact with another state or foreign power implies the broadest use of words and forbids any negotiations or intercourse between a state and a foreign nation; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 540, 10 L. Ed. 274. The states may, with the consent of congress, enter into a compact fixing their boundaries; Poole v. Fleeger, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 185, 9 L. Ed. 680; Virginia v. West Virginia, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 39, 20 L. Ed. 67; and the consent of congress may be implied from its legislation and proceedings as well as by express action; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 5 L. Ed. 547; Virginia v. West Virginia, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 39, 20 L. Ed. 67; Virginia v. Tennessee, 148 U. S. 503, 13 Sup. Ct. 728, 37 L. Ed. 537.

There is nothing in the constitution of the United States prohibiting a state from changing the common law by permitting the recovery of damages for injury sustained for which at common law there could be no recovery; Ivey v. Telegraph Co., 165 Fed. 371.

The second article is divided into four sections. The first vests the executive power in the president of the United States, and (as amended) provides for his election and that of the vice-president. The second section confers various powers on the president. The third defines his duties. The fourth provides for the impeachment of the president, vice-president, and all civil officers of the United States.

This article deals with the executive power vested in the president, which comprehends by that term all the powers belonging to the executive department, and of governments, where the three-fold division of governmental powers is recognized. As to what is comprehended in this term, see EXECUTIVE POWER.

Sec. 1. The section under consideration provides in the first place for the election of the president by electors appointed in such manner as the state legislature may direct, and for this purpose their power is exclusive, and a law providing for their election by districts is valid; McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 13 Sup. Ct. 3, 36 L. Ed. 869, affirming McPherson v. Secretary of State, 92 Mich. 377, 52 N. W. 469, 16 L. R. A. 475, 31 Am. St. Rep. 587. The jurisdiction of an indictment for illegal voting for electors, even where the sentence included punishment for illegal voting for a member of congress, is in the state courts; In re Green, 134 U. S. 377, 10 Sup. Ct. 586, 33 L. Ed. 951.

The third clause of this section, providing for the manner of ascertaining the result of the voting by the electors, and of choosing a president and vice-president in case of failure to elect, is of no further force having been supplied by the 12th Amendment.

The time of choosing electors has been fixed by congress as the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November; 1 U. S. R. S. § 131; and the time for electors to meet and vote in their respective states is the second Monday in January; Act Feb. 3, 1887, 1 Comp. St. 67, which invalidates a state law making provision for the meeting of electors, so far as the date is concerned, but not otherwise. The same act provides (sections 4-7) the method of ascertaining the result of the election by congress.

As to who are natural-born citizens and citizens of the United States with respect to the qualifications of the president, see CITIZEN. As to the succession to the presidency in case of a vacancy in the office of both president and vice-president, see CABINET.

Sec. 2. Under the power vested in the president as commander-in-chief of the army and navy, he has authority without legislation to put in force all legitimate acts of belligerency, among which are included the power to remove an officer of the army if the case is not provided for by law; Keyes v. U. S., 109 U. S. 336, 3 Sup. Ct. 202, 27 L. Ed. 954; and to institute a blockade; U. S. v. The Tropic Wind, Fed. Cas. No. 16,541a; U. S. v. The F. W. Johnson, Fed. Cas. No. 15,179; to convene a general court-martial; Swain v. U. S., 165 U. S. 553, 17 Sup. Ct. 448, 41 L. Ed. 823; levy contributions on the enemy; Cross v. Harrison, 16 How. (U. S.) 164, 190, 14 L. Ed. 880; Fleming v. Page, 9 How. (U. S.) 603, 13 L. Ed. 276; authorize the military or naval commanders of conquered territory to provide for civil and military government, and to impose duties on imports and tonnage for its support; Dooley v. U. S., 182 U. S. 222, 21 Sup. Ct. 762, 45 L. Ed. 1074; Cross v. Harrison, 16 How. (U. S.) 164, 14 L. Ed. 889; or courts for the administration of civil and criminal law in such territory may be established by the president, or a commanding officer therein; Mechanics' & Traders' Bank v. Bank, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 277, 22 L. Ed. 871; The Grapeshot, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 129, 19 L. Ed. 651; Leitensdorfer v. Webb, 20 How. (U. S.) 176, 15 L. Ed. 891. The president becomes commander-in-chief of the militia only when it is called into the service of the United States; Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S. 109, 15 Sup. Ct. 773, 39 L. Ed. 914; but his authority as to when it is necessary so to call it is decisive; Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 19, 6 L. Ed. 537; and it may be made a criminal offence by state statute for the militia to refuse to obey his call; Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 5 L. Ed. 19. The president may place the militia under command of officers of the United States army to whom he may delegate his powers; 2 Opin. A. G. 711; but he cannot delegate his judicial duty to review the findings of a court-martial; Runkle v. U. S., 122 U. S. 543, 7 Sup. Ct. 1141, 30 L. Ed. 1167.

The pardoning power conferred upon the president does not destroy the power of congress to pass an act of general amnesty; Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. Ct. 644, 40 L. Ed. 819. Pardon includes amnesty, and there is no distinction between them under the constitution; Knote v. U. S., 95 U. S. 149, 24 L. Ed. 442; U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 128, 20 L. Ed. 519. A pardon is a private official act, and must be conveyed to and accepted by the criminal, and must be brought judicially to the attention of the court to be noticed; U. S. v. Wilson, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 150, 8 L. Ed. 640; unless made by public proclamation, when it has the force of law; Jenkins v. Collard, 145 U. S. 546, 12 Sup. Ct. 868, 36 L. Ed. 812. A pardon may be granted before trial; 6 Opin. A. G. 20; or after the expiration of imprisonment when that is part of the sentence; Steller's Case, Fed. Cas. No. 13,380, 1 Phila. 302; 9 Opin. A. G. 478. He may remit penalties, forfeitures and fines; Osborn v. U. S., 91 U. S. 474, 23 L. Ed. 388; even after the death of the offender; Caldwell's Case, 11 Opin. A. G. 35; or fines imposed for contempt of court; In re Mullee, 7 Blatchf. 23, Fed. Cas. No. 9,911.

As to the force and effect of pardons generally, see PARDON; AMNESTY. As to the treaty power, see TREATY.

Nomination and appointment to office are voluntary acts distinct from the issuing of the commission; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 137, 155, 2 L. Ed. 60; and the president may, after confirmation, withhold a commission, and until it has been delivered the appointment is not consummated; Case of Lieutenant Cox, 4 Opin. A. G. 218; but it was held in Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 137, 2 L. Ed. 60, that formal delivery of a commission was not necessary to complete the appointment, which was done by affixing the seal to the commission; this having been done, the death of the president before the delivery will not affect its validity; U. S. v. Le Baron, 19 How. 73, 15 L. Ed. 525. See OFFICER; EXECUTIVE POWER; which latter title see also as to the power of the president to make recess appointments.

Inferior officers, such as are mentioned in the second paragraph of the section, include clerks of courts; In re Hennen, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 230, 10 L. Ed. 138; U. S. v. Avery, 1 Deady, 204, Fed. Cas. No. 14,481; extradition commissioners; Rice v. Ames, 180 U. S. 371, 21 Sup. Ct. 406, 45 L. Ed. 577; vice-consuls; U. S. v. Eaton, 169 U. S. 331, 18 Sup. Ct. 374, 42 L. Ed. 767; inspectors of immigration; Nishimura Ekiu v. U. S., 142 U. S. 651, 12 Sup. Ct. 336, 35 L. Ed. 1146.

Sec. 3. The authority given to the president to communicate his views and recommendations to congress, and his power to adjourn them in case of disagreement between the two houses, does not seem to have been the occasion of any judicial or official construction. It is interesting to note that President Wilson has revived the earlier custom of communicating his views to both houses in person. The power to convene the two houses in extraordinary sessions has been frequently exercised, and there is not in the federal constitution, as there is in those of many states, any power given to the president to limit the subjects of consideration to that for which he calls the extraordinary sessions. As to the power to receive ambassadors and other public ministers, and the inferences which have been drawn from it, and also the direction to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, see EXECUTIVE POWER.

It was determined in Blount's Case, p. 22, 102, that a member of either house of congress is not a civil officer subject to impeachment, nor is a territorial judge, his office being created by legislation only; 3 Opin. A. G. 409. As to the method of proceeding and impeachment, generally, see that title. The constitutional power of impeachment does not interfere with the president's power of removal for cause which he deems adequate; Shurtleff v. U. S., 189 U. S. 311, 23 Sup. Ct. 535, 47 L. Ed. 828. See EXECUTIVE POWER.

The third article contains three sections. The first vests the judicial power in sundry courts, provides for the tenure of office by the judges, and for their compensation. The second provides for the extent of the judicial power, vests in the supreme court original jurisdiction in certain cases, and directs the manner of trying crimes. The third defines treason, and vests in congress the power to declare its punishment.

Sec. 1. This article deals with the judicial power, as to which, generally, see that title. As to the power of the courts to declare an act of congress or of a state legislature unconstitutional, see CONSTITUTIONAL. The authority of the federal courts over state legislation is confined to cases in which it is repugnant to the federal constitution, and they have no power to declare it void under the state constitution; Jackson v. Lamphire, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 280, 7 L. Ed. 679.

The federal courts are not to be treated by the state courts as belonging to another sovereign; Com. v. R. Co., 58 Pa. 43.

It was established by an early case that the power of congress to create inferior tribunals is unlimited except by the sense of that body as to what is necessary and proper; Stuart v. Laird, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 299, 2 L. Ed. 115; and in the same case it was answered to an objection that the judges of the supreme court had no right to sit as circuit judges, that the practice and acquiescence in the custom "affords an irresistible answer and has indeed fixed the construction. It is a contemporary interpretation of the most forcible nature . . . too strong and obstinate to be shaken or controlled; . . . the question is at rest and ought not now to be disturbed."

It has also been determined in many cases that the territorial courts are not courts of the United States; Good v. Martin, 95 U. S. 90, 24 L. Ed. 341; Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. Ed. 244. As to the territorial courts, generally, see McAllister v. U. S., 141 U. S. 174, 11 Sup. Ct. 949, 35 L. Ed. 693.

The courts which congress is authorized by this section to establish do not include a court-martial, or a court for the administration of civil and criminal jurisdiction in conquered territory, which may be created by the president; supra. See COURT-MARTIAL.

The authority of congress to create new courts carries with it ex necessitate the power to define their jurisdiction; Sheldon v. Sill, 8 How. (U. S.) 449, 12 L. Ed. 1147.

The provision that the compensation of a judge shall not be diminished prevents a tax upon his salary; Com. v. Mann, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 415.

Sec. 2. The constitutional jurisdiction of the federal courts cannot be affected by state legislation; Watson v. Tarpley, 18 How. (U. S.) 517, 15 L. Ed. 509; Lincoln County v. Luning, 133 U. S. 529, 10 Sup. Ct. 363, 33 L. Ed. 766; as by attempting to regulate executions; Bank of U. S. v. Halstead, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 51, 6 L. Ed. 264; or by the interference of state courts or officers with persons or property within the jurisdiction of the federal court; Beers v. Haughton, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 329, 9 L. Ed. 145; Ableman v. Booth, 21 How. (U. S.) 506, 16 L. Ed. 169; or by a limitation of remedies within the state; Suydam v. Broadnax, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 67, 10 L. Ed. 357; Lincoln County v. Luning, 133 U. S. 529, 10 Sup. Ct. 363, 33 L. Ed. 766; or by removing a case from one state court to another; Hyde v. Stone, 20 How. (U. S.) 170, 15 L. Ed. 874. As to the attempts to limit to state courts the litigation by or against foreign corporations, see FOREIGN CORPORATION. The grant of judicial power includes both criminal and civil cases; Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 257, 25 L. Ed. 648; but there is no common law jurisdiction in the federal courts in criminal cases; United States v. Hudson, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 32, 3 L. Ed. 259; though their implied powers include all that is necessary to enforce their jurisdiction; United States v. Hudson, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 32, 3 L. Ed. 259.

Cases at law under this section include all those usually embraced under that term, including for example, proceedings for the condemnation of land under the power of eminent domain; Chappell v. U. S., 160 U. S. 499, 16 Sup. Ct. 397, 40 L. Ed. 510; Kohl v. U. S., 91 U. S. 367, 23 L. Ed. 449; and those in equity are those which are included within the English system of equity jurisprudence, and include all cases of which the English court of chancery would have jurisdiction; Boyle v. Zacharie, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 648, 8 L. Ed. 532; Mississippi Mills v. Cohn, 150 U. S. 202, 14 Sup. Ct. 75, 37 L. Ed. 1052; and the system of equity administered by the federal courts is determined by the practice in England, subject to changes by legislation or by rule of court; Boyle v. Zacharie, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 648, 8 L. Ed. 532; but it cannot be affected by state legislation; Dravo v. Fabel, 132 U. S. 487, 10 Sup. Ct. 170, 33 L. Ed. 421; Hollins v. Iron Co., 150 U. S. 371, 14 Sup. Ct. 127, 37 L. Ed. 1113.

A case "arising" under the constitution, laws or treaties of the United States means one which required for its decision a construction of either; Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 264, 5 L. Ed. 257; Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 304, 4 L. Ed. 97; or which involves a right created or protected by them; Patton v. Brady, 184 U. S. 608, 22 Sup. Ct. 493, 46 L. Ed. 713; New Orleans v. De Armas, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 224, 9 L. Ed. 109. See as to this point, JURISDICTION; FEDERAL QUESTION; UNITED STATES COURTS. See those titles, generally, as to the subjects of the judicial power of the United States as enumerated in this section.

The clause relating to jury trials remains unaffected by the 6th Amendment; Callan v. Wilson, 127 U. S. 540, 8 Sup. Ct. 1301, 32 L. Ed. 223; see JURY. As to the admiralty jurisdiction conferred by this section, see ADMIRALTY; MARITIME LAW; and other cognate titles.

The power of congress to designate the place of trial for offences not committed within any state includes the power to designate a place of trial for an offence previously committed; Cook v. U. S., 138 U. S. 157, 11 Sup. Ct. 268, 34 L. Ed. 906.

Sec. 3. As to treason, see that title. The provision as to proof applies to the trial and not the preliminary hearing; Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, 2 Wall. Jr. 134, Fed. Cas. No. 18,276; 1 Burr's Trial 196.

The prohibition contained in the last paragraph of this section was set up to defeat a forfeiture of real property employed in violation of the revenue laws, as making the act under which the remedy was applied in practical effect a bill of attainder within this provision, and it was said by Hall, J., that the clauses in this section "have respect to high crimes, and punishing them, restraining rigôr and guarding against arbitrarily enacting guilt. The case before the court is a civil suit in rem, against the thing, to ratify the seizure of it, and the provision of the act of congress under which it is alleged to be forfeited, and therefore was seized, is a regulation of civil policy, framed to secure to the United States fair payment of taxes imposed for the support of the government, a regulation of civil policy to accomplish a purpose vital to government; for without revenue the government cannot exist; and what measures may be requisite to enforce the collection of a tax, it is for congress in the exercise of its legislative power to determine." Accordingly, the objection was overruled, and the information sustained, and a decree of condemnation was made; U. S. v. Distillery, 2 Abb. U. S. 192, Fed. Cas. No. 14,965.

The fourth article is composed of four sections. The first provides that state records, etc., shall have full faith and credit in other states. The second secures to citizens of each state all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states, and the delivery of fugitives from justice or from labor. The third provides for the admission of new states, and the government of the territories. The fourth guarantees to every state in the Union a republican form of government, and protection from invasion or domestic violence.

Sec. 1. As to the full faith and credit to be given in one state to the records and judicial proceedings of another under this section, see FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

Sec. 2. As to the privileges and immunities to which citizens of each state are entitled in other states, see PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES. As to the delivery of fugitives from justice by one state to another, see FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE, sub-tit. Interstate Rendition.

The third paragraph of this section relates mainly to slavery and is necessarily obsolete, but the expression "no person held to service or labor" includes apprentices; Boaler v. Cummines, 5 Clark (Pa.) 246; id., Fed. Cas. No. 1,584.

Sec. 3. It was held in Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 1, 12 L. Ed. 581, that the power of recognizing state governments is vested in congress. The territories cannot without the consent of congress take legislative action for the formation of constitutions and state governments, but the people of a territory may meet in primary assemblies or conventions for the purpose of making application to congress for admission into the Union as a state; 2 Opin. A. G. 726. The admission of a new state gives it the same status as the other states; Bolln v. Nebraska, 176 U. S. 83, 20 Sup. Ct. 287, 44 L. Ed. 382; Huse v. Glover, 119 U. S. 543, 7 Sup. Ct. 313, 30 L. Ed. 487; and its sovereignty and equality cannot be restrained by congressional action; Withers v. Buckley, 20 How. (U. S.) 84, 15 L. Ed. 816; and immediately upon its admission, the federal laws extend over and into it; Calkin v. Cocke, 14 How. (U. S.) 229, 14 L. Ed. 398.

The consent of the legislature to the division of a state requires that it be one representing and governing the whole state and not merely a part of it; 10 Opin. A. G. 426.

The power of congress over public lands is unlimited; U. S. v. Gratiot, 14 Pet. 526, 10 L. Ed. 573; and that power is not affected by the admission of a territory as a state; Camfield v. U. S., 167 U. S. 518, 17 Sup. Ct. 864, 42 L. Ed. 260. See LANDS, PUBLIC.

Sec. 4. The guarantee of a republican form of government to every "state" means to its people and not to its government; Texas v. White, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 700, 19 L. Ed. 227. Where it was also held that this clause was sufficient authority for the reconstruction, after the Civil War, of the governments of the states included within the Confederacy.

No precise definition of what constitutes a republican government under this clause has been judicially declared; it does not involve the recognition of woman suffrage; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 162, 22 L. Ed. 627; nor is it violated by a provision for minority representation in a constitutional convention; Woods' Appeal, 75 Pa. 59; nor by an act of a state legislature giving the courts control over municipal boundaries; Forsyth v. Hammond, 166 U. S. 506, 17 Sup. Ct. 665, 41 L. Ed. 1095. The decision as to what is a republican government must necessarily remain absolutely with congress; Luther v. Borden, 7 How. (U. S.) 42, 12 L. Ed. 581; and the execution of this constitutional power belongs to the political department of the government and not the judicial; Taylor v. Beckham, 178 U. S. 548, 20 Sup. Ct. 890, 1009, 44 L. Ed. 1187. See REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT.

The authority to grant federal aid in the suppression of domestic violence may be exercised upon the call of the executive whenever the legislature cannot be convened; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588.

The fifth article merely provides for the method of amendment which is to be made on the proposal of two-thirds of both houses and becomes part of the constitution when ratified by the legislature of three-fourths of the states, or by conventions in three-fourths of the states, as may be provided by congress in the proposal. Congress may also by a vote of two-thirds of each house or on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the states call a convention for proposing amendments.

The limitations on the power of amendment were that, prior to 1808 the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article should not be affected. The clauses in question were those relating to the importation of slaves, and requiring capitation or other direct tax to be laid in proportion to the population.

It was also provided "that no state, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the senate."

Proposed amendments to the constitution need not be approved by the president; Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 378, 1 L. Ed. 644.

The sixth article declares that the debts due under the Confederation shall be valid against the United States; that the constitution and treaties made under its powers shall be the supreme law of the land; that public officers shall be required by oath or affirmation to support the constitution of the United States; and that no religious test shall be required as a qualification for office.

The first clause has reference to a then condition and not to general powers of government; Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 393, 15 L. Ed. 691. The second clause is a very vital one, which has been and still is in the course of constant application to test the validity of legislation by the states and by congress. In either case if repugnant to the federal constitution, laws or treaties, it is void and the courts will so declare it; Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 386, 1 L. Ed. 648; Pollock v. Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429, 15 Sup. Ct. 673, 39 L. Ed. 759; and in many other cases, which have declared federal or state laws unconstitutional, the principle has been declared. The obligations imposed by the federal constitution cannot be released or impaired by a state constitution; Dodge v. Woolsey, 18 How. (U. S.) 331, 15 L. Ed. 401; or any constitution or law of a foreign state received into the Union; League v. De Young, 11 How. (U. S.) 185, 13 L. Ed. 657; Herman v. Phalen, 14 How. (U. S.) 79, 14 L. Ed. 334. As to the principles which will be applied in testing the constitutionality of statutes, see CONSTITUTIONAL. And as to the force of treaties after being duly executed and ratified, see TREATY. Under this provision of the constitution, the constitution, laws and treaties of the United States are made a part of the law of every state; Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 25 L. Ed. 628.

The seventh article directs what shall be a sufficient ratification of this constitution by the states.

In pursuance of the fifth article of the constitution, articles in addition to, and amendments of, the constitution, were proposed by congress, and ratified by the legislatures of the several states. These additional articles are to the following import. The first ten were proposed at the first session of the first congress, in accordance with the recommendations of various states in ratifying the constitution, and were adopted in 1791. The dates of the adoption of the subsequent amendments are given below.

As to the combined effect of the first ten amendments, see infra.

First Amendment. Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech; or of the press; or the right of the people to peaceably assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances.

Since this applies entirely to the federal government, there is no provision protecting the religious liberties of citizens of the states, and the claim that an ordinance of a state municipal corporation impairs it, raises no federal question; Permoli v. Municipality No. 1 of New Orleans, 3 How. (U. S.) 569, 11 L. Ed. 739; the term "religion" in this amendment refers exclusively to a person's views of his relations to his Creator, though often confused with some particular form of worship, from which it must be distinguished; Davis v. Beason, 133 U. S. 333, 10 Sup. Ct. 299, 33 L. Ed. 637. The religious freedom secured is not available as a protection against legislation for the punishment of criminals, and their offences are not mitigated by the sanction of a re-religious sect: Church of Jesus Christ of L. D. S. v. U. S., 136 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 792, 34 L. Ed. 478; (the Mormon Church case); Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. Ed. 244; or by territorial legislation; Davis v. Beason, 133 U. S. 333, 10 Sup. Ct. 299, 33 L. Ed. 637. This provision securing religious freedom is not violated by an appropriation of money by congress to a hospital as compensation for the treatment of poor patients; Bradford v. Roberts, 175 U. S. 291, 20 Sup. Ct. 121, 44 L. Ed. 168.

The provision securing freedom of speech is not violated by legislation excluding alien anarchists from the country; or their deportation after entry in violation of law; U. S. v. Williams, 194 U. S. 279, 24 Sup. Ct. 719, 48 L. Ed. 979.

The provision securing freedom of the press is not invaded by the exclusion of lottery literature from the mails; Ex parte Rapier, 143 U. S. 110, 12 Sup. Ct. 374, 36 L. Ed. 93; Horner v. U. S., 143 U. S. 207, 12 Sup. Ct. 407, 36 L. Ed. 126; and its transportation otherwise may be prohibited; Lottery Case, 188 U. S. 321, 23 Sup. Ct. 321, 47 L. Ed. 492, disregarding a suggestion in In re Jackson, 96 U. S. 727, 24 L. Ed. 877.

The right of peaceable assemblage and of petition was not created, but simply recognized by the constitution and protected against federal interference; for its continued protection, the reliance must be had upon the states; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588.

Second Amendment. A well regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed.

The right secured by this article is not created, but only secured against interference by congress; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588; and it may be regulated by state statutes not conflicting with valid congressional action; Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S. 252, 6 Sup. Ct. 580, 29 L. Ed. 615; Wright v. Com., 77 Pa. 470; Nunn v. State, 1 Ga. 243; Cockrum v. State, 24 Tex. 394; State v. Reid, 1 Ala. 612, 35 Am. Dec. 44; State v. Mitchell, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 229; Bliss v. Com., 2 Litt. (Ky.) 90, 13 Am. Dec. 251.

Third Amendment. No soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house, without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

No legal question seems to have arisen under this article.

Fourth Amendment. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

The guaranty of this article applies to letters and sealed packages in the mails as fully as to property retained in a man's home; In re Jackson, 96 U. S. 727, 24 L. Ed. 877. It is violated by an act requiring the defendant in revenue cases to produce his private books etc., in court, and providing that, on refusal, the case shall be taken as confessed against him; Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746; but not by an inquiry of a broker as to purchases or sales on behalf of any senator of corporate stock liable to be affected by the action of the senate; In re Chapman, 166 U. S. 661, 17 Sup. Ct. 677, 41 L. Ed. 1154; nor by compulsory production of documentary evidence under a statute which gives immunity from prosecution or forfeiture because of the testimony given; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baird, 194 U. S. 25, 24 Sup. Ct. 563, 48 L. Ed. 860. Testimony procured in violation of this prohibition is not thereby rendered inadmissible; Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 24 Sup. Ct. 372, 48 L. Ed. 575.

The provision as to warrants does not apply to any issued under a state process; Smith v. Maryland, 18 How. (U. S.) 71, 15 L. Ed. 269; nor to an action by the federal government for a debt due to it without search warrant; Den v. Improv. Co., 18 How. (U. S.) 272, 15 L. Ed. 372.

Fifth Amendment. No persons shall be held to answer for a capital, or other infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

This amendment operates solely on the federal government and not on the state; Barrington v. Missouri, 205 U. S. 483, 27 Sup. Ct. 582, 51 L. Ed. 890; Hunter v. Pittsburgh, 207 U. S. 161, 28 Sup. Ct. 40, 52 L. Ed. 151. It is satisfied by one inquiry and adjudication, and an indictment found by the proper grand jury should be accepted anywhere within the United States as at least prima facie evidence of probable cause and sufficient basis for the removal of the person charged from the district where he is arrested; Beavers v. Henkel, 194 U. S. 73, 24 Sup. Ct. 605, 48 L. Ed. 882. The requirement in the amendment of presentment or indictment for the grand jury does not take upon itself the local law as to how the grand jury shall be made up and raise the latter to a constitutional requirement; Talton v. Mayes, 163 U. S. 376, 16 Sup. Ct. 986, 41 L. Ed. 196.

Whether a person on trial is compelled to be witness against himself contrary to the 5th Amendment because compelled to stand up and walk before the jury, or because the jury were stationed during a recess so as to observe his size and walk, was not decided, but it was held that it did not affect the jurisdiction of the trial court and render the judgment void; In re Moran, 203 U. S. 96, 27 Sup. Ct. 25, 51 L. Ed. 105.

As to the several guarantees contained in this article, see the separate titles and particularly FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT; DUE PROCESS OF LAW; EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS.

Sixth Amendment. In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defence.

The purpose of this amendment was to provide for trial by jury in criminal cases in all the federal courts; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 2, 18 L. Ed. 281; it applies to the territories; Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 18 Sup. Ct. 620, 42 L. Ed. 1061; and after the admission of a state, it cannot provide for the trial of felonies committed before its admission otherwise than by a common law jury; Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 18 Sup. Ct. 620, 42 L. Ed. 1061. The provision applies to all criminal cases, not felonies merely; Callan v. Wilson, 127 U. S. 540, 8 Sup. Ct. 1301, 32 L. Ed. 223; but only such crimes as were previously tried by jury; U. S. v. Duane, Wall. Sr. 102, Fed. Cas. No. 14,997. It does not include an action for goods claimed to have been forfeited by an importer; U. S. v. Zucker, 161 U. S. 475, 16 Sup. Ct. 641, 40 L. Ed. 777; or petty criminal offences; Schick v. U. S., 195 U. S. 65, 24 Sup. Ct. 826, 49 L. Ed. 99, 1 Ann. Cas. 585. The protection of this amendment extends to aliens within the country; Wong Wing v. U. S., 163 U. S. 228, 16 Sup. Ct. 977, 41 L. Ed. 140.

See JURY; VENUE; WITNESS.

Seventh Amendment. In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved; and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.

This article secures the right of trial by jury in civil cases. Suits at common law mean only those distinguished from admiralty and equity; Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 433, 7 L. Ed. 732; Shields v. Thomas, 18 How. (U. S.) 253, 15 L. Ed. 368; U. S. v. La Vengeance, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 297, 1 L. Ed. 610; but the right cannot be impaired by blending a claim at law with an equitable demand; Scott v. Neely, 140 U. S. 106, 11 Sup. Ct. 712, 35 L. Ed. 358. The right to a jury trial is secured in bankruptcy cases; In re Wood, 210 U. S. 246, 258, 28 Sup. Ct. 621, 52 L. Ed. 1046; and in proceedings for the condemnation of property seized as a prize; Armstrong's Foundry, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 766, 18 L. Ed. 882; The Sarah, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 394, 5 L. Ed. 644; it does not apply to proceedings to disbar an attorney; In re Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 2 Sup. Ct. 569, 27 L. Ed. 552; nor to findings by the court of claims; McElrath v. U. S., 102 U. S. 426, 26 L. Ed. 189; or by a special tribunal for hearing claims against a municipality not strictly legal, but properly provided for by legislation; Guthrie Nat. Bank v. Guthrie, 173 U. S. 528, 19 Sup. Ct. 513, 43 L. Ed. 796; nor to condemnations under the right of eminent domain; Long Island Water Supply Co. v. Brooklyn, 166 U. S. 685, 17 Sup. Ct. 718, 41 L. Ed. 1165; Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 548, 17 Sup. Ct. 966, 42 L. Ed. 270. The common law which in this article is made the criterion of suits in which the right of trial by jury is secured is the common law of England; U. S. v. Wonson, 1 Gall. 5, Fed. Cas. No. 16,750. See JURY.

Eighth Amendment. Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted.

As to the prohibitions of this article, see BAIL; FINE; PUNISHMENT.

Ninth Amendment. The enumeration in the constitution of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

A distinction is taken between a case of express prohibition of state actions and one in which the power of the states is taken away by implication. In the former case the power of the state ceased upon the adoption of the constitution, in the latter it continues until congress acts upon the subject matter; Moore v. Houston, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 169, 179, to which a writ of error to the United States Supreme Court was dismissed. So a grant to congress of power over a certain subject matter does not invest any particular court with jurisdiction over it until congress has enacted a law upon the subject; U. S. v. New Bedford Bridge, 1 Woodb. & M. 401, Fed. Cas. No. 15,867.

Tenth Amendment. The powers not delegated to the United States by the constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people.

The federal government possesses only the delegated powers defined by the constitution and all others are reserved to the states; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588; from this results a different rule of interpretation of the federal constitution from those of the states: the former is strict, the latter liberal; Com. v. Hartman, 17 Pa. 118; Weister v. Hade, 52 Pa. 474. See INTERPRETATION.

All powers not conferred upon the federal government by the constitution are reserved to the states, and among the powers not surrendered by them are the police power (subject to the limitations imposed by the constitution); New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Light Co., 115 U. S. 650, 6 Sup. Ct. 252, 29 L. Ed. 516; Louisville Gas Co. v. Gas Co., 115 U. S. 683, 6 Sup. Ct. 265, 29 L. Ed. 510; Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, 24 L. Ed. 1115; Prigg v. Com., 16 Pet. (U. S.) 539, 10 L. Ed. 1060; the right to control tide waters within the limits of the states; Weber v. Harbor Com'rs, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 57, 21 L. Ed. 798; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 13 Sup. Ct. 110, 36 L. Ed. 1018; Pollard v. Hagan, 3 How. (U. S.) 212, 11 L. Ed. 565; the regulation of real property with respect to its acquisition, tenure and disposition; U. S. v. Fox, 94 U. S. 315, 24 L. Ed. 192; and the imposition of succession duties; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 23 Sup. Ct. 277, 47 L. Ed. 439; and generally the power of taxation of subject matter within their jurisdiction; Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 100 U. S. 491, 25 L. Ed. 558; Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 563, 7 L. Ed. 939.

The United States has no inherent powers of sovereignty and only those enumerated in the constitution of the United States; the manifest purpose of the 10th Amendment was to put beyond dispute the proposition that all powers not so granted were reserved to the people, and any further powers can only be attained by a new grant; Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S. 46, 27 Sup. Ct. 655, 51 L. Ed. 956.

The first ten amendments do not apply to the states; Fox v. Ohio, 5 How. (U. S.) 410, 12 L. Ed. 213; Twitchell v. Pennsylvania, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 321, 19 L. Ed. 223; Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 8 Sup. Ct. 22, 31 L. Ed. 80; McElvaine v. Brush, 142 U. S. 155, 160, 12 Sup. Ct. 156, 35 L. Ed. 971; Jack v. Kansas, 199 U. S. 372, 26 Sup. Ct. 73, 50 L. Ed. 234, 4 Ann. Cas. 689; the same was held as to the first eight amendments; Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 29 Sup. Ct. 14, 53 L. Ed. 97; and as to the 2d and 4th; Miller v. Texas, 153 U. S. 535, 14 Sup. The provision of the 14th Amendment forbidding a state to make or enforce any law abridging the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States does not operate to extend to the states the limitations on the powers of the federal government contained in the 10th Amendment; In re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 10 Sup. Ct. 930, 34 L. Ed. 519; Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 581, 20 Sup. Ct. 448, 494, 44 L. Ed. 597; or those contained in the first eight; Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 29 Sup. Ct. 14, 53 L. Ed. 97; but the 7th applies in an appellate federal court to a case which was tried in a state court; Justices of Supreme Court v. U. S., 9 Wall. (U. S.) 274, 19 L. Ed. 658.

Eleventh Amendment. (1798). The judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States, by citizens of another state, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state.

This amendment was a result of the decision in Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 419, 1 L. Ed. 440. It has been the subject of much judicial construction and the cases upon the point as to what is a suit against a state are very numerous, the question being usually raised as to whether a suit against a state officer respecting property or official action is in fact a suit against a state.

Many suits against state officers have been held to be in effect against the state, but it is established, as a settled principle, that an attempt of a state officer to enforce an unconstitutional statute is a proceeding without authority of, and does not affect, the state in its sovereign capacity and is an illegal act, and the officer is stripped of his official character and is subjected as an individual for the consequences of it. The state has no power to impart to its officer immunity from responsibility to the supreme authority of the U. S.; Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 28 Sup. Ct. 441, 52 L. Ed. 714, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 14 Ann. Cas. 764.

As to what has been held to be a suit against a state within this amendment, see STATE; and also an interesting discussion of the history and scope of this amendment by W. L. Guthrie in 8 Colum. L. Rev. 183. In the South Carolina Distillery Cases, Murray v. Distilling Co., 213 U. S. 151, 29 Sup. Ct. 458, 53 L. Ed. 742, and Murray v. South Carolina, 213 U. S. 174, 29 Sup. Ct. 465, 53 L. Ed. 752, the first being a certiorari to the circuit court of appeals, and the second being a writ of error to the supreme court of the state, the former was reversed and the latter affirmed. It was held that a bill in equity to compel specific performance of a contract between an individual and the state cannot, against the objection of the state, be maintained in the federal courts; and that the consent of a state to be sued in its own courts by a creditor does not give that creditor a right to sue in a federal court. It was also held that although by engaging in business, a state may not avoid a pre-existing right of the federal government to tax that business, it does not thereby lose the exemption from suit under this amendment, which was also held to prevent a suit in the federal courts against state officers by vendors of supplies for business carried on by the courts.

Twelfth Amendment (1804). The electors shall meet in their respective states, and vote by ballot for president and vice-president, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as president, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as vice-president, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as president, and of all persons voted for as vice-president, and of the number of votes for each, which list they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the president of the senate; the president of the senate shall, in the presence of the senate and house of representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted; the person having the greatest number of votes for president, shall be the president, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers, not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as president, the house of representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the president. But in choosing the president, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the house of representatives shall not choose a president whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the vice-president shall act as president, as in the case of death or other constitutional disability of the president.

The person having the greatest number of votes as vice-president shall be the vice-president, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the senate shall choose the vice-president; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of senators, and a majority of the whole shall be necessary to a choice.

But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of president shall be eligible to that of vice-president of the United States.

This is a substitute for the third paragraph of section 1 of Article II of the constitution and provides for the method of the election of president and vice-president by the electors, or in default of an election by them.

Thirteenth Amendment (1865). Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

This amendment has been recognized by the Supreme Court as having been passed with special reference to the completion of the enfranchisement of the African race; Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 676; but the word "servitude" which is included in it is of larger meaning than slavery, and by the use of it the amendment operates to prohibit any kind of slavery, including peonage and coolie labor; Butchers' Benevolent Ass'n v. Slaughter House Co., 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394; and every species of involuntary servitude; U. S. v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 1 Sup. Ct. 601, 27 L. Ed. 290; but imprisonment at hard labor, compulsory and unpaid, is in the strongest sense of the words within this exception; Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417, 5 Sup. Ct. 935, 29 L. Ed. 89. In a much later case than those which first defined the scope of this amendment, it is said: "The words 'involuntary servitude' have a 'larger meaning than slavery.' . . . The plain intention was to abolish slavery of whatever name and form and all its badges and incidents; to render impossible any state of bondage; to make labor free, by prohibiting that control by which the personal service of one man is disposed of or coerced for another's benefit which is the essence of involuntary servitude." Bailey v. Alabama, 219 U. S. 241, 31 Sup. Ct. 145, 55 L. Ed. 191.

Fourteenth Amendment (1868). All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several states according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each state, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for president and vice-president of the United States, representatives in congress, the executive and judicial officers of a state, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to the male inhabitants of such state, being of twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such state.

No person shall be a senator or representative in congress, or elector of president or vice-president, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any state, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any state legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any state, to support the constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each house, remove such disability.

The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any state shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations and claims shall be held illegal and void.

The congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

This amendment has given rise to so much discussion by the courts that it requires fuller treatment than can be given here, and for this see the title, FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT, and the cross-references therein; POLICE POWER; EMINENT DOMAIN.

Fifteenth Amendment (1870). The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

The congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

This amendment under the decisions is not to be extended beyond the precise meaning of the words employed. It does not operate to increase the right of suffrage in the states, except so far as that had been previously abridged by "race, color or previous condition of servitude," or had been confined to white persons; Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 651, 4 Sup. Ct. 152, 28 L. Ed. 274. It does not confer the right of suffrage upon women; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 162, 22 L. Ed. 627; nor upon Indians still under tribal relations and not naturalized; Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U. S. 94, 5 Sup. Ct. 41, 28 L. Ed. 643. The amendment is not violated by the qualifications requiring a specific amount of literacy; Williams v. Mississippi, 170 U. S. 213, 18 Sup. Ct. 583, 42 L. Ed. 1012.

Sixteenth Amendment (1913). Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several states, and without regard to any census or enumeration."

Seventeenth Amendment (1913). The senate of the United States shall be composed of two senators from each state, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each senator shall have one vote. The electors in each state shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislatures.

When vacancies happen in the representation of any state in the senate, the executive authority of such state shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, that the legislature of any state may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointment until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

The reader is referred to the notes to the United States Constitution in Vol. I of Ardenas Stewart's Edition of Purdon's Dig. (Pa. Stats.) which may be properly termed a treatise on the subject of great value.

CONSTITUTIONAL. That which is consonant and agrees with the constitution.

Laws made in violation of the constitution are null and void. It is well established that it is the function of the courts so to declare them in any case coming before the court, which involves the question of their constitutionality. See infra. "An unconstitutional law is not a law." Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co. v. Hackett, 228 U. S. 559, 33 Sup. Ct. 581, 57 L. Ed. —. The presumption is always in favor of the constitutionality of a law, and the party alleging the opposite must clearly establish it; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 87, 3 L. Ed. 162; Sweet v. Rechel, 159 U. S. 380, 16 Sup. Ct. 43, 40 L. Ed. 188; U. S. v. Ry. Co., 160 U. S. 668, 16 Sup. Ct. 427, 40 L. Ed. 576; Ex parte Davis, 21 Fed. 396; Ewing v. Hoblitzelle, 85 Mo. 64; Pleuler v. State, 11 Neb. 547, 10 N. W. 481; Com'rs of Leavenworth County v. Miller, 7 Kan. 479, 12 Am. Rep. 425; Sawyer v. Dooley, 21 Nev. 390, 32 Pac. 437; In re League Island, 1 Brewst. (Pa.) 524; People v. Reardon, 184 N. Y. 431, 77 N. E. 970, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314, 112 Am. St. Rep. 628, 6 Ann. Cas. 515; New York v. Reardon, 204 U. S. 152, 27 Sup. Ct. 188, 51 L. Ed.

415, 9 Ann. Cas. 736; where an act is capable of two interpretations, the court will adopt that which will sustain it rather than that which will render it void as unconstitutional; St. Louis Nat. Bank v. Papin, 4 Dill. 29, Fed. Cas. No. 12,239; the incompatibility of the statute with the constitution should be so clear as to leave little reason for doubt before it is pronounced to be invalid; Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333, 18 L. Ed. 366.

An act may be declared partly valid and partly void as unconstitutional; Com. v. Kimball, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 361, 35 Am. Dec. 326; Berry v. R. Co., 41 Md. 446, 20 Am. Rep. 69; McPherson v. Secretary of State, 92 Mich. 377, 52 N. W. 469, 16 L. R. A. 475, 31 Am. St. Rep. 587; In re Sternbach, 45 Fed. 175; Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 12 Sup. Ct. 495, 36 L. Ed. 294; Unity v. Burrage, 103 U. S. 459, 26 L. Ed. 405; Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S. 252, 6 Sup. Ct. 580, 29 L. Ed. 615; Gamble v. McCrady, 75 N. C. 509.

A part of a law may be unconstitutional, while there is no such objection to the remaining parts, and in this case all of the law stands, except that part which is unconstitutional; People v. Van De Carr, 178 N. Y. 425, 70 N. E. 965, 66 L. R. A. 189, 102 Am. St. Rep. 516; Cella Commission Co. v. Bohlinger, 147 Fed. 419, 78 C. C. A. 467, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 537; but the parts must be wholly independent of each other; Allen v. Louisiana, 103 U. S. 80, 26 L. Ed. 318; and capable of separation; Bank of Hamilton v. Dudley, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 492, 526, 7 L. Ed. 496; Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S. 252, 6 Sup. Ct. 580, 29 L. Ed. 615; El Paso & N. E. R. Co. v. Gutierrez, 215 U. S. 87, 30 Sup. Ct. 21, 54 L. Ed. 106. The parts must be separable so that each may be read by itself; Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S. 678, 7 Sup. Ct. 656, 763, 30 L. Ed. 766; U. S. v. Steffens, 100 U. S. 82, 25 L. Ed. 550; but if the two provisions are so united that a presumption arises that the legislature would not have adopted the one without the other both will fail; Ex parte Frazer, 54 Cal. 94; Western Union Tel. Co. v. State, 62 Tex. 630; Slauson v. City of Racine, 13 Wis. 398; Connolly v. Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, 565, 22 Sup. Ct. 431, 46 L. Ed. 679; and it is a question for the court to determine whether it was the intent of congress to have the part which is constitutional stand by itself; Butts v. Transp. Co., 230 U. S. 126, 33 Sup. Ct. 964, 57 L. Ed. —; or where the section which is unconstitutional is an inseparable part of several sections which form one system mutually dependent; Campau v. City of Detroit, 14 Mich. 276; or where all the provisions of the act are secondary to the unconstitutional provisions; Brooks v. Hydorn, 76 Mich. 273, 42 N. W. 1122; where a portion is unconstitutional, the statute must fall as a whole, unless the apparent legislative intent is that in such case the remaining portion shall stand alone; Grey v. City of Dover, 62 N. J. L. 40, 40 Atl. 640.

This power of the courts to declare a law unconstitutional can only exist where there is a written constitution. No such power is possessed by the English courts, and an act of parliament is absolutely conclusive and binds everybody when once its meaning is ascertained. But, where a written constitution exists, it is the expression of the will of the sovereign power, and no body which owes its existence to that constitution (as does the legislature) can violate this fundamental expression of the will of the people. It was originally doubted whether the courts possessed this power, even where a written constitution exists, but it is now established beyond doubt. The question may arise with regard to both state and United States laws considered with reference to the United States constitution, and with regard to state laws also as considered in reference to the state. No important question of law has ever been approached with more caution, examined and discussed with more deliberation and finally determined more conclusively, than that of the existence of this judicial power. It arose as early as 1792, on an act conferring powers upon the judges which were alleged to be not judicial, but a decision was avoided by repeal of the statute; see Hayburn's Case, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 409, 1 L. Ed. 436; but the question arising in another case, the act was declared unconstitutional; see U. S. v. Ferreira, 13 How. (U. S.) 40, 52 note, 14 L. Ed. 42; the question was again raised in 1798 and not decided; Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 386, 1 L. Ed. 648; and later it was stated from the bench as the general sentiment of the bench and bar that the power existed; Com. v. Coxe, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 194, 1 L. Ed. 786. But in 1803 the question was directly raised in a famous case recently much discussed in legal periodical literature, and the power and duty of the court to declare an act unconstitutional were declared in an opinion by Marshall, C. J., in what Kent terms "an argument approaching to the precision and certainty of a mathematical demonstration;" 1 Kent 453; in that case the actual decision was against the jurisdiction, and therefore no law was declared unconstitutional, but the reasoning of the opinion is the basis of the rule afterwards applied and firmly settled; the question was next seriously raised and finally settled by the reasoning of Marshall, C. J., in Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 264, 5 L. Ed. 257; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 137, 2 L. Ed. 60; prior to this decision the question had been raised and decided in favor of the power of the courts in New Jersey; State v. Parkhurst, 9 N. J. L. 427, 440, 444; in Virginia, In re First Case of the Judges, 4 Call, 1, 135; Com. v. Cherry, 2 Va. Cas. 20;

Page v. Pendleton, Wythe, 211; in South Carolina, Bowman v. Middleton, 1 Ray 252; in North Carolina, Den v. Singleton, 1 N. C. 48; in Rhode Island, Pamph. J. B. Varnum, Providence, 1787; and it was raised in New York in a case argued by Hamilton; Hamilton's Works, vol. 5, 115; vol. 7, 197. See Dillon, Laws & Jur. of Eng. 203.

In Eakin v. Raub, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 330, Gibson, C. J., in a dissenting opinion, was of opinion that the right of the judiciary to declare a legislative act unconstitutional does not exist, unless expressly stated; but that it is expressly given by the clause in the federal constitution which provides that the constitution shall be the supreme law of the land, etc. The same judge in Norris v. Clymer, 2 Pa. 281, said to counsel that he had changed his opinion for two reasons:—the late convention of Pennsylvania by their silence sanctioned the pretensions of the court to deal freely with the acts of the legislature; and he was satisfied from experience of the necessity of the case.

The power has been exercised by the supreme court of the United States in the following cases: Hayburn's Case, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 409, 1 L. Ed. 436; U. S. v. Ferreira, 13 How. (U. S.) 40, 52, 14 L. Ed. 42; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 137, 2 L. Ed. 60; Gordon v. U. S., 2 Wall. (U. S.) 561, 17 L. Ed. 921; In re Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333, 18 L. Ed. 366; Hepburn v. Griswold, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 603, 19 L. Ed. 513; U. S. v. Dewitt, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 41, 19 L. Ed. 593; Supreme Justices v. Murray, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 274, 19 L. Ed. 658; Collector v. Day, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 113, 20 L. Ed. 122; U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 128, 20 L. Ed. 519; U. S. v. R. Co., 17 Wall. (U. S.) 322, 21 L. Ed. 597; U. S. v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. Ed. 563; U. S. v. Fox, 95 U. S. 670, 24 L. Ed. 538; U. S. v. Steffens, 100 U. S. 82, 25 L. Ed. 550; Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168, 26 L. Ed. 377; U. S. v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 1 Sup. Ct. 601, 27 L. Ed. 290; U. S. v. Stanley, 109 U. S. 3, 3 Sup. Ct. 18, 27 L. Ed. 835; Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746; Pollock v. Trust Co., 158 U. S. 601, 15 Sup. Ct. 912, 39 L. Ed. 1108; Employers' Liability Cases, 207 U. S. 463, 28 Sup. Ct. 141, 52 L. Ed. 297; Adair v. U. S., 208 U. S. 161, 28 Sup. Ct. 277, 52 L. Ed. 426, 13 Ann. Cas. 764. And the power has been exercised by that court with respect to state or territorial statutes in cases running into the hundreds.

The discussion of the subject was recently revived by an article on the Income Tax Cases in 29 Am. L. Rev. 550, characterizing the exercise of the power in question as "without constitutional warrant" and "based only on the plausible sophistries of John Marshall, and another by the same writer on the case of Marbury v. Madison, characterizing the doctrine as an "unconstitutional usurpation of the lawmaking power by the federal courts;" 30 Am. L. Rev. 188. The first of these was followed by an article in the same periodical taking issue with it; id. 55; and one in 34 Am. L. Reg. & Rev. 796. In the last the subject is thoroughly reviewed from the earliest cases down to the Income Tax cases, and it contains much historical matter bearing upon the question not before collected. See also 7 Harv. L. Rev. 129; 19 Am. L. Rev. 177; Coxe on Judicial Power and Unconstitutional Legislation; an elaborate discussion of the subject by Jno. R. Wilson, Pres't, Rep. Ind. St. Bar Ass'n for 1899, p. 12.

In judging what a constitution means, it must be interpreted in the light and by the assistance of the common law; Durham v. State, 117 Ind. 477, 19 N. E. 327; Brewer, J., in South Carolina v. U. S., 199 U. S. 437, 449, 26 Sup. Ct. 110, 50 L. Ed. 261, 4 Ann. Cas. 737; Matthews, J., in Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 478, 8 Sup. Ct. 564, 31 L. Ed. 508; Gray, J., in U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 654, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890; Bradley, J., in Moore v. U. S., 91 U. S. 270, 274, 23 L. Ed. 346.

Certain fundamental principles govern the courts in passing upon the validity of legislative acts under the constitution; among them are the following:

It is not usual as a matter of practice for courts to pass upon constitutional questions excepting before a full bench; Briscoe v. Bank, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 118, 8 L. Ed. 887.

It has been said that inferior courts will not pass upon these questions; Ortman v. Greenman, 4 Mich. 291; but see, contra, Cooley, Const. Lim. 198, n.; Mayberry v. Kelly, 1 Kan. 116. The contrary rule would seem now to be well settled.

Courts will not draw into consideration constitutional questions collaterally, or unless the consideration is necessary to the determination of the very point in controversy; Hoover v. Wood, 9 Ind. 287; Smith v. Speed, 50 Ala. 277; Clarke v. City of Rochester, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 446; Parker v. State, 5 Tex. App. 579; State v. Rich, 20 Mo. 393; Ireland v. Turnpike Co., 19 Ohio St. 373. If a statute is valid on its face, the court will not look into evidence aliunde to determine whether it violates the constitution; Rankin v. Colgan, 92 Cal. 605, 28 Pac. 673; but where it is plainly invalid for other reasons, courts will not pass on its constitutionality; State v. Price, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 25, 4 O. C. D. 296; Smith v. Speed, 50 Ala. 276; Weimer v. Bunbury, 30 Mich. 201; White v. Scott, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 56. The question whether a legislative act is constitutional never comes before a court for decision as an abstract question, but can only be considered when it arises in a suit inter partes. "The serious duty of condemning state legislation as constitutional and void cannot be thrown upon this court, except at the suit of parties directly and certainly effected thereby"; Chadwick v. Kelly, 187 U. S. 540, 23 Sup. Ct. 175, 47 L. Ed. 293; Manley v. Park, 187 U. S. 547, 23 Sup. Ct. 208, 47 L. Ed. 296. As to the effect of a decision in such a case upon the act itself, see infra.

To justify a court in declaring an act unconstitutional, the case must be so clear that no reasonable doubt can be said to exist; Blair v. Ridgely, 41 Mo. 63, 97 Am. Dec. 248; Smithee v. Garth, 33 Ark. 17; Petition of Wellington, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 95, 26 Am. Dec. 631; New York & O. M. R. Co. v. Van Horn, 57 N. Y. 473; Kerrigan v. Force, 68 N. Y. 381; Gormley v. Taylor, 44 Ga. 76; State v. R. Co., 48 Mo. 468; see Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U. S. 662, 9 Sup. Ct. 651, 32 L. Ed. 1060; Rich v. Flanders, 39 N. H. 304; Chicago, D. & V. R. R. Co. v. Smith, 62 Ill. 268, 14 Am. Rep. 99; and every intendment will be made in favor of the constitutionality of the law; People v. Rucker, 5 Colo. 455. "The principle is universal, that legislation, whether by congress or by a state, must be taken to be valid, unless the contrary is made clearly to appear;" Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, 23 Sup. Ct. 92, 47 L. Ed. 108; and in Minsinger v. Rau, 236 Pa. 327, 84 Atl. 902, it was said that when an act has been the result of deliberate thought of a commission of prominent citizens, and has been passed upon by two legislatures before final approval by the governor, it will not be set aside as unconstitutional "unless the alleged breaches of the fundamental law are so glaring that there is no escape."

The courts cannot pronounce void an act within the general scope of legislative powers, merely because contrary to natural justice; Commissioners of Northumberland County v. Chapman, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 74; Weber v. Reinhard, 73 Pa. 370, 13 Am. Rep. 747; State v. Kruttschnitt, 4 Nev. 178; Hills v. Chicago, 60 Ill. 86; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77; Martin v. Dix, 52 Miss. 53, 24 Am. Rep. 661; Maxwell v. Board, 119 Ind. 20, 23, 19 N. E. 617, 21 N. E. 453; nor because it violates fundamental principles of republican government, unless these principles are protected by the constitution; License Tax Cases, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 469, 18 L. Ed. 497; Perry v. Keene, 56 N. H. 514; nor because it is supposed to conflict with the spirit of the constitution; People v. Fisher, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 220; Walker v. City of Cincinnati, 21 Ohio St. 14, 8 Am. Rep. 24; Cooley, Const. Lim. (6th ed.) 204. Any legislative act which does not encroach upon the powers vested in the other departments of the government must be enforced by the courts; Chicago, D. & V. R. R. Co. v. Smith, 62 Ill. 268, 14 Am. Rep. 99; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 128, 3 L. Ed. 162. The courts of one state should not declare unconstitutional and void a statute of another state, whose courts had held it constitutional; American Print Works v. Lawrence, 23 N. J. L. 596, 57 Am. Dec. 420.

In the discussion of this subject expressions have been used from time to time by courts and legal authors which tend to leave in the mind of the reader an impression that legislative acts have been set aside upon some other or higher ground than that of unconstitutionality. These expressions will be found on examination either to consist of dicta not only entirely obiter, but usually not justified even as dicta by the facts of the cases in which they occur, or to be qualified by a context usually omitted in citing them. A few of them will suffice as examples. Judge Cooley, in the preface to the second edition of his very learned work on Constitutional Limitations, says: "There are on all sides definite limitations which circumscribe the legislative authority, independent of the specific restraints which the people impose by their state constitutions." Again, in the work itself it is said that it is not necessary that the courts, before they can set aside a law as invalid must be able to find some specific inhibition which has been disregarded, or some specific command which has been disobeyed; Cooley, Const. Lim. 206. This language has been quoted and interpreted to sustain the idea sometimes hinted at rather than seriously and argumentatively advanced, that there is some vague sense of justice and right—some higher law, it might be termed—which may justify a court in holding that a legislative act is invalid, in the absence of an express or implied constitutional objection. And it has been considered that the same view is maintained by Judge Redfield in an article in 10 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 161. So in an early case it has been said that statutes against plain and obvious principles of common right and common reason are void; Ham v. McClaws, 1 Bay (S. C.) 98. So also Judge Story made some forcible observations respecting "fundamental maxims of free government," to disregard which no power "lurked under any general grant of legislative authority," Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 627, 7 L. Ed. 542, 657, which have been referred to as supporting the view under consideration. Of the like character were the assertions of Hosmer, C. J., that he could not agree "with those judges who assert the omnipotence of the legislature in all cases when the constitution has not interposed an explicit restraint;" Inhabitants of Goshen v. Inhabitants of Stonington, 4 Conn. 209, 225, 10 Am. Dec. 121; and the language of a New York court which declared that the vested rights of the inhabitants of the city of New York in certain public property rested "not merely upon the constitution, but upon the great principles of eternal justice which lie at the foundation of all free government;" Benson v. City of New York, 10 Barb. (N. Y.)

223, 244. Commenting on these and similar statements, Mr. C. A. Kent, in an article in 11 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 734, says on this subject: "The judiciary of a state cannot declare a legislative act unconstitutional, unless it conflict, expressly or by implication, with some provision of the state or of the federal constitution." See City of Evansville v. State, 118 Ind. 426, 21 N. E. 267, 4 L. R. A. 93, note. A careful examination of these and other authorities relied upon for the purpose stated will make it apparent that there is no substantial basis for a doctrine which will permit a court to apply to a legislative act any test of validity other than that of its constitutionality. When there is doubt as to the construction of a law, courts may give to it one consonant with rather than opposed to principles of right and justice, and this was precisely the scope of the South Carolina case. In the New York case the great fundamental principles need not have been referred to by the court, for the reason that they were all protected by the constitution, and in the Connecticut case not only was no law held invalid, but the sole question decided was that an act declaring valid all marriages previously celebrated by a clergyman of any religious denomination according to its forms was constitutional. The note by Judge Redfield, referred to, is directed only to show that there are limitations to the legislative power, and that it does not embrace "judicial decrees or despotic orders or assessments such as a military conqueror might make," under the guise of taxation. But it will be found that the cases put by him, as well as those used by Judge Cooley, to illustrate the expression quoted from his work, and indeed all of those which have given rise to the theory under consideration, are provided for in the American constitutions either by express prohibitions and declarations of rights, or by the distribution of the powers of government and the right of the judicial branch to determine finally whether a given act is an exercise of legislative power. The whole subject is thoroughly discussed by Judge Cooley in his Constitutional Limitations, 6th ed., and upon full consideration of the authorities he concludes that a court cannot "declare a statute unconstitutional and void, solely on the ground of unjust and oppressive provisions, or because it is supposed to violate the natural, social, or political rights of the citizen, unless it be shown that such injustice is prohibited or such rights guaranteed or protected by the constitution (p. 197); . . . that except when the constitution has imposed limits upon the legislative power, it must be considered as practically absolute, whether it operate according to natural justice or not in any particular case" (p. 201), nor because of "apparent injustice or impolicy," or because "they appear to the minds of the judges to violate fundamental principles of republican government, unless it shall be found that those principles are placed beyond legislative encroachment by the constitution" (p. 202). See also Potter, Dwar. Stats. 62.

"There is no room in our constitutional theory for any transcendent right or instinct of nature, except as guaranteed by the constitution"; Henry v. Cherry & Webb, 30 R. I. 13, 31, 73 Atl. 97, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, 136 Am. St. Rep. 928, 18 Ann. Cas. 1006; State v. McCrillis, 28 R. I. 165, 66 Atl. 301, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 635, 13 Ann. Cas. 701; State v. Ins. Co., 73 Conn. 255, 47 Atl. 299, 57 L. R. A. 481, denying the existence of "the vague notion of a higher law." The courts are not guardians of the rights of the people except as those rights are secured by some constitutional provision; Cooley, Const. Lim. 201. And see a thorough discussion of the subject of "Implied Limitations upon the Exercise of the Legislative Power" by R. C. Dale, Am. Bar. Ass'n Rep. (1901) 294.

A court cannot interfere merely because it does not consider that the circumstances at the time justified the action of the legislature; there must be a clear unmistakable infringement of rights secured by the fundamental law; Otis v. Parker, 187 U. S. 606, 23 Sup. Ct. 168, 47 L. Ed. 323, where an act forbidding sales of stock on margins was held not unconstitutional. By way of illustration, Holmes, J., said that no court would declare usury laws or Sunday laws unconstitutional, though every member of it believed such law to be unwise or useless; while on the other hand wagers may be declared illegal without a statute, or lotteries under one, though formerly thought pardonable.

In the consideration of these questions, the distinction between the federal and state constitutions must be borne in mind: "Congress can pass no laws but such as the constitution authorizes expressly or by clear implication; while the state legislature has jurisdiction of all subjects on which its legislation is not prohibited." Cooley, Const. Lim. 210; see Weister v. Hade, 52 Pa. 477; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 721, 37 L. Ed. 599. But it has been held that the decision of congress that certain claims upon the public treasury are founded upon moral and honorable obligations and upon principles of right and justice, and that public money be appropriated in payment of such claims is constitutional, and can rarely, if ever, be the subject of review by the judicial branch of the government; U. S. v. Realty Co., 163 U. S. 427, 16 Sup. Ct. 1120, 41 L. Ed. 215.

No one can attack as unconstitutional an independent provision of a law, who has no interest in and is not affected by such provision; State v. Becker, 3 S. D. 29, 51

N. W. 1018; Farneman v. Cemetery Ass'n, 135 Ind. 344, 35 N. E. 271; Burnside v. County Court, 86 Ky. 423, 6 S. W. 276; Jones v. Black, 48 Ala. 540; Moore v. City of New Orleans, 32 La. Ann. 726; People v. R. Co., 89 N. Y. 75.

The judiciary of the United States should not strike down a legislative enactment of a state, especially if it has direct connection with the social order, health and morals of its people, unless such legislation plainly and palpably violates some right granted or secured by the national constitution, or encroaches upon the authority delegated to the United States for the attainment of objects of national concern; Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 15 Sup. Ct. 154, 39 L. Ed. 223.

An act adjudged to be unconstitutional is as if it had never been enacted; Sumner v. Beeler, 50 Ind. 341, 19 Am. Rep. 718; City of Detroit v. Martin, 34 Mich. 170, 22 Am. Rep. 512; Woolsey v. Dodge, 6 McLean, 142, Fed. Cas. No. 18,032; Clark v. Miller, 54 N. Y. 528; Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, 30 L. Ed. 178; Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 270, 5 Sup. Ct. 903, 962, 29 L. Ed. 185; though it was held in Com. v. McCombs, 56 Pa. 436, that an officer acting under an unconstitutional law was a de facto officer. An unconstitutional law must be deemed to have the force of law so far as to protect an officer acting under it, until it is declared void; Sessums v. Botts, 34 Tex. 335; but see Astrom v. Hammond, 3 McLean, 107, Fed. Cas. No. 596; Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 288, 5 Sup. Ct. 903, 962, 29 L. Ed. 185. If a decision adjudging a statute unconstitutional is afterwards overruled, the statute is considered to have been in force during the whole period since its enactment; Pierce v. Pierce, 46 Ind. 86; but see Menges v. Dentler, 33 Pa. 495, 75 Am. Dec. 616; Geddes v. Brown, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 180; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 9 Am. L. Rev. 402. An unconstitutional act can under no circumstances be validated by the legislature; State v. Whitesides, 30 S. C. 579, 9 S. E. 661, 3 L. R. A. 777.

See 11 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 730; 9 id. 585.

The power of the courts to declare legislative acts unconstitutional is the subject of an extended article by Wm. M. Meigs, in 40 Am. L. Rev. 641, which in a sense continues a previous article in 19 Am. L. Rev. 175. Mr. Meigs elaborates the argument on the subject, particularly with reference to the early decisions and the congressional debates on the repeal of the Judiciary Act, in 1802, of which he declares his ignorance at the time he wrote his first article. He cites five cases in which the right was exercised and two others in which it was approved prior to 1800, and gives an interesting history of the earlier development of the subject, which has been less discussed in connection with it.

In passing upon an act the court can only take the facts before it; in this way it may sometimes enforce laws which would be declared invalid if attacked in a different manner; Quong Wing v. Kirkendall, 223 U. S. 59, 32 Sup. Ct. 192, 56 L. Ed. 350.

As to the constitutionality of various classes of statutes, see the several titles of constitutional law, including: ARMS; BONDS; BRIDGES; CIVIL RIGHTS; COMMERCE; DUE PROCESS OF LAW; EMINENT DOMAIN; EX POST FACTO LAWS; EXECUTIVE POWER; EXTRADITION; FEDERAL QUESTION; FOREIGN JUDGMENTS; FULL FAITH AND CREDIT; HABEAS CORPUS; IMPAIRING OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS; INTERSTATE COMMERCE; JUDICIAL POWER; JUDICIARY; LIQUOR LAWS; ORIGINAL PACKAGES; POLICE POWER; PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES; RETROACTIVE LAWS; SPECIAL LEGISLATION; STATUTES; TAXATION; TITLE; UNITED STATES COURTS.

See Thorpe, Amer. Charters, Constitutions and Organic Laws, for the text of state constitutions.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION. A convention summoned by the legislature to draw up a new, or amend an old constitution. It is ancillary and subservient to the fundamental law, not hostile and paramount thereto. Jameson, Const. Conv. § 11. It is bound by the act creating it; Wood's Appeal, 75 Pa. 59. See Jameson, Const. Conv. §§ 376-418. The result of its labors, when adopted, must be submitted to a vote of the people, before it can become effective; Jameson, § 479 et seq. Contra, if the legislature does not so provide in the act calling the convention; State v. Neal, 42 Mo. 119; Sproule v. Fredericks, 69 Miss. 898, 11 South. 472; in such case it need not be submitted to vote; Sproule v. Fredericks, 69 Miss. 898, 11 South. 472.

For a complete list of Constitutional conventions held in the United States, to 1876, see Jameson, Const. Conv. Appendix B, and see the work generally for a full discussion of the interesting questions which have arisen respecting the powers and duties of such bodies. See STATE.

CONSTITUTIONS OF CLARENDON. See CLARENDON.

CONSTITUTIONS OF THE FOREST. See FOREST LAWS; CHARTA DE FORESTA.

CONSTITUTOR. In Civil Law. He who promised by a simple pact to pay the debt of another; and this is always a principal obligation. Inst. 4. 6. 9.

CONSTITUTUM (Lat.). An agreement to pay a subsisting debt which exists without any stipulation, whether of the promisor or another party. It differs from a stipulation in that it must be for an existing debt. Du Cange.

A day appointed for any purpose. A form of appeal. Calvinus, Lex.

CONSTRAINT. The word constraint is equivalent to the word restraint. Edmondson v. Harris, 2 Tenn. Ch. 433.

CONSTRUCTION (Lat. construere, to put together). In Practice. Determining the meaning and application as to the case in question of the provisions of a constitution, statute, will, or other instrument, or of an oral agreement.

Drawing conclusions respecting subjects that lie beyond the direct expression of the term. Lieber, Leg. & Pol. Herm. 20.

Construction and interpretation are generally used by writers on legal subjects, and by the courts, as synonymous, sometimes one term being employed and sometimes the other. Lieber, in his Legal and Political Hermeneutics, distinguishes between the two, considering the province of interpretation as limited to the written text, while construction goes beyond, and includes cases where texts interpreted and to be construed are to be reconciled with rules of law or with compacts or constitutions of superior authority, or where we reason from the aim or object of an instrument or determine its application to cases unprovided for; C. 1, § 8; c. 3, § 2; c. 4; c. 5. Dr. Wharton (2 Contracts, c. 19) adopts this view. Leake (Digest of Contracts 217) and Prof. James B. Thayer (Evidence 411) consider them as synonymous. Black (Interpretation of Laws 1) makes some distinction between the terms.

Legal rules of construction so called, suggest natural methods of finding and weighing evidence and ascertaining the fact of intention, but do not determine the weight which the evidence has in mind, and do not establish a conclusion at variance with that reached by a due consideration of all the competent proof; Edes v. Boardman, 58 N. H. 550, 592.

A strict construction is one which limits the application of the provisions of the instrument or agreement to cases clearly described by the words used. It is called, also, literal.

A liberal construction is one by which the letter is enlarged or restrained so as more effectually to accomplish the end in view. It is called, also, equitable.

The terms strict and liberal are applied mainly in the construction of statutes; and the question of strictness or liberality is considered always with reference to the statute itself, according to whether its application is confined to those cases clearly within the legitimate import of the words used, or is extended beyond though not in violation of (ultra sed non contra) the strict letter. In contracts, a strict construction as to one party would be liberal as to the other.

One leading principle of construction is to carry out the intention of the authors of or parties to the instrument or agreement, so far as it can be done without infringing upon any law of superior binding force.

The subject will be treated under INTERPRETATION.

CONSTRUCTIVE. That which amounts in the view of the law to an act, although the act itself is not necessarily really performed. For words under this head, such as constructive fraud, etc., see the various titles FRAUD; NOTICE; TRUST; etc.

CONSUEUDINARIUS (Lat.). In Old English Law. A ritual or book containing the rites and forms of divine offices or the customs of abbeys and monasteries.

A record of the consuetudines (customs). Blount; Whishaw.

CONSUEUDINARY LAW. Customary or traditional law.

CONSUEUDINES FEUDORUM (Lat. feudal customs). A compilation of the law of feuds or fiefs in Lombardy, made A. D. 1170.

It is called, also, the Book of Fiefs, and is of great and generally received authority. The compilation is said to have been ordered by Frederic Barbarossa, Erskine, Inst. 2. 3. 5, and to have been made by two Milanese lawyers, Spelman, Gloss., but this is uncertain. It is commonly annexed to the Corpus Juris Civilis, and is easily accessible. See 3 Kent, Comm., 10th ed. 665, n.; Spelman, Gloss.

CONSUEUDO (Lat.) A custom; an established usage or practice. Co. Litt. 58.

Tolls; duties; taxes. Co. Litt. 58 b.

This use of consuetudo is not correct: custuma is the proper word to denote duties, etc. 1 Shars. Bla. Com. 313, n. An action formerly lay for the recovery of customs due, which was commenced by a writ de consuetudinibus et servitiis (of customs and services). This is said by Blount to be "a writ of right close which lies against the tenant that deforceth the lord of the rent and services due him." Blount; Old Nat. Brev. 77; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 151.

There were various customs: as, consuetudo Anglicana (custom of England), consuetudo curie (practice of a court), consuetudo mercatorum (custom of merchants). See CUSTOM; LEX; LEX ET CONSUEUDO REGNI NOSTRI; LEGES ET CONSUEUDINES REGNI.

CONSUL. A commercial agent appointed by a government to reside in a seaport or other town of a foreign country, and commissioned to watch over the commercial rights and privileges of the nation deputed him. The term includes consuls-general and vice-consuls. Rev. Stat. § 4130.

A vice-consul is one acting in the place of a consul.

Among the Romans, consuls were chief magistrates who were annually elected by the people, and were invested with powers and functions similar to those of kings. During the middle ages the term consul was sometimes applied to ordinary judges; and, in the Levant, maritime judges are yet called consuls. 1 Boulay Paty, Dr. Mar. tit. Prél. s. 2, p. 57. Officers with powers and duties corresponding to those of modern consuls were employed by the ancient Athenians, who had them stationed in commercial ports with which they traded. 3 St. John, Mann. and Cus. of Anc. Greece 283. They were appointed about the middle of the twelfth century by the maritime states of the Mediterranean; and their numbers have increased greatly with the extension of modern commerce.

As a general rule, consuls represent the subjects or citizens of their own nation not otherwise represented; Bee 209; The London Packet, 1 Mas. 14, Fed. Cas. No. 8,474; The Anne, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 435, 4 L. Ed. 428; The Antelope, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 66, 6 L. Ed. 268. Their duties and privileges are now generally limited, defined, and secured by commercial treaties, or by the laws of the countries they represent. They are not strictly judicial officers; 3 Taunt. 102; and have no judicial powers except those which may be conferred by treaty and statutes. See The William Harris, Ware 367, Fed. Cas. No. 17,695; Dainese v. Hale, 91 U. S. 13, 23 L. Ed. 190.

American consuls are nominated by the president and confirmed by the senate. U. S. Const. art. 2, § 2. Upon the exercise of this power of appointment by the president, congress can place no limitation; Foot v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls. 443.

The consular system was reorganized by Act of April 5, 1906. Seven classes of consuls-general were created with salaries running from $12,000 to $3,000; nine classes of consuls, with salaries running from $8,000 to $2,000. The offices of vice-consul-general, deputy-consul-general, vice-consul and deputy-consul were continued, and also consular agents. The office of commercial agent was abolished. No consul-general, consul, or consular agent, receiving a salary of $1,000 or over shall transact business as a merchant, manufacturer, broker, or other trader, or as a clerk for such, within the limits of his jurisdiction, nor practice as a lawyer.

They are required to perform many duties in relation to the commerce of the United States and towards masters of ships, mariners, and other citizens of the United States. Among these are the authority to receive protests or declarations which captains, masters, crews, passengers, merchants, and others make relating to American commerce; they are required to administer on the estates of American citizens dying within their consular jurisdiction and leaving no legal representatives, when the laws of the country permit it; see 2 Curt. Eccl. 241; to take charge of and secure the effects of stranded American vessels in the absence of the master, owner, or consignee; to settle disputes between masters of vessels and the mariners; to provide for destitute seamen within their consulate, and send them to the United States at the public expense. See R. S. § 1674 et seq. Also to hear complaints of ill-treatment of seamen; The Welhaven, 55 Fed. 80. The consuls are also authorized to make certificates of certain facts in certain cases, which receive faith and credit in the courts of the United States; Potter v. Ins. Co., 3 Sumn. 27, Fed. Cas. No. 11,335. But these consular certificates are not to be received in evidence, unless they are given in the performance of a consular function; Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 187, 2 L. Ed. 249; Catlett v. Ins. Co., 1 Paine 594, Fed. Cas. No. 2,517; U. S. v. Mitchell, 2 Wash. C. C. 478, Fed. Cas. No. 15,791; Foster v. Davis, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 71; nor are they evidence, between persons not parties or privies to the transaction, of any fact, unless, either expressly or impliedly, made so by statute; Levy v. Burley, 2 Sumn. 355, Fed. Cas. No. 8,300; Catlett v. Ins. Co., 1 Paine 594, Fed. Cas. No. 2,517; Brown v. The Independence, 2 Crabbe 54, Fed. Cas. No. 2,014.

Their rights are to be protected agreeably to the laws of nations, and of the treaties made between the United States and the nation to which they are sent.

A consul is liable for negligence or omission to perform seasonably the duties imposed upon him, or for any malversation or abuse of power, to any injured person, for all damages occasioned thereby; and for all malversation and corrupt conduct in office a consul is liable to indictment.

Of foreign consuls. Before a consul can perform any duties in the United States, he must be recognized by the president of the United States, and have received his exequatur.

A consul is clothed only with authority for commercial purposes; he has a right to interpose claims for the restitution of property belonging to the citizens of the country he represents; The Adolph, 1 Curt. 87, Fed. Cas. No. 86; The London Packet, 1 Max. 14, Fed. Cas. No. 8,474; Gernon v. Cochran, Bee 209, Fed. Cas. No. 5,368; The Bello Corrunes, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 152, 5 L. Ed. 229; but he is not to be considered as a minister or diplomatic agent, intrusted by virtue of his office to represent his country in negotiations with foreign states; The Anne, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 435, 4 L. Ed. 428. They do not represent the country, but are subject to the laws of the country where they reside; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 678, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890.

Consuls are generally invested with special privileges by local laws and usages, or by international compacts; but by the laws of nations they are not entitled to the peculiar immunities of ambassadors. In civil and criminal cases they are subject to the local laws, in the same manner with other foreign residents owing a temporary allegiance to the state; 1 Op. Atty. Gen. 45, 302; Com. v. Kosloff, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 546; 3 M. & S. 284; U. S. v. Ravara, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 297, 1 L. Ed. 388; Hall, Int. L. 289; Wicquefort, De l'Ambassadeur, liv. 1, § 5; Bynkershoek, cap. 10; Marten, Droit des Gens, liv. 4, c. 3, § 148.

R. S. § 687, gives to the supreme court original but not exclusive jurisdiction of all suits in which a consul or vice-consul shall be a party. See Mannhardt v. Soderstrom, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 143; State v. De La Foret, 2 N. & M'C. (S. C.) 217; Hall v. Young, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 80, 15 Am. Dec. 180; Sartori v. Hamilton, 13 N. J. L. 107; Valarino v. Thompson, 7 N. Y. 576.

His functions may be suspended at any time by the government to which he is sent, and his exequatur revoked. In general, a consul is not liable personally on a contract made in his official capacity on account of his government: Jones v. Le Tombe, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 384, 1 L. Ed. 647. A vice-consul of a foreign nation who possesses an unrevoked credentia issued by the President of the United States, must still be recognized by the courts as the accredited representative of his country and entitled to all its privileges, although the government which sent him has been overthrown and a revolutionary government established in its place; U. S. v. Trumbull, 48 Fed. 94.

A consul-general is a consul within an act concerning acknowledgments of real estate instruments: Linton v. Ins. Co., 104 Fed. 584, 44 C. C. A. 54.

See CONSULAR COURTS.

CONSULAR COURTS. By Act of June 22, 1860, ministers and consuls are invested with judicial authority in China, Japan, Siam, Egypt and Madagascar, to try and to sentence "all citizens of the United States charged with offences against law committed in such countries" and to issue process in execution of the sentence, and with jurisdiction in civil cases "in matter of contract" embracing "all controversies between citizens of the United States, or others," as provided by treaties. This jurisdiction is exercised in conformity with the laws of the United States as to its citizens, and as to others to the extent that the treaties require. If such laws are not adapted to the object or are deficient in suitable remedies, "common law and equity and admiralty rules" are to be applied. If none of the above provide sufficient remedies, then the ministers shall, by decrees and regulations having the force of law, supply the deficiencies.

A consul alone may decide all cases when the fine does not exceed $500, or the imprisonment 90 days; but if the former exceeds $100 or the latter 60 days, an appeal on the law and facts lies to the minister.

If there be no minister in any such country, his duties devolve upon the Secretary of State.

The act is extended to Persia as to disputes between United States citizens; and by amendment (June 14, 1878) to Tripoli, Tunis, Morocco, Muscat and the Samoan Islands and to countries with which an applicable treaty shall be negotiated.

In China and Japan (Act of July 1, 1870), an appeal on the law and fact lies when the matter in dispute exceeds $500 and does not exceed $2,500, exclusive of costs; on final judgment exceeding $2,500, an appeal lies to the district court for the district of California; there is a like appeal by a person charged with crime.

By treaty between the United States and Japan, Nov. 22, 1894, it was provided that on July 17, 1899, consular jurisdiction in Japan should "absolutely and without notice cease and determine." 2 Moore, Int. Dig. 659.

By Act of March 23, 1874, the president may suspend the Act of June 22, 1860, as to the territory of the Sublime Porte and Egypt, or either of them, upon the organization of judicial tribunals by the Ottoman Government and accept such tribunals. See MIXED TRIBUNALS.

In China (Act of June 30, 1906), consular courts have the above jurisdiction in civil cases where the sum or value of the property does not exceed $500, and in criminal cases where the punishment cannot exceed $100 fine or 60 days imprisonment; all other jurisdiction is given by that act to the "United States Court for China." See CHINA. The vice-consul at Shanghai (Act of March 2, 1909) exercises such judicial functions in the place of the consul-general.

The judicial system of the United States in China was held to be constitutional in Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 242.

By Act of June 22, 1860, insurrection against any of the countries named, and murder, are punishable with death. Such cases, and also felonies, are tried before the minister.

In criminal cases of legal difficulty, or when the consul deems that severer punishments than those specified will be required, he shall summon not exceeding four citizens of the United States, and in capital cases not less than four, to sit with him in the trial. The consul may alone decide civil cases when the damages demanded do not exceed $500, but if he is of opinion that any such cases involve legal perplexities, or such damages exceed $500, he shall call in two or three citizens of the United States to sit with him. If all agree, the judgment is final. If any associate differs from the consul, either party may appeal to the minister, but if there be no appeal, the decision of the consul is final.

The constitutional guaranty of trial by jury and indictment by grand jury does not apply to consular courts in trying offenses committed in a foreign country. In re Ross, 140 U. S. 453, 11 Sup. Ct. 897, 35 L. Ed. 581. The jurisdiction of home courts over offenses on the high seas does not exclude the jurisdiction of a consular court if the offender is not taken to the United States; id.

CONSULAR OFFICER. See CONSUL.

CONSULTATION. The name of a writ whereby a cause, being formerly removed by prohibition out of an inferior court into some of the king's courts in Westminster, is returned thither again; for, if the judges of the superior court, comparing the proceedings with the suggestion of the party, find the suggestion false or not proved, and that, therefore, the cause was wrongfully called from the inferior court, then, upon consultation and deliberation, they decree it to be returned, whereupon this writ issues. Termes de la Ley; 3 Bla. Com. 114.

In French Law. The opinion of counsel upon a point of law submitted to them.

CONSUMMATE. Complete; finished; entire.

A marriage is said to be consummate. A right of dower is inchoate when coverture and seisin concur, consummate upon the husband's death. 1 Washb. R. P. 250, 251. A tenancy by the curtesy is initiate upon the birth of issue, and consummate upon the death of the wife. 1 Washb. R. P. 140; Watson v. Watson, 13 Conn. 83; Witham v. Perkins, 2 Greenl. (Me.) 400; 2 Bla. Com. 128.

A contract is said to be consummated when everything to be done in relation to making it has been accomplished. It is frequently of great importance to know when a contract has been consummated, in order to ascertain the rights of the parties, particularly in the contract of sale. See DELIVERY, where the subject is more fully examined. It is also sometimes of consequence to ascertain where the consummation of the contract took place, in order to decide by what law it is to be governed. See CONFLICT OF LAWS; CONTRACT; LEX LOCI.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES. Diseases which are capable of being transmitted by mediate or immediate contact.

Persons sick of such disorders may remain in their own houses; Boom v. City of Utica, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 104; but are indictable for exposing themselves in a public place endangering the public. See 4 M. & S. 73, 272. Nuisances which produce such diseases may be abated; Meeker v. Van Rensselaer, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 397. See People v. Townsend, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 479; Barclay v. Com., 25 Pa. 503, 64 Am. Dec. 715; Caldwell v. Bridal, 48 Ia. 15; and a right of action may also be had for injury done to health; Jarvis v. Ry. Co., 26 Mo. App. 253; Fow v. Roberts, 108 Pa. 489.

A landlord is liable in damages for renting a property knowing it to be contaminated with an infectious disease; Snyder v. Gordon, 12 N. Y. St. Rep. 556; under the police power, cities and towns may adopt ordinances for the preservation and promotion of the health of the inhabitants; Com. v. Cutter, 156 Mass. 52, 29 N. E. 1146; Com. v. Hubley, 172 Mass. 58, 51 N. E. 448, 42 L. R. A. 403, 70 Am. St. Rep. 242; Borden's Condensed Milk Co. v. Board of Health, 81 N. J. L. 218, 80 Atl. 30. It is not unconstitutional, as a deprivation of property without due process of law, to pass an ordinance directing a milk inspector to destroy all milk below a certain standard of purity without notice to the owner; Blazier v. Miller, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 435; nor is an act unconstitutional as denying equal protection of the laws which gives a state board of health authority to prevent the landing of passengers and goods from a ship to a locality infected by contagious disease; Compagnie Francaise de Navigation a Vapeur v. Board of Health, 186 U. S. 380, 22 Sup. Ct. 811, 46 L. Ed. 1209, affirming 51 La. Ann. 645, 25 South. 591, 56 L. R. A. 795, 72

Am. St. Rep. 458; vaccination laws making vaccination of children a condition of their attendance in public schools are not unconstitutional; Viemeister v. White, 88 App. Div. 44, 84 N. Y. Supp. 712, affirmed 179 N. Y. 235, 72 N. E. 97, 70 L. R. A. 796, 103 Am. St. Rep. 859, 1 Ann. Cas. 334.

A state law may also prohibit the transportation of cattle from another state, except under certain conditions requiring a certificate of health of such cattle, and it is not an interference with interstate commerce; Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, 23 Sup. Ct. 92, 47 L. Ed. 108; St. Louis S. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 451, 49 S. W. 627, affirmed Smith v. Ry. Co., 181 U. S. 248, 21 Sup. Ct. 603, 45 L. Ed. 847; and so with regard to sheep; State v. Rasmussen, 7 Idaho 1, 59 Pac. 933, 52 L. R. A. 78, 97 Am. St. Rep. 234, affirmed in Rasmussen v. Idaho, 181 U. S. 198, 21 Sup. Ct. 594, 45 L. Ed. 820. Sleeping car companies may exclude from their cars insane persons and persons afflicted with contagious or infectious diseases; Pullman Car Co. v. Krauss, 145 Ala. 395, 40 South. 398, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103, 8 Ann. Cas. 218.

See HEALTH.

CONTANGO. A double bargain, consisting of a sale for cash of stock previously bought which the broker does not wish to carry, and a repurchase for the re-settlement two weeks ahead of the same stock at the same price as at the sale plus interest accrued up to the date of that settlement. The rate of interest is called a "contango" and contango days are the two days during the settlement when these arrangements are in effect.

CONTEK (L. Fr.). A contest, dispute, disturbance, opposition. Britt. c. 42.

CONTEMPLATION OF BANKRUPTCY. An intention or expectation of breaking up business or applying to be decreed a bankrupt. Atkinson v. Bank, Crabbe 529, Fed. Cas. No. 609; 5 B. & Ad. 289; 4 Bing. 20; McLean v. Bank, 3 McLean 587, Fed. Cas. No. 8,888.

Contemplation of a state of bankruptcy or a known insolvency and inability to carry on business, and a stoppage of business. Story, J., Hutchins v. Taylor, 5 Law Rep. 295, 299, Fed. Cas. No. 6,953. See Everett v. Stone, 3 Sto. 446, Fed. Cas. No. 4,577.

Something more is meant by the phrase than the expectation of insolvency; it includes the making provision against the results of it; Buckingham v. McLean, 13 How. (U. S.) 151, 14 L. Ed. 91; Heroy v. Kerr, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 194. See Rison v. Knapp, 1 Dill. 186, Fed. Cas. No. 11,861; Martin v. Toof, 1 Dill. 203, Fed. Cas. No. 9,167.

A conveyance or sale of property made in contemplation of bankruptcy is fraudulent and void; 2 Bla. Com. 285.

CONTEMPLATION OF INSOLVENCY. This term means something more than expectation of its occurrence; it must include provision against its results so far as the transferee is concerned, and that can only be where he is already a creditor and the object is to take his debt out of the equal ratable distribution of the assets of the company when insolvent. Heroy v. Kerr, 21 How. Pr. Rep. (N. Y.) 409.

CONTEMPT. A wilful disregard or disobedience of a public authority.

By the constitution of the United States, each house of congress may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member. The same provision is substantially contained in the constitutions of the several states.

The power to make rules carries that of enforcing them, and to attach persons who violate them and punish them for contempts; 1 Kent 236; State v. Matthews, 37 N. H. 450; 14 East 1. But see 4 Moore, P. C. 63; 11 id. 347. This power of punishing for contempts is confined to punishment during the session of the legislature, and cannot extend beyond it; Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 204, 230, 231, 5 L. Ed. 242; Rap. Contempt 2; and it seems this power cannot be exerted beyond imprisonment. It is often regulated by statute; U. S. R. S. §§ 101-103. The arrest of the offending party is made by the sergeant-at-arms, acting by virtue of the speaker's warrant, both in England and the United States; Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 204, 5 L. Ed. 242; 10 Q. B. 359. The power of congress to punish for contempt must be found in some express grant in the constitution or be found necessary to carry into effect such powers as are there granted; Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 169, 26 L. Ed. 377; U. S. v. Lee, 106 U. S. 220, 1 Sup. Ct. 240, 27 L. Ed. 171. See CONGRESS.

Courts of justice have an inherent power to punish all persons for contempt of their rules and orders, for disobedience of their process, and for disturbing them in their proceedings; 8 Co. 38 b; State v. Matthews, 37 N. H. 450; State v. Morrill, 16 Ark. 384; Ex parte Walker, 25 Ala. 81; Ex parte Adams, 25 Miss. 883, 59 Am. Dec. 234; Clark v. People, Breese (Ill.) 340, 12 Am. Dec. 178; Ex parte Terry, 128 U. S. 289, 9 Sup. Ct. 77, 32 L. Ed. 405; Bessette v. W. B. Conkey Co., 194 U. S. 324, 24 Sup. Ct. 665, 48 L. Ed. 997; Kregel v. Bartling, 23 Neb. 848, 37 N. W. 668; Matter of Moore, 63 N. C. 397; People v. Wilson, 64 Ill. 195, 16 Am. Rep. 528; Ex parte Wright, 65 Ind. 508. See In re Savin, 131 U. S. 267, 9 Sup. Ct. 699, 33 L. Ed. 150; Respublica v. Oswald, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 319, 1 L. Ed. 155; it is said that the legislature cannot restrict the power; Ex parte McCown, 139 N. C. 95, 51 S. E. 957, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 603. A court may commit for a period reaching beyond the term at which the contempt is committed; Ex parte

Maulsby, 13 Md. 642. The punishment should not be by piecemeal, but must be entire and final; O'Rourke v. Cleveland, 49 N. J. Eq. 577, 25 Atl. 367, 31 Am. St. Rep. 719.

Contempts of court are of two kinds: such as are committed in the presence of the court, and which interrupt its proceedings, which may be summarily punished by order of the presiding judge; and constructive contempts, arising from a refusal to comply with an order of court; Androscoggin & K. R. Co. v. R. Co., 49 Me. 392. In the court of chancery the failure or refusal to perform an order or decree is a contempt, and the enforcement of such orders and decrees is by attachment. For an exhaustive discussion of the practice in such cases, see note to State v. Livingston, 4 Del. Ch. 265.

A prosecution for contempt of court in order to compel obedience to an order made in a chancery proceeding is a civil action; Leopold v. People, 140 Ill. 552, 30 N. E. 348.

The punishment is summary and generally immediate in contempts committed in facie curiæ, and no process or evidence is necessary; In re Noonan, 47 Kan. 771, 28 Pac. 1104; 2 L. R. H. L. 361; Middlebrook v. State, 43 Conn. 257, 21 Am. Rep. 650; and a party in contempt cannot be heard except to purge himself; Gross v. Clark, 87 N. Y. 272.

In some states, as in Pennsylvania, the power to punish for contempts is restricted to offences committed by the officers of the court, or in its presence, or in disobedience of its mandates, orders, or rules; but no one is guilty of a contempt for any publication made or act done out of court which is not in violation of such lawful rules or orders or in disobedience of its process. By Act of Congress, March 2, 1831, the power in the federal courts to punish for contempt has been limited. Whether it can be held to limit the authority of the Supreme Court, which derives its existence and powers from the constitution, may perhaps be a matter of doubt. The power of the circuit and district courts can only be exercised to ensure order and decorum in their presence, to secure faithfulness on the part of their officers in their official transactions, and to enforce obedience to their lawful orders, judgments, and processes; Atwell v. U. S., 162 Fed. 97, 89 C. C. A. 97, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1049, 15 Ann. Cas. 253, where it was held a grand juror was not guilty of contempt for violating his oath to keep the counsel of the United States. See Oswald's Case, 4 Lloyd's Debates 141. If a newspaper article is per se libellous, making a direct charge against court or jury, or admitting of but one reasonable construction and requiring no innuendo to apply its meaning to the court, then the publisher cannot escape by denying under oath that he intended the plain meaning which the language used conveys; Allen

v. State, 131 Ind. 599, 30 N. E. 1093. The question of contempt depends upon the act and not the intention of the party; 22 W. R. 398; Wartman v. Wartman, Taney 362, Fed. Cas. No. 17,210; 3 Burr. 1329; 3 C. B. 745. A publication in a newspaper, read by the jurors and attendants of the court, which has a tendency to interfere with the unbiased administration of the laws in pending cases, may be a contempt; State v. Judge of Civil District Court, 45 La. Ann. 1250, 14 South. 310, 40 Am. St. Rep. 282.

The jurisdiction prescribed by congress for federal courts gives no power to punish a newspaper publisher for contempt for criticising the conduct and integrity of the court; Cuyler v. R. Co., 131 Fed. 95; ordinarily, however, newspapers can be so punished; where a statement of facts are published which tend to influence a jury in a pending trial and such facts could not have been shown in evidence, such publication is a contempt; Telegram Newspaper Co. v. Com., 172 Mass. 294, 52 N. E. 445, 44 L. R. A. 159, 70 Am. St. Rep. 280; where a newspaper article tends to prejudice the fair trial of a person who has been accused but has not yet been committed, it is a contempt; 67 J. P. 421; even an unintentional mis-statement of the conclusion reached by the court is a contempt; In re Providence Journal Co., 28 R. I. 489, 68 Atl. 428, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 582, 125 Am. St. Rep. 755. Contempt is not the proper remedy against one who publishes a newspaper article reflecting on the conduct of a judge in the performance of his ministerial duties, the keeping of accounts, fees, etc.; Hamma v. People, 42 Colo. 401, 94 Pac. 326, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 621, 15 Ann. Cas. 655. It is a contempt to publish any account, however meagre, and whether accurate or inaccurate, of proceedings heard in camera; [1894] 3 Ch. 193.

Criticism of the manner in which trials are conducted cannot be punished unless it refers to some particular case pending before the court; Ex parte Green, 46 Tex. Cr. App. 576, 81 S. W. 723, 66 L. R. A. 727, 108 Am. St. Rep. 1035.

There may be contempt of court by scandalizing the court itself; by abusing parties concerned in causes; by prejudicing mankind against persons before the cause is heard; 2 Atk. 471; but fair criticism on the proceedings of a court when the case is over, can seldom be contempt of court; [1889] A. C. 549. There is no seditious in just criticism on the administration of the law, but it must be without malignity and not attribute corrupt and malicious motives; 11 Cox 49.

A statement in a petition for re-hearing that the court's ruling is all wrong and written for political reasons is a contempt; In re Chartz, 29 Nev. 110, 85 Pac. 352, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 916, 124 Am. St. Rep. 915; but not to file a motion suggesting the disqualification of the judge on the ground that he is related to parties having an interest in the suit; Johnson v. State, 87 Ark. 45, 112 S. W. 143, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 619, 15 Ann. Cas. 531. For a case holding in contempt a trial judge who had grossly attacked in print an appellate court who had twice reversed his judgment in a trial for rape, see In re Fite, 11 Ga. App. 665, 76 S. E. 397.

A federal court may punish for contempt one who interferes with a receiver in bankruptcy appointed by it; In re Wilk, 155 Fed. 943; and contempts committed before its referee; United States v. Tom Wah, 160 Fed. 207; one accused of contempt is not entitled to a jury trial; In re Fellerman, 149 Fed. 244; O'Flynn v. State, 89 Miss. 850, 43 South. 82, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1119, 119 Am. St. Rep. 727, 11 Ann. Cas. 530; a denial on oath of having committed a contempt raises an issue of fact for trial; Emery v. State, 78 Neb. 547, 111 N. W. 374, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1124; either a municipal or business corporation may be fined for contempt where its officers and servants have violated an injunction; Marson v. City of Rochester, 112 App. Div. 51, 97 N. Y. Supp. 881; Franklin Union No. 4 v. People, 220 Ill. 355, 77 N. E. 176, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1001, 110 Am. St. Rep. 248. A defendant in a divorce proceeding who refused to pay alimony may be punished by having his answer stricken from the record; Bennett v. Bennett, 15 Okl. 286, 81 Pac. 632, 70 L. R. A. 864.

One cannot be guilty of contempt in refusing to obey an order which the court has no power to make; McHenry v. State, 91 Miss. 562, 44 South. 831, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062; Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 28 Sup. Ct. 441, 52 L. Ed. 714, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 14 Ann. Cas. 764. A decree for the payment of money may be enforced by contempt proceedings; it is not imprisonment for debt; Jastram v. McAuslan, 29 R. I. 390, 71 Atl. 454, 17 Ann. Cas. 320. A decree that a trustee pay over a specified sum in trust funds is enforceable by execution but not by contempt; Mast v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 154 Mich. 485, 117 N. W. 1052. An unsuccessful attempt to induce a third person to influence a jury does not constitute a contempt; U. S. v. Carroll, 147 Fed. 947; an assault committed on an attorney in a case by persons interested in the party opposed to him is a contempt, although committed outside the court room; U. S. v. Barrett, 187 Fed. 378; and so where proceedings in a criminal case are ordered to be stayed, and a mob, with knowledge of such order, takes the prisoner from jail and hangs him; U. S. v. Shipp, 203 U. S. 563, 27 Sup. Ct. 165, 51 L. Ed. 319, 8 Ann. Cas. 265; id., 214 U. S. 387, 29 Sup. Ct. 637, 53 L. Ed. 1041; a court may punish an attorney for contempt for wilfully absenting himself in a criminal case; In re Clark, 126 Mo. App. 391, 103 S.

W. 1105; In re McHugh, 152 Mich. 505, 116 N. W. 450; In re Clark, 208 Mo. 121, 106 S. W. 990, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389.

The power of inferior courts to punish for contempt is usually restricted to contempts committed in the presence of the court; 3 Steph. Com. 342, n. 9; L. R. 8 Q. B. 134. A justice of the peace cannot punish contempts, even committed before him, by summary proceedings; Albright v. Lapp, 26 Pa. 99, 67 Am. Dec. 402; nor a committing magistrate for refusal to obey a subpoena; Farnham v. Colman, 19 S. D. 342, 103 N. W. 161, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135, 117 Am. St. Rep. 944, 9 Ann. Cas. 314.

It is said that it belongs exclusively to the court offended to judge of contempts; State v. Matthews, 37 N. H. 450; State v. McKinnon, 8 Or. 487; In re Pryor, 18 Kan. 72, 26 Am. Rep. 752; In re Williamson, 26 Pa. 9, 67 Am. Dec. 374; State v. Anderson, 40 Ia. 207; and no other court or judge can or ought to undertake, in a collateral way, to question or review an adjudication of a contempt made by another competent jurisdiction; 14 East 1; Gist v. Bowman, 2 Bay (S. C.) 182; State v. Tipton, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 166; State v. White, T. U. P. Charlt. (Ga.) 136; Cossart v. State, 14 Ark. 538; Bunch v. State, id. 544; Lockwood v. State, 1 Ind. 161; Yates v. People, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 337; Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 204, 5 L. Ed. 242; People v. Owens, 8 Utah 20, 28 Pac. 871; Seventy-Six Land & Water Co. v. Superior Court, 93 Cal. 139, 28 Pac. 813. But it has been repeatedly held that a court of superior jurisdiction may review the decision of one of inferior jurisdiction on a matter of contempt; Com. v. Newton, 1 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 453; Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 181; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. City of Wheeling, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 40; Patton v. Harris, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 607; though not on habeas corpus; Jordan v. State, 14 Tex. 436; see Ex parte Smith, 53 Cal. 204; Shattuck v. State, 51 Miss. 50, 24 Am. Rep. 624; see Tolman v. Jones, 114 Ill. 147, 28 N. E. 464. It should be by direct order of the court; Geisse v. Beall, 5 Wis. 227. A proceeding for contempt is regarded as a distinct and independent suit; 22 E. L. & Eq. 150; Ex parte Langdon, 25 Vt. 680; Lyon v. Lyon, 21 Conn. 185; and irregularities in the proceedings are immaterial where the result is a sufficient purging of the contempt and a consequent discharge of the rule; Martin v. Burgwyn, 88 Ga. 78, 13 S. E. 958.

Though the same act constitute both a contempt and a crime, the contempt may be tried and punished by the court; U. S. v. Debs, 64 Fed. 724; affirmed by the supreme court, which held that it was competent to invoke the jurisdiction of the courts to remove or restrain obstructions to interstate commerce or the mails, though the acts were criminal in themselves, an injunction having been served, the circuit court had authority to inquire whether its orders had been disobeyed, and finding that they had been, to enter the order of punishment, and its findings as to the act of disobedience are not open to review on habeas corpus in the supreme court or any other; In re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 15 Sup. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092.

Proceedings for contempt are of two classes, criminal or punitive, and civil or remedial. The former vindicates the dignity of the courts, the latter protects, preserves, and enforces the rights of private parties and compels obedience to orders, judgments and decrees made to enforce such rights; Wasserman v. United States, 161 Fed. 722, 88 C. C. A. 582; Garrigan v. U. S., 163 Fed. 16, 89 C. C. A. 494, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1295; when contempt proceedings are brought to enforce a civil right, the constitutional provision that no person shall be compelled to be a witness against himself does not apply, since it is not a criminal proceeding; Patterson v. District Council, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 112.

Every member of the public "is bound to observe the restrictions of an injunction, when known, to the extent that he must not aid and abet its violation by others," nor obstruct the administration of justice; the power of the court to proceed against one so offending is inherent and indisputable; Garrigan v. U. S., 163 Fed. 16, 89 C. C. A. 494, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1295, citing [1897] L. R. 1 Ch. 545; In re Reese, 107 Fed. 942, 47 C. C. A. 87. There is an elementary distinction between disobedience of an injunction by parties and privies, and the conduct of others, in contempt of the commands of the courts; Garrigan v. U. S., 163 Fed. 16, 89 C. C. A. 494, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1295. Actual notice will render one not a party guilty of contempt in violating an injunction; it is not necessary that he should have been served with a copy of the injunction decree or the writ; In re Lennon, 166 U. S. 548, 17 Sup. Ct. 658, 41 L. Ed. 1110; Aldinger v. Pugh, 132 N. Y. 403, 30 N. E. 745. But publication in newspapers and the posting upon wagons of a teaming company of an injunction order forbidding interference with its teams, are not enough to charge with knowledge thereof one not a party to the proceedings who assists in a riot in which the teams are interfered with, such person denying knowledge and having a presumption of innocence in his favor; Garrigan v. U. S., 163 Fed. 16, 89 C. C. A. 494, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1295. But mere reading and giving to one not a party a copy of the decree constitutes sufficient notice as a basis for contempt proceedings; Fowler v. Beckman, 60 N. H. 424, 30 Atl. 1117.

Proceedings for contempt against one not a party to the cause, for disobedience of an injunction, are criminal in their nature, and the accused is entitled to the presumption of innocence; they are reviewable by writ of

A proceeding instituted by an aggrieved party to punish the other party for contempt for affirmatively violating an injunction in the same action in which the injunction was issued, and praying for damages and costs, is a civil proceeding in contempt of which the only punishment is by fine, measured by the pecuniary injury sustained. If the main suit is discontinued, the contempt proceedings fall with it, but in such case the court may institute proceedings to vindicate its authority; Gompers v. Range Co., 221 U. S. 418, 31 Sup. Ct. 492, 55 L. Ed. 797, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 874.

For a contempt out of the view and hearing of the court, the offending party will be allowed to answer and offer evidence in defence of the charge; Hohenadel v. Steele, 237 Ill. 229, 86 N. E. 717. At common law the sworn answer of one charged with contempt was conclusive and discharged the contempt; Coleman v. State, 121 Tenn. 1, 113 S. W. 1045; Baird v. People, 134 Ill. App. 433.

Where a defendant violates an injunction pending an appeal, the appellate court is the proper tribunal to punish the contempt; Menez v. Candy Co., 77 Ohio 386, 83 N. E. 82, 11 Ann. Cas. 1037; an order punishing contempt, made in the progress of a case not criminal, is interlocutory and can only be reviewed on appeal from final decree; Doyle v. Guarantee & Acc. Co., 204 U. S. 599, 27 Sup. Ct. 313, 51 L. Ed. 641; In re Christensen Engineering Co., 194 U. S. 458, 24 Sup. Ct. 729, 48 L. Ed. 1072.

See 20 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 81, where the subject is treated at length; Rapalje, Contempt; JUDGE.

As to proceedings to compel payment of alimony, see Staples v. Staples, 87 Wis. 592, 58 N. W. 1036, 24 L. R. A. 433.

CONTEMPTIBILITER (L. Lat. contemptuously). In Old English Law. Contempt, contempts. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 35.

CONTENEMENTUM. See WAINAGIUM; CONTENTMENT.

CONTENTIOUS JURISDICTION. In Ecclesiastical Law. That which exists in cases where there is an action or judicial process and matter in dispute is to be heard and determined between party and party. It is to be distinguished from voluntary jurisdiction, which exists in cases of taking probate of wills, granting letters of administration, and the like. 3 Bla. Com. 66.

CONTENTMENT (or, more properly, contentement; L. Lat. contentementum). A man's countenance or credit, which he has together with, and by reason of, his freehold; or that which is necessary for the support and maintenance of men, agreeably to their several qualities or states of life. Cowell; 4 Bla. Com. 379.

CONTENTS. The contents of a note are the sum it shows to be due; Sere v. Pitot, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 332, 3 L. Ed. 240; Corbin v. Black Hawk County, 105 U. S. 659, 26 L. Ed. 1136; of a chose in action are the rights created by it; id.

CONTENTS AND NOT-CONTENTS. The "contents" are those who, in the house of lords, express assent to a bill; the "not-" or "non-contents," dissent. May, P. L. c. 12, 357.

CONTENTS UNKNOWN. A phrase contained in a bill of lading, denoting that the goods are shipped in apparently good condition. Clark v. Barnwell, 12 How. (U. S.) 273, 13 L. Ed. 985.

CONTESTATIO LITIS. In Civil Law. The statement and answer of the plaintiff and defendant, thus bringing the case before the judge, conducted usually in the presence of witnesses. Calvinus, Lex.

This sense is retained in the canon law. 1 Kaufm. Mackeldey, C. L. 205. A cause is said to be contestata when the judge begins to hear the cause after an account of the claims, given not through pleadings, but by statement of the plaintiff and answer of the defendant. Calvinus, Lex.

In Old English Law. Coming to an issue; the issue so produced. Steph. Pl. App. n. 39; Crabb, Hist. 216.

CONTESTED ELECTION. This phrase has no technical or legally defined meaning. An election may be said to be contested whenever an objection is formally urged against it, which, if found to be true in fact, would invalidate it. This must be true both as to objection founded upon some constitutional provision, as well as upon any mere statutory enactment; Robertson v. State, 109 Ind. 116, 10 N. E. 582, 643.

CONTEXT. Those parts of a writing which precede and follow a phrase or passage in question; the connection.

It is a general principle of legal interpretation that a passage or phrase is not to be understood absolutely as if it stood by itself, but is to be read in the light of the context, i. e. in its connection with the general composition of the instrument. The rule is frequently stated to be that where there is any obscurity in a passage the context is to be considered; but the true rule is much broader. It is always proper to look at the context in the application of the most ambiguous expression. Thus, if on a sale of goods the vendor should give a written receipt acknowledging payment of the price, and containing, also, a promise not to deliver the goods, the word "not" would be rejected by the court, because it is repugnant to the context. It not unfrequently happens that two provisions of an instrument are conflicting: each is then the context of the other, and they are to be taken together and so understood as to harmonize with each other so far as may be, and to carry out the general intent of the instrument. In the context of a will, that which follows controls that which precedes; and the same rule has been asserted with reference to statutes. See CONSTRUCTION; INTERPRETATION; STATUTES.

CONTIGUOUS. In close proximity, in actual close contact. Arkell v. Ins. Co., 69 N. Y. 191, 25 Am. Rep. 168; as, contiguous proprietors are those whose lands actually touch. Vicinal are not necessarily contiguous proprietors; Raxdale v. Selp, 32 La. Ann. 435.

In an ordinance relating to excavations and the preservation of contiguous structures, it contemplates nearness of a structure, but with intervening space; Baxter v. Realty Co., 128 App. Div. 79, 112 N. Y. Supp. 455.

CONTINGENCY. The quality of being contingent or casual; the possibility of coming to pass; an event which may occur. Webster.

It is a fortuitous event which comes without design, foresight, or expectation. People v. Village of Yonkers, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 272.

CONTINGENCY WITH DOUBLE ASPECT. If there are remainders so limited that the second is a substitute for the first in case it should fail, and not in derogation of it, the remainder is said to be in a contingency with double aspect. Fearne, Rem. 373; 1 Steph. Com. 328.

CONTINGENT. When applied to a use, remainder, devise, bequest, or other legal right or interest, it means that no present interest exists, and that whether such interest or right ever will exist, depends upon a future uncertain event. The legal definition of the word concurs with its ordinary acceptance in showing that the term contingent implies a possibility; Jemison v. Blowers, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 692.

CONTINGENT DAMAGES. Those given where the issues upon counts to which no demurrer has been filed are tried, before demurrer to one or more counts in the same declaration has been decided. 1 Stra. 431.

Inaccurately used to describe consequential damages, q. v.

CONTINGENT ESTATE. A contingent estate depends for its effect upon an event which may or may not happen: as, an estate limited to a person not in esse, or not yet born. Crabb, R. P. § 946.

CONTINGENT FEES. See CHAMPERTY.

CONTINGENT INTEREST IN PERSONAL PROPERTY. It may be defined as a future interest not transmissible to the representatives of the party entitled thereto, in case he dies before it vests in possession. Thus, if a testator leaves the income of a fund to his wife for life, and the capital of the fund to be distributed among such of his children as shall be living at her death, the interest of each child during the widow's lifetime is contingent, and in case of his death is not transmissible to his representatives. Moz. & W. Law Dict.

CONTINGENT LEGACY. A legacy made dependent upon some uncertain event. 1 Rep. Leg. 506. Beach, Wills 406.

A legacy which has not vested. Wms. Ex. 1229.

CONTINGENT REMAINDER. An estate in remainder which is limited to take effect either to a dubious and uncertain person, or upon a dubious and uncertain event, by which no present or particular interest passes to the remainderman, so that the particular estate may chance to be determined and the remainder never take effect. 2 Bla. Com. 169.

A remainder limited so as to depend upon an event or condition which may never happen or be performed, or which may not happen or be performed till after the determination of the preceding estate. Fearne, Cont. Rem. 3; 2 Washb. R. P. 224. See L'Etourneau v. Henquet, 89 Mich. 428, 50 N. W. 1077, 28 Am. St. Rep. 310; Maguire v. Moore, 108 Mo. 267, 18 S. W. 897; Peirce v. Hubbard, 152 Pa. 18, 25 Atl. 231; [1892] 1 Q. B. 184; REMAINDER; 30 Harv. L. Rev. 192; Dawson v. Lancaster, 28 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 657; Fisher v. Wagner, 109 Md. 243, 71 Atl. 999, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 121.

CONTINGENT USE. A use limited in a deed or conveyance of land which may or may not happen to vest, according to the contingency expressed in the limitation of such use.

Such a use as by possibility may happen in possession, reversion, or remainder. 1 Co. 121; Com. Dig. Uses (K, 6). A use limited to take effect upon the happening of some future contingent event; as, where lands are conveyed to the use of A and B after a marriage had between them. 2 Bla. Com. 334.

A contingent remainder limited by way of uses. Sugd. Uses 175. See 4 Kent 237.

CONTINUAL CLAIM. A formal claim made once a year to lands or tenements of which we cannot, without danger, attempt to take possession. It had the same effect as a legal entry, and thus saved the right of entry to the heir. Cowell; 2 Bla. Com. 316; 3 id. 175. This effect of a continual claim is abolished by stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, § 11. 1 Steph. Com. 509.

CONTINUANCE. The adjournment of a cause from one day to another of the same or a subsequent term.

The postponement of the trial of a cause.

In the ancient practice, continuances were entered upon the record, and a variety of forms adapted to the different stages of the suit were in use. See 1 Chit. Pl. 455; 3 Bla. Com. 316. The object of the continuance was to secure the further attendance of the defendant, who having once attended could not be required to attend again, unless a day was fixed. The entry of continuance became at the time mere matter of form, and is now discontinued in England and most of the states of the United States.

Before the declaration, continuance is by dies datus prece partium; after the declaration, and before issue joined, by imparlance; after issue joined, and before verdict, by vice-comes non misit breve; and after verdict or demurrer, by curia advisare vult. 1 Chit. Pl. 455, 749; Bac. Abr. Pleas (P), Trial (H); Com. Dig. Pleader (V); Steph. Pl. 64. In its modern use the word has the second of the two meanings given above.

Among the causes for granting a continuance are absence of a material witness; Steinmetz v. Currie, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 270, 1 L. Ed. 132; Higginbotham v. Chamberlayne, 4 Munf. (Va.) 547; Eads v. State, 26 Tex. App. 69, 9 S. W. 68; Carter v. Wharton, 82 Va. 264; but he must have been subpoenaed; Bone v. Hillen, 1 Mill, Const. (S. C.) 198; Parker v. Leman, 10 Tex. 116; Wright v. State, 18 Ga. 383; in many states the opposite party may prevent it by admitting that certain facts would be proved by such witness; Smith v. Creason's Ex'rs, 5 Dana (Ky.) 298, 30 Am. Dec. 688; Willis v. People, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 399; Dominges v. State, 7 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 475, 45 Am. Dec. 315; Nave v. Horton, 9 Ind. 563; Keith v. Knoche, 43 Ill. App. 161; State v. Hatfield, 72 Mo. 518; and the party asking delay is usually required to make affidavit as to the facts on which he grounds his request; Rhea v. State, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 258; Vickers v. Hill, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 307; Phillips v. Reardon, 7 Ark. 256; People v. Baker, 1 Cal. 403; Smith v. Barker, 3 Day (Conn.) 280, Fed. Cas. No. 13,012; Ralston v. Lothain, 18 Ind. 303; and, in some states, as to what he expects to prove by the witness; Nash v. Upper Appomattox Co., 5 Gratt. (Va.) 332; Bailey v. Hardy, 12 Ill. 459; Sledman v. Hamilton, 4 McLean 538, Fed. Cas. No. 13,343; Merchant v. Bowyer, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 367, 22 S. W. 763; if the opposing counsel stipulates that the witness, if called, would so testify, a continuance is refused. In other states, an examination is made by the court; Harris v. Harris, 2 Leigh (Va.) 584; Irroy v. Nathan, 4 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 68; as to what diligence was used to procure his presence; St. Louis & K. C. R. Co. v. Olive, 40 Ill. App. 82; Weeks v. State, 31 Miss. 490; Piott v. Com., 12 Gratt. (Va.) 564; and it is error to grant a continuance on oral statement of counsel; Whaley v. King, 92 Cal. 431, 28 Pac. 579; the court is not bound to grant it where it is altogether conjectural whether the witnesses are alive, and if so where they reside or if their evidence can be procured; Lowenstein v. Greve, 50 Minn. 383, 52 N. W. 964; or to examine a witness not summoned; Soper v. Manning, 158 Mass. 381, 33 N. E. 516; inability to obtain the evidence of a witness out of the state in season for trial, in some cases; U. S. v. Duane, 1 Wall. Sr. 5, Fed. Cas. No. 14,996; Marsh v. Hulbert, 4 McLean 364, Fed. Cas. No. 9,116; filing amendments to the pleadings which introduce new matter of substance; Tourtelot v. Tourtelot, 4 Mass. 506; Jones v. Talbot, 4 Mo. 279; Taylor v. Heffner, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 387; filing a bill of discovery in chancery in some cases; Ridgely v. Campbell, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 452; Hurst v. Hurst, 3 Dall. CONTINUANDO (Lat. continuate, to continue). An averment that a trespass has been continued during a number of days. 3

Bla. Com. 212. It was allowed, to prevent a multiplicity of actions; 2 Rolle, Abr. 545; only where the injury was such as could, from its nature, be continued; 1 Wms. Saund. 24, n. 1.

The form is now disused, and the same end secured by alleging divers trespasses to have been committed between certain days. 1 Saund. 24, n. 1. See Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 86; Hamm. N. P. 90, 91; Bac. Abr. Trespass, I, 2, n. 2.

CONTINUING CONSIDERATION. See CONSIDERATION.

CONTINUING DAMAGES. See MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

CONTINUING OFFENCE. When an offence consumes a great length of time in its perpetration, the question often arises whether it is but a single offence or whether it can be split into a number of indictments. The test is that, if the transaction is set in motion by a single impulse and operated upon by a single unintermittent force, it forms a continuous act, and hence must be treated as one; Whart. Cr. Law (10th ed.) §§ 27, 931. Thus gas fraudulently drawn from a main pipe for a great space of time constitutes but one offence; L. R. 1 C. C. 172; articles removed at intervals a few minutes apart but by one impulse; 4 C. & P. 217, 386; or when a shaft of coal is opened and quarried, if there be but one tapping of the vein, though it continue several years; 2 C. & P. 765. Nuisances, though usually continuous offences, may be the object of successive prosecutions, if distinct impulses are given at intermittent times. The test is whether the individual acts are prohibited or the course of action which they constitute; Whart. Cr. Law § 27. Cohabitation with more than one woman for a period of time constitutes but one offence under the act of congress of March 22, 1882; In re Snow, 120 U. S. 274, 7 Sup. Ct. 556, 30 L. Ed. 658.

The offence of receiving a rebate under the Elkins act is the transaction that the given rebate consummates, and not the units of measurement of the physical thing transported; Standard Oil Co. of Indiana v. U. S., 164 Fed. 376, 90 C. C. A. 364; as to interstate merchandise, it is a single continuing offence, continuously committed in each district through which it is conducted; Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., 209 U. S. 56, 28 Sup. Ct. 428, 52 L. Ed. 681.

CONTINUOUS EASEMENTS. Easements of which the enjoyment is or may be continual, without the necessity of any actual interference by man, as a waterspout or a right of light or air. Washb. Easem. 21. See EASEMENTS.

CONTIONES. General meetings of the Roman people. Launspach, State and Family in Early Rome 69.

Bouv.—42

CONTRA (Lat.) Over; against; opposite. Against; otherwise decided. After stating a rule of law, if it be followed by contra, and the citation of other cases, it signifies that the latter hold a contrary view. It is equivalent to aliter. Per contra. In opposition.

CONTRA BONOS MORES. Against sound morals.

Contracts which are incentive to crime, or of which the consideration is an obligation or engagement improperly prejudicial to the feelings of a third party, offensive to decency or morality, or which has a tendency to mischievous or pernicious consequences, are void, as being contra bonos mores; 2 Wils. 447; Cowp. 729; 4 Campb. 152; 1 B. & Ald. 683; 16 East 150.

CONTRA FORMAM STATUTI (Lat. against the form of the statute). The formal manner of alleging that the offence described in an indictment is one forbidden by statute.

When one statute prohibits a thing and another gives the penalty, in an action for the penalty the declaration should conclude contra formam statutorum; Plowd. 206; 2 East 333. The same rule applies to informations and indictments; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 172. But where a statute refers to a former one, and adopts and continues the provisions of it, the declaration or indictment should conclude contra formam statuti; Hale, Pl. Cr. 172. Where a thing is prohibited by several statutes, if one only gives the action and the others are explanatory and restrictive, the conclusion should be contra formam statuti; 2 Saund. 377.

When the act prohibited was not an offence or ground of action at common law, it is necessary both in criminal and civil cases to conclude against the form of the statute or statutes; 1 Saund. 135 c; 1 Chit. Pl. 556; Com. v. Inhabitants of Stockbridge, 11 Mass. 280; Cross v. U. S., 1 Gall. 30, Fed. Cas. No. 3,434.

But if the act prohibited by the statute is an offence or ground of action at common law, the indictment or action may be in the common-law form, and the statute need not be noticed even though it prescribe a form of prosecution or of action,—the statute remedy being merely cumulative; Co. 2d Inst. 200; 2 Burr. 803; 3 id. 1418; 4 id. 2351; 2 Wils. 146; Com. v. Hoxey, 16 Mass. 385.

When a statute only inflicts a punishment on that which was an offence at common law, the punishment prescribed may be inflicted though the statute is not noticed in the indictment; Com. v. Searle, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 332, 4 Am. Dec. 446.

If an indictment for an offence at common law only conclude "against the form of the statute in such case made and provided;" or "the form of the statute" generally, the conclusion will be rejected as surplusage, and the indictment maintained as at common law; 1 Saund. 135 n. 3; Com. v. Hoxey, 16 Mass. 385; Com. v. Shattuck, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 143. But it will be otherwise if it conclude against the form of "the statute aforesaid," when a statute has been previously recited; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 289. See, further, Com. Dig. Pleader (C.) 76; 5 Viner, Abr. 552, 556; Cross v. U. S., 1 Gall. 26, Fed. Cas. No. 3,434; Sears v. U. S., 1 Gall. 257, Fed. Cas. No. 12,592; Scroter v. Harrington, 8 N. C. 192; Town of Barkhamsted v. Parsons, 3 Conn. 1; Com. v. Inhabitants of Stockbridge, 11 Mass. 280; Barter v. Martin, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 79.

CONTRA PACEM (Lat. against the peace).

In Pleading. An allegation in an action of trespass or ejectment that the actions therein complained of were against the peace of the king. Such an allegation was formerly necessary, but has become a mere matter of form and not traversable. See 4 Term 503; 1 Chit. Pl. 163, 402; Arch. Civ. Pl. 155; TRESPASS.

CONTRABAND OF WAR. In International Law. Goods which neutrals may not carry in time of war to either of the belligerent nations without subjecting themselves to the loss of the goods, and formerly the owners, also, to the loss of the ship and other cargo, if intercepted. 1 Kent 138, 143. See Elrod v. Alexander, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 345. Food (8 Am. Lawy. 108).

Provisions may be contraband of war, and generally all articles calculated to be of direct use in aiding the belligerent powers to carry on the war; and if the use is doubtful, the mere fact of a hostile destination renders the goods contraband; 1 Kent 140; Hall, Int. L. 618.

The classification of goods made by English and American courts divides all merchandise into three classes: (1) Articles manufactured and primarily or ordinarily used for military purposes in time of war; (2) articles which may be and are used for war or peace according to circumstances; (3) articles exclusively used for peaceful purposes. Articles of the first class destined to a belligerent country are always contraband; articles of the second class are so only when actually destined to the military or naval use of the belligerent; articles of the third class are not contraband, though liable to seizure for violation of blockade or siege.

The Declaration of London (q. v.) introduces a new division of contraband. Certain specified articles, such as arms, ammunition, and other articles of direct use in military and naval operations, are arranged under the head of "Absolute Contraband" and are liable to capture if destined to territory belonging to, or occupied by, the enemy, or to the armed forces of the enemy. Other specified articles, such as foodstuffs, clothing, bullion, railroad material, fuel, etc., are classified under the name of "Conditional Contraband," and are liable to capture if destined for the use of the armed forces or of a government department of the enemy state. Certain other articles, such as cotton, wool, rubber, metallic ores, and industrial machinery, are expressly declared not to be contraband of war.

In the case of absolute contraband it is immaterial, according to the Declaration of London, whether the carriage of the goods is direct, or entails trans-shipment or a subsequent transport by land. This is but a restatement of the existing English and American rule. On the other hand, conditional contraband is not liable to capture under the above circumstances, so that the doctrine of "Continuous Voyage" does not apply in this case. By analogy with the right exercised by a belligerent of preventing contraband trade, a belligerent is allowed to prevent neutral ships from carrying dispatches or officers for the other belligerent. The Declaration of London lays down definite rules upon this subject under the title of "Unneutral service" (q. v.).

A belligerent may, by force, prevent a neutral ship from carrying dispatches or officers for the other belligerent, by analogy to the law of contraband. Probably a mere common carrier receiving persons in the service of a belligerent would not be subject to any penalty, therefore, if they took passage in the ordinary course of business; Hall Int. Law 673, approved in L. R. 1 K. B. (1908).

CONTRACAUSATOR. A criminal; one prosecuted for a crime. Wharton.

CONTRACT (Lat. contractus, from con, with, and traho, to draw. Contractus ultro utroque obligatio est quam Græci συνάλλαγμα vocant. Fr. contrat).

An agreement between two or more parties to do or not to do a particular thing. Taney, C. J., Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420, 572, 9 L. Ed. 773. An agreement in which a party undertakes to do or not to do a particular thing. Marshall, C. J., Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 197, 4 L. Ed. 529. An agreement between two or more parties for the doing or not doing of some specified thing. 1 Pars. Com. 5.

It has been also defined as follows: A compact between two or more parties. Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 87, 136, 3 L. Ed. 162. An agreement or covenant between two or more persons, in which each party binds himself to do or forbear some act, and each acquires a right to what the other promises. Encyc. Amer.; Webster. A contract or agreement is where a promise is made on one side and assented to on the other; or where two or more persons enter into an engagement with each other by a promise on either side. 2 Steph. Com. 108, 109.

An agreement upon sufficient consideration to do or not to do a particular thing. 2 Bla. Com. 446; 2 Kent 449.

A covenant or agreement between two parties with a lawful consideration or cause. West, Symbol. lib. 1, § 10; Cowell; Blount.

A deliberate engagement between competent parties upon a legal consideration to do or to abstain from doing some act. Story, Contr. § 1.

An agreement by which two parties reciprocally promise and engage, or one of them singly promises and engages to the other, to give some particular thing or to do or abstain from doing some particular act. Pothier, Contrs. Pt. I, c. 1, § 1; 36 Ch. D. 685.

A mutual promise upon lawful consideration or cause which binds the parties to a performance. The writing which contains the agreement of parties with the terms and conditions, and which serves as a proof of the obligation. The last is a distinct signification. Pierson v. Townsend, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 551.

A voluntary and lawful agreement by competent parties, for a good consideration, to do or not to do a specified thing. Robinson v. Magee, 9 Cal. 83, 70 Am. Dec. 633.

An agreement enforceable at law, made between two or more persons, by which rights are acquired by one or both to acts or forbearances on the part of the other. Anson, Contr. 9.

A learned writer has said, in discussing the proper definition of contract, that "If we seek to build up a definition of the term 'contract' which shall include all things that have been called contracts and shall exclude all things that have been held not to be contracts, the task is evidently impossible. . . . Any definition of contract therefore must be either arbitrary or inexact." Harriman, Contr. 4.

The consideration is not properly included in the definition of contract, because it does not seem to be essential to a contract, although it may be necessary to its enforcement. See CONSIDERATION; 1 Pars. Contr. 7.

Mr. Stephen, whose definition of contract is given above, thus criticizes the definition of Blackstone, which has been adopted by Chancellor Kent and other high authorities. First that the word agreement itself requires definition as much as contract. Second, that the existence of a consideration, though essential to the validity of a parol contract, forms properly no part of the idea. Third, that the definition takes no sufficient notice of the mutuality which properly distinguishes a contract from a promise. 2 Steph. Com. 109.

The use of the word agreement (aggregatio mentium) seems to have the authority of the best writers in ancient and modern times (see above) as a part of the definition of contract. It is probably a translation of the civil-law conventio (con and venio), a coming together, to which (being derived from ad and grex) it seems nearly equivalent. We do not think the objection that it is a synonym (or nearly so) a valid one. Some word of the kind is necessary as a basis of the definition. No two synonyms convey precisely the same idea. "Most of them have minute distinctions," says Reid. If two are entirely equivalent, it will soon be determined by accident which shall remain in use and which become obsolete. To one who has no knowledge of a language, it is impossible to define any abstract idea. But to one who understands a language, an abstraction is defined by a synonym properly qualified. By pointing out distinctions and the mutual relations between synonyms, the object of definition is answered. Hence we do not think Blackstone's definition open to the first objection.

As to the idea of consideration, Mr. Stephen seems correct and to have the authority of some of the first legal minds of modern times. Consideration, however, may be necessary to enforce a contract, though not essential to the idea. Even in that class of contracts (by specialty) in which no consideration is in fact required, one is said to be always presumed in law,—the form of the instrument being held to import a consideration. 2 Kent 450, n. But see CONSIDERATION, where the subject is more fully treated.

The third objection of Mr. Stephen to the definition of Blackstone does not seem one to which it is fairly open. There is an idea of mutuality in con and traho, to draw together, and it would seem that mutuality is implied in agreement as well. An aggregatio mentium seems impossible without mutuality. Blackstone in his analysis appears to have regarded agreement as implying mutuality; for he defines it (2 Bla. Com. 442) "a mutual bargain or convention." In the above definition, however, all ambiguity is avoided by the use of the words "between two or more parties" following agreement.

In its widest sense, "contract" includes records and specialties (but see infra); but this use as a general term for all sorts of obligations, though of too great authority to be now doubted, seems to be an undue extension of the proper meaning of the term, which is much more nearly equivalent to "agreement" which is never applied to specialties. Mutuality is of the very essence of both,—not only mutuality of assent, but of act. As expressed by Lord Coke, Actus contra actum; 2 Co. 15; 7 M. & G. 998, argument and note.

This is illustrated in contracts of sale, bailment, hire, as well as partnership and marriage; and no other engagements but those with this kind of mutuality would seem properly to come under the head of contracts. In a bond there is none of this mutuality,—no act to be done by the obligee to make the instrument binding. In a judgment there is no mutuality either of act or of assent. It is judicium redditum in invitum. It may properly be denied to be a contract, though Blackstone insists that one is implied. Per Mansfield, 3 Burr. 1545; Wyman v. Mitchell, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 316; per Story, J., Bullard v. Bell, 1 Mas. 288, Fed. Cas. No. 2,121. Chitty uses "obligation" as an alternative word of description when speaking of bonds and judgments. Chit. Con. 2, 4. An act of legislature may be a contract; so may a legislative grant with exemption from taxes; Matheny v. Golden, 5 Ohio St. 361. So a charter is a contract between a state and a corporation within the meaning of the constitution of the United States, art. 1, § 10, clause 1; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 518, 4 L. Ed. 629. Contract is used in the United States constitution in its ordinary sense as signifying the agreement of two or more minds, from considerations proceeding from one to the other, to do, or not to do, certain acts. Mutual assent to its terms is of its very essence; it does not extend to a judgment against a city for damages suffered from a mob (given by statute); Louisiana v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 288, 3 Sup. Ct. 211, 27 L. Ed. 936.

At common law, contracts have been divided ordinarily into contracts of record, contracts by specialty, and simple or parol contracts. The latter may be either written (not sealed) or verbal; and they may also be express or implied. Implied contracts may be either implied in law or implied in fact. "The only difference between an express contract and one implied in fact is in the mode of substantiating it. An express agreement is proved by express words, written or spoken . . . ; an implied agreement is proved by circumstantial evidence showing that the parties intended to contract;" Leake, Contr. 11; 1 B. & Ad. 415; 1 Aust. Jur. 356, 377.

Accessory contracts are those made for assuring the performance of a prior contract, either by the same parties or by others, such as suretyship, mortgage, and pledges. Louisiana Code, art. 1764; Poth. Obl. pt. 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 2, n. 14.

Bilateral contracts are those in which a promise is given in consideration of a promise. Parsons, Contr. 464.

Contracts of beneficence are those by which only one of the contracting parties is benefited: as, loans, deposit, and mandate. Louisiana Code, art. 1767.

Certain contracts are those in which the thing to be done is supposed to depend on the will of the party, or when, in the usual course of events, it must happen in the manner stipulated.

Commutative contracts are those in which what is done, given, or promised by one party is considered as an equivalent to or in consideration of what is done, given, or promised by the other. Louisiana Code, art. 1761.

Consensual contracts were contracts of agency, partnership, sale, and hiring in the Roman law, in which a contract arose from the mere consensus of the parties without other formalities. Maine, Anc. Law 243.

Entire contracts are those the consideration of which is entire on both sides.

Executed contracts are those in which nothing remains to be done by either party, and where the transaction has been completed, or was completed at the time the contract or agreement was made: as, where an article is sold and delivered and payment therefor is made on the spot.

Executory contracts are those in which some act remains to be done: as, when an agreement is made to build a house in six months; to do an act before some future day; to lend money upon a certain interest payable at a future time. Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 87, 136, 3 L. Ed. 162.

A contract executed (which differs in nothing from a grant) transfers a chose in possession; a contract executory transfers a chose in action. 2 Bla. Com. 443. As to the importance of grants considered as contracts, see IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

Express contracts are those in which the terms of the contract or agreement are openly and fully uttered and avowed at the time of making: as, to pay a stated price for certain specified goods; to deliver an ox, etc. 2 Bla. Com. 443.

Gratuitous contracts are those of which the object is the benefit of the person with whom it is made, without any profit or advantage received or promised as a consideration for it. It is not, however, the less gratuitous if it proceed either from gratitude for a benefit before received or from the hope of receiving one hereafter, although such benefit be of a pecuniary nature. Louisiana Code, art. 1766. Gratuitous promises are not binding at common law unless executed with certain formalities, viz., by execution under seal.

Illegal contracts are agreements to do acts prohibited by law, as to commit a crime; to injure another, as to publish a libel. H. & N. 73.

Hazardous contracts are those in which the performance of that which is one of its objects depends on an uncertain event. Louisiana Code, art. 1769.

Implied contracts may be either implied in law or in fact. A contract implied in law arises where some pecuniary inequality exists in one party relatively to the other which justice requires should be compensated, and upon which the law operates by creating a debt to the amount of the required compensation; Leake, Contr. 38. See 2 Burr. 1005; 11 L. J. C. P. 99; 8 C. B. 541. The case of the defendant obtaining the plaintiff's money or goods by fraud, or duress, shows an implied contract to pay the money or the value of the goods.

A contract implied in fact arises where there was not an express contract, but there is circumstantial evidence showing that the parties did intend to make a contract; for instance, if one orders goods of a tradesman or employs a man to work for him, without stipulating the price or wages, the law raises an implied contract (in fact) to pay the value of the goods or services. In the former class, the implied contract is a pure fiction, having no real existence; in the latter, it is inferred as an actual fact. See Leake, Contr. 12.

Independent contracts are those in which the mutual acts or promises have no relation to each other either as equivalents or as considerations. Louisiana Code, art. 1762.

Mixed contracts are those by which one of the parties confers a benefit on the other, receiving something of inferior value in return, such as a donation subject to a charge.

Contracts of mutual interest are such as are entered into for the reciprocal interest and utility of each of the parties: as sales, exchange, partnership, and the like.

Onerous contracts are those in which something is given or promised as a consideration for the engagement or gift, or some service, interest, or condition is imposed on what is given or promised, although unequal to it in value.

Oral contracts are simple contracts.

Principal contracts are those entered into by both parties on their own accounts, or in the several qualities or characters they assume.

Real contracts are those in which it is necessary that there should be something more than mere consent, such as a loan of money, deposit, or pledge, which, from their nature, require a delivery of the thing (res).

Reciprocal contracts are those by which the parties expressly enter into mutual engagements, such as sale, hire, and the like.

Contracts of record are those which are evidenced by matter of record, such as judgments, recognizances, and statutes staple.

These have been said to be the highest class of contracts. Statutes, merchant and staple, and other securities of the like nature, are confined to England. They are contracts entered into by the intervention of some public authority, and are witnessed by the highest kind of evidence, viz., matter of record; Poll. Contr. 141; 4 Bla. Com. 465.

Severable (or separable) contracts are those the considerations of which are by their terms susceptible of apportionment or division on either side, so as to correspond to the several parts or portions of the consideration on the other side.

A contract to pay a person the worth of his services as long as he will do certain work, or so much per week as long as he shall work, or to give a certain price per bushel for every bushel of so much corn as corresponds to a sample, would be a severable contract. If the part to be performed by one party consists of several distinct and separate items, and the price to be paid by the other is apportioned to each item to be performed, or is left to be implied by law, such a contract will generally be held to be severable. So when the price to be paid is clearly and distinctly apportioned to different parts of what is to be performed, although the latter is in its nature single and entire. But the mere fact of sale by weight or measure—i. e. so much per pound or bushel—does not make a contract severable.

Simple contracts are those not of specialty or record.

They are the lowest class of express contracts, and answer most nearly to our general definition of contract.

To constitute a sufficient parol agreement to be binding in law, there must be that reciprocal and mutual assent which is necessary to all contracts. They are by parol (which includes both oral and written). The only distinction between oral and written contracts is in their mode of proof. And it is inaccurate to distinguish verbal from written; for contracts are equally verbal whether the words are written or spoken,—the meaning of verbal being—expressed in words. See 3 Burr. 1670; 7 Term 350, note; Stackpole v. Arnold, 11 Mass. 27, 6 Am. Dec. 150; Cook v. Bradley, 7 Conn. 57, 18 Am. Dec. 79; Union Turnpike Co. v. Jenkins, 1 Caines (N. Y.) 385.

Specialties are those which are under seal; as, deeds and bonds.

Specialties are sometimes said to include also contracts of record; 1 Pars. Contr. 7; in which case there would be but two classes at common law, viz., specialties and simple contracts. The term specialty is always used substantively.

They are the second kind of express contracts under the ordinary common-law division. They are not merely written, but signed, sealed, and delivered by the party bound. The solemnities connected with these acts, and the formalities of witnessing, gave in early times an importance and character to this class of contracts which implied so much caution and deliberation (consideration) that it was unnecessary to prove the consideration even in a court of equity; Plowd. 305; 7 Term 477; 4 B. & Ad. 652; 3 Bingh. 111; 1 Fonb. Eq. 342, note. Though little of the real solemnity now remains, and a scroll is substituted in most of the states for the seal, the distinction with regard to specialties has still been preserved intact except when abolished by statute. In Ortman v. Dixon, 13 Cal. 33, it is said that the distinction is now unmeaning and not sustained by reason. See CONSIDERATION; SEAL.

When a contract by specialty is changed by a parol agreement, the whole contract becomes parol; Vicary v. Moore, 2 Watts (Pa.) 451, 27 Am. Dec. 323; Munroe v. Perkins, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 293, 20 Am. Dec. 475; Delacroix v. Bulkley, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 71.

Unilateral contracts are those in which the party to whom the engagement is made makes no express agreement on his part.

They are so called even in cases where the law attaches certain obligations to his acceptance. Louisiana Code, art. 1758. A loan for use and a loan of money are of this kind. Poth. Obl. pt. 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 2.

Verbal contracts are simple contracts.

Written contracts are those evidenced by writing.

Pothier's treatise on Obligations, taken in connection with the Civil Code of Louisiana, gives an idea of the divisions of the civil law. Poth. Obl. pt. 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 2, makes the five following classes: reciprocal and unilateral; consensual and real; those of mutual interest, of beneficence and mixed; principal and accessory; those which are subjected by the civil law to certain rules and forms, and those which are regulated by mere natural justice.

It is true that almost all the rights of personal property do in great measure depend upon contracts of one kind or other, or at least might be reduced under some of them; which is the method taken by the civil law; it has referred the greatest part of the duties and rights of which it treats to the head of obligations ex contractu or quasi ex contractu. Inst. 3. 14. 2; 2 Bla. Com. 443.

Quasi-contracts. The usual classification of contracts is objected to by Prof. Keener in his law of Quasi-Contracts. A true contract exists, he says, because the contracting party has willed, in circumstances to which the law attaches the sanction of an obligation, that he shall be bound. His contract may be implied in fact, or express. Which of the two it is, is purely a question of the kind of evidence used to establish the contract. In either case the source of the obligation is the intention of the party. "Contract implied in law" is, however, a term used to cover a class of obligations, where the law, though the defendant did not intend to assume an obligation, imposes an obligation upon him, notwithstanding the absence of intention on his part, and, in many cases, in spite of his actual dissent. Such contracts, according to the work cited, may be termed quasi-contracts, and are not true contracts. They are founded generally:—

1. Upon a record.
2. Upon statutory, official, or customary duties.
3. Upon the doctrine that no one shall be allowed to enrich himself unjustly at the expense of another. The latter is the most important and most numerous class. See also Ans. Contr. 6th ed. 7; 2 Harv. L. Rev. 64; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 3 Sup. Ct. 211, 27 L. Ed. 936.

A claim for half-pilotage fees under a statute allowing such fees, where a pilot's services are offered and declined, is an instance of a quasi-contract of the second class; Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. Joliffe, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 450, 17 L. Ed. 805. See also Milford v. Com., 144 Mass. 64, 10 N. E. 516. Prof. Keener, in his work above cited, considers the duty of a carrier to receive and carry safely as being of a quasi-contractual nature. Among the third class are also cases of the liability of a husband to pay for necessities furnished to his wife; of a father for those furnished to his child. Also cases of actions to recover money paid under a mistake; actions in assumpsit against a tort-feasor, where the tort is waived; actions to recover compensation for benefits received under a contract which the plaintiff cannot enforce because he has failed to comply with the conditions thereof; actions for benefits conferred by the plaintiff under a contract which the defendant, by reason of the statute of frauds, illegality, impossibility, etc., is not bound to perform; actions for benefits conferred on the defendant at his request, but in the absence of a contract; actions for benefits intentionally conferred, but without the defendant's request; actions for money paid to the use of the defendant; and actions for money paid under compulsion of law and money paid to the defendant under duress, legal or equitable. These are the general classes given in Keener, Quasi-Contracts, to which reference is made, passim. The question to be determined is not the defendant's intention, but what in equity and good conscience the defendant ought to do. The action of indebitatus assumpsit was extended to most cases of quasi-contracts; Harriman, Contr. 24; 2 Harv. L. Rev. 63. The settled tendency of English and American law is toward a new classification of contracts and the treatment of implied contracts upon the lines here indicated. They are lines clearly defined in the Roman law as shown by Maine (Anc. Law, 3d. Am. ed. 332), who is extensively quoted by Keener. See CONTRACTUAL OBLIGATION; Woodward, Quasi-Contracts.

Negotiations preceding a contract. Where there is an agreement between parties to enter into a contract in the future, and any essential part of the contract is left open, the agreement does not constitute a contract in itself; Sibley v. Felton, 156 Mass. 273, 31 N. E. 10. Such is the case also if the agreement itself shows that it was not intended to bind the parties, but that a formal contract was to be executed; Eads v. City of Carondelet, 42 Mo. 113; 70 L. T. 781. But a mere reference to a contract to be drawn up in the future is not conclusive that the parties are not bound by their original agreement, though it tends to show that such is the case; Allen v. Chouteau, 102 Mo. 309, 14 S. W. 869; L. R. 18 Eq. 180. The question is one of intention to be gathered from the original agreement, in view of all the circumstances; Sanders v. Fruit Co., 144 N. Y. 209, 39 N. E. 75, 29 L. R. A. 431, 43 Am. St. Rep. 757; Harriman, Contr. 52.

Where negotiations are made "subject to the preparation and approval" or "completion of a formal contract," they do not constitute a binding contract, whether the condition is expressed in the offer; [1895] 2 Ch. 1844; or in the acceptance; 7 Ch. D. 29; but "the mere reference to a future contract is not enough to negative the existence of a present one;" 8 Ch. D. 70. Where a baker sold, and a company bought a shop, and the contract seemed complete in two letters, but afterward the company wrote a third letter introducing a new and vital term, viz., a restriction upon the baker's trading in the district, it was held that the three letters read together negated the idea that the two letters constituted the contract; 42 Ch. D. 616. Where the acceptance was "subject to the title being approved by our solicitor" it was held, that this meant no more than the liberty which every purchaser impliedly reserves to himself of breaking off the contract if the vendor breaks it, by not making a good title. The Court of Appeals construed these words as a condition, but Lord Cairns, L. C., pointed out that they would, if so construed, imply that the vendor was free, but the purchaser bound; 4 App. Cas. 311. In 3 App. Cases 1124, in the House of Lords, it was said, in holding that a correspondence between parties constituted a complete contract, "If you can find the true and important ingredients of an agreement in that which has taken place between two parties in the course of a correspondence, then, although the correspondence may not set forth, in a form which a solicitor would adopt if he were instructed to draw an agreement in writing, that which is the agreement between the parties, yet, if the parties to the agreement, the thing to be sold, the price to be paid, and all those matters, be clearly and distinctly stated, although only by letter, an acceptance clearly by letter will not the less constitute an agreement in the full sense between the parties, merely because that letter may say, 'We will have this agreement put in due form by a solicitor.'" In the same case Lord Blackburn said that there must be a complete agreement, "if not there is no contract so long as the parties are only in negotiation. But the mere fact that the parties have expressly stipulated that there shall afterwards be a formal agreement prepared embodying the terms which shall be signed by the parties, does not by itself show that they continue merely in negotiation. It is a matter to be taken into account in construing the evidence and determining whether the parties have really come to a final agreement or not."

The tendency in recent authorities is said in Pollock, Contr. 47, to discourage all attempts to lay down any fixed rule as governing these cases. The question may be made clear by putting it this way, whether there is in the particular case a final consent of the parties such that no new term or variation can be introduced in the formal document to be proposed. "It is a settled law that a contract may be made by letter and that the mere reference in them to a future formal contract will not prevent their constituting a binding contract;" 8 Ch. D. 70. It is not binding if the terms are uncertain, e. g., an agreement to sell an estate reserving "the necessary land for making a railroad"; [1875] 20 Eq. 492; to make such a contract in the future "as the parties may agree upon"; Shepard v. Carpenter, 54 Minn. 153, 55 N. W. 906; to give a lease in the form usual in the city where the property is situate; Scholtz v. Ins. Co., 100 Fed. 573, 40 C. C. A. 556; otherwise of an agreement to execute a deed of separation containing the "usual covenants"; [1881] 18 Ch. Div. 670.

Where all the terms of a contract were agreed upon and it was dictated to a stenographer to be written out and signed by the parties, the contract was held to be complete, though it was not reduced to writing before breach; Hollerbach & May Contract Co. v. Wilkins, 130 Ky. 51, 112 S. W. 1126. Though the parties to a contract agreed to reduce it to writing, failure to do so does not invalidate it, but merely affects the mode of proof; Jenkins & Reynolds Co. v. Alpena Portland Cement Co., 147 Fed. 641, 77 C. C. A. 625.

Where a contract was reduced to writing and assented to by the parties, but not yet signed, it was held not binding; Fourchy v. Ellis, 140 Fed. 149.

Since the judicature acts in England, a tenant holding under an agreement for a lease of which specific performance would be decreed, stands in precisely the same position as if the lease had been executed; 21 Ch. D. 9.

Qualities of contracts. Every agreement should be so complete as to give either party his action upon it; both parties must assent to all its terms; 3 Term 653; 1 B. & Ald. 681; McCulloch v. Ins. Co., 1 Pick. (Mass.) 278. To the rule that the contract must be obligatory on both parties, there are some exceptions: as the case of an infant, who may sue, though he cannot be sued, on his contract; Add. Contr. 380; Stra. 937. See other instances, 6 East 307; 3 Taunt. 169; 5 id. 788; 3 B. & C. 232. There must be a good and valid consideration (q. v.), which must be proved though the contract be in writing; 7 Term 350, note (a); 2 Bla. Com. 444; Fonb. Eq. 335, n. (a). There is an exception to this rule in the case of bills and notes, which are of themselves prima facie evidence of consideration. And in other contracts (written), when consideration is acknowledged, it is prima facie evidence thereof, but open to contradiction by parol testimony. There must be a thing to be done which is not forbidden by law, or one to be admitted which is not enjoined by law. Fraudulent, immoral, or forbidden contracts are void. A contract is also void if against public policy or the statutes, even though the statute be not prohibitory but merely affixes a penalty; Poll. Contr. 259 et seq.; Mitchell v. Smith, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 269, 1 L. Ed. 828; Mabin v. Coulon, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 298, 1 L. Ed. 841; Stanley v. Nelson, 28 Ala. 514; Siter v. Sheets, 7 Ind. 132; Solomon v. Dreschler, 4 Minn. 278 (Gil. 197); Coburn v. Odell, 30 N. H. 540; Bell v. Quin, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 146. But see Branch Bank at Montgomery v. Crocheron, 5 Ala. 250. As to contracts which cannot be enforced from non-compliance with the statute of frauds, see FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

Suits by third parties. It was for a long time not fully settled whether a contract between A and B that one of them should do something for the benefit of C did or did not give C a right of action on the contract. See 1 B. & P. 98; 3 id. 149; but it is now distinctly established in England that C cannot sue; 1 B. & S. 393; Poll. Contr. 200; in America the authorities are conflicting.

On specialties most courts do not permit a suit in a third person's name, yet some do; Poll. Contr. 204, citing Millard v. Baldwin, 3 Gray (Mass.) 484. Professor Harriman (Contracts, ch. VII), after citing the authorities for the common-law rule that the one not a party to it can enforce a contract, enumerates and discusses the exceptions. The only exception recognized in Massachusetts (the right to recover money in the hands of the defendant which is of right the property of the plaintiff), is considered no real exception, as the liability is not contractual; the right of a son to sue on a promise made to a father is not now recognized in England or in Massachusetts as it formerly was, and it has no foundation in principle. The broad exception existing in most of the states permitting a person for whose benefit a promise is made to sue upon it, he considers not founded on any principle, but a clear case of judicial legislation which, like most arbitrary rules, has led to confusion. He reaches the conclusion that the right of a stranger to sue in certain cases is recognized in New York, Missouri, Indiana, Illinois, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Maine, and Rhode Island, and that in Massachusetts and Michigan, as in England, the common law prevails. In the federal courts he considers the rule not clearly settled, but that the general rules laid down by the supreme court coincide with the common-law rule.

In Hendrick v. Lindsay, 93 U. S. 143, 23 L. Ed. 855, the court (Davis, J.) said that "the right of a party to maintain assumpsit on a promise not under seal made to another for his benefit, although much controverted, is now the prevailing rule in this country." In Second Nat. Bank v. Grand Lodge, 98 U. S. 123, 25 L. Ed. 75, it was held that while the common-law rule is that a stranger cannot sue upon it, "there are confessedly many exceptions to it." In Pennsylvania the general rule is recognized; but it is held that where money or property is placed by one in the possession of another, to be paid or delivered to a third person, the latter has a right of action, being regarded as a party to the consideration on which the undertaking rests; Adams v. Kuehn, 119 Pa. 76, 13 Atl. 184; so, also, Blymire v. Boistle, 6 Watts (Pa.) 182, 31 Am. Dec. 458. And a promise to one to pay a debt due by him to another is valid; Hind v. Holdship, 2 Watts (Pa.) 104, 26 Am. Dec. 107. In some jurisdictions, even including courts adhering to the general common-law rule, a third person has a right to enforce a trust created for his benefit by another person; Union P. R. Co. v. Durant, 95 U. S. 576, 24 L. Ed. 391; Street v. McConnell, 16 Ill. 125; Bay v. Williams, 112 Ill. 91, 1 N. E. 340, 54 Am. Rep. 209; Chace v. Chapin, 130 Mass. 128; Pruitt v. Pruitt, 91 Ind. 595. But see Crandall v. Payne, 154 Ill. 627, 39 N. E. 601, where it was held that when a contract of sale of land from A to B recited that part of the purchase money was "going to C," the latter could not sue B.

See for a general discussion of the subject, Southern Express Co. v. R. Co., 29 Am. L. Reg. O. S. 596; 4 N. J. L. J. 197, 229; 8 Harv. L. Rev. 93; Harriman, Contr.

Construction and interpretation in reference to contracts. The intention of the parties is the pole-star of construction; but their intention must be found expressed in the contract and be consistent with rules of law. The court will not make a new contract for the parties, nor will words be forced from their real signification.

The subject matter of the contract and the situation of the parties are to be fully considered with regard to the sense in which language is used.

The legality of the contract is presumed and is favored by construction.

Words are to be taken, if possible, in their ordinary and common sense.

The whole contract is to be considered with relation to the meaning of any of its parts.

The contract will be supported rather than defeated: ut res magis valeat quam percat.

All parts will be construed, if possible, so as to have effect.

Construction is generally against the grantor—contra proferentem—except in the case of the sovereign. This rule of construction is not of great importance, except in the analogous case of penal statutes; for the law favors and supposes innocence.

Construction is against claims or contracts which are in themselves against common right or common law.

Neither bad English nor bad Latin invalidates a contract ("which perhaps a classical critic may think no unnecessary caution"); 2 Bla. Com. 379; 6 Co. 59. See CONSTRUCTION; INTERPRETATION.

Parties. There is no contract unless the parties assent thereto; and where such assent is impossible from the want, immaturity, or incapacity of mind of one of the parties, there can be no perfect contract. See PARTIES.

Remedy. The foundation of the common law of contracts may be said to be the giving of damages for the breach of contracts. When the thing to be done is the payment of money, damages paid in money are entirely adequate. When, however, the contract is for anything else than the payment of money, the common law knows no other than a money remedy: it has no power to enforce a specific performance of the contract.

The injustice of measuring all rights and wrongs by a money standard, which as a remedy is often inadequate, led to the establishment of the equity power of decreeing specific performance when the remedy has failed at law. For example: contracts for the sale of real estate will be specifically enforced in equity; performance will be decreed, and conveyances compelled.

Where a contract is for the benefit of the contracting party, no action can be maintained by a third person who is a stranger to the contract and the consideration; Freeman v. R. Co., 173 Pa. 274, 33 Atl. 1034.

See IMPAIRING OBLIGATION OF A CONTRACT; THIRD PARTIES, CONTRACTS FOR.

In Roman and Mediæval Law. "Formal contracts (legitimæ conventiones) gave a right of action irrespective of their subject matter. In Justinian's time the only form of contract in use was the Stipulation or verbal contract by question and answer. Its origin is believed to have been religious, though the precise manner of its adoption remains uncertain. It appears as a formal contract capable of being applied to any kind of subject matter. Its application was in time extended by the following steps: 1. The question and answer were not required to be in Latin. 2. An exact verbal correspondence between them was not necessary. 3. An instrument in writing purporting to be the record of a Stipulation was treated as strong evidence of the Stipulation having taken place. Hence the mediæval development of operative writings.

"Informal agreements (pacta) did not give any right of action without the presence of something more than the mere fact of the agreement. This something was called causa. Practically the term covers a somewhat wider ground than our modern 'consideration executed'; but it has no general notion corresponding to it, at least none co-extensive with the notion of contract; it is simply the mark which distinguishes any particular class from the common herd of pacta and makes them actionable. Informal agreements not coming within any of the privileged classes were called nuda pacta and could not be sued on. The term nudum pactum is sometimes used however with a special and rather different meaning to express the rule that a contract without delivery will not pass property.

"The further application of this metaphor by speaking of the causa when it exists as the clothing or vesture of the agreement is without classical authority, but very common; it is adopted to the full extent by our early writers.

"The privileged informal contracts were the following: 1. Real contracts, where the causa consisted in the delivery of money or goods; namely, mutui datio, commodatum, depositum, pignus, corresponding to our bailments. This class was expanded within historical times to cover the so-called innominate contracts denoted by the formula do ut des, etc. 2. Consensual contracts, being contracts of constant occurrence in daily life in which no causa was required beyond the nature of the contract itself. Four such contracts were recognized, the first three of them at all events, from the earliest times from which we knew anything, namely, Sale, Hire, Partnership, and Mandate (Emptio Venditio, Locatio Conductio, Societas, Mandatum). To this class great additions were made in later times. Subsidiary contracts (pacta adiecta) entered into at the same time and in connection with contracts of an already enforceable class became likewise enforceable; and divers kinds of informal contracts were specially made actionable by the Edict and by imperial constitutions, the most material of these being the constitutio covering the English heads of account stated and guaranty. Justinian added the pactum donationis, it seems with a special view to gifts to pious uses. Even after all these extensions, however, matters stood thus: "The Stipulation, as the only formal agreement existing in Justinian's time gave a right of action. Certain particular classes of agreements also gave a right of action even if informally made. All other informal agreements (nuda pacta) gave none. This last proposition, that nuda pacta gave no right of action, may be regarded as the most characteristic principle of the Roman law of Contract." (Sav. Obl. 2, 231.) It is desirable to bear in mind that in Roman and also in early English law-text nudum pactum does not mean an agreement without consideration. Many nuda pacta according to the classical Roman law would be quite good in English law, as being made on sufficient consideration; while in many cases obligations recognized by Roman law as fully binding (e. g. from mandate or negotiorum gestio) would be unenforceable as being without consideration, in the common law.

"... In Western Christendom the natural obligation admitted to arise from an informal agreement was gradually raised to full validity, and the difference between pactum and legitima conventio ceased to exist. The process however was not completed until English law had already struck out its own line.

"The identification of Stipulation with formal writing, complete on the Continent not later than the 9th Century, was adopted by our mediæval authors." Pollock, Contracts 743.

CONTRACT LABOR ACT. See LABOR.

CONTRACTION (Lat. con, together, trahō, to draw). A form of a word abbreviated by the omission of one or more letters. This was formerly much practised, but in modern times has fallen into general disuse. Much information in regard to the rules for contraction is to be found in the Instructor Clericalis.

CONTRACTOR. One who enters into a contract. Generally used of those who undertake to do public work or the work for a company or corporation on a large scale, or to furnish goods to another at a fixed or ascertained price. 2 Pard. n. 300. See Sullivan v. Johns, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 366; Mason v. U. S., 14 Ct. Cl. 59; Neal v. U. S., id. 280; Merriam v. U. S., id. 289; Carr v. U. S., 13 Ct. Cl. 136; Denver Pacific Ry. Co. v. U. S., id. 392. As to liability of a party for the negligence of a contractor employed by him, see INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR.

CONTRACTUAL. Of the nature of or pertaining to a contract, as, contractual liability or contractual obligation, which see. A term used by writers on the Roman law to designate the class of obligations described in the classification of the civilians as ex contractu, and recently much used in English and American law in connection with the more modern method of classifying contracts referred to in connection with Quasi-Contract. See CONTRACT.

CONTRACTUAL OBLIGATION. The obligation which arises from a contract or agreement.

In the Roman law the expression was a familiar one, and, taking the result of the discussions of the subject by writers on the civil law, and keeping in view both the etymology and the use of the word obligation, we may define it, as there used, to be a tie binding one to the performance of a duty arising from the agreement of parties.

The term is resorted to as a relief from what he considers the misuse of the word contract and the difficulty of defining it, by Prof. Harriman, who uses it in this sense: "Nevertheless in the case of many 'contracts,' using the word in its broadest sense, we find existing an obligation with certain definite characteristics which can easily be recognized. This obligation we shall venture to call contractual." He divides "the endless variety of obligations which the courts enforce" into irrecusable and recusabile obligations. The former are those which are imposed upon the person without his consent and without regard to any act of his own; the latter are the result of a voluntary act on the part of the person on whom they are imposed. These terms are adopted by him from an article by Professor John H. Wigmore in 8 Harv. L. Rev. 200, and he again divides recusabile obligations into definite and indefinite, meaning thereby to express whether the extent of the undertaking is determined by the act of the party upon whom the obligation rests or not; and to differentiate still further the precise character of definite recusabile obligations, which he terms contractual obligations, Professor Harriman originates the terms unifactorial and bifactorial, as the obligation is created by the act of the party bound, or requires two acts, one by the party bound and the other by the party to be benefited. The term contractual was of constant use by writers on the civil law, and Malne, in his Early Law and Custom, refers to the German Salic Law as elaborately discussing contractual obligation. Professor Harriman's definition of this term is "that obligation which is imposed by the law in consequence of a voluntary act, and which is determined as to its nature and extent by that act." Harr. Cont. 27. The idea of contractual obligation he thinks was unknown to our Anglo-Saxon ancestors; id. 15. It is undoubtedly true, as Professor Harriman asserts, that the best considered theory of contract at the present time has been a slow and tedious development; but it is equally true that among the writers who have given most attention to the study of the historical development of the law there remain wide differences of opinion as to the time and manner of its development. It is likewise to be observed that the theories of Professor Harriman and those who have preceded him, in the views which he has so logically and comprehensively treated, do in fact include much that is familiar to the student of the Roman law, while there is exhibited a reluctance to give to that system due credit for the principles which were fully developed in it. In his preface the author here cited quotes with approval the remark of Sir F. Pollock, that English speaking lawyers "must seek a genuine philosophy of the common law, and not be put off with a surface dressing of Romanized generalities." It may be suggested that when, after centuries of an unscientific development of the English law of contract (due to causes which Professor Harriman well sketches in Part II. of his introduction), what seems to be not only a better, but the true theory has come to be recognized and developed; the coincidence of that theory with the root idea of the subject, as expressed in so scientific a system as the Roman law, should be acknowledged and utilized, rather than ignored, or characterized as "recasting English ideas and institutions in a Roman mould." It may be safely asserted that neither contract nor contractual obligation is an English idea or institution, but an idea of human civilization. Maine says we have no society disclosed to us destitute of the conception; Anc. Law 303. It is equally creditable to us to have discovered and developed the correct idea of it after it has been overlaid with the misconceptions of the common law, as to its true nature, as it was to the Civilians to have formulated it correctly as part of their scientifically constructed system. That a concurrence is reached by these distinct processes is strong confirmation of the accuracy of the result. The reader is also referred to Keener, Quasi-Contracts; Holmes, Common Law; Sandars, Inst. of Justinian; Howe, Studies in the Civil Law, which contains a statement of the subject of obligations in the Roman law.

CONTRADICT. To prove a fact contrary to what has been asserted by a witness.

A party cannot impeach the character of his witness, but may contradict him as to any particular fact; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 443; 3 B. & C. 746; Lawrence v. Barker, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 305; Stockton v. Demuth, 7 Watts (Pa.) 39, 32 Am. Dec. 735; Brown v. Bellows, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 179, 194; Dennett v. Dow, 17 Me. 19.

CONTRAESCRITURA. In Spanish Law. Counter-letter. An instrument, usually executed in secret, for the purpose of showing that an act of sale, or some other public instrument, has a different purpose from that imported on its face. Acts of this kind, though binding on the parties, have no effect as to third persons.

CONTRAFATIO (Lat.). Counterfeiting: as, contrafactio sigilli regis (counterfeiting the king's seal). Cowell; Reg. Orig. 42. See COUNTERFEIT.

CONTRAROTULATOR (Fr. contrerouleur). A controller. One whose business it was to observe the money which the collectors had gathered for the use of the king or the people. Cowell.

CONTRAROTULATOR PIPE. An officer of the exchequer that writeth out summons twice every year to the sheriffs to levy the farms (rents) and debts of the pipe. Blount.

CONTRAVENTION. In French Law. An act which violates the law, a treaty, or an agreement which the party has made. That infraction of the law punished by a fine which does not exceed fifteen francs and by an imprisonment not exceeding three days.

CONTRE-MAITRE. In French Law. The second-officer in command of a ship.

CONTRACTATIO. In Civil Law. The removal of a thing from its place amounting to a theft. The offence is purged by a restoration of the thing taken. Bowy. Com. 268.

CONTREFAÇON. In French Law. The offence of those who print or cause to be printed, without lawful authority, a book of which the author or his assigns have a copyright. Merlin, Répert.

CONTRIBUTION. Payment by one or more persons who are liable, in company with others, of a proportionate part of the whole liability or loss, to one or more of the parties so liable upon whom the whole loss has fallen or who has been compelled to discharge the whole liability; Dupuy v. Johnson, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 562; Lawrence v. Cornell, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 545; Pars. Part. 198.

"The principle is that parties having a common interest in a subject-matter shall bear equally any burden affecting it. Qui sentit commodum sentire debet et onus. Equality is equity. One shall not bear a common burden in ease of the rest. Hence, if, (as often may be done), a lien, charge, or burden of any kind, affecting several, is enforced at law against one only, he should receive from the rest what he has paid or discharged on their behalf. This is the doctrine of equitable contribution, resting on as simple a principle of natural justice as can be put." Per Bates, Ch., in Eliason v. Eliason, 3 Del. Ch. 260; 3 Co. 11 b; 1 Cox, C. C. 318; 1 B. & P. 270; 1 Sto. Eq. 477; 1 Wh. & Tud. L. Cas. in Eq. 66. Though its most common application is to sureties and owners of several parcels of land subject to a lien, the application of the principle is said to be universal by Lord Redesdale in 3 Bligh 59; and it applies equally to dower as to other incumbrances; Eliason v. Eliason, 3 Del. Ch. 260; Bank of United States v. Delorac's Ex'rs, Wright (Ohio) 285.

A right to contribution exists in the case of debtors who owe a debt jointly which has been collected from one of them; Davis v. Burnett, 49 N. C. 71, 67 Am. Dec. 263; Haupt v. Mills, 4 Ga. 545; Mills v. Hyde, 19 Vt. 59, 46 Am. Dec. 177; Norton v. Coons, 3 Denio (N. Y.) 130; Fletcher v. Brown, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 385. See Russell v. Failor, 1 Ohio St. 327, 59 Am. Dec. 631. It also exists where land charged with a legacy, or the portion of a posthumous child, descends or is devised to several persons, when the share of each is held liable for a proportionate part; Armistead v. Dangerfield, 3 Munf. (Va.) 20, 5 Am. Dec. 501; Stevens v. Cooper, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 425, 7 Am. Dec. 499; Blaney v. Blaney, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 107; Taylor v. Taylor, 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 419, 48 Am. Dec. 400. As to contribution under the maritime law, see GENERAL AVERAGE.

Originally this right was not enforced at law, but courts of common law in modern times have assumed a jurisdiction to compel contribution among sureties in the absence of any positive contract, on the ground of an implied assumpsit, and each of the sureties may be sued for his respective quota or proportion; Wh. & Tud. Lead. Cas. 66; Carroll v. Bowle, 7 Gill (Md.) 34; Ellicott v. Nichols, 7 Gill (Md.) 85, 48 Am. Dec. 546; Lindell v. Brant, 17 Mo. 150. The remedy in equity is, however, much more effective; Couch v. Terry's Adm'rs, 12 Ala. 225; Mc-Kenna v. George, 2 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 15; Risp. Eq. § 329. For example, a surety who pays an entire debt can, in equity, compel the solvent sureties to contribute towards the payment of the entire debt; 1 Ch. Cas. 346; Finch 15, 203; while at law he can recover no more than an aliquot part of the whole, regard being had to the number of co-sureties; 2 B. & P. 268; 6 B. & C. 697; Powers v. Gowen, 32 Me. 381. See SUBROGATION. See, as to co-sureties, 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 100.

There is no contribution, as a general rule, between joint tort-feasors; 8 T. R. 186; Nichols v. Nowling, 82 Ind. 488; Percy v. Clary, 32 Md. 245; Miller v. Fenton, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 18; Jacobs v. Pollard, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 287, 57 Am. Dec. 105; Acheson v. Miller, 2 Ohio St. 203, 59 Am. Dec. 663; but this rule does not apply when the person seeking redress did not in fact know that the act was unlawful, and is not chargeable with knowledge of that fact; 4 Bing. 72; Moore v. Appleton, 26 Ala. 633; Bailey v. Bussing, 28 Conn. 455; Armstrong County v. Clarion County, 66 Pa. 218, 5 Am. Rep. 368.

It is not the admiralty rule; Erie R. Co. v. Transp. Co., 204 U. S. 225, 27 Sup. Ct. 246, 51 L. Ed. 450.

The rule against contribution between wrongdoers is not universal. If the parties are not equally at fault, the principal delinquent may be responsible to the others for damages incurred by their joint offence. With respect to offences in which is involved any moral delinquency, all parties are equally guilty, and the courts will not inquire into their relative guilt. But where the offence is merely malum prohibitum and in no sense immoral, the court will inquire into their relative delinquency and administer justice between them; Lowell v. R. Co., 23 Pick. (Mass.) 32, 34 Am. Dec. 33, cited in Washington Gas Co. v. Dist. of Columbia, 161 U. S. 316, 327, 16 Sup. Ct. 564, 40 L. Ed. 712, where it is said that the cases are too numerous for citation; they are collected in Whart. Neg. 246; 2 Thomp. Neg. 789, 1061; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 1035.

The rule stated also fails when the injury grows out of a duty resting primarily upon one of the parties, and but for his negligence there would have been no cause of action against the other. A servant is consequently liable to his master for the damages recovered against the latter in consequence of the negligence of the servant; Merryweather v. Nixan, 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 483. Where a recovery is had against a municipal corporation for an injury resulting from an obstruction to the highway, or other nuisance, occasioned by the act or default of its servant, or even of a citizen, the municipality has a right of action against the wrongdoer for indemnity; Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black (U. S.) 418, 17 L. Ed. 298.

In Civil Law. A partition by which the creditors of an insolvent debtor divide among themselves the proceeds of his property proportionably to the amount of their respective credits. Lo. Code, art. 2522, n. 10. It is a division pro rata. Merlin, Répert.

CONTRIBUTORY. A person liable to contribute to the assets of a company which is being wound up, as being a member or (in some cases) a past-member thereof. 3 Steph. Com. 24; Moz. & W. Law Dict.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE. See NEGLIGENCE.

CONTROLLER. A comptroller, which see.

CONTRIVER. One who invents false news. Co. 2d Inst. 227.

CONTROVERSY. A dispute arising between two or more persons.

In the federal jurisdiction clause relating to controversies "between two or more states," etc., it means those that are justiciable between the parties thereto. Louisiana v. Texas, 176 U. S. 1, 24, 20 Sup. Ct. 251, 44 L. Ed. 347.

It differs from case, which includes all suits, criminal as well as civil; whereas controversy is a civil and not a criminal proceeding; Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 419, 431, 432, 1 L. Ed. 440; 1 Tuck. Bla. Com. App. 420, 421.

By the constitution of the United States, the judicial power extends to controversies to which the United States shall be a party. Art. III. sec. 2. The meaning to be attached to the word controversy in the constitution is that above given.

CONTUBERNIUM. In Civil Law. A marriage between two slaves; it was not a legal relation, and the children were not legitimate. Bryce, Studies in Hist. etc., Essay XVI.

CONTUMACE CAPIENDO. A writ provided by 53 Geo. III. c. 127, in place of the writ de excommunicato capiendo to enable Ecclesiastical Courts to enforce an appearance and punish for contempt. 1 Holdsw. Hist. Engl. Law App. XVIII. See EXCOMMUNICATION.

CONTUMACY (Lat. contumacia, disobedience). The refusal or neglect of a party accused to appear or answer to a charge preferred against him in a court of justice.

Actual contumacy is the refusal of a party actually before the court to obey some order of the court.

Presumed contumacy is the act of refusing or declining to appear upon being cited. 3 Curt. Ecc. l.

One who has been convicted in contumaciam in a foreign country is to be regarded, not as convicted of, but only charged with, the offence; Ward, C. J., in Ex parte Fudera, 162 Fed. 591, adopting Moore, Extrad. art. 102.

CONTUMAX. One accused of a crime who refuses to appear and answer to the charge. An outlaw.

CONTUSION. In Medical Jurisprudence. An injury or lesion, arising from the shock of a body with a large surface, which presents no loss of substance and no apparent wound. If the skin be divided, the injury takes the name of a contused wound. See 4 C. & P. 381, 558, 565; 6 id. 684; Thomas, Med. Dict. sub v.; 2 Beck, Med. Jur. 18, 23.

CONUSANCE, CLAIM OF. See COGNIZANCE.

CONUSANT. One who knows; as, if a party knowing of an agreement in which he has an interest makes no objection to it, he is said to be conusant. Co. Litt. 157.

CONUSOR. A cognizor.

CONVENE. In Civil Law. To bring an action.

CONVENTICLE. A private assembly of a few folks under pretence of exercise of religion. The name was first given to the meetings of Wickliffe, but afterwards applied to the meetings of the non-conformists. Cowell.

The meetings were made illegal by 16 Car. II. c. 4, and the term in its later signification came to denote an unlawful religious assembly.

CONVENTIO (Lat. a coming together). In Canon Law. The act of summoning or calling together the parties by summoning the defendant.

When the defendant was brought to answer, he was said to be convened,—which the canonists called conventio, because the plaintiff and defendant met to contest. Story, Eq. Pl. 402.

In Contracts. An agreement; a covenant. Cowell.

Often used in the maxim conventio vincit legem (the express agreement of the parties supersedes the law). Story, Ag. § 368. But this maxim does not apply, it is said, to prevent the application of the general rule of law. Broom, Max. 690. See MAXIMS.

CONVENTION. In Civil Law. A general term which comprehends all kinds of contracts, treaties, pacts, or agreements. The consent of two or more persons to form with each other an engagement, or to dissolve or change one which they had previously formed. Domat, l. 1, t. 1, s. 1; Dig. lib. 2, t. 14, l. 1; lib. 1, t. 1, l. 1, 4 and 5.

In Legislation. This term is applied to a meeting of the delegates elected by the people for other purposes than usual legislation. It is used to denote an assembly to make or amend the constitution of a state; also an assembly of the delegates of the people to nominate candidates to be supported at an election. As to the former use, see Jameson, Constit. Conv.; Cooley, Const. Lim.; CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

CONVENTION PARLIAMENTS. Parliaments which met in 1660 (and restored Charles II) and in 1688-9 (and brought William and Mary to the throne). So called because they were not summoned by the king's writ. The acts of the former were confirmed by the succeeding Parliament summoned in due form, but this was not deemed necessary as to those of the latter. Tasw-Langmead, Engl. Const. Hist. 575.

CONVENTIONAL. Arising from, and dependent upon, the act of the parties, as distinguished from legal, which is something arising from act of law. 2 Bla. Com. 120.

CONVENTIONES LEGITIMÆ. See CONTRACT.

CONVENTUS (Lat. convenire). An assembly. Conventus magnatum vel procerum. An assemblage of the chief men or nobility; a name of the English parliament. 1 Bla. Com. 248.

In Civil Law. A contract made between two or more parties.

A multitude of men, of all classes, gathered together.

A standing in a place to attract a crowd.

A collection of the people by the magistrate to give judgment. Calvinus, Lex.

CONVENTUS JURIDICUS. A Roman provincial court for the determination of civil causes.

CONVERSANT. One who is in the habit of being in a particular place is said to be conversant there. Barnes 162.

Acquainted; familiar.

CONVERSION. In Equity. The exchange of property from real to personal or from personal to real, which takes place under some circumstances in the consideration of the law, such as, to give effect to directions in a will or settlement, or to stipulations in a contract, although no such change has actually taken place. 1 Bro. C. C. 497; 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 619; id. 872; Lawrence v. Elliott, 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 235; Dodge v. Williams, 46 Wis. 70, 1 N. W. 92, 50 N. W. 1103; Maddock v. Astbury, 32 N. J. Eq. 181.

A qualified conversion is one directed for some particular purpose; Harker v. Reilly, 4 Del. Ch. 72. Where the purpose of conversion totally fails no conversion takes place, but the property remains in its original state, but where there is a partial failure of the purpose of conversion of land the surplus results to the heir; 1 Bro. C. C. 503; as money and not as land, and therefore if he be dead it will pass to his personal representatives even if the land were sold in his lifetime; 4 Madd. 492. The English authorities strongly favor the heir, and the authorities are collected by Bispham (Eq. pt. ii. ch. v.) and by Bates, Ch. (Harker v. Reilly, 4 Del. Ch. 72), who held that where there was a qualified conversion by will, if one of the legacies fail, whether it be void ab origine or lapse, that portion of the fund which fails of its object will result to the party who would have been entitled to the real estate unsold. Bispham considers the American authorities less favorable to the heir than the English, citing Craig v. Leslie, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 563, 4 L. Ed. 460, where it was held that if the intent of the testator appears to have been to stamp upon the proceeds of the land described to be sold the character of personality, to all intents and purposes the claim of the heir is defeated and the estate is considered personal (see also Morrow v. Brenizer, 2 Rawle [Pa.] 185). But in the Delaware case cited it was considered that the English doctrine of qualified conversion was fully sustained by the American cases at large as collected in the American note to Ackroyd v. Smithson, 1 Wh. & Tud. L. Cas. in Eq. 590; and the case cited by Bispham from 3 Wheat., as appears from the foregoing statement of it, does not conflict with the English doctrine, as it is expressly limited to cases in which the intention is clear that the heir shall not take.

Land is held to be converted into money, in equity, when the owner has contracted to sell; and if he die before making a conveyance, his executors will be entitled to the money, and not his heirs; 1 W. Bla. 129; Masterson v. Pullen, 62 Ala. 145.

When land is ordered by a will to be sold, it is regarded as converted into personality; Hough's Estate, 3 D. R. (Pa.) 187; so of a direction to sell after 20 years; Handley v. Palmer, 103 Fed. 39, 43 C. C. A. 100; but a mere power of sale will not have that effect until it is exercised; Chew v. Nicklin, 45 Pa. 84. Lands taken under the right of eminent domain are converted.

Money may be held to be converted into land under various circumstances: as where, for example, a man dies before a conveyance is made to him of land which he has bought. 1 P. Wms. 176; Peter v. Beverly, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 563, 9 L. Ed. 522. See Giraud v. Giraud, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 175; Orrick v. Boehm, 49 Md. 72.

Where land forming part of a decedent's estate is sold in foreclosure to pay off a debt, the sale converts the real estate into money. But the conversion is effectual only to the extent and for the purposes for which the sale was authorized, whether by will or by the order of the court. So far as these purposes do not extend, and in so far as any of them do not take effect, in fact or in law, the property retains its former character in respect of the rights of its owner and passes accordingly; 2 Woerner, Am. L. of Adm. § 481; Kitchens v. Jones, 87 Ark. 502, 113 S. W. 29, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 723, 128 Am. St. Rep. 36.

In case of foreclosure of a mortgage, as to whether the heir or personal representative takes the surplus depends upon whether the mortgagor died before or after the foreclosure; 2 Sim. St. 323; although in one case, where foreclosure was before mortgagor's death, still it was held that the surplus went to his heirs; 124 L. T. 503. A conditional direction to sell land can cause no equitable conversion until the condition is satisfied; L. R. 26 Ch. Div. 601.

When a binding option for the purchase of land is not exercised until after the death of the vendor, the conversion relates back as between the heir and the personal representative to the date of the contract by which the option was given; 14 Ves. 591; D'Arras v. Keyser, 26 Pa. 249; Newport Water-Works v. Sisson, 18 R. I. 411, 28 Atl. 336; contra, Smith v. Loewenstein, 50 Ohio 346, 34 N. E. 159.

Courts of equity have power to order the conversion of property held in a trust from real estate into personal estate, or vice versa, when such conversion is not in conflict with the will of the testator, expressly or by implication, and is for the interest of the cestui que trust; Ex parte Jordan, 4 Del. Ch. 615; Johnson v. Payne, 1 Hill (S. C.) 112. The English court of chancery largely exercised this jurisdiction; 2 Sto. Eq. Jur. § 1357; 6 Ves. Jr. 6; 6 Madd. 100.

At Law. An unauthorized assumption and exercise of the right of ownership over goods or personal chattels belonging to another, to the alteration of their condition or the exclusion of the owner's rights. Stickney v. Munroe, 44 Me. 197; Gilman v. Hill, 36 N. H. 311; Aschermann v. Brewing Co., 45 Wis. 262.

A constructive conversion takes place when a person does such acts in reference to the goods or personal chattels of another as amount, in view of the law, to appropriation of the property to himself.

A direct conversion takes place when a person actually appropriates the property of another to his own beneficial use and enjoyment, or to that of a third person, or destroys it, or alters its nature.

Every such unauthorized taking of personal property; Pollock, Torts 435; Kennet v. Robinson, 2 J. J. Mar. (Ky.) 84; Hutchinson v. Bobo, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 546; Murray v. Burling, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 172; Howitt v. Estelle, 92 Ill. 218; and all intermeddling with it beyond the extent of authority conferred, in case a limited authority over it has been given; Cummings v. Perham, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 555; Grant v. King, 14 Vt. 367; Seymour v. Ives, 46 Conn. 109; People v. Bank, 75 N. Y. 547; Liptrot v. Holmes, 1 Ga. 381; with intent so to apply or dispose of it as to alter its condition or interfere with the owner's dominion; Stevens v. Curtis, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 227; 8 M. & W. 540; constitutes a conversion, including a taking by those claiming without right to be assignees in bankruptcy; 3 Brod. & B. 2; using a thing without license of the owner; Holland v. Osgood, 8 Vt. 281; Silbury v. McCoon, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 425, 41 Am. Dec. 753; Johnson v. Weedman, 4 Scam. (Ill.) 495; Scruggs v. Davis, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 261; Johnson's Adm'rs v. The Arabia, 24 Mo. 86; or in excess of the license; Hart v. Skinner, 16 Vt. 138, 42 Am. Dec. 500; Wheelock v. Wheelwright, 5 Mass. 104; Disbrow v. Ten Broeck, 4 E. D. Sm. (N.

Y.) 397; Creach v. McRae, 50 N. C. 122; misuse or detention by a finder or other bailee; Wheelock v. Wheelwright, 5 Mass. 104; Marriam v. Yeager, 2 B. Monr. (Ky.) 339; Cargill v. Webb, 10 N. H. 199; Ripley v. Dolbier, 18 Me. 382; Spencer v. Pilcher, 8 Leigh (Va.) 565; Gentry v. Madden, 3 Ark. 127; Horsely v. Branch, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 199; Disbrow v. Ten Broeck, 4 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 397; Fail v. McArthur, 31 Ala. 26; see Harvey v. Epes, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 153; delivery by a bailee in violation of orders; St. John v. O'Connel, 7 Port. (Ala.) 466; non-delivery by a wharfinger, carrier, or other bailee; Langford v. Cummings, 4 Ala. 46; Judah v. Kemp, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 411; Ewart v. Kerr, Rice (S. C.) 204; Greenfield Bank v. Leavitt, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 1, 28 Am. Dec. 268; a wrongful sale by a bailee, under some circumstances; 10 M. & W. 576; 11 id. 363; Everett v. Coffin, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 603, 22 Am. Dec. 551; Carraway v. Burbank, 12 N. C. 306; Howitt v. Estelle, 92 Ill. 218; Baylis v. Cronkite, 39 Mich. 413; a sale of stolen goods by an auctioneer, though made without notice of the lack of title; [1892] 1 Q. B. 495; where one, who has authority to sell, sells below the authorized price, it does not constitute conversion; Sarjeant v. Blunt, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 74; contra, Chase v. Baskerville, 93 Minn. 402, 101 N. W. 950. It is not conversion to sell for credit, when authorized to sell only for cash; Loveless v. Fowler, 79 Ga. 134, 4 S. E. 103, 11 Am. St. Rep. 407; but exchanging the goods has been held a conversion; Ainsworth v. Partillo, 13 Ala. 460; a failure to sell when ordered; Barton v. White's Adm'r, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 579; Ainsworth v. Partillo, 13 Ala. 460; improper or informal seizure of goods by an officer; Sanborn v. Hamilton, 18 Vt. 590; Reynolds v. Shuler, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 323; Burk v. Baxter, 3 Mo. 207; Martin v. England, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 313; Burgin v. Burgin, 23 N. C. 453; Calkins v. Lockwood, 17 Conn. 154, 42 Am. Dec. 729; Fiedler v. Maxwell, 2 Blatchf. 552, Fed. Cas. No. 4,760; Ferguson v. Clifford, 37 N. H. 86; informal sale by such officer; Pierce v. Benjamin, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 356, 25 Am. Dec. 396; or appropriation to himself; Perkins v. Thompson, 3 N. H. 144; as against such officer in the last three cases; the adulteration of liquors as to the whole quantity affected; 3 A. & E. 306; Young v. Mason, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 551; an excessive levy on a defendant's goods, followed by a sale; 6 Q. B. 381; but not including a mere trespass with no further intent; 8 M. & W. 540; Stevens v. Curtis, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 227; nor an accidental loss by mere omission of a carrier; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 643; 5 Burr. 2825; Dwight v. Brewster, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 50, 11 Am. Dec. 133; Hawkins v. Hoffman, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 586, 41 Am. Dec. 767; nor mere non-feasance; 2 B. & P. 438; Cairnes v. Bleecker, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 300. A manual taking is not necessary.

Trover will lie for the value of property illegally withheld under an unlawful claim for freight charges; Marsh v. R. Co., 9 Fed. 873; Richardson v. Rich, 104 Mass. 156, 6 Am. Rep. 210; Beasley v. R. Co., 27 App. D. C. 595, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1048; though the refusal to surrender was conditional, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the bill of lading or the waybill was the true statement of the sum due; Beasley v. R. Co., 27 App. D. C. 595, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1048. It is not conversion for a common carrier, who has received property from one not rightfully entitled to its possession, to deliver it in accordance with the contract of carriage, unless the true owner intervenes before the goods are delivered and demands them; Shellnut v. R. Co., 131 Ga. 404, 62 S. E. 294, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 494; Gurley v. Armstead, 148 Mass. 267, 19 N. E. 389, 2 L. R. A. 80, 12 Am. St. Rep. 555; Burditt v. Hunt, 25 Me. 419, 43 Am. Dec. 289; contra, Southern Express Co. v. Palmer, 48 Ga. 85.

Where the carrier has been notified by the true owner while the goods are still in its possession, however, it is a conversion to deliver them according to the directions of the shipper; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jordon, 67 Kan. 86, 72 Pac. 533; Charleston & W. C. R. Co. v. Pope, 122 Ga. 577, 50 S. E. 374.

The intention required is simply an intent to use or dispose of the goods, and the knowledge or ignorance of the defendant as to their ownership has no influence in deciding the question of conversion; Lee v. McKay, 25 N. C. 29; Thayer v. Wright, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 180; Thrall v. Lathrop, 30 Vt. 307, 73 Am. Dec. 306; Riley v. Water Power Co., 11 Cush. (Mass.) 11; Newkirk v. Dalton, 17 Ill. 413; Bartlett v. Hoyt, 33 N. H. 151.

A license may be presumed where the taking was under a necessity, in some cases; 6 Esp. 81; or, it is said, to do a work of charity; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 643; or a kindness to the owner; 4 Esp. 195; Sparks v. Purdy, 11 Mo. 219; Plumer v. Brown, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 578; without intent, in the last two cases, to injure or convert it; Plumer v. Brown, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 578. As to what constitutes a conversion as between joint owners, see Lowthorp v. Smith, 2 N. C. 255; White v. Osborn, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 72; Campbell v. Campbell, 6 N. C. 65; Bradley v. Arnold, 16 Vt. 382; and as to a joint conversion by two or more, see White v. Demary, 2 N. H. 546; Forbes v. Marsh, 15 Conn. 384; Guerry v. Kerton, 2 Rich. (S. C.) 507; White v. Wall, 40 Me. 574. A tenant in common can maintain trover for the sale or attempted sale of the common chattel; Williams v. Chadbourne, 6 Cal. 559; Dyckman v. Valiente, 42 N. Y. 549; contra, Barton v. Burton, 27 Vt. 93; 9 Ex. 145; some cases hold that nothing short of the destruction of the plaintiff's property is a conversion, because a sale passes only the vendor's title and the co-tenant continues a co-tenant with the purchaser; Big. Torts 204. It is held also that trover lies, between co-tenants, for a mere withholding of the chattel, or the misuse of it, or for a refusal to terminate the common interest; Agnew v. Johnson, 17 Pa. 373, 55 Am. Dec. 565; Fiquet v. Allison, 12 Mich. 328, 86 Am. Dec. 54.

An original unlawful taking is in general conclusive evidence of a conversion; Davis v. Duncan, 1 McCord (S. C.) 213; Farrington v. Payne, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 431; Hyde v. Noble, 13 N. H. 494, 38 Am. Dec. 508; Garrard v. R. Co., 29 Pa. 154; Skinner v. Brigham, 126 Mass. 132; as is the existence of a state of things which constitutes an actual conversion; Everett v. Coffin, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 603, 22 Am. Dec. 551; Combs v. Johnson, 12 N. J. L. 244; Newsum v. Newsum, 1 Leigh (Va.) 86, 19 Am. Dec. 739; Jewett v. Patridge, 12 Me. 243, 27 Am. Dec. 173; Himes v. McKinney, 3 Mo. 382; Grant v. King, 14 Vt. 367; without showing a demand and refusal; but where the original taking was lawful and the detention only is illegal, a demand and refusal to deliver must be shown; Witherspoon v. Blewett, 47 Miss. 570; 5 B. & C. 146; Kennet v. Robinson, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 84; Thompson v. Rose, 16 Conn. 71, 41 Am. Dec. 121; Polk's Adm'r v. Allen, 19 Mo. 467; Rogers v. Huie, 2 Cal. 571, 56 Am. Dec. 363; but this evidence is open to explanation and rebuttal; Cooley, Torts 532; 2 Wms. Saund. 47 e; 5 B. & Ald. 847; Thompson v. Rose, 16 Conn. 71, 41 Am. Dec. 121; Jacoby v. Laussatt, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 300; Lockwood v. Bull, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 322, 13 Am. Dec. 539; Munger v. Hess, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 75; Dietus v. Fuss, 8 Md. 148; even though absolute; 2 C. M. & R. 495. Demands and unlawful refusal constitute a conversion; Big. Torts 200; mere refusal is only evidence of conversion; id. 202.

There has been a conspicuous lack of harmony in the decisions as to whether a pledgee or purchaser from one guilty of conversion is himself guilty, before demand and refusal. In England the law is briefly summarized in 46 Solicitor's Journ. 24. In 11 Q. B. Div. 99, it is held that there is no conversion until detention after demand; so also Rawley v. Brown, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 456; but by the weight of American authority demand is not necessary; Riley v. Water Power Co., 11 Cush. (Mass.) 11, and see an article in 15 Am. L. Rev. 363.

The refusal, to constitute such evidence, must be unconditional, and not a reasonable excuse; 3 Ad. & E. 106; Robinson v. Burleigh, 5 N. H. 225; Wood v. Dudley, 8 Vt. 433; Thompson v. Rose, 16 Conn. 76, 41 Am. Dec. 121; Bowman v. Eaton, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 528; or accompanied by a condition which the party has no right to impose; 6 Q. B. 443; Dowd v. Wadsworth, 13 N. C. 130, 18 Am. Dec. 567; if made by an agent, it must be within the scope of his authority, to bind the principal; 6 Jur. 507; Cass v. R. R. Co., 1 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 522; but is not evidence of conversion where accompanied by a condition which the party has a right to impose; 6 Q. B. 443; 5 B. & Ald. 247; Shotwell v. Few, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 302; Dowd v. Wadsworth, 13 N. C. 130, 18 Am. Dec. 567; Watt v. Potter, 2 Mas. 77, Fed. Cas. No. 17,291. It may be made at any time prior to bringing suit; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 644; 11 M. & W. 366; Storm v. Livingston, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 44; if before he has parted with his possession; Knapp v. Winchester, 11 Vt. 351. It may be inferred from non-compliance with a proper demand; 7 C. & P. 339; Judah v. Kemp, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 411. The demand must be a proper one; White v. Demary, 2 N. H. 546; La Place v. Aupoix, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 406; Spence v. Mitchell, 9 Ala. 744; made by the proper person; see 2 Brod. & B. 447; Watt v. Potter, 2 Mas. 77, Fed. Cas. No. 17,291; Carr v. Farley, 12 Me. 328; and upon the proper person or persons; 3 Q. B. 699; White v. Demary, 2 N. H. 546. The plaintiff must have at least the right to immediate possession; Hardy v. Munroe, 127 Mass. 64.

CONVEYANCE. The transfer of the title of land from one person or class of persons to another. Dickerman v. Abrahams, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 551; Abendroth v. Town of Greenwich, 29 Conn. 356.

There is no magical meaning in this word; it denotes an instrument which carries from one person to another an interest in land; Cairns, L. C., in L. R. 10 Ch. App. 12.

The instrument for effecting such transfer. It includes leases; Jones v. Marks, 47 Cal. 242; and mortgages; Odd Fellows Savings Bank v. Banton, 46 Cal. 603.

When there is no express agreement to the contrary, the expense of the conveyance falls upon the purchaser; 2 Ves. 155, note; who must prepare and tender the conveyance. But see, contra, Fairfax v. Lewis, 2 Rand. (Va.) 20; Warvelle, Vend. 347. The expense of the execution of the conveyance is, on the contrary, usually borne by the vendor; Sugd. Vend. & P. 296; contra, Fairfax v. Lewis, 2 Rand. (Va.) 20; Cooper v. Brown, 2 McLean 495, Fed. Cas. No. 3,191. See Livermore v. Bagley, 3 Mass. 487; Dudley v. Sumner, 5 id. 472; Eunom. 2, § 12.

The forms of conveyance have varied widely from each other at different periods in the history of the law, and in the various states of the United States. The mode at present prevailing in this country is by bargain and sale.

A lease is a conveyance; Shimer v. Town of Phillipsburg, 58 N. J. L. 506, 33 Atl. 852; Sanford v. Johnson, 24 Minn. 172; Jones v.

Marks, 47 Cal. 242; Crouse v. Michell, 130 Mich. 347, 90 N. W. 32, 97 Am. St. Rep. 479; Koeber v. Somers, 108 Wis. 497, 84 N. W. 991, 52 L. R. A. 512; Milliken v. Faulk, 111 Ala. 658, 20 South. 594; contra, Stone v. Stone, 1 R. I. 425 (under a general recording statute; and is it where a married woman's act requires a husband to join in all conveyances?); Heal v. Oil Co., 150 Ind. 483, 50 N. E. 482; Perkins v. Morse, 78 Me. 17, 2 Atl. 130, 57 Am. Rep. 780; Sullivan v. Barry, 46 N. J. L. 1; nor within meaning of an act declaring that no covenants shall be implied in any conveyance of real estate; Tone v. Brace, 11 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 566; Mayor, etc., of City of New York v. Mable, 13 N. Y. 151, 64 Am. Dec. 538; Shaft v. Carey, 107 Wis. 273, 83 N. W. 288. Where a statute allowed appeals in cases involving conveyances of real estate, it was held that an order directing a lease to be executed was not within the statute; Tuohy's Estate, 23 Mont. 305, 58 Pac. 722.

CONVEYANCER. One who makes it his business to draw deeds of conveyance of lands for others and to investigate titles to real property. They frequently act as brokers for the sale of real estate and obtaining loans on mortgage, and transact a general real estate business.

CONVEYANCING. A term including both the science and art of transferring titles to real estate from one man to another.

It includes the examination of the title of the alienor, and also the preparation of the instruments of transfer. It is, in England and Scotland, and, to a less extent, in the United States, a highly artificial system of law, with a distinct class of practitioners. A profound and elaborate treatise on the English law of conveyancing is Mr. Preston's. Geldart and Thornton's works are also important; and an interesting and useful summary of the American law is given in Washburn on Real Property. See Clerke; Martindale; Morris; Yeakle, Conveyancing.

CONVEYANCING COUNSEL TO THE COURT OF CHANCERY. Certain counsel, not less than six in number, appointed by the Lord Chancellor, for the purpose of assisting the court of chancery, or any judge thereof, with their opinion in matters of title and conveyancing. Stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, §§ 40, 41.

CONVICIUM. In Civil Law. The name of a species of slander or injury uttered in public, and which charged some one with some act contra bonos mores. Vicat; Bac. Abr. Slander, 29.

CONVICT. One who has been condemned by a competent court. One who has been convicted of a crime or misdemeanor.

He differs from a slave, not being mere property without civil rights, but having all the rights of an ordinary citizen not taken from him by the law. While the law takes his liberty and imposes a duty of servitude and observance of discipline, it does not deny his right of personal security against unlawful invasion; Westbrook v. State, 133 Ga. 578, 66 S. E. 788, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 591, 18 Ann. Cas. 295. See PRISONER; PRISON LABOR.

To condemn. To find guilty of a crime or misdemeanor. 4 Bla. Com. 362.

CONVICT-MADE GOODS. See PRISON LABOR.

CONVICTED. Attaint. Thayer, Evidence.

CONVICTION (Lat. convictio; from con, with, vincire, to bind). In Practice. That legal proceeding of record which ascertains the guilt of the party and upon which the sentence or judgment is founded. Nason v. Staples, 48 Me. 123; Com. v. Lockwood, 109 Mass. 323, 12 Am. Rep. 699; Com. v. Gorham, 99 Mass. 420.

Finding a person guilty by verdict of a jury. 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 223; see 45 Alb. L. J. 1.

A record of the summary proceedings upon any penal statute before one or more justices of the peace or other persons duly authorized, in a case where the offender has been convicted and sentenced. Holthouse, Dict.

In its popular sense a verdict of guilty is said to be a conviction; Smith v. Com., 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 69. In its strict legal sense it means judgment on a plea or verdict of guilty; Com. v. McDermott, 224 Pa. 363, 73 Atl. 427, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 431.

The first of the definitions here given undoubtedly represents the accurate meaning of the term, and includes an ascertainment of the guilt of the party by an authorized magistrate in a summary way, or by confession of the party himself, as well as by verdict of a jury. The word is also used in each of the other senses given. It is said to be sometimes used to denote final judgment. Dwar. 2d ed. 683.

Summary conviction is one which takes place before an authorized magistrate without the intervention of a jury.

Conviction must precede judgment or sentence; In re McNeill, 1 Cal. (N. Y.) 72; State v. Cross, 34 Me. 594; see Faunce v. People, 51 Ill. 311; but it is not necessarily or always followed by it; 1 Den. C. C. 568; Ex parte Dick, 14 Pick (Mass.) 88; Kane v. People, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 204; Smith v. Eames, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 76, 36 Am. Dec. 515. Generally, when several are charged in the same indictment, some may be convicted and the others acquitted; 2 Den. C. C. 86; State v. Allen, 11 N. C. 356; Bloomhuff v. State, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 205; but not where a joint offence is charged; Stephens v. State, 14 Ohio, 386; State v. Malnor, 28 N. C. 340. A person cannot be convicted of part of an offence charged in an indictment, except by statute; Com. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 250; State v. Shoemaker, 7 Mo. 177; State v. Bridges, 5 N. C. 134; Cameron v. State, 13 Ark. 712. A conviction prevents a second prosecution for the same offence; Whart. Cr. Pl. § 456;

U. S. v. Keen, 1 McLean 429, Fed. Cas. No. 15,510; State v. Benham, 7 Conn. 414; Mount v. State, 14 Ohio 295, 45 Am. Dec. 542; State v. Norvell, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 24, 24 Am. Dec. 458; Solliday v. Com., 28 Pa. 13. But the recovery in a civil suit, of a fine, part of a penalty under a statute, does not prevent the prosecution of the defendant for the purpose of enforcing the full penalty by imprisonment; In re Leszynsky, 16 Blatchf. 9, Fed. Cas. No. 8,279. A conviction of a less offence may be had where the indictment charges a greater offence, which necessarily includes the less; State v. Outerbridge, 82 N. C. 621; Green v. State, 8 Tex. App. 71; De Lacy v. State, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 401; State v. O'Kane, 23 Kan. 244; State v. Schele, 52 Ia. 608, 3 N. W. 632. As to the rule where the indictment under which the conviction is procured is defective and liable to be set aside, see 1 Bish. Cr. L. §§ 663, 664; 4 Co. 44a.

At common law conviction of certain crimes when accompanied by judgment disqualifies the person convicted as a witness; Keithler v. State, 10 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 192. And see Utley v. Merrick, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 302. But where a statute making defendants witnesses is without exception, a conviction rendering such defendant infamous will not disqualify him; Delamater v. People, 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 332; Newman v. People, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 630. See Com. v. Wright, 107 Mass. 403.

Summary convictions, being obtained by proceedings in derogation of the common law, must be obtained strictly in pursuance of the provisions of the statute; 1 Burr. 613; and the record must show fully that all proper steps have been taken; Welman v. Polhill, R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 235; Singleton v. Com'rs of Tobacco Inspection, 2 Bay (S. C.) 105; Bigelow v. Stearns, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 39, 41, 10 Am. Dec. 189; Chase v. Hathaway, 14 Mass. 224; Cumming's Case, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 51; Keeler v. Milledge, 24 N. J. L. 142; and especially that the court had jurisdiction; Brackett v. State, 2 Tyler (Vt.) 167; Powers v. People, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 292; Mayor, etc., of City of Philadelphia v. Nell, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 475.

As to payment of costs upon conviction, see 1 Bish. Cr. Pr. § 1317, n.

CONVIVIUUM. A tenure by which a tenant was bound to provide meat and drink for his lord at least once in the year. Cowell.

CONVOCAATION (Lat. con, together, voco, to call). In Ecclesiastical Law. The general assembly of the clergy to consult upon ecclesiastical matters. See COURT OF CONVOCAATION; CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

CONVOY. A naval force, under the command of an officer appointed by government, for the protection of merchant-ships and others, during the whole voyage, or such part of it as is known to require such protection. Marsh. Ins. b. 1, c. 9, s. 5; Park. Ins. 388.

Bouv.—43

Warranties are sometimes inserted in policies of insurance that the ship shall sail with convoy. To comply with this warranty, five things are essential: first, the ship must sail with the regular convoy appointed by the government; secondly, she must sail from the place of rendezvous appointed by the government; thirdly, the convoy must be for the voyage; fourthly, the ship insured must have sailing instructions; fifthly, she must depart and continue with the convoy till the end of the voyage, unless separated from it by necessity. Marsh. Ins. b. 1, c. 9, s. 5.

CO-OBLIGOR. One who is bound together with one or more others to fulfil an obligation. See PARTIES; JOINDER.

COOL BLOOD. Tranquillity, or calmness. The condition of one who has the calm and undisturbed use of his reason. In cases of homicide, it frequently becomes necessary to ascertain whether the act of the person killing was done in cool blood or not, in order to ascertain the degree of his guilt. Bacon, Abr. Murder (B); Kel. 56; Sid. 177; Lev. 180.

COOLING-TIME. Time for passion to subside and reason to interpose. Cooling-time destroys the effect of provocation, leaving homicide murder the same as if no provocation had been given; 1 Russ. Cr. 667; Whart. Hom. 448; McWhirt's Case, 3 Gratt. (Va.) 594, 46 Am. Dec. 196. See HOMICIDE; SELF-DEFENCE.

COPARCENARY, ESTATES IN. Estates of which two or more persons form one heir. 1 Washb. R. P. 414.

The title to such an estate is always by descent. The shares of the tenants need not be equal. The estate is rare in America, but sometimes exists; Manchester v. Doddridge, 3 Ind. 360; Purcell v. Wilson, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 16; Rector v. Waugh, 17 Mo. 13, 57 Am. Dec. 251; Gilpin v. Hollingsworth, 3 Md. 190, 56 Am. Dec. 737. See WATK. CONV. 145.

COPARCENERS. Persons to whom an estate of inheritance descends jointly, and by whom it is held as an entire estate. 2 Bla. Com. 187.

In the old English and the American sense the term includes males as well as females, but in the modern English use is limited to females; 4 Kent 366. But the husband of a deceased coparcener, if entitled as tenant by the curtesy, holds as a coparcener with the surviving sisters of his wife, as does also the heir-at-law of his deceased wife upon his own death; Brown, Dict.

COPARTNER. One who is a partner with one or more other persons; a member of a partnership.

COPARTNERSHIP. A partnership.

COPARTNERY. In Scotch Law. The contract of copartnership. Bell, Dict.

COPE. A duty charged on lead from certain mines in England. Blount.

COPIA LIBELLI DELIBERANDA. A writ to enable a man accused to get a copy of the libel from the judge ecclesiastical. Cowell.

COPULATIVE TERM. One which is placed between two or more others to join them together.

COPY. A true transcript of an original writing.

Exemplifications are copies verified by the great seal or by the seal of a court. 1 Gilb. Ev. 19.

Examined copies are those which have been compared with the original or with an official record thereof.

Office copies are those made by officers intrusted with the originals and authorized for that purpose.

The papers need not be exchanged and read alternately; 2 Taunt. 470; 1 Stark. 183; 4 Campb. 372; 1 C. & P. 578. An examined copy of the books of an unincorporated bank is not evidence per se; Ridgway v. Bank, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 256, 14 Am. Dec. 681; Vance v. Reardon, 2 N. & M'C. 299; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 508.

Copies cannot be given in evidence, unless proof is made that the original is lost or in the power of the opposite party, and, in the latter case, that notice has been given him to produce the original; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 508.

A translation of a book is not a copy; Stowe v. Thomas, 2 Wall. Jr. 547; 2 Am. L. Reg. 229, Fed. Cas. No. 13,514; a copy of a book means a transcript of the entire work; Rogers v. Jewett, 12 Mo. Law Rep. N. S. 339, Fed. Cas. No. 12,012.

As to copies mechanically made being originals, see International Harvester Co. of America v. Elfstrom, 101 Minn. 263, 112 N. W. 252, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 343, 118 Am. St. Rep. 626, 11 Ann. Cas. 107.

COPYHOLD. A tenure by copy of court-roll. Any species of holding by particular custom of the manor. The estate so held.

A copyhold estate was originally an estate at the will of the lord, agreeably to certain customs evidenced by entries on the roll of the courts baron. Co. Litt. 63 a; 2 Bla. Com. 95; 1 Poll. & M. 351, 357. It is a villenage tenure deprived of its servile incidents. The doctrine of copyhold is of no application in the United States. Wms. R. P. 257, 258, Rawle's note; 1 Washb. R. P. 26. See VILLEIN.

COPYHOLDER. A tenant by copyhold tenure (by copy of court-roll). 2 Bla. Com. 95.

COPYRIGHT. The exclusive privilege, secured according to certain legal forms, of printing, or otherwise multiplying, publishing, and vending copies of certain literary or artistic productions.

According to the practice of legislation in England and America, the term copyright is confined to the exclusive right secured to the author or proprietor of a writing or drawing, which may be multiplied by the arts of printing in any of its branches. Property in the other classes of intellectual objects is usually secured by letters-patent, and the interest is called a patent-right. But the distinction is arbitrary and conventional.

The foundation of all rights of this description is the natural dominion which every one has over his own ideas, the enjoyment of which, although they are embodied in visible forms or characters, he may, if he chooses, confine to himself or impart to others. But, as it would be impracticable in civil society to prevent others from copying such characters or forms without the intervention of positive law, and as such intervention is highly expedient, because it tends to the increase of human culture, knowledge, and convenience, it has been the practice of civilized nations in modern times to secure and regulate the otherwise insecure and imperfect right which, according to the principles of natural justice, belongs to the author of new ideas.

This has been done by securing an exclusive right of multiplying copies for a limited period, as far as the municipal law of the particular country extends. But, inasmuch as the original right, founded in the principles of natural justice, is of an imperfect character, and requires, in order to be valuable, the intervention of municipal law, the law of nations has not taken notice of it as it has of some other rights of property; and therefore all copyright is the result of some municipal regulation, and exists only in the limits of the country by whose legislation it is established. The international copyright which is established in consequence of a convention between any two countries is not an exception to this principle; because the municipal authority of each nation making such convention either speaks directly to its own subjects through the treaty itself, or is exerted in its own limits by some enactment made in pursuance of the international engagement.

It was formerly doubtful in England whether copyright, as to books, existed at common law. The subject was much discussed in 4 H. L. c. 815. It is said that "the negative conclusion is now generally accepted by lawyers." Sir F. Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 200. It was held that the common law copyright for protection exists in favor of works of literature, art or science to this limited extent only, that while they remain unpublished no person can copyright them; 10 Ir. Ch. Rep. 121, followed in [1908] 2 Ch. 441; and that the publisher of a copyrighted unpublished picture is liable for damages for infringement of the owner's common law right of property therein; [1908] 2 Ch. 441.

The following judgment states the law in the United States: "Statutory copyright is not to be confounded with the common law right. At common law the exclusive right to copy existed in the author until he permitted a general publication. Thus, when a book was published in print, the owner's common law right was lost. At common law an author had a property in his manuscript, and might have an action against any one who undertook to publish it without authority. The statute created a new property right, giving to the author, after publication, the exclusive right to multiply copies for a limited period. This statutory right is obtained in a certain way and by the performance of certain acts which the statute points out. That is, the author having complied with the statute and given up his common law right of exclusive duplication prior to general publication, obtained by the method pointed out in the statute an exclusive right to multiply copies and publish the same for the term of years named in the statute. Congress did not sanction an existing right; it created a new one." Caliga v. Newspaper Co., 215 U. S. 188, 30 Sup. Ct. 38, 54 L. Ed. 150. The Act March 4, 1909, expressly reserves the common law rights of an author of an unpublished work in law or in equity.

By art. 1, § 8, of the federal constitution, power was given to congress "to promote the progress of science and the useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries." The following is a concise and substantial abstract of the Act of March 4, 1909, in effect July 1, 1909:

The exclusive rights secured under the act are to print, reprint, publish, copy and vend the copyrighted work; to translate into other languages or make other versions, if a literary work; to dramatize it if non-dramatic; to convert it into a novel or other non-dramatic work, if a drama; to arrange or adapt it if it be a musical work; to complete it if it be a model or a design for a work of art; to deliver or authorize its delivery in public for profit if it be a lecture, etc.; to perform or represent it publicly if it be a drama, or if it be a dramatic work and not reproduced for sale, to vend any manuscript or record of it; to make any transcription or record of it which may be exhibited, etc.; to exhibit it, etc., in any manner whatsoever; if it be a musical composition, to perform it publicly for profit, and for the purpose of publishing and vending copies to make any arrangement or setting of it or of the melody of it in any system of notation or form of record from which it may be reproduced, provided that the act so far as it secures copyright controlling the parts of instruments serving to reproduce mechanically the musical work shall not include the works of a foreign author or composer unless the nation of such composer grants to citizens of the United States similar rights, and provided that whenever the owner of the musical copyright has used or permitted it, etc., to be used mechanically, any other person may make similar use of it upon the payment of a royalty of two cents on each part manufactured. The reproduction of a mechanical composition on coin-operating machines is not to be deemed a public performance for profit unless a fee is charged for admission to the place where it occurs.

Nothing in the act shall be construed to annul or limit the right of the author or proprietor of an unpublished work, at common law or in equity, to prevent the copying, publication or use of his work without his consent, and to obtain damages therefor.

By section 4, copyright works include all the writings of an author; and by section 5 the subject-matter of copyright is in the following classes:

Books, including composite and cyclopedic works, directories, gazetteers, and other compilations; periodicals, including newspapers; lectures, sermons, addresses (prepared for oral delivery); dramatic or dramatico-musical compositions; musical compositions; maps; works of art; models or designs for works of art; reproductions of a work of art; drawings or plastic works of a scientific or technical character; photographs; prints and pictorial illustrations; but this classification shall not limit the subject-matter as defined in section 4, and error in classification shall not invalidate a copyright. By Act of Aug. 24, 1912, two classes were added: Motion-picture photo-plays and motion-pictures other than photo-plays.

Compilations, abridgments, dramatizations, translations, etc., of works in the public domain or of copyrighted works when produced with the consent of the proprietor of the copyright or works republished with new matter, are new works and are subjects of copyright.

No copyright shall subsist in the text of any work which is in the public domain, or in any work which was published in this country or a foreign country prior to the going into effect of the act and not already copyrighted in the United States, or in any publication of the United States government.

Alien authors or proprietors are within the act if domiciled within the United States at the time of the first publication, or if the nation of such alien has extended reciprocal rights to citizens of the United States.

A copyright is secured by publication with notice of copyright attached to each copy of the work.

Registration of a claim to a copyright is obtained by complying with the terms of the act, including the deposit of copies, and upon such compliance the register of copyrights shall issue the prescribed certificate.

Copyrights may be had on the works of an author, of which copies are not reproduced for sale, upon the deposit of one copy of such work, if it be a lecture, etc., or a dramatic or musical, etc., composition; of a title and description, with one print taken from each scene or act, if the work be a motion-picture photo-play; of a photographic print if a photograph; of a title and description, with not less than two prints taken from different sections of a complete motion-picture, if the work be a motion-picture other than a photo-play; or of a photograph or other identifying reproduction, if a work of art, plastic work or drawing.

After securing copyright by publication, with notice, two complete copies of the best edition of the work shall be promptly deposited in the copyright office at Washington.

There are provisions for the manufacture of books, etc., within the limits of the United States.

"Notice of copyright shall consist either of the word 'Copyright' or the abbreviation 'Copr.' accompanied by the name of the copyright proprietor, and if the work be a printed, literary, musical or dramatic work, the year of the copyright," except that on maps, works of art, photographs, etc., it may consist of the letter "C" in a circle, with the initials, monogram or symbol of the proprietor, but on some accessible portions of such copies the name must appear. In a printed publication, the copyright notice must be on the title page or the page immediately following, or, if a periodical, upon the first page of text of each separate number, or under the title heading, or in a musical work either on the title page or the first page of music.

Copyright is for twenty-eight years from the date of first publication, whether the copyrighted work bears the author's true name or is published anonymously or under an assumed name. If the work is posthumous, a periodical, an encyclopædia, or other composite work, or was copyrighted by a corporation (not being the author's assignee or licensee) or by an employer for whom a work was made for hire, there may be a renewal for twenty-eight years, if applied for within one year before expiration. In case of any other copyrighted work, the author, or if not living, his widow or children, or failing all such, his executors or next of kin, may renew for twenty-eight years, if application is made more than one year before expiration.

Jurisdiction of all suits is vested in the district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant or his agent is an inhabitant or in which he may be found.

Section 25 (Act of March 4, 1909, as amended by Act of Aug. 24, 1912) provides for injunctions in cases of infringement, and specifies the measure of damages in certain cases; also provides for the surrender and destruction of infringing copies, etc. Injunctions may be served on the parties anywhere in the United States, and shall be operative throughout the United States and enforceable by any other court or judge. Such proceedings may be reviewed as in any other cases. No criminal proceeding shall be maintained unless commenced within three years.

Assignments of copyright shall be recorded in the copyright office within three months after execution if within the United States or within six months after execution without the United States; but otherwise shall be void as against any mortgagee or subsequent purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice, whose assignment has been recorded. The assignee's name may be substituted in the statutory notice of copyright.

The fee for the registration of any work deposited under the act is one dollar, which includes the certificate of registration under seal, except in cases of photographs, for which the fee is fifty cents when a certificate is not demanded.

The date of publication is the earliest day when copies of the first authorized edition were placed on sale or publicly distributed. "Author" includes an employer in the case of works made for hire.

Oratorios, cantatas, etc., may be performed for charity by public schools, church choirs or vocal societies, when obtained from a public library, or from a public school, church choir or vocal society library, without constituting infringement.

The prohibition of the importation of piratical copies does not apply: To works in raised characters for the blind; to foreign newspapers or magazines, although containing copyright matter printed or reprinted by authority of the copyright proprietor, unless they contain also copyright matter printed or reprinted without such authorization; to an authorized edition of a book in a foreign language, of which only an English translation has been copyrighted here; to books published abroad, with the author's authority, when imported one copy at a time for individual use and not for sale (but excepting a foreign reprint of a book by an American author copyrighted here); or to books imported for the United States or for libraries, etc.; or when such book is part of a library bought en bloc; or when brought personally into the United States.

Cases in the former revision under former acts are retained as likely to be useful under the act of 1909.

What may be copyrighted. Private letters may be copyrighted by their author; Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Sto. 100, Fed. Cas. No. 4,901; and so may abstracts of title; Banker v. Caldwell, 3 Minn. 94 (Gil. 46).

The compilations of existing material selected from common sources arranged and combined in original and useful form are the subject of a copyright, whether it consists wholly of selected matter or partly of original composition; Drone, Copyr. 152. Thus: Dictionaries; 2 Sim. & Stu. 1; gazetteers; 5 Beav. 6; road and guide books; 1 Drew. 353; directories; L. R. 1 Eq. 697; calendars; 12 Ves. 270; catalogues; L. R. 18 Eq. 444; trade catalogues; Da Prato Statuary Co. v. Guilianni Statuary Co., 189 Fed. 90; mathematical tables; 1 Russ. & Myl. 73; a list of hounds; L. R. 9 Eq. 324; a collection of statistics; L. R. 3 Eq. 718.

An abridgment, one not a mere transcript of the part of an original, may be copyrighted; Gray v. Russell, 1 Story 11, Fed. Cas. No. 5,728; so may a digest; Drone, Copyr. 158. One who prepares reports of decided cases may obtain a valid copyright for the parts of which he is the author or compiler; Wheaton v. Peters, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 591, 8 L. Ed. 1055; Little v. Gould, 2 Blatchf. 165, Fed. Cas. No. 8,394; Paige v. Banks, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 608, 20 L. Ed. 709; but the reporter is not entitled to a copyright in the opinion of the court, even though he took it down from the lips of the judge, nor in the head notes when prepared by the judge; Chase v. Sanborn, 6 U. S. Pat. Off. Gaz. 932, Fed. Cas. No. 2,628.

The collection and arrangement of advertisements in a trade directory are the subject of copyright, though each single advertisement is not; [1893] 1 Ch. 218. A compilation made from voluminous public documents may be copyrighted; Hanson v. Jaccard Jewelry Co., 32 Fed. 202. A compilation of prices and quotations on the stock exchange, printed on sheets and issued daily as a newspaper; Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory & Co., 73 Law Times Rep. 120.

A photographer, who makes no charge for photographing an actress in her public character, has the right to secure a copyright for his own exclusive benefit; Press Pub. Co. v. Falk, 59 Fed. 324; and where he produces by an arrangement of lights and shadows, an original effect representing his conception of her in a certain character, he is entitled to the protection of the copyright laws; Falk v. Donaldson, 57 Fed. 32. So of an artistic photograph of a woman and child; Burrow-Giles Lithographic Co. v. Sarony, 111 U. S. 53, 4 Sup. Ct. 279, 28 L. Ed. 349; Falk v. Brett Lithographing Co., 48 Fed. 678.

A "book" may be printed on one sheet; Clayton v. Stone, 2 Paine 383, Fed. Cas. No. 2,872; Drury v. Ewing, 1 Bond 540, Fed. Cas. No. 4,095. As a general rule a printed publication is a book within the copyright laws when its contents are complete in themselves, deal with a single subject, need no continuation, and have appreciable size; Smith v. Hitchcock, 226 U. S. 53, 33 Sup. Ct. 6, 57 L. Ed. 119.

A diagram with directions for cutting ladies' garments printed on a single sheet of paper is a "book"; Drury v. Ewing, 1 Bond 540, Fed. Cas. No. 4,095; a manufacturer of women's wearing apparel issued a book containing illustrations of the latest modes and information as to materials and prices; it was held a proper subject of copyright, though used for advertisements; National Cloak & Suit Co. v. Kaufman, 189 Fed. 215; and so is a cut in an illustrated newspaper; Harper v. Shoppell, 26 Fed. 519; information in a guide-book may be copyrighted; L. R. 1 Eq. 697.

A scene in a play representing a series of dramatic incidents, but with very little dialogue, may be copyrighted; Daly v. Webster, 56 Fed. 483, 4 C. C. A. 10; so of the introduction, chorus, and skeleton of a "topical song"; Henderson v. Tompkins, 60 Fed. 758.

A manufacturer of records for mechanically producing a musical composition may enjoin another from copying his records; Æolian Co. v. Music Roll Co., 196 Fed. 926.

When a new edition differs substantially from the former one, a new copyright may be acquired, provided the alteration shall materially affect the work; Gray v. Russell, 1 Sto. 11, Fed. Cas. No. 5,728; Bonks v. McDivitt, 13 Blatchf. 163, Fed. Cas. No. 961. New editions of a copyright work are protected by the original copyright, but not new matter; Lawrence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 8,136; Farmer v. Lithographing Co., 1 Flipp. 228, Fed. Cas. No. 4,651.

What may not be copyrighted. No copyright can be obtained on racing tips published in a copyrighted newspaper; [1895] 2 Ch. 29; nor on a daily price current; Clayton v. Stone, 2 Paine 382, Fed. Cas. No. 2,872; nor on a blank; Baker v. Selden, 101 U. S. 99, 25 L. Ed. 841; nor cuts contained in a trade catalogue; J. L. Mott Iron Works v. Clow, 72 Fed. 168.

Where a judge of a supreme court of a state prepares the opinion of the court, the statement of the case, and the syllabus, and the reporter of the court takes out a copyright in his own name for the state, the copyright is invalid; Banks v. Manchester, 128 U. S. 244, 9 Sup. Ct. 36, 32 L. Ed. 425. Where a reporter of decisions is employed on condition that his reports shall belong to the state, he is not entitled to a copyright; Little v. Gould, 2 Blatchf. 165, Fed. Cas. No. 8,394; Banks & Bros. v. Pub. Co., 27 Fed. 50.

Publications of an improper kind will not be protected by the courts; Martinetti v. Maguire, 1 Deady (U. S.) 223, Fed. Cas. No. 9,173.

An author cannot acquire any right to the protection of his literary products by using an assumed name or pseudonym. Without the protection of a copyright, his work is dedicated to a public when published; The "Mark Twain" Case, 14 Fed. 728.

The compilation of the statutes of a state may be so original as to entitle the author to a copyright, but he cannot obtain one for the laws alone, and the legislature of the state cannot confer any such exclusive privilege upon him; Davidson v. Wheelock, 27 Fed. 61. Such a compilation of statutes may be copyrighted as to the manner in which the work was done, but not as to the laws alone; id.

A stage dance illustrating the poetry of motion by a series of graceful movements, etc., is not a dramatic composition within the act; Fuller v. Bemis, 50 Fed. 926. The copyright of a book describing a new system of stenography does not protect the system apart from the language by which it is explained; Griggs v. Perrin, 49 Fed. 15.

An opinion is not the subject-matter of copyright; nor is a printed expression of it, unless it amount to a literary composition; [1895] 2 Ch. 29.

As to notice. In the notice of copyright of a photograph the abbreviation "'94," representing the year, is a substantial compliance with the act; Snow v. Mast, 65 Fed. 995. The following notice on a map: "Copyright entered according to Act of Congress, 1889, by T. C. Hefel, Civil Engineer," was held sufficient, since it differed from the prescribed formula only by including words which were surplusage; Hefel v. Land Co., 54 Fed. 179. The words "1889. Copyrighted by B. J. Falk, New York," were held sufficient; Falk v. Schumacher, 48 Fed. 222; Falk v. Seidenberg, 48 Fed. 224. The words "Copyrighted 1891. All rights reserved," were held not a sufficient notice of copyright; Osgood v. Instrument Co., 69 Fed. 291.

The initial of the Christian name is sufficient if the full surname be given; Burrow-Giles Lithographic Co. v. Sarony, 111 U. S. 53, 4 Sup. Ct. 279, 28 L. Ed. 349. Where the printed title was deposited by E. B. Meyers & Chandler and the printed notice of the entry of the copyright showed that the copyright was entered by E. B. Meyers alone, it was held immaterial; Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 657, 9 Sup. Ct. 177, 32 L. Ed. 547.

A copyright may be taken in the name of a trustee for the benefit of some third party who is the author or proprietor; Hanson v. Jewelry Co., 32 Fed. 202; Black v. Henry G. Allen Co., 42 Fed. 618, 9 L. R. A. 433; id., 56 Fed. 764.

One who does business under a fictitious partnership name may receive a copyright under that name; Scribner v. Henry G. Allen Co., 49 Fed. 854. An author of an article intended for a foreign encyclopædia obtained a copyright therefor under an agreement with the publisher. It was held that the agreement was a license only to use the article, and that the copyright was properly in the author's name; Black v. Henry G. Allen Co., 56 Fed. 764. An author of a painting, who, not being a subject of a foreign state with which the United States has copyright relations, is excluded from benefit of copyright, cannot convey such right to a person whose citizenship is within the statute; Bong v. Art Co., 214 U. S. 236, 29 Sup. Ct. 628, 53 L. Ed. 979, 16 Ann. Cas. 1126.

As to what will constitute a sufficient publication to deprive an author of his copyright: The public performance of a play is not such publication; Boucicault v. Wood, 2 Biss. 34, Fed. Cas. No. 1,693; Boucicault v. Hart, 13 Blatchf. 47, Fed. Cas. No. 1,692; the private circulation of even printed copies of a book is not; Bartlett v. Crittenden, 5 McLean 32, Fed. Cas. No. 1,076; Keene v. Wheatley & Clarke, 9 Am. L. Reg. 33, Fed. Cas. No. 7,644; 1 Macn. & G. 25; the deposit of a chart with the secretary of the navy with an express agreement that it was not to be published, is not; Blunt v. Patten, 2 Paine, 393, Fed. Cas. No. 1,579; see generally, Palmer v. De Witt, 47 N. Y. 532, 7 Am. Rep. 488. Publication of a manuscript constitutes a dedication to the public; Carte v. Duff, 25 Fed. 183; Tompkins v. Halleck, 133 Mass. 32, 43 Am. Rep. 480; the sale of a picture unconditionally carries with it the right of making copies of it and the publication thereof; Parton v. Prang, 3 Cliff. 537, Fed. Cas. No. 10,784. A picture which is publicly exhibited without having inscribed upon some visible portion of it, or upon the substance on which it was mounted, the notice required by the statute, is published; Pierce & Bushnell Mfg. Co. v. Werckmeister, 72 Fed. 54, 18 C. C. A. 431. But entering an original painting with the copyright reserved at an exhibition of the Royal Academy whose by-laws prohibit copying, was held not such a publication; American Tobacco Co. v. Werckmeister, 207 U. S. 284, 28 Sup. Ct. 72, 52 L. Ed. 208, 12 Ann. Cas. 595.

The remedy for an infringement of copyright is threefold. By an action of debt for certain penalties and forfeitures given by the statute. By an action on the case at common law for damages, founded on the legal right and the injury caused by the infringement. The action must be case, and not trespass; Atwill v. Ferrett, 2 Blatchf. 39, Fed. Cas. No. 640. By a bill in equity for an injunction to restrain the further infringement, as an incident to which an account of the profits made by the infringer may be ordered by the court; 2 Morg. Lit. 706; 6 Ves. 705; 8 id. 323; 9 id. 341; 1 Russ. & M. 73, 159; 1 Y. & C. 197; 2 Hare 560; though it cannot embrace penalties; Stevens v. Cady, 2 Curt. C. C. 200, Fed. Cas. No. 13,395; Atwill v. Ferrett, 2 Blatchf. 39, Fed. Cas. No. 640.

An injunction may go against an entire work or a part; 2 Russ. 393; Emerson v. Davies, 3 Sto. 768, Fed. Cas. No. 4,436; 2 Beav. 6; 2 Brown, Ch. 80; though the court will not interfere where the extracts are trifling; 2 Swanst. 428; 1 Russ. & M. 73; 2 id. 247.

The remedies of forfeiture and penalty and of injunction given to the owner of a copyrighted map under the former act in case of infringement are exclusive and preclude any resort to an action at law to recover damages sustained; Globe Newspaper Co. v. Walker, 210 U. S. 356, 28 Sup. Ct. 726, 52 L. Ed. 1096.

An injunction to restrain the infringement of the rights of the owner of one directory by another will be limited to the extent to which the two books are identical; List Pub. Co. v. Keller, 30 Fed. 772.

Where the extracts of a copyrighted work are scattered through the defendant's book in such manner that the two cannot be distinguished and separated, the court may enjoin the defendant's book as a whole, but if the matters can be separated the injunction should extend only to the copyrighted matter; Farmer v. Elstner, 33 Fed. 494. Where the author's pirated paragraphs of a digest can be separated from paragraphs not subject to criticism, the injunction should be restricted to the infringing paragraphs, even though it might consume a decade to examine the paragraphs of the digest and compare them. This will not relieve the complainant from the burden of proving his case; West Pub. Co. v. Pub. Co., 64 Fed. 360, 25 L. R. A. 441. Although the court is not convinced that a compilation which wrongfully appropriates extracts from the plaintiff's copyrighted work will injure its sale, yet an injunction in a proper case may be granted. Actual pecuniary damage is not the sole right to enjoining violation of copyright; Farmer v. Elstner, 33 Fed. 494.

The practice of one newspaper copying literary matter from another is no defence to an action for the infringement of a copyright; [1892] 3 Ch. 489, where the cases are collected.

There may be a piracy: 1st. By reprinting the whole or part of a book verbatim. The mere quantity of matter taken from a book is not of itself a test of piracy; 3 M. & C. 737; the court will look at the value or quality more than the quantity taken; Gray v. Russell, 1 Sto. 11, Fed. Cas. No. 5,728. Extracts and quotations fairly made, and not furnishing a substitute for the book itself, or operating to the injury of the author, are allowable; 17 Ves. 422; 1 Campb. 94; Ambl. 694; 2 Swanst. 423; Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Sto. 100, Fed. Cas. No. 4,901; 2 Russ. 383; 2 Beav. 6; 11 Sim. 31. A "fair use" of a book, by way of quotation or otherwise, is allowable; Lawrence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 8,136; L. R. 8 Ex. 1; L. R. 18 Eq. 444; L. R. 5 Ch. 251; it may be for purposes of criticism, but so as not to supersede the work itself; Lawrence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 8,136; L. R. 8 Ex. 1; Harper v. Shoppell, 26 Fed. 519; or in a later work to the extent of fair quotation; 11 Sim. 31; Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Sto. 100, Fed. Cas. No. 4,901; in compiling a directory, but not so as to save the compiler all independent labor; List Pub. Co. v. Keller, 30 Fed. 772; L. R. 1 Eq. 697; 7 id. 34; id. 5 Ch. 279; a descriptive catalogue of fruit, etc.; L. R. 18 Eq. 444; a book on ethnology; L. R. 5 Ch. 251; a dictionary, provided the new book may fairly be considered a new work; 31 L. T. R. 16. See West Pub. Co. v. Pub. Co., 64 Fed. 360, 25 L. R. A. 441, for a full discussion.

2d. By imitating or copying, with colorable alterations and disguises, assuming the appearance of a new work. Where the resemblance does not amount to identity of parallel passages, the criterion is whether there is such similitude and conformity between the two books that the person who wrote the one must have used the other as a model, and must have copied or imitated it; see 5 Ves. 24; 16 id. 269, 422; 2 Brown, Ch. 80; 2 Russ. 385; 2 S. & S. 6; 1 Campb. 94; Gray v. Russell, 1 Sto. 11, Fed. Cas. No. 5,728; Emerson v. Davies, 3 Sto. 768, Fed. Cas. No. 4,436; Webb v. Powers, 2 W. & M. 497, Fed. Cas. No. 17,323; Blunt v. Patten, 2 Paine 393, Fed. Cas. No. 1,579, which was the case of a chart. A fair and bona fide abridgment has in some cases been held to be no infringement of the copyright; 1 Morg. Lit. 319, 343; 2 Atk. 141; 1 Brown, Ch. 451; 5 Ves. 709; Lawrence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 8,136; 1 Y. & C. 298; Story v. Holcombe, 4 McLean 306, Fed. Cas. No. 13,497; Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Sto. 105, Fed. Cas. No. 4,901; 2 Kent 382; see 3 Am. L. Reg. 129. But Drone, Copyright 440, maintains the contrary doctrine. A booklet entitled "Opera Stories," consisting of mere fragmentary statements of the story and characters of the operas, taken from descriptions other than librettos, is not an infringement of the copyrights on the librettos; Ricordi & Co. v. Mason, 201 Fed. 182.

"The true test of piracy, then, is not whether a composition is copied in the same language or the exact words of the original, but whether in substance it is reproduced; not whether the whole or whether a material part is taken. In this view of the subject it is no defence of piracy that the work entitled to protection has not been copied literally; that it has been translated into another language; that it has been dramatized; that the whole has not been taken; that it has been abridged; that it is reproduced in a new and more useful form. The controlling question always is whether the substance of the work is taken without authority;" Drone, Copyr. 385.

An author may resort with full liberty to the common sources of information and make use of the common materials open to all, but his work must be the result of his own independent labor; Simms v. Stanton, 75 Fed. 6.

A subsequent compiler of a directory is only required to do for himself that which the first compiler has done. He may not use a previous compilation to save himself trouble, though he do so but to a very limited extent; but he may use the former work to verify the spelling of names or the correctness of the addresses; List Pub. Co. v. Keller, 30 Fed. 772.

The compiler of a digest may compare notes, abstracts, and paragraphs from opinions of the courts and from syllabi prepared by the courts, and may digest such opinions and syllabi from printed copies and published in a copyrighted system, but he may not copy the original work of the reporter, or use his work in any way in order to lighten his labors, though he may use it to verify his own accuracy, to detect errors, etc.; West Pub. Co. v. Pub. Co., 64 Fed. 360, 25 L. R. A. 441. The author of a law book may copy the citations of a prior author if he examines and verifies the cases cited and may use them in the same order and with additions and subtractions; White v. Bender, 185 Fed. 921. A copyrighted law book is not infringed by the collection by another author of the cases cited therein for use in another publication; Thompson Co. v. Law Book Co., 122 Fed. 922, 59 C. C. A. 148, 62 L. R. A. 607.

The singing of a single verse and chorus of a copyrighted song without musical accompaniment, in imitation of the voice, postures and mannerisms of another, is not an infringement; Green v. Minzensheimer, 177 Fed. 286; but contra, where one sings an entire copyrighted song with musical accompaniment she is guilty of infringement, though she intends merely to mimic another; Green v. Minzensheimer, 177 Fed. 287.

Mere fragmentary scenes of various operas do not infringe the copyrighted librettos; Ricordi & Co. v. Mason, 201 Fed. 184.

Moving pictures depicting the story of an author's work are a dramatization of it and infringe the copyright; Kalem Co. v. Harper Bros., 222 U. S. 55, 32 Sup. Ct. 20, 56 L. Ed. 92, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1285.

A translation has been held not to be a violation of the copyright of the original; Stowe v. Thomas, 2 Wall. Jr. 547, Fed. Cas. No. 13,514. The correctness of this decision is questioned in Drone, Copyr. 455.

When the infringement of a copyright is established the question of intent is immaterial; Fishel v. Lueckel, 53 Fed. 499.

A copyrighted compilation, comprising lists of trotting and pacing horses with their speed, is infringed by one who uses the table to make up records of horses of 2.30 or better, notwithstanding the fact that the latter compilation might have been made by the defendant from other publications valuable to him; American Trotting Register Ass'n v. Gocher, 70 Fed. 237.

Damages. Where the infringing material is so intermingled with the rest of the contents as to be almost incapable of separation, the infringer is liable for the entire profit realized from the book; Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 617, 9 Sup. Ct. 177, 32 L. Ed. 547; National Hat Pouncing Mach. Co. v. Hedden, 148 U. S. 488, 13 Sup. Ct. 680, 37 L. Ed. 529. Where the infringing publication uses only a part of the original matter and is issued in a cheaper form, the measure of damages is the profit realized by the infringer, and not what the copyright owner would have realized by a sale of an equal number of the original copyright work; Scribner v. Clark, 50 Fed. 473.

The owner of a copyright who wishes to sell the published work directly and only to individual subscribers, through canvassers employed by him, will be protected from interference by other dealers who have surreptitiously obtained copies without his consent and offered them for sale; Bill Pub. Co. v. Smythe, 27 Fed. 914. But it has been held that the owner of a copyright transferring the title of copyrighted books under an agreement restricting their use, cannot, under the copyright statutes, restrain sales of books in violation of the agreement; Harrison v. Maynard, Merrill & Co., 61 Fed. 689, 10 C. C. A. 17; the remedy is confined to the breach of the contract; id.

A notice on a copyright book that it must not be sold for less than a specified price does not reserve any right to the copyright owner, nor limit the absolute title acquired by purchaser; Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 139 Fed. 155, affirmed in 147 Fed. 15, 77 C. C. A. 607, and 210 U. S. 339, 28 Sup. Ct. 722, 52 L. Ed. 1086.

The words "Webster's Dictionary" are public property by reason of the expiration of the copyright in the dictionary; Merriam v. Clothing Co., 47 Fed. 411.

One who buys copies of a publication which violates copyright and sells them again is liable for the profit on his sales; Myers v. Callaghan, 24 Fed. 636.

Copyright is based on statute, while unfair competition, except as affected by legislative enactment in connection with patents, trade-marks, etc., is dependent on abstract principles of law. Copyright relates to the printed material of a publication, while unfair competition may be concerned with any article of trade whether having words or letters in its composition and appearance or not; West Pub. Co. v. Edward Thompson Co., 176 Fed. 833, 100 C. C. A. 303.

The British copyright code went into effect July 1, 1912. Australia adopted a code in 1905 and Canada in 1911.

See LITERARY PROPERTY; Bowker, Copyright.

International Copyright. Under the reciprocity clause of the Act of March 4, 1909, the President made proclamations April 9, 1910, that the following countries were entitled to all the benefits of the acts, excepting those under section 1 (e): Austria, Belgium, Chile, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, France, Germany, Great Britain and possessions, Italy, Mexico, Netherlands and possessions, Norway, Portugal, Spain and Switzerland. A like proclamation was made as to Luxemburg, June 29, 1910; as to Sweden, May 26, 1911; as to Tunis, October 4, 1912.

The benefits of the act as to section 1 (e) were extended by proclamation: to Germany, December 8, 1910; Belgium, June 14, 1911; Cuba, November 27, 1911; Luxemburg, June 14, 1911; and Norway, June 14, 1911.

A copyright convention with Hungary went into effect October 15, 1912.

The United States, as a party only to the Pan-American Union and not a member of the International Copyright Union under the Berne-Berlin Conventions, has not secured for its citizens general rights of copyright in other countries, without repetition of formalities, and such rights are secured only by reciprocity in the countries designated by presidential proclamation and according to the formalities of their domestic legislation. The International Copyright Union held a convention in Berlin, 1908, which replaced, in the relations between the contracting states, the Convention of Berne of 1886, with the additional act and the interpretative declaration of 1896. Fifteen signatory powers of the Union attended, including France, Germany and Great Britain; the United States was not a signatory power. Twenty non-Union powers also attended the Conference, including the United States whose delegate, Thorvald Solberg, while stating that it was not deemed possible by the United States to send a plenipotentiary delegate, also expressed the sympathy of the United States with the purposes of the Union. See Bowker, Copyright.

CORAAGIUM or CORAAGE. Measures of corn. An unusual and extraordinary tribute, arising only on special occasions. They are thus distinguished from services. Mentioned in connection with hidage and carvage. Cowell.

CORAM IPSO REGE (Lat.). Before the king himself. Proceedings in the court of king's bench are said to be coram rege ipso. 3 Bla. Com. 41.

CORAM NOBIS. A writ of error on a judgment in the king's bench is called a coram nobis (before us). 1 Archb. Pr. 234. See CORAM VOBIS.

CORAM NON JUDICE. Acts done by court which has no jurisdiction either over the person, the cause, or the process, are said to be coram non jndice. Grumon v. Raymond, 1 Conn. 40, 6 Am. Dec. 200. Such acts have no validity. If an act is required to be done before a particular person, it would not be considered as done before him if he were asleep or non compos mentis; Wickes' Lessee v. Caulk, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 42; Griffith v. Frazier, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 9, 3 L. Ed. 471; Fisher v. Harnden, 1 Paine 55, Fed. Cas. No. 4,819; 1 Prest. Conv. 266.

CORAM PARIBUS. In the presence of the peers or freeholders. 2 Bla. Com. 307.

CORAM VOBIS. A writ of error directed to the same court which tried the cause, to correct an error in fact. Bridendolph v. Zellers' Ex'rs, 3 Md. 325; 3 Steph. Com. 612.

If a judgment in the King's Bench be erroneous in matter of fact only, and not in point of law, it may be reversed in the same court by writ of error coram nobis (before us), or quæ coram nobis residant; so called from its being founded on the record and process, which are stated in the writ to remain in the court of the king before the king himself. But if the error be in the judgment itself, and not in the process, a writ of error does not lie in the same court upon such judgment. 1 Rolle, Abr. 746. In the Common Pleas, the record and proceedings being stated to remain before the king's justices, the writ is called a writ of error coram vobis (before you) or quæ coram vobis residant. 3 Chit. Bla. Com. 406, n.

CORD. A measure of wood, containing 128 cubic feet. See Kennedy v. R. Co., 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 169.

CO-RESPONDENT. Any person called upon to answer a petition or other proceeding, but now chiefly applied to a person charged with adultery with the husband or wife, in a suit for divorce, and made jointly a respondent to the suit. See DIVORCE.

CORN. In its most comprehensive sense, this term signifies every sort of grain, as well as peas and beans; this is its meaning in the memorandum usually contained in policies of insurance. But it does not include rice; Park, Ins. 112; 1 Marsh. Ins. 223, n.; Wesk. Ins. 145. See Com. Dig. Biens (G, 1). In the United States it usually means maize, or Indian corn; Sullins v. State, 53 Ala. 474.

CORN-LAWS. Laws regulating the trade in bread-stuffs.

The object of corn laws is to secure a regular and steady supply of the great staples of food; and for this object the means adopted in different countries and at different times widely vary, sometimes involving restriction or prohibition upon the export, and sometimes, in order to stimulate production, offering a bounty upon the export. Of the former character was the famous system of corn laws of England, initiated in 1773 by Burke, and repealed in 1846 under Sir Robert Peel. See Cobden's Life.

CORN RENTS. Rents reserved in wheat or malt in certain university leases in England. Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 6; 2 Bla. Com. 322.

CORNAGE. A species of tenure in England, by which the tenant was bound to blow a horn for the sake of alarming the country on the approach of an enemy. Bac. Abr. Tenure (N.).

CORNET. A commissioned officer in a regiment of cavalry, abolished in England in 1871, and not existing in the United States army.

CORODY. An allowance of meat, drink, money, clothing, lodging, and such like necessities for sustenance. 1 Bla. Com. 283; 1 Chit. Pr. 225. An allowance from an abbey or house of religion, to one of the king's servants who dwells therein, of meat and other sustenance. Fitzh. N. B. 230.

An assize lay for a corody; Cowell. Corodies are now obsolete; Co. 2d Inst. 630; 2 Bla. Com. 40.

CORONATION. It "is but a royal ornament and solemnization of the royal descent, but no part of the title." By the laws of England there can be no interregnum; 7 Co. Rep. 10 b.

CORONATION OATH. The oath administered to a sovereign in England before coronation. Whart. Law Dic. Its form was somewhat changed at the coronation of Edward VII.

CORONATOR (Lat.). A coroner. Spel.

CORONATORE EXONERANDO. A writ for the removal of a coroner, for a cause therein assigned.

CORONER. An officer whose principal duty it is to hold an inquisition, with the assistance of a jury, over the body of any person who may have come to a violent death, or who has died in prison.

It is his duty, in case of the death of the sheriff or his incapacity, or when a vacancy occurs in that office, to serve all the writs and processes which the sheriff is usually bound to serve; Gunby v. Welcher, 20 Ga. 336; Brown v. Barker, 10 Humph. (Tenn.)

346; Manning v. Keenan, 73 N. Y. 45; 1 Bla. Com. 349. See SHERIFF.

Coroners were county officers placed beside the sheriff to look after the administration of criminal justice and the revenue to the king resulting therefrom; Brunner, 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 31. See Gross, History of Coroners. It is supposed that the first institution of coroners dates from 1194. The office may have existed before then. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 45; Pollock, King's Peace, 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 410.

It was also the coroner's duty to inquire concerning shipwreck, and to find who had possession of the goods; concerning treasure-trove, who were the finders, and where the property was; 1 Bla. Com. 349. The stat. 4 Edw. I. ch. 2 (1276), entitled "De Officio Coronatoris," empowered the coroner to inquire who was slain and who were there, who and in what manner they were culpable of the act or force. Whoever was found culpable was turned over to the sheriff, and whoever was not culpable was attached until the coming of the justices. The Chief Justice of the King's Bench was the chief coroner of all England; though he did not perform the active duties of that office in any one county; 4 Co. 57 b; Bac. Abr. Coroner; 3 Com. Dig. 242; 5 id. 212.

Coroners were abolished in Massachusetts in 1877, and "men learned in the science of medicine" are appointed to make autopsies and in case of a violent death to report it to a justice of the district.

In England a coroner (one in every county and in certain boroughs) holds a court of record; his jury of inquest consists of not less than 12 nor more than 23 persons. Upon a verdict of the jury, the coroner can commit the accused for trial and he may be arraigned without any presentment by a grand jury. Odgers, C. L. 1031.

A coroner is a "judicial officer" within a bribery act; People v. Jackson, 191 N. Y. 293, 84 N. E. 65, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1173, 14 Ann. Cas. 243.

It is proper for a coroner in most cases of homicide to cause an examination to be made by a physician, and in many cases it is his duty so to do; 4 C. & P. 571. See Jameson v. Board of Com'rs of Bartholomew County, 64 Ind. 524; Sanford v. Lee County, 49 Ia. 148; Cook v. Multnomah County, 8 Or. 170.

In Coroner's Duties, 20 D. R. (Pa.) 685, Sulzberger, P. J., instructed the coroner as to his duties in Pennsylvania, where the practice has been much modified, to the effect that the district attorney should always be present at the coroner's inquest and that he has power to cross-examine witnesses; also that if the district attorney is of opinion that there is no evidence to hold the person charged, he should be discharged, but not otherwise.

CORPORAL (Lat. corpus, body). Bodily; relating to the body: as, corporal punishment.

A non-commissioned officer of the lowest grade in an infantry, cavalry, or artillery company.

CORPORAL OATH. An oath which the party takes laying his hand on the gospels. Cowell. It is now held to mean solemn oath. Jackson v. State, 1 Ind. 184.

CORPORAL TOUCH. Actual, bodily contact with the hand.

It was once held that before a seller of personal property could be said to have stopped it in transitu, so as to regain the possession of it, it was necessary that it should come to his corporal touch; but the contrary is now settled. These words were used merely as a figurative expression. 3 Term 464; 5 East 184.

CORPORATION. A body, consisting of one or more natural persons, established by law, usually for some specific purpose, and continued by a succession of members.

"An artificial being created by law and composed of individuals who subsist as a body politic under a special denomination with the capacity of perpetual succession and of acting within the scope of its charter as a natural person." Fltiam v. Hay, 122 Ill. 293. By fiction it is partly a person and partly a citizen, yet it has not the inalienable rights of a natural person: Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 200, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679.

A corporation aggregate is a collection of individuals united in one body by such a grant of privileges as secures succession of members without changing the identity of the body and constitutes the members for the time being one artificial person or legal being capable of transacting the corporate business like a natural person. Bronson, J., People v. Assessors of Village of Watertown, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 620.

For a long time the prevailing theory on the Continent of Europe of the true nature of corporate bodies was that the personality of a corporation was a mere legal fiction, and its rights derived in every case from a special creation by the state. But of late years writers of considerable authority have taken the view that the legal existence or personality of a corporation, though limited in various ways, is quite as real as that of an individual; Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 113, where various authorities are referred to, and the author expresses his belief that the latter view is sounder. The corporation in England was the joint result of certain groups in ecclesiastical life and certain other groups active in temporal affairs. For centuries the development of each was wholly independent of the other. The boroughs first began to secure from the king franchises to hold their own courts, to their own customs and freedom from toll. A borough had two organizations—gild and governmental. They were connected, but not identical. The franchises were in the form of a grant from the king and were made to the burgesses. No legal person was created, but the burgesses died and their privileges were continued to their successors. When individual inhabitants of the borough offended the king by their acts, he took away the franchise of the borough as a punishment, which punishment fell on the community. Once in such a case the Londoners prayed that only the guilty might be punished; Riley, Chronicles §4. The king treated the burgesses as a group and the burgesses in respect to their property acted as a group.

The same idea developed in ecclesiastical life. For wholly different reasons, religious groups were formed. The basic doctrines of the Christian church require co-operation and also continuity of thought and effort. Monasteries, convents and chapters were the result. It became evident that this indefinite something produced by the association of several should be given a name and its status established. There was much blind groping after the nature of this indefinite something. For a time the idea naturally suggested by the analogy of the human body was applied to these groups. The chief officer, as the mayor or the bishop, was the head and the members were the arms, legs, etc. This was called the anthropomorphic theory and for a long time obscured the true corporate idea; 1 Poll. & Maitl. (2d ed.) 491, and citations of the year books there given; 19 Harv. L. Rev. 350.

Finally, however, the oneness of these groups was given a definite recognition, not as a real, but as an ideal or legal person. The conception of an ideal person having legal rights and duties was borrowed directly from the early English theory as to church ownership. In very early times, several centuries at least before the reign of Edward I., there were in England what were vaguely known as church lands. At first the land was given direct to God. Sometimes it was given to a particular saint, who was supposed to guard and protect it. Little by little, the saint and the buildings became merged in each other and the church itself was thought to be the property owner. The functions of ownership were necessarily performed by human beings—by the clergy—and the theory was naturally extended to cases where there was only one cleric. Thus was introduced the corporation sole, characterized as "that unhappy freak of English law"; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 488. In ecclesiastical affairs, the corporation aggregate was almost resolved into a mere collection of corporations sole; id. 507. See infra.

It was not until about the middle of the 15th century that it was settled as a matter of positive law that the corporation must be created by the sovereign power, which rule arose simply from considerations of political expediency. Recognizing that boroughs, organized communities and guilds might become dangerous, the king made them a source of revenue by selling the privilege to exist. In 1440 the first municipal charter was granted. The mayor, burgesses and their successors, mayors and burgesses of the town of Kingston-upon-Hull, were incorporated so as to form "one perpetual corporate commonalty." 19 Harv. L. Rev. 350.

"What we call a corporation was first called 'un corps' or a body, whence our 'body politic,' or 'body corporate'; or 'un gros' or something that had an existence in itself, apart from its constituents. Thus there was gradually evolved the idea of an abstract artificial individuality, composed of members for the time being, to be succeeded by others after them, but continuing after their death. This became the persona ficta of a later time." A. M. Eaton in 1902 Amer. Bar Assoc. Repts. 320. Referring to the earlier historical days, the same author says, (p. 322): "There was no intention on either part to form a corporation, indeed neither knew what a corporation was; for the name did not exist, but the thing itself was being gradually evolved."

For the history of corporations before 1800, see Williston, 2 Harv. L. Rev. 149 (3 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 195); Baldwin, History of Private Corp., 3 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 236.

For centuries the leading case on corporations in England was the case of Sutton's Hospital, 10 Co. 1 (1612), where the king, on the petition of Sutton, had granted a charter to a hospital. Sutton conveyed land to such corporation. Against the contention of the heir that there was no corporation and that the conveyance was void, it was held that both the incorporation and the deed were valid and that the incorporation of the persons might precede the foundation of the hospital; 21 Harv. L. Rev. 306.

It was considered at that time that corporations aggregate could not commit treason, nor be outlawed nor excommunicated, for they have no souls. Neither can they appear in person, but by attorney; they cannot do fealty, for an invisible body can neither be in person nor swear; 10 Coke 32 b. Blackstone said it can neither maintain nor be defendant to an action of battery or such like personal injuries, for a corporation can neither beat, nor be beaten, in its body politic; 1 Bla. Com. 476. It could not be executor or administrator or perform any personal duties, for it could not take an oath for the due execution of the office; id.

The fiction that a corporation can do nothing but by an attorney, that it was an artificial being, guarded by the body of associates forming it, led to the theory that its administrative officers could exercise only a delegated authority; 21 Harv. L. Rev. 535. It is said that under the pressure of modern analysis this fiction tends to yield to more rational ideas, and corporate action is perceived more truly as simple group action; id. A corporation represents the most advanced attainment of the group idea; 19 id. 350.

The first business corporate charter in the United States was in 1768: "The Philadelphia Contributionship for Insuring Houses from Loss by Fire."

Aggregate corporations are those which are composed of two or more members at the same time.

Civil corporations are those which are created to facilitate the transaction of business.

Ecclesiastical corporations are those which are created to secure the public worship of God.

Eleemosynary corporations are those which are created for the purposes of charities, such as schools, hospitals, and the like.

Lay corporations are those which exist for secular purposes.

Municipal corporations are those created for the purpose of administering some portion of the government in a political subdivision of the state, as a city, county, etc.

Private corporations are those which are created wholly or in part, for purposes of private emolument. Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 668, 4 L. Ed. 629; Bank of United States v. Bank, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 907, 6 L. Ed. 244.

Public corporations are those which are exclusively instruments of the public interest.

Corporations sole are those which by law consist of but one member at any one time, as a bishop in England. But see infra; also supra.

In the Dartmouth College Case, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 666, 4 L. Ed. 629, Mr. Justice Story defined the various kinds of corporations as follows:

"An aggregate corporation at common law is a collection of individuals united into one collective body, under a special name, and possessing certain immunities, privileges, and capacities in its collective character, which do not belong to the natural persons composing it. . . . A great variety of these corporations exist in every country governed by the common law; . . . some of these corporations are, from the particular purposes to which they are devoted, denominated spiritual, and some lay; and the latter are again divided into civil and eleemosynary corporations. Eleemosynary corporations are such as are constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms and bounty of the founder. . . . In this class are ranked hospitals, and colleges, etc. Another division of corporations is into public and private. Public corporations are generally esteemed such as exist for public and political purposes only, such as towns, cities, etc. Strictly speaking, public corporations are such only as are founded by the government for public purposes, where the whole interests belong also to the government. If, therefore, the foundation be private, though under the charter of the Government, the corporation is private. . . . For instance, a bank created by the Government for its own uses, whose stock is exclusively owned by the government, is, in the strictest sense, a public corporation. So a hospital created and endowed by the government for general charity. But a bank, whose stock is owned by private persons, is a private corporation. . . . The same doctrine may be affirmed of insurance, canal, bridge, and turnpike companies. In all these cases, the uses may, in a certain sense, be called public, but the corporations are private. . . . This reasoning applies in its full force to eleemosynary corporations. . . . This is the unequivocal doctrine of the authorities; and cannot be shaken but by undermining the most solid foundations of the common law."

Kent divides corporations into ecclesiastical and lay, and lay corporations into eleemosynary and civil; 2 Kent 274.

It has been held that a public corporation is one that cannot carry out the purposes of its organization without certain rights under its charter from the commonwealth, and that mere private corporations are those that need no franchise from the state to carry out such purposes; Allegheny Co. v. Diamond Market, 123 Pa. 164, 16 Atl. 619. But Judge Thompson doubts as to whether these divisions promote clear conceptions of the law; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 22; he considers that a more practical conception would divide them into three classes: public-municipal corporations, to promote the public interest; corporations technically private but of quasi public character, such as railroads etc.; and corporations strictly private; id. § 37.

The essence of a corporation consists "in a capacity (1) to have perpetual succession in a special and in an artificial form; (2) to take and grant property, contract obligations, sue and be sued by its corporate name as an individual; (3) to receive and enjoy in common grants of privileges and immunities; Thomas v. Dakin, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 71.

By both the civil and the common law, the sovereign authority only can create a corporation,—a corporation by prescription, or so old that the license or charter which created it is lost, being presumed, from the long-continued exercise of corporate powers, to have been entitled to them by sovereign grant. In England, corporations are created by royal charter or parliamentary act; in the United States, by legislative act of any state, or of the congress of the United States,—congress having power to create a corporation, as, for instance, a national bank when such a body is an appropriate instrument for the exercise of its constitutional powers; McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 424, 4 L. Ed. 579. In many or most of the states general acts have been passed for the creation of certain classes of some corporations. And some state constitutions have taken from the legislature the power to create them by special act.

All corporations, of whatever kind, are moulded and controlled, both as to what they may do and the manner in which they may do it, by their charters or acts of incorporation, which to them are the laws of their being, which they can neither dispense with nor alter. Subject, however, to such limitations as these, or such as general statute or constitutional law, may impose, every corporation aggregate has, by virtue of incorporation and as incidental thereto, first, the power of perpetual succession, including the admission, and, except in the case of mere stock corporations, the removal for cause, of members; second, the power to sue and be sued, to grant and to receive grants, and to do all acts which it may do at all, in its corporate name; third, to purchase, receive, and to hold lands and other property, and to transmit them in succession; fourth, to have a common seal, and to break, alter, and renew it at pleasure; and, fifth, to make by-laws for its government, so that they be consistent with its charter and with law. It may, within the limits of its charter or act of incorporation express or implied, lawfully do all acts and enter into all contracts that a natural person may do or enter into, so that the same be appropriate as means to the end for which the corporation was created.

It is not obliged to use all its powers unless its charter especially so requires; Illinois Trust & Savings Bank v. Doud, 105 Fed. 123, 44 C. C. A. 389, 52 L. R. A. 481.

A corporation is a creature of the state. It is presumed to be incorporated for the benefit of the public. It receives certain special privileges and franchises and holds them subject to the laws of the state and the limitations of its charter. Its powers are limited by law. It can make no contract not authorized by its charter. Its rights to act as a corporation are only preserved to it so long as it obeys the laws of its creation. There is a reserved right in the legislature to investigate its contracts and ascertain if it has exceeded its powers; Wilson v. U. S., 221 U. S. 382, 31 Sup. Ct. 538, 55 L. Ed. 771, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 558. A corporation of one state may be made a corporation of another state in regard to property and acts within its territorial jurisdiction; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Wheeler, 1 Black (U. S.) 286, 17 L. Ed. 130; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 65, 20 L. Ed. 354; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 270, 20 L. Ed. 571; St. Louis R. Co. v. Vance, 96 U. S. 450, 24 L. Ed. 752; Clark v. Barnard, 108 U. S. 436, 2 Sup. Ct. 878, 27 L. Ed. 780; Martin v. R. Co., 151 U. S. 673, 14 Sup. Ct. 533, 38 L. Ed. 311; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Trust Co., 174 U. S. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. 817, 43 L. Ed. 1081; Mackay v. R. Co., 82 Com. 73, 72 Atl. 583, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 768; but the mere grant of privileges and powers to it as an existing corporation, without more, does not confer the power usually exercised over corporations by the state or by the legislature. The language used must imply creation or adoption; Peunsylvania R. Co. v. R. Co., 118 U. S. 290, 6 Sup. Ct. 1094, 30 L. Ed. 83; Goodlett v. R. R., 122 U. S. 391, 7 Sup. Ct. 1254, 30 L. Ed. 1230; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. James, 161 U. S. 545, 16 Sup. Ct. 621, 40 L. Ed. 802. Where a corporation is incorporated simultaneously in several states, it exists in each state; Pinney v. Nelson, 183 U. S. 149, 22 Sup. Ct. 52, 46 L. Ed. 125. Where it is sued in one of such states it cannot escape the jurisdiction thereof and remove the cause to the federal court; Patch v. R. Co., 207 U. S. 277, 28 Sup. Ct. 80, 52 L. Ed. 204, 12 Ann. Cas. 518, distinguishing Southern R. Co. v. Allison, 190 U. S. 326, 23 Sup. Ct. 713, 47 L. Ed. 1078. Where several corporations, each of a different state, are so consolidated by the co-operating legislation of those states as to assume a new corporate form and name, the consolidated corporation is, in each of those states, a corporation of such state; Patch v. R. Co., 207 U. S. 277, 28 Sup. Ct. 80, 52 L. Ed. 204, 12 Ann. Cas. 518. See MERGER.

Where property is involved, a corporation is regarded as a person separate and distinct from its stockholders, or any or all of them; Home Fire Ins. Co. v. Barber, 67 Neb. 644, 93 N. W. 1024, 60 L. R. A. 927, 108 Am. St. Rep. 716, per Pound, Com'r. The entirely separate identity of the rights and remedies of a corporation itself and the individual shareholders is settled; Big Creek Gap Coal & Iron Co. v. Trust Co., 127 Fed. 626, 62 C. C. A. 351; Bronson v. R. Co., 2 Wall. (U. S.) 283, 17 L. Ed. 725; Davenport v. Dows, 18 Wall. 626, 21 L. Ed. 938; Church v. R. Co., 78 Fed. 526; Forbes v. R. Co., Fed. Cas. No. 4,928.

But it is held that while a corporation is ordinarily considered a legal entity, yet it may, in the interest of justice, be considered as an association of persons; and where one corporation is organized and owned by the stockholders and officers of another, they may be treated as identical; U. S. v. Transl Co., 142 Fed. 247.

Its residence is fixed by artificial conditions, such as the location of its principal office, or (if a foreign corporation) the personal residence of its duly appointed attorney in fact on whom service is to be made in a state where it is registered as a foreign corporation; Lemon v. Glass Co., 199 Fed. 927.

A corporation having stockholders is organized when the first meeting has been called, the act of incorporation accepted, officers elected, and by-laws providing for future meetings adopted, within the meaning of a statute providing that incorporators and subscribers shall hold the franchise until the corporation is organized; Roosevelt v. Hamblin, 199 Mass. 127, 85 N. E. 98, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 748; or when the officers provided for in the law of its being have been appointed and taken upon themselves the burden of their offices; Com. v. Mann Co., 150 Pa. 64, 24 Atl. 601; Walton v. Oliver, 49 Kan. 107, 30 Pac. 172, 33 Am. St. Rep. 355. It has been held not to be organized where it had not recorded a certificate of complete organization; Loverin v. McLaughlin, 161 Ill. 417, 44 N. E. 99; North Chicago Electric Ry. Co. v. Peuser, 190 Ill. 67, 60 N. E. 78; or filed its articles of incorporation; Capps v. Prospecting Co., 40 Neb. 470, 58 N. W. 956, 24 L. R. A. 259, 42 Am. St. Rep. 677; or its certificate that the requisite capital stock had been deposited; Gent v. Ins. Co., 107 Ill. 652.

In civil cases a corporation is liable for the malice of its officers and servants; [1900] 1 Q. B. 22; [1904] A. C. 423.

Ordinarily in England it cannot be prosecuted for a crime; but it may be for a misdemeanor, which is merely a civil wrong; (e. g.) for breaches of the Food and Drug Act; Odger, C. L. 1405. In the United States it may be indicted for crime, but not for every species; 5 Thomps. Cap. § 6418. It may be for a criminal libel; Brennan v. Tracy, 2 Mo. App. 540 (dictum); for keeping a disorderly house; State v. Agricultural Soc., 54 N. J. L. 260, 23 Atl. 680; for obstructed public navigation by not constructing a draw bridge; Com. v. Proprietors of New Bedford Bridge, 2 Gray (Mass.) 339; for a public nuisance; State v. City of Portland, 74 Me. 268, 43 Am. Rep. 586; Delaware Division Canal Co. v. Com., 60 Pa. 367, 100 Am. Dec. 570; for failure to perform public duties (as of a municipality failing to keep highways in repair); State v. Town of Murfreesboro, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 217; for usury; State v. Bank, 2 S. D. 538, 51 N. W. 337; for conspiracy to aid a lynching mob; Rogers v.

R. Co., 194 Fed. 65, 114 C. C. A. 85; and of course for offences under modern industrial statutes.

It is held that it can be indicted only when the legislation has so provided; State v. Hotel Co., 42 Ind. App. 282, 85 N. E. 724.

The definition at the beginning of this title of a corporation sole is the one usually given in the books. It is said, in England, to include the Crown, all bishops, rectors, vicars and the like; 3 Steph. Com. 15 ed. 2. So of the supervisor of a town; Jansen v. Ostrander, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 670; the governor of a state; Governor v. Allen, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 176. It has been defined as a "term established by usage indicating a person some of whose rights and liabilities are permitted by law to pass to his successors in a particular office, rather than to his heirs, executors or administrators. Such a corporation was unknown in the civil law." 21 Harv. L. Rev. 306. But the conception has been disapproved by modern authors. Thus, Sir F. Pollock (note to Maine, Anc. Law 226) says: "Our English category of corporations sole is not only, as Maine calls it, a fiction, but modern, anomalous, and of no practical use. When a parson or other solely corporate office-holder dies, there is no one to act for the corporation until a successor is appointed, and when appointed, that successor can do nothing which he could not do without being called a corporation sole. . . . As for the King, or 'the Crown,' being a corporation sole, the language of our books appears to be nothing but a clumsy and, after all, ineffective device to avoid openly personifying the state. . . . The whole thing seems to have arisen from the technical difficulty of making grants to a parson and his successors after the practice of making them to God and the patron saint had been discontinued. . . . All this we may now think makes for historical curiosity rather than philosophical edification."

"A bishop is not a corporation sole"; per Strong, J., in Kain v. Gibboney, 101 U. S. 362, 25 L. Ed. 813, referring to a Roman Catholic bishop.

See Maitland, Corporation Sole (16 L. Q. R. 335); The Crown as a Corporation (17 id. 131). Judge Thompson has said (Corp. vol. 1, § 8) that the conception of a corporation sole is "passing out of American law."

CORPORATOR. A member of a corporation.

The corporators are not the corporation, for either may sue the other; Culbertson v. Wabash Nav. Co., 4 McLean, 547, Fed. Cas. No. 3,464; Rogers v. Universalist Society, 19 Vt. 187; Peirce v. Partridge, 3 Metc. (Mass.)

44; Omaha Hotel Co. v. Wade, 97 U. S. 13, 24 L. Ed. 917.

CORPOREAL HEREDITAMENTS. Substantial permanent objects which may be inherited. The term land will include all such. 2 Bla. Com. 17.

CORPOREAL PROPERTY. In Civil Law. That which consists of such subjects as are palpable.

In the common law, the term to signify the same thing is property in possession. It differs from incorporeal property, which consists of choses in action and easements, as a right of way, and the like.

CORPSE. The dead body of a human being. 1 Russ. & R. 366, n.; 2 Term 733; 1 Leach 497; Com. v. Loring, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 370; Dig. 47. 12. 3. 7; 11. 7. 38; Code, 3. 44. 1. Stealing a corpse is an indictable offence, but not larceny at common law; Co. 3d Inst. 203; 1 Russ. Cr. 629. See DEAD BODY.

CORPUS (Lat.). A body. The substance. Used of a human body, a corporation, a collection of laws, etc. The capital of a fund or estate as distinguished from the income.

CORPUS COMITATUS. The body of the county; the inhabitants or citizens of a whole county, as distinguished from a part of the county or a part of its citizens. U. S. v. Grush, 5 Mas. 290, Fed. Cas. No. 15,268.

CORPUS CUM CAUSA. See HABEAS CORPUS CUM CAUSA.

CORPUS DELICTI. The body of the offence; the essence of the crime.
